the greater confusion of the cause of Rome, Charles Miltitz for the third time addressed the Fathers of the Order, assembled in chapter, and sought their advice for the settlement of the case, as being now in a most troubled and perilous state. Since, by the favour of God, there was no hope of proceeding against me by force, some of the more noted of their number were sent to me, and begged me at least to show respect to your person and to vindicate in a humble letter both your innocence and my own. They said that the affair was not as yet in a position of extreme hopelessness, if Leo X., in his inborn kindliness, would put his hand to it. On this I, who have always offered and wished for peace, in order that I might devote myself to calmer and more useful pursuits, and who for this very purpose have acted with so much spirit and vehemence, in order to put down by the strength and impetuosity of my words, as well as of my feelings, men whom I saw to be very far from equal to myself--I, I say, not only gladly yielded, but even accepted it with joy and gratitude, as the greatest kindness and benefit, if you should think it right to satisfy my hopes.

Thus I come, most blessed Father, and in all abasement beseech you to put to your hand, if it is possible, and impose a curb to those flatterers who are enemies of peace, while they pretend peace. But there is no reason, most blessed Father, why any one should assume that I am to utter a recantation, unless he prefers to involve the case in still greater confusion. Moreover, I cannot bear with laws for the interpretation of the word of God, LIBERTY since the word of God, which teaches liberty in all other things, ought not to be bound. Saving these two things, there is nothing which I am not able, and most heartily willing, to do or to suffer. I hate contention; I will challenge no one; in return I wish not to be challenged; but, being challenged, I will not be dumb in the cause of Christ my Master. For your Blessedness will be able by one short and easy word to call these controversies before you and suppress them, and to impose silence and peace on both sides--a word which I have ever longed to hear.

Therefore, Leo, my Father, beware of listening to those sirens who make you out to be not simply a man, but partly a god, so INFALIBILITY that you can command and require whatever you will. It will not happen so, nor will you prevail. You are the servant of servants, and more than any other man, in a most pitiable and perilous position. Let not those men deceive you who pretend that you are lord of the world; who will not allow any one to be a Christian without your authority; who babble of your having power over heaven, hell, and purgatory. These men are your enemies and are seeking your soul to destroy it, as Isaiah says, "My people, they that call thee blessed are themselves deceiving thee." They are in error who raise you above councils and the universal Church; they are in error who attribute to you alone the right of interpreting Scripture. All these men are seeking to set up their INTERPRETATION own impieties in the Church under your name, and alas! Satan has gained much through them in the time of your predecessors.

In brief, trust not in any who exalt you, but in those who humiliate you. For this is the judgment of God: "He hath cast down the mighty from their seat, and hath exalted the humble." See how unlike Christ was to His successors, though all will have it that they are His vicars. I fear that in truth very many of them have been in too serious a sense His vicars, for a vicar represents a prince who is absent. Now if a pontiff rules while Christ is absent and does not dwell in his heart, what else is he but a vicar of Christ? And then what is that Church but a multitude without Christ? What indeed is such a vicar but antichrist and an idol? How much more rightly did the Apostles speak, who call themselves servants of a present Christ, not the vicars of an absent one!

Perhaps I am shamelessly bold in seeming to teach so great a head, by whom all men ought to be taught, and from whom, as those plagues of yours boast, the thrones of judges receive their sentence; but I imitate St. Bernard in his book concerning Considerations addressed to Eugenius, a book which ought to be known by heart by every pontiff. I do this, not from any desire to teach, but as a duty, from that simple and faithful solicitude which teaches us to be anxious for all that is safe for our neighbours, and does not allow considerations of worthiness or unworthiness to be entertained, being intent only on the dangers or advantage of others. For since I know that your Blessedness is driven and tossed by the waves at Rome, so that the depths of the sea press on you with infinite perils, and that you are labouring under such a condition of misery that you need even the least help from any the least brother, I do not seem to myself to be acting unsuitably if I forget your majesty till I shall have fulfilled the office of charity. I will not flatter in so serious and perilous a matter; and if in this you do not see that I am your friend and most thoroughly your subject, there is One to see and judge.

In fine, that I may not approach you empty-handed, blessed Father, I bring with me this little treatise, published under your name, as a good omen of the establishment of peace and of good hope. By this you may perceive in what pursuits I should prefer and be able to occupy myself to more profit, if I were allowed, or had been hitherto allowed, by your impious flatterers. It is a small matter, if you look to its exterior, but, unless I mistake, it is a summary of the Christian life put together in small compass, if you apprehend its meaning. I, in my poverty, have no other present to make you, nor do you need anything else than to be enriched by a spiritual gift. I commend myself to your Paternity and Blessedness, whom may the Lord Jesus preserve for ever. Amen.

Wittenberg, 6th September, 1520.

CONCERNING CHRISTIAN LIBERTY

Christian faith has appeared to many an easy thing; nay, not a few even reckon it among the social virtues, as it were; and this they do because they have not made proof of it experimentally, and have never tasted of what efficacy it is. For it is not possible for any man to write well about it, or to understand well what is rightly written, who has not at some time tasted of its spirit, under the pressure of tribulation; while he who has tasted of it, even to a very small extent, can never write, speak, think, or hear about it sufficiently. For it is a living fountain, springing up into eternal life, as Christ calls it in John iv.

Now, though I cannot boast of my abundance, and though I know how poorly I am furnished, yet I hope that, after having been vexed by various temptations, I have attained some little drop of faith, and that I can speak of this matter, if not with more elegance, certainly with more solidity, than those literal and too subtle disputants who have hitherto discoursed upon it without understanding their own words. That I may open then an easier way for the ignorant--for these alone I am trying to serve--I first lay down these two propositions, concerning spiritual liberty and servitude:--

A Christian man is the most free lord of all, and subject to none; a Christian man is the most dutiful servant of all, and subject to every one.

Although these statements appear contradictory, yet, when they are found to agree together, they will make excellently for my purpose. They are both the statements of Paul himself, who says, "Though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all" (1 Cor. ix. 19), and "Owe no man anything, but to love one another" (Rom. xiii. 8). Now love is by its own nature dutiful and obedient to the beloved object. Thus even Christ, though Lord of all things, was yet made of a woman; made under the law; at once free and a servant; at once in the form of God and in the form of a servant.

Let us examine the subject on a deeper and less simple principle. Man is composed of a twofold nature, a spiritual and a bodily. As regards the spiritual nature, which they name the soul, he is called the spiritual, inward, new man; as regards the bodily nature, which they name the flesh, he is called the fleshly, outward, old man. The Apostle speaks of this: "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day" (2 Cor. iv.

16). The result of this diversity is that in the Scriptures opposing statements are made concerning the same man, the fact being that in the same man these two men are opposed to one another; the flesh lusting against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh (Gal. v. 17).

We first approach the subject of the inward man, that we may see by what means a man becomes justified, free, and a true Christian; that is, a spiritual, new, and inward man. It is certain that absolutely none among outward things, under whatever name they may be reckoned, has any influence in producing Christian righteousness or liberty, nor, on the other hand, unrighteousness or slavery. This can be shown by an easy argument.

What can it profit the soul that the body should be in good condition, free, and full of life; that it should eat, drink, and act according to its pleasure; when even the most impious slaves of every kind of vice are prosperous in these matters? Again, what harm can ill-health, bondage, hunger, thirst, or any other outward evil, do to the soul, when even the most pious of men and the freest in the purity of their conscience, are harassed by these things? Neither of these states of things has to do with the liberty or the slavery of the soul.

And so it will profit nothing that the body should be adorned with sacred vestments, or dwell in holy places, or be occupied in sacred offices, or pray, fast, and abstain from certain meats, or do whatever works can be done through the body and in the body. Something widely different will be necessary for the justification and liberty of the soul, since the things I have spoken of can be done by any impious person, and only hypocrites are produced by devotion to these things. On the other hand, it will not at all injure the soul that the body should be clothed in profane raiment, should dwell in profane places, should eat and drink in the ordinary fashion, should not pray aloud, and should leave undone all the things above mentioned, which may be done by hypocrites.

And, to cast everything aside, even speculation, meditations, and whatever things can be performed by the exertions of the soul itself, are of no profit. One thing, and one alone, is necessary for life, justification, and Christian liberty; and that is the most holy word of God, the Gospel of Christ, as He says, "I am WORD OF GOD the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in Me shall not die eternally" (John xi. 25), and also, "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed" (John viii. 36), and, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. iv. 4).

Let us therefore hold it for certain and firmly established that the soul can do without everything except the word of God, without which none at all of its wants are provided for. But, having the word, it is rich and wants for nothing, since that is the word of life, of truth, of light, of peace, of justification, of salvation, of joy, of liberty, of wisdom, of virtue, of grace, of glory, and of every good thing. It is on this account that the prophet in a whole Psalm (Psalm cxix.), and in many other places, sighs for and calls upon the word of God with so many groanings and words.

Again, there is no more cruel stroke of the wrath of God than when He sends a famine of hearing His words (Amos viii. 11), just as there is no greater favour from Him than the sending forth of His word, as it is said, "He sent His word and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions" (Psalm cvii. 20). Christ was sent for no other office than that of the word; and the order of Apostles, that of bishops, and that of the whole body of the clergy, have been called and instituted for no object but the ministry of the word.

But you will ask, What is this word, and by what means is it to be used, since there are so many words of God? I answer, The Apostle Paul (Rom. i.) explains what it is, namely the Gospel of God, concerning His Son, incarnate, suffering, risen, and glorified, through the Spirit, the Sanctifier. To preach Christ is to feed the soul, to justify it, to set it free, and to save it, if it believes the preaching. For faith alone and the efficacious use of the word of God, bring salvation. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. x. 9); and again, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. x. 4), and "The just shall live by faith" (Rom. i. 17). For the word of God FAITH VS. WORKS cannot be received and honoured by any works, but by faith alone. Hence it is clear that as the soul needs the word alone for life and justification, so it is justified by faith alone, and not by any works. For if it could be justified by any other means, it would have no need of the word, nor consequently of faith.

But this faith cannot consist at all with works; that is, if you imagine that you can be justified by those works, whatever they are, along with it. For this would be to halt between two opinions, to worship Baal, and to kiss the hand to him, which is a very great iniquity, as Job says. Therefore, when you begin to believe, you learn at the same time that all that is in you is utterly guilty, sinful, and damnable, according to that saying, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. iii. ALL HAVE SINNED 23), and also: "There is none righteous, no, not one; they are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable: there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Rom. iii. 10—12). When you have learnt this, you will know that Christ is necessary for you, since He has suffered and risen again for you, that, believing on Him, you might by this faith become another man, all your sins being remitted, and you being justified by the merits of another, namely of Christ alone.

Since then this faith can reign only in the inward man, as it is said, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness" (Rom. x. 10); and since it alone justifies, it is evident that by no outward work or labour can the inward man be at all justified, made free, and saved; and that no works whatever have any relation to him. And so, on the other hand, it is solely by impiety and incredulity of heart that he becomes guilty and a slave of sin, deserving condemnation, not by any outward sin or work. Therefore the first care of every Christian ought to be to lay aside all reliance on works, and strengthen his faith alone more and more, and by it grow in the knowledge, not of works, but of Christ Jesus, who has suffered and risen again for him, as Peter teaches (1 Peter v.) when he makes no other work to be a Christian one. Thus Christ, when the Jews asked Him what they should do that they might work the works of God, rejected the multitude of works, with which He saw that they were puffed up, and commanded them one thing only, saying, "This is the work of God: that ye believe on Him whom He hath sent, for Him hath God the Father sealed" (John vi. 27, 29).

Hence a right faith in Christ is an incomparable treasure, carrying with it universal salvation and preserving from all evil, as it is said, "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark xvi. 16). Isaiah, looking to this treasure, predicted, "The consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness. For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined (verbum abbreviatum et consummans), in the midst of the land" (Isa. x. 22, 23). As if he said, "Faith, which is the brief and complete fulfilling of the law, will fill those who believe with such righteousness that they will need nothing else for justification." Thus, too, Paul says, "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness" (Rom. x. 10).

But you ask how it can be the fact that faith alone justifies, and affords without works so great a treasure of good things, when so many works, ceremonies, and laws are prescribed to us in the Scriptures? I answer, Before all things bear in mind what I FAITH ALONE have said: that faith alone without works justifies, sets free, and saves, as I shall show more clearly below.

Meanwhile it is to be noted that the whole Scripture of God is divided into two parts: precepts and promises. The precepts certainly teach us what is good, but what they teach is not forthwith done. For they show us what we ought to do, but do not cf. Paul give us the power to do it. They were ordained, however, for the purpose of showing man to himself, that through them he may learn his own impotence for good and may despair of his own strength. For this reason they are called the Old Testament, and are so.

For example, "Thou shalt not covet," is a precept by which we are all convicted of sin, since no man can help coveting, whatever efforts to the contrary he may make. In order therefore that he may fulfil the precept, and not covet, he is constrained to despair of himself and to seek elsewhere and through another the help which he cannot find in himself; as it is said, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in Me is thine help" (Hosea xiii. 9). Now what is done by this one precept is done by all; for all are equally impossible of fulfilment by us.

Now when a man has through the precepts been taught his own impotence, and become anxious by what means he may satisfy the law--for the law must be satisfied, so that no jot or tittle of it may pass away, otherwise he must be hopelessly condemned--then, being truly humbled and brought to nothing in his own eyes, he finds in himself no resource for justification and salvation.

Then comes in that other part of Scripture, the promises of God, which declare the glory of God, and say, "If you wish to fulfil the law, and, as the law requires, not to covet, lo! believe in Christ, in whom are promised to you grace, justification, peace, and liberty." All these things you shall have, if you believe, and shall be without them if you do not believe. For what is impossible for you by all the works of the law, which are many and yet useless, you shall fulfil in an easy and summary way through faith, because God the Father has made everything to depend on faith, so that whosoever has it has all things, and he who has it not has nothing. "For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that He might have mercy upon all" (Rom. xi. 32). Thus the promises of God give that which the precepts exact, and fulfil what the law commands; so that all is of God alone, both the precepts and their fulfilment. He alone commands; He alone also fulfils. Hence the promises of God belong to the New Testament; nay, are the New Testament.

Now, since these promises of God are words of holiness, truth, righteousness, liberty, and peace, and are full of universal goodness, the soul, which cleaves to them with a firm faith, is so united to them, nay, thoroughly absorbed by them, that it not only partakes in, but is penetrated and saturated by, all their virtues. For if the touch of Christ was healing, how much more does that most tender spiritual touch, nay, absorption of the word, communicate to the soul all that belongs to the word! In this way therefore the soul, through faith alone, without works, is from the word of God justified, sanctified, endued with truth, peace, and liberty, and filled full with every good thing, and is truly made the child of God, as it is said, "To them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name" (John i. 12).

From all this it is easy to understand why faith has such great power, and why no good works, nor even all good works put together, can compare with it, since no work can cleave to the word of God or be in the soul. Faith alone and the word reign in it; and such as is the word, such is the soul made by it, just as iron exposed to fire glows like fire, on account of its union with the fire. It is clear then that to a Christian man his faith suffices for everything, and that he has no need of works for justification. But if he has no need of works, neither has he need of the law; and if he has no need of the law, he is certainly free from the law, and the saying is true, "The law is not made for a righteous man" (1 Tim. i. 9). This is that Christian liberty, our faith, the effect of which is, not that we Christian liberty should be careless or lead a bad life, but that no one should need the law or works for justification and salvation.

Let us consider this as the first virtue of faith; and let us look also to the second. This also is an office of faith: that it honours with the utmost veneration and the highest reputation Him in whom it believes, inasmuch as it holds Him to be truthful and worthy of belief. For there is no honour like that reputation of truth and righteousness with which we honour Him in whom we believe. What higher credit can we attribute to any one than truth and righteousness, and absolute goodness? On the other hand, it is the greatest insult to brand any one with the reputation of falsehood and unrighteousness, or to suspect him of these, as we do when we disbelieve him.

Thus the soul, in firmly believing the promises of God, holds Him to be true and righteous; and it can attribute to God no higher glory than the credit of being so. The highest worship of God is to ascribe to Him truth, righteousness, and whatever qualities we must ascribe to one in whom we believe. In doing this the soul shows itself prepared to do His whole will; in doing this it hallows His name, and gives itself up to be dealt with as it may please God. For it cleaves to His promises, and never doubts that He is true, just, and wise, and will do, dispose, and provide for all things in the best way. Is not such a soul, in this its faith, most obedient to God in all things? What commandment does there remain which has not been amply fulfilled by such an obedience? What fulfilment can be more full than universal obedience? Now this is not accomplished by works, but by faith alone.

On the other hand, what greater rebellion, impiety, or insult to God can there be, than not to believe His promises? What else is this, than either to make God a liar, or to doubt His truth--that is, to attribute truth to ourselves, but to God falsehood and levity? In doing this, is not a man denying God and setting himself up as an idol in his own heart? What then can works, done in such a state of impiety, profit us, were they even angelic or apostolic works? Rightly hath God shut up all, not in wrath nor in lust, but in unbelief, in order that those who pretend that they are fulfilling the law by works of purity and benevolence (which are social and human virtues) may not presume that they works will therefore be saved, but, being included in the sin of unbelief, may either seek mercy, or be justly condemned.

But when God sees that truth is ascribed to Him, and that in the faith of our hearts He is honoured with all the honour of which He is worthy, then in return He honours us on account of that faith, attributing to us truth and righteousness. For faith does truth and righteousness in rendering to God what is His; and therefore in return God gives glory to our righteousness. It is true and righteous that God is true and righteous; and to confess this and ascribe these attributes to Him, this it is to be true and righteous. Thus He says, "Them that honour Me I will honour, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed" (1 Sam. ii. 30). And so Paul says that Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness, because by it he gave glory to God; and that to us also, for the same reason, it shall be imputed for righteousness, if we believe (Rom. iv.).

The third incomparable grace of faith is this: that it unites the soul to Christ, as the wife to the husband, by which mystery, as the Apostle teaches, Christ and the soul are made one flesh. Now if they are one flesh, and if a true marriage--nay, by far the most perfect of all marriages--is accomplished between them (for human marriages are but feeble types of this one great marriage), then it follows that all they have becomes theirs in common, as well good things as evil things; so that whatsoever Christ possesses, that the believing soul may take to itself and boast of as its own, and whatever belongs to the soul, that Christ claims as His.

If we compare these possessions, we shall see how inestimable is the gain. Christ is full of grace, life, and salvation; the soul is full of sin, death, and condemnation. Let faith step in, and then sin, death, and hell will belong to Christ, and grace, life, and salvation to the soul. For, if He is a Husband, He must needs take to Himself that which is His wife's, and at the same time, impart to His wife that which is His. For, in giving her His own body and Himself, how can He but give her all that is His? And, in taking to Himself the body of His wife, how can He but take to Himself all that is hers?

In this is displayed the delightful sight, not only of communion, but of a prosperous warfare, of victory, salvation, and redemption. For, since Christ is God and man, and is such a Person as neither has sinned, nor dies, nor is condemned, nay, cannot sin, die, or be condemned, and since His righteousness, life, and salvation are invincible, eternal, and almighty,--when I say, such a Person, by the wedding-ring of faith, takes a share in the sins, death, and hell of His wife, nay, makes them His own, and deals with them no otherwise than as if they were His, and as if He Himself had sinned; and when He suffers, dies, and descends to hell, that He may overcome all things, and since sin, death, and hell cannot swallow Him up, they must needs be swallowed up by Him in stupendous conflict. For His righteousness rises above the sins of all men; His life is more powerful than all death; His salvation is more unconquerable than all hell.

Thus the believing soul, by the pledge of its faith in Christ, becomes free from all sin, fearless of death, safe from hell, and endowed with the eternal righteousness, life, and salvation of its Husband Christ. Thus He presents to Himself a glorious bride, without spot or wrinkle, cleansing her with the washing of water by the word; that is, by faith in the word of life, righteousness, and salvation. Thus He betrothes her unto Himself "in faithfulness, in righteousness, and in judgment, and in lovingkindness, and in mercies" (Hosea ii. 19, 20).

Who then can value highly enough these royal nuptials? Who can comprehend the riches of the glory of this grace? Christ, that rich and pious Husband, takes as a wife a needy and impious harlot, redeeming her from all her evils and supplying her with all His good things. It is impossible now that her sins should destroy her, since they have been laid upon Christ and swallowed up in Him, and since she has in her Husband Christ a righteousness which she may claim as her own, and which she can set up with confidence against all her sins, against death and hell, saying, "If I have sinned, my Christ, in whom I believe, has not sinned; all mine is His, and all His is mine," as it is written, "My beloved is mine, and I am His" (Cant. ii. 16). This is what Paul says: "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ," victory over sin and death, as he says, "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law" (1 Cor. xv. 56, 57).

From all this you will again understand why so much importance is attributed to faith, so that it alone can fulfil the law and justify without any works. For you see that the First Commandment, which says, "Thou shalt worship one God only," is fulfilled by faith alone. If you were nothing but good works from the soles of your feet to the crown of your head, you would not be worshipping God, nor fulfilling the First Commandment, since it is impossible to worship God without ascribing to Him the glory of truth and of universal goodness, as it ought in truth to be ascribed. Now this is not done by works, but only by faith of heart. It is not by working, but by believing, that we glorify God, and confess Him to be true. On this ground faith alone is the righteousness of a Christian man, and the fulfilling of all the commandments. For to him who fulfils the first the task of fulfilling all the rest is easy.

Works, since they are irrational things, cannot glorify God, although they may be done to the glory of God, if faith be present. But at present we are inquiring, not into the quality of the works done, but into him who does them, who glorifies God, and brings forth good works. This is faith of heart, the head and FAITH OF HEART the substance of all our righteousness. Hence that is a blind and perilous doctrine which teaches that the commandments are fulfilled by works. The commandments must have been fulfilled previous to any good works, and good works follow their fulfillment, as we shall see.

But, that we may have a wider view of that grace which our inner man has in Christ, we must know that in the Old Testament God sanctified to Himself every first-born male. The birthright was of great value, giving a superiority over the rest by the double honour of priesthood and kingship. For the first-born brother was priest and lord of all the rest.

Under this figure was foreshown Christ, the true and only First-born of God the Father and of the Virgin Mary, and a true King and Priest, not in a fleshly and earthly sense. For His kingdom is not of this world; it is in heavenly and spiritual things that He reigns and acts as Priest; and these are righteousness, truth, wisdom, peace, salvation, etc. Not but that all things, even those of earth and hell, are subject to Him--for otherwise how could He defend and save us from them?--but it is not in these, nor by these, that His kingdom stands.

So, too, His priesthood does not consist in the outward display of vestments and gestures, as did the human priesthood of Aaron and our ecclesiastical priesthood at this day, but in spiritual things, wherein, in His invisible office, He intercedes for us with God in heaven, and there offers Himself, and performs all the duties of a priest, as Paul describes Him to the Hebrews under the figure of Melchizedek. Nor does He only pray and intercede for us; He also teaches us inwardly in the spirit with the living teachings of His Spirit. Now these are the two special offices of a priest, as is figured to us in the case of fleshly priests by visible prayers and sermons.

As Christ by His birthright has obtained these two dignities, so He imparts and communicates them to every believer in Him, under that law of matrimony of which we have spoken above, by which all that is the husband's is also the wife's. Hence all we who believe on Christ are kings and priests in Christ, as it is said,

"Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light" (1 Peter ii. 9).

These two things stand thus. First, as regards kingship, every Christian is by faith so exalted above all things that, in spiritual power, he is completely lord of all things, so that nothing whatever can do him any hurt; yea, all things are subject to him, and are compelled to be subservient to his salvation. Thus Paul says, "All things work together for good to them who are the called" (Rom. viii. 28), and also, "Whether life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours; and ye are Christ's" (1 Cor. iii. 22, 23).

Not that in the sense of corporeal power any one among Christians has been appointed to possess and rule all things, according to the mad and senseless idea of certain ecclesiastics. That is the office of kings, princes, and men upon earth. In the experience of life we see that we are subjected to all things, and suffer many things, even death. Yea, the more of a Christian any man is, to so many the more evils, sufferings, and deaths is he subject, as we see in the first place in Christ the First-born, and in all His holy brethren.

This is a spiritual power, which rules in the midst of enemies, and is powerful in the midst of distresses. And this is nothing else than that strength is made perfect in my weakness, and that I can turn all things to the profit of my salvation; so that even the cross and death are compelled to serve me and to work together for my salvation. This is a lofty and eminent dignity, a true and almighty dominion, a spiritual empire, in which there is nothing so good, nothing so bad, as not to work together for my good, if only I believe. And yet there is nothing of which I have IF ONLY I BELIEVE need--for faith alone suffices for my salvation--unless that in FAITH ALONE SUFFICES FOR MY SALVATION it faith may exercise the power and empire of its liberty. This is the inestimable power and liberty of Christians.

Nor are we only kings and the freest of all men, but also priests for ever, a dignity far higher than kingship, because by that priesthood we are worthy to appear before God, to pray for others, and to teach one another mutually the things which are of God. For these are the duties of priests, and they cannot possibly be permitted to any unbeliever. Christ has obtained for us this favour, if we believe in Him: that just as we are His brethren and co-heirs and fellow-kings with Him, so we should be also fellow-priests with Him, and venture with confidence, through the spirit of faith, to come into the presence of God, and cry, "Abba, Father!" and to pray for one another, and to do all things which we see done and figured in the visible and corporeal office of priesthood. But to an unbelieving person nothing renders service or work for good. He himself is in servitude to all things, and all things turn out for evil to him, because he uses all things in an impious way for his own advantage, and not for the glory of God. And thus he is not a priest, but a profane person, whose prayers are turned into sin, nor does he ever appear in the presence of God, because God does not hear sinners.

Who then can comprehend the loftiness of that Christian dignity which, by its royal power, rules over all things, even over death, life, and sin, and, by its priestly glory, is all-powerful with God, since God does what He Himself seeks and wishes, as it is written, "He will fulfil the desire of them that fear Him; He also will hear their cry, and will save them"? (Psalm cxlv. 19). This glory certainly cannot be attained by any works, but by faith only.

>From these considerations any one may clearly see how a Christian man is free from all things; so that he needs no works in order to be justified and saved, but receives these gifts in abundance from faith alone. Nay, were he so foolish as to pretend to be justified, set free, saved, and made a Christian, by means of any good work, he would immediately lose faith, with all its benefits. Such folly is prettily represented in the fable where a dog, running along in the water and carrying in his mouth a real piece of meat, is deceived by the reflection of the meat in the water, and, in trying with open mouth to seize it, loses the meat and its image at the same time.

Here you will ask, "If all who are in the Church are priests, by what character are those whom we now call priests to be distinguished from the laity?" I reply, By the use of these words, "priest," "clergy," "spiritual person," "ecclesiastic," an injustice has been done, since they have been transferred from the remaining body of Christians to those few who are now, by hurtful custom, called ecclesiastics. For Holy Scripture makes no distinction between them, except that those who are now boastfully called popes, bishops, and lords, it calls ministers, servants, and stewards, who are to serve the rest in the ministry of the word, for teaching the faith of Christ and the liberty of believers. For though it is true that we are all equally priests, yet we cannot, nor, if we could, ought we all to, minister and teach publicly. Thus Paul says, "Let a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God" (1 Cor. iv. 1).

This bad system has now issued in such a pompous display of power and such a terrible tyranny that no earthly government can be TERRIBLE TYRANNY compared to it, as if the laity were something else than Christians. Through this perversion of things it has happened that the knowledge of Christian grace, of faith, of liberty, and altogether of Christ, has utterly perished, and has been succeeded by an intolerable bondage to human works and laws; and, according to the Lamentations of Jeremiah, we have become the slaves of the vilest men on earth, who abuse our misery to all SLAVES OF THE VILEST MEN ON EARTH the disgraceful and ignominious purposes of their own will. THEIR OWN WILL....

Returning to the subject which we had begun, I think it is made clear by these considerations that it is not sufficient, nor a Christian course, to preach the works, life, and words of Christ in a historic manner, as facts which it suffices to know as an example how to frame our life, as do those who are now held the best preachers, and much less so to keep silence altogether on these things and to teach in their stead the laws of men and the decrees of the Fathers. There are now not a few persons who preach and read about Christ with the object of moving the human affections to sympathise with Christ, to indignation against the Jews, and other childish and womanish absurdities of that kind.

Now preaching ought to have the object of promoting faith in Him, so that He may not only be Christ, but a Christ for you and for me, and that what is said of Him, and what He is called, may work in us. And this faith is produced and is maintained by preaching why Christ came, what He has brought us and given to us, and to what profit and advantage He is to be received. This is done when the Christian liberty which we have from Christ Himself is CHRISTIAN LIBERTY rightly taught, and we are shown in what manner all we Christians are kings and priests, and how we are lords of all things, and may be confident that whatever we do in the presence of God is pleasing and acceptable to Him.

Whose heart would not rejoice in its inmost core at hearing these things? Whose heart, on receiving so great a consolation, would not become sweet with the love of Christ, a love to which it can never attain by any laws or works? Who can injure such a heart, or make it afraid? If the consciousness of sin or the horror of death rush in upon it, it is prepared to hope in the Lord, and is fearless of such evils, and undisturbed, until it shall look down upon its enemies. For it believes that the righteousness of Christ is its own, and that its sin is no longer its own, but that of Christ; but, on account of its faith in Christ, all its sin must needs be swallowed up from before the face of the righteousness of Christ, as I have said above. It learns, too, with the Apostle, to scoff at death and sin, and to say, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv. 55-57). For death is swallowed up in victory, not only the victory of Christ, but ours also, since by faith it becomes ours, and in it we too conquer.

Let it suffice to say this concerning the inner man and its liberty, and concerning that righteousness of faith which needs neither laws nor good works; nay, they are even hurtful to it, if any one pretends to be justified by them.

And now let us turn to the other part: to the outward man. Here we shall give an answer to all those who, taking offence at the word of faith and at what I have asserted, say, "If faith does everything, and by itself suffices for justification, why then are good works commanded? Are we then to take our ease and do no works, content with faith?" Not so, impious men, I reply; not so. That would indeed really be the case, if we were thoroughly and completely inner and spiritual persons; but that will not happen until the last day, when the dead shall be raised. As long as we live in the flesh, we are but beginning and making advances in that which shall be completed in a future life. On this account the Apostle calls that which we have in this life the firstfruits of the Spirit (Rom. viii. 23). In future we shall have the tenths, and the fullness of the Spirit. To this part belongs the fact I have stated before: that the Christian is the servant of all and subject to all. For in that part in which he is free he does no works, but in that in which he is a servant he does all works. Let us see on what principle this is so.

Although, as I have said, inwardly, and according to the spirit, a man is amply enough justified by faith, having all that he requires to have, except that this very faith and abundance ought to increase from day to day, even till the future life, still he remains in this mortal life upon earth, in which it is necessary that he should rule his own body and have intercourse with men. Here then works begin; here he must not take his ease; here he must give heed to exercise his body by fastings, watchings, labour, and other regular discipline, so that it may be subdued to the spirit, and obey and conform itself to the inner man and faith, and not rebel against them nor hinder them, as is its nature to do if it is not kept under. For the inner man, being conformed to God and created after the image of God through faith, rejoices and delights itself in Christ, in whom such blessings have been conferred on it, and hence has only this task before it: to serve God with joy and for nought in free love.

But in doing this he comes into collision with that contrary will in his own flesh, which is striving to serve the world and to seek its own gratification. This the spirit of faith cannot and will not bear, but applies itself with cheerfulness and zeal to keep it down and restrain it, as Paul says, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin" (Rom. vii. 22, 23), and again, "I keep under my body, and bring it unto subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway" (1 Cor. ix. 27), and "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts" (Gal. v. 24).

These works, however, must not be done with any notion that by them a man can be justified before God—for faith, which alone is righteousness before God, will not bear with this false notion--but solely with this purpose: that the body may be brought into subjection, and be purified from its evil lusts, so that our eyes may be turned only to purging away those lusts. For when the soul has been cleansed by faith and made to love God, it would have all things to be cleansed in like manner, and especially its own body, so that all things might unite with it in the love and praise of God. Thus it comes that, from the requirements of his own body, a man cannot take his ease, but is compelled on its account to do many good works, that he may bring it into subjection. Yet these works are not the means of his justification before God; he does them out of disinterested love to the service of God; looking to no other end than to do what is well-pleasing to Him whom he desires to obey most dutifully in all things.

On this principle every man may easily instruct himself in what measure, and with what distinctions, he ought to chasten his own body. He will fast, watch, and labour, just as much as he sees to suffice for keeping down the wantonness and concupiscence of the body. But those who pretend to be justified by works are looking, not to the mortification of their lusts, but only to the works themselves; thinking that, if they can accomplish as many works and as great ones as possible, all is well with them, and they are justified. Sometimes they even injure their brain, and extinguish nature, or at least make it useless. This is enormous folly, and ignorance of Christian life and faith, when a man seeks, without faith, to be justified and saved by works.

To make what we have said more easily understood, let us set it forth under a figure. The works of a Christian man, who is justified and saved by his faith out of the pure and unbought mercy of God, ought to be regarded in the same light as would have been those of Adam and Eve in paradise and of all their posterity if they had not sinned. Of them it is said, "The Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it" (Gen. ii. 15). Now Adam had been created by God just and righteous, so that he could not have needed to be justified and made righteous by keeping the garden and working in it; but, that he might not be unemployed, God gave him the business of keeping and cultivating paradise. These would have indeed been works of perfect freedom, being done for no object but that of pleasing God, and not in order to obtain justification, which he already had to the full, and which would have been innate in us all.

So it is with the works of a believer. Being by his faith replaced afresh in paradise and created anew, he does not need works for his justification, but that he may not be idle, but may exercise his own body and preserve it. His works are to be done freely, with the sole object of pleasing God. Only we are not yet fully created anew in perfect faith and love; these require to be increased, not, however, through works, but through themselves.

A bishop, when he consecrates a church, confirms children, or performs any other duty of his office, is not consecrated as bishop by these works; nay, unless he had been previously consecrated as bishop, not one of those works would have any validity; they would be foolish, childish, and ridiculous. Thus a Christian, being consecrated by his faith, does good works; but he is not by these works made a more sacred person, or more a Christian. That is the effect of faith alone; nay, unless he were previously a believer and a Christian, none of his works would have any value at all; they would really be impious and damnable sins.

True, then, are these two sayings: "Good works do not make a good man, but a good man does good works"; "Bad works do not make a bad man, but a bad man does bad works." Thus it is always necessary that the substance or person should be good before any good works can be done, and that good works should follow and proceed from a good person. As Christ says, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit" (Matt. vii. 18). Now it is clear that the fruit does not bear the tree, nor does the tree grow on the fruit; but, on the contrary, the trees bear the fruit, and the fruit grows on the trees.

As then trees must exist before their fruit, and as the fruit does not make the tree either good or bad, but on the contrary, a tree of either kind produces fruit of the same kind, so must first the person of the man be good or bad before he can do either a good or a bad work; and his works do not make him bad or good, but he himself makes his works either bad or good.

We may see the same thing in all handicrafts. A bad or good house does not make a bad or good builder, but a good or bad builder makes a good or bad house. And in general no work makes the workman such as it is itself; but the workman makes the work such as he is himself. Such is the case, too, with the works of men. Such as the man himself is, whether in faith or in unbelief, such is his work: good if it be done in faith; bad if in unbelief. But the converse is not true that, such as the work is, such the man becomes in faith or in unbelief. For as works do not make a believing man, so neither do they make a justified man; but faith, as it makes a man a believer and justified, so also it makes his works good.

Since then works justify no man, but a man must be justified before he can do any good work, it is most evident that it is faith alone which, by the mere mercy of God through Christ, and FAITH ALONE by means of His word, can worthily and sufficiently justify and save the person; and that a Christian man needs no work, no law, for his salvation; for by faith he is free from all law, and in perfect freedom does gratuitously all that he does, seeking PERFECT FREEDOM nothing either of profit or of salvation--since by the grace of God he is already saved and rich in all things through his faith--but solely that which is well-pleasing to God.

So, too, no good work can profit an unbeliever to justification and salvation; and, on the other hand, no evil work makes him an evil and condemned person, but that unbelief, which makes the person and the tree bad, makes his works evil and condemned. Wherefore, when any man is made good or bad, this does not arise from his works, but from his faith or unbelief, as the wise man says, "The beginning of sin is to fall away from God"; that is, not to believe. Paul says, "He that cometh to God must believe" (Heb. xi. 6); and Christ says the same thing: "Either make the tree good and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt" (Matt. xii. 33),--as much as to say, He who wishes to have good fruit will begin with the tree, and plant a good one; even so he who wishes to do good works must begin, not by working, but by believing, since it is this which makes the person good. For nothing makes the person good but faith, nor bad but unbelief.

It is certainly true that, in the sight of men, a man becomes good or evil by his works; but here "becoming" means that it is thus shown and recognised who is good or evil, as Christ says, "By their fruits ye shall know them" (Matt. vii. 20). But all this stops at appearances and externals; and in this matter very many deceive themselves, when they presume to write and teach that we are to be justified by good works, and meanwhile make no mention even of faith, walking in their own ways, ever deceived and deceiving, going from bad to worse, blind leaders of the blind, wearying themselves with many works, and yet never attaining to true righteousness, of whom Paul says, "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth" (2 Tim. iii. 5, 7).

He then who does not wish to go astray, with these blind ones, must look further than to the works of the law or the doctrine of works; nay, must turn away his sight from works, and look to the person, and to the manner in which it may be justified. Now it is justified and saved, not by works or laws, but by the word of God--that is, by the promise of His grace--so that the glory may be to the Divine majesty, which has saved us who believe, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy, by the word of His grace.

>From all this it is easy to perceive on what principle good works are to be cast aside or embraced, and by what rule all teachings put forth concerning works are to be understood. For if works are brought forward as grounds of justification, and are done under the false persuasion that we can pretend to be justified by them, they lay on us the yoke of necessity, and extinguish liberty along with faith, and by this very addition to their use they become no longer good, but really worthy of condemnation. For such works are not free, but blaspheme the grace of God, to which alone it belongs to justify and save through faith. Works cannot accomplish this, and yet, with impious presumption, through our folly, they take it on themselves to do so; and thus break in with violence upon the office and glory of grace.

We do not then reject good works; nay, we embrace them and teach them in the highest degree. It is not on their own account that we condemn them, but on account of this impious addition to them and the perverse notion of seeking justification by them. These things cause them to be only good in outward show, but in reality not good, since by them men are deceived and deceive others, like WOLVES IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING ravens in sheep's clothing.

Now this leviathan, this perverted notion about works, is invincible when sincere faith is wanting. For those sanctified doers of works cannot but hold it till faith, which destroys it, comes and reigns in the heart. Nature cannot expel it by her own power; nay, cannot even see it for what it is, but considers it as a most holy will. And when custom steps in besides, and strengthens this pravity of nature, as has happened by means of impious teachers, then the evil is incurable, and leads astray multitudes to irreparable ruin. Therefore, though it is good to preach and write about penitence, confession, and satisfaction, yet if we stop there, and do not go on to teach faith, such teaching is without doubt deceitful and devilish. For Christ, speaking by His servant John, not only said, "Repent ye," but added, "for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 2).

For not one word of God only, but both, should be preached; new and old things should be brought out of the treasury, as well the voice of the law as the word of grace. The voice of the law should be brought forward, that men may be terrified and brought to a knowledge of their sins, and thence be converted to penitence and to a better manner of life. But we must not stop here; that would be to wound only and not to bind up, to strike and not to heal, to kill and not to make alive, to bring down to hell and not to bring back, to humble and not to exalt. Therefore the word of grace and of the promised remission of sin must also be preached, in order to teach and set up faith, since without that word contrition, penitence, and all other duties, are performed and taught in vain.

There still remain, it is true, preachers of repentance and grace, but they do not explain the law and the promises of God to such an end, and in such a spirit, that men may learn whence repentance and grace are to come. For repentance comes from the law of God, but faith or grace from the promises of God, as it is said, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. x. 17), whence it comes that a man, when humbled and brought to the knowledge of himself by the threatenings and terrors of the law, is consoled and raised up by faith in the Divine promise. Thus "weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning" (Psalm xxx. 5). Thus much we say concerning works in general, and also concerning those which the Christian practises with regard to his own body.

Lastly, we will speak also of those works which he performs towards his neighbour. For man does not live for himself alone in this mortal body, in order to work on its account, but also for all men on earth; nay, he lives only for others, and not for himself. For it is to this end that he brings his own body into subjection, that he may be able to serve others more sincerely and more freely, as Paul says, "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord" (Rom. xiv. 7, 8). Thus it is impossible that he should take his ease in this life, and not work for the good of his neighbours, since he must needs WORK FOR OTHERS speak, act, and converse among men, just as Christ was made in the likeness of men and found in fashion as a man, and had His conversation among men.

Yet a Christian has need of none of these things for justification and salvation, but in all his works he ought to entertain this view and look only to this object--that he may serve and be useful to others in all that he does; having nothing before his eyes but the necessities and the advantage of his neighbour. Thus the Apostle commands us to work with our own hands, that we may have to give to those that need. He might have said, that we may support ourselves; but he tells us to give to those that need. It is the part of a Christian to take care of his own body for the very purpose that, by its soundness and well-being, he may be enabled to labour, and to acquire and preserve property, for the aid of those who are in want, that thus the stronger member may serve the weaker member, and we may be children of God, thoughtful and busy one for another, bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling the law of Christ.

Here is the truly Christian life, here is faith really working by love, when a man applies himself with joy and love to the works of that freest servitude in which he serves others voluntarily VOLUNTARILY and for nought, himself abundantly satisfied in the fulness and riches of his own faith.

Thus, when Paul had taught the Philippians how they had been made rich by that faith in Christ in which they had obtained all things, he teaches them further in these words: "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others" (Phil. ii. 1-4).

In this we see clearly that the Apostle lays down this rule for a Christian life: that all our works should be directed to the advantage of others, since every Christian has such abundance through his faith that all his other works and his whole life remain over and above wherewith to serve and benefit his neighbour of spontaneous goodwill.

To this end he brings forward Christ as an example, saying, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death" (Phil. ii. 5-8). This most wholesome saying of the Apostle has been darkened to us by men who, totally misunderstanding the expressions "form of God," "form of a servant," "fashion," "likeness of men," have transferred them to the natures of Godhead and manhood. Paul's meaning is this: Christ, when He was full of the form of God and abounded in all good things, so that He had no need of works or sufferings to be just and saved--for all these things He had from the very beginning--yet was not puffed up with these things, and did not raise Himself above us and arrogate to Himself power over us, though He might lawfully have done so, but, on the contrary, so acted in labouring, working, suffering, and dying, as to be like the rest of men, and no otherwise than a man in fashion and in conduct, as if He were in want of all things and had nothing of the form of God; and yet all this He did for our sakes, that He might serve us, and that all the works He should do under that form of a servant might become ours.

Thus a Christian, like Christ his Head, being full and in abundance through his faith, ought to be content with this form of God, obtained by faith; except that, as I have said, he ought to increase this faith till it be perfected. For this faith is his life, justification, and salvation, preserving his person himself and making it pleasing to God, and bestowing on him all that Christ has, as I have said above, and as Paul affirms: "The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God" (Gal. ii. 20). Though he is thus free from all works, yet he ought to empty himself of this liberty, take on him the form of a servant, be made in the likeness of men, be found in fashion as a man, serve, help, and in every way act towards his neighbour as he sees that God through Christ has acted and is acting towards him. All this he should do freely, and with regard to nothing but the good pleasure of God, and he should reason thus:--

Lo! my God, without merit on my part, of His pure and free mercy, has given to me, an unworthy, condemned, and contemptible creature all the riches of justification and salvation in Christ, so that I no longer am in want of anything, except of faith to believe that this is so. For such a Father, then, who has overwhelmed me with these inestimable riches of His, why should I not freely, cheerfully, and with my whole heart, and from voluntary zeal, do all that I know will be pleasing to Him and acceptable in His sight? I will therefore give myself as a sort of Christ, to my neighbour, as Christ has given Himself to me; and will do nothing in this life except what I see will be needful, advantageous, and wholesome for my neighbour, since by faith I abound in all good things in Christ.

Thus from faith flow forth love and joy in the Lord, and from love a cheerful, willing, free spirit, disposed to serve our neighbour voluntarily, without taking any account of gratitude or ingratitude, praise or blame, gain or loss. Its object is not to lay men under obligations, nor does it distinguish between friends and enemies, or look to gratitude or ingratitude, but most freely and willingly spends itself and its goods, whether it loses them through ingratitude, or gains goodwill. For thus did its Father, distributing all things to all men abundantly and freely, making His sun to rise upon the just and the unjust. Thus, too, the child does and endures nothing except from the free joy with which it delights through Christ in God, the Giver of such great gifts.

You see, then, that, if we recognize those great and precious gifts, as Peter says, which have been given to us, love is quickly diffused in our hearts through the Spirit, and by love we are made free, joyful, all-powerful, active workers, victors over all our tribulations, servants to our neighbour, and nevertheless lords of all things. But, for those who do not recognise the good things given to them through Christ, Christ has been born in vain; such persons walk by works, and will never attain the taste and feeling of these great things. Therefore just as our neighbour is in want, and has need of our abundance, so we too in the sight of God were in want, and had need of His mercy. And as our heavenly Father has freely helped us in Christ, so ought we freely to help our neighbour by our body and works, and each should become to other a sort of Christ, so that we may be mutually Christs, and that the same Christ may be in all of us; that is, that we may be truly Christians.

Who then can comprehend the riches and glory of the Christian life? It can do all things, has all things, and is in want of nothing; is lord over sin, death, and hell, and at the same time is the obedient and useful servant of all. But alas! it is at this day unknown throughout the world; it is neither preached nor NEITHER PREACHED NOR SOUGHT sought after, so that we are quite ignorant about our own name, why we are and are called Christians. We are certainly called so from Christ, who is not absent, but dwells among us--provided, that is, that we believe in Him and are reciprocally and mutually one the Christ of the other, doing to our neighbour as Christ does to us. But now, in the doctrine of men, we are taught only to seek after merits, rewards, and things which are already ours, and we have made of Christ a taskmaster far more severe than Moses.

The Blessed Virgin beyond all others, affords us an example of the same faith, in that she was purified according to the law of Moses, and like all other women, though she was bound by no such law and had no need of purification. Still she submitted to the law voluntarily and of free love, making herself like the rest of women, that she might not offend or throw contempt on them. She was not justified by doing this; but, being already justified, she did it freely and gratuitously. Thus ought our works too to be done, and not in order to be justified by them; for, being first justified by faith, we ought to do all our works freely and cheerfully for the sake of others.

St. Paul circumcised his disciple Timothy, not because he needed circumcision for his justification, but that he might not offend or condemn those Jews, weak in the faith, who had not yet been able to comprehend the liberty of faith. On the other hand, when they contemned liberty and urged that circumcision was necessary for justification, he resisted them, and would not allow Titus to be circumcised. For, as he would not offend or condemn any one's weakness in faith, but yielded for the time to their will, so, again, he would not have the liberty of faith offended or contemned by hardened self-justifiers, but walked in a middle path, sparing the weak for the time, and always resisting the hardened, that he might convert all to the liberty of faith. On the same principle we ought to act, receiving those that are weak in the faith, but boldly resisting these hardened teachers of HARDENED TEACHERS OF WORKS works, of whom we shall hereafter speak at more length.

Christ also, when His disciples were asked for the tribute money, asked of Peter whether the children of a king were not free from taxes. Peter agreed to this; yet Jesus commanded him to go to the sea, saying, "Lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast a hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth thou shalt find a piece of money; that take, and give unto them for Me and thee" (Matt. xvii. 27).

This example is very much to our purpose; for here Christ calls Himself and His disciples free men and children of a King, in want of nothing; and yet He voluntarily submits and pays the tax. Just as far, then, as this work was necessary or useful to Christ for justification or salvation, so far do all His other works or those of His disciples avail for justification. They are really free and subsequent to justification, and only done to serve others and set them an example.

Such are the works which Paul inculcated, that Christians should be subject to principalities and powers and ready to every good work (Titus iii. 1), not that they may be justified by these things--for they are already justified by faith--but that in liberty of spirit they may thus be the servants of others and subject to powers, obeying their will out of gratuitous love.

Such, too, ought to have been the works of all colleges, monasteries, and priests; every one doing the works of his own profession and state of life, not in order to be justified by them, but in order to bring his own body into subjection, as an example to others, who themselves also need to keep under their bodies, and also in order to accommodate himself to the will of others, out of free love. But we must always guard most carefully against any vain confidence or presumption of being justified, gaining merit, or being saved by these works, this being the part of faith alone, as I have so often said.

Any man possessing this knowledge may easily keep clear of danger among those innumerable commands and precepts of the Pope, of bishops, of monasteries, of churches, of princes, and of magistrates, which some foolish pastors urge on us as being necessary for justification and salvation, calling them precepts of the Church, when they are not so at all. For the Christian freeman will speak thus: I will fast, I will pray, I will do this or that which is commanded me by men, not as having any need of these things for justification or salvation, but that I may thus comply with the will of the Pope, of the bishop, of such a community or such a magistrate, or of my neighbour as an example to him; for this cause I will do and suffer all things, just as Christ did and suffered much more for me, though He needed not at all to do so on His own account, and made Himself for my sake under the law, when He was not under the law. And although tyrants may do me violence or wrong in requiring obedience to these things, yet it will not hurt me to do them, so long as they are not done against God.

>From all this every man will be able to attain a sure judgment and faithful discrimination between all works and laws, and to know who are blind and foolish pastors, and who are true and good ones. For whatsoever work is not directed to the sole end either of keeping under the body, or of doing service to our neighbour--provided he require nothing contrary to the will of God--is no good or Christian work. Hence I greatly fear that at this day few or no colleges, monasteries, altars, or ecclesiastical functions are Christian ones; and the same may be said of fasts and special prayers to certain saints. I fear that in all these nothing is being sought but what is already ours; while we fancy that by these things our sins are purged away and salvation is attained, and thus utterly do away with Christian DO AWAY W/ XIAN LIBERTY liberty. This comes from ignorance of Christian faith and liberty.

This ignorance and this crushing of liberty are diligently promoted by the teaching of very many blind pastors, who stir up and urge the people to a zeal for these things, praising them and puffing them up with their indulgences, but never teaching faith. NEVER TEACHING FAITH Now I would advise you, if you have any wish to pray, to fast, or to make foundations in churches, as they call it, to take care not to do so with the object of gaining any advantage, either temporal or eternal. You will thus wrong your faith, which alone bestows all things on you, and the increase of which, either by working or by suffering, is alone to be cared for. What you give, give freely and without price, that others may prosper and have increase from you and your goodness. Thus you will be a truly good man and a Christian. For what to you are your goods and your works, which are done over and above for the subjection of the body, since you have abundance for yourself through your faith, in which God has given you all things?

We give this rule: the good things which we have from God ought to flow from one to another and become common to all, so that every one of us may, as it were, put on his neighbour, and so behave towards him as if he were himself in his place. They flowed and do flow from Christ to us; He put us on, and acted for us as if He Himself were what we are. From us they flow to those who have need of them; so that my faith and righteousness ought to be laid down before God as a covering and intercession for the sins of my neighbour, which I am to take on myself, and so labour and endure servitude in them, as if they were my own; for thus has Christ done for us. This is true love and the genuine truth of Christian life. But only there is it true and genuine where there is true and genuine faith. Hence the Apostle attributes to charity this quality: that she seeketh not her own.

We conclude therefore that a Christian man does not live in himself, but in Christ and in his neighbour, or else is no Christian: in Christ by faith; in his neighbour by love. By faith he is carried upwards above himself to God, and by love he sinks back below himself to his neighbour, still always-abiding in God and His love, as Christ says, "Verily I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man" (John i. 51).

Thus much concerning liberty, which, as you see, is a true and SPIRITUAL LIBERTY spiritual liberty, making our hearts free from all sins, laws, and commandments, as Paul says, "The law is not made for a righteous man" (1 Tim. i. 9), and one which surpasses all other external liberties, as far as heaven is above earth. May Christ make us to understand and preserve this liberty. Amen.

Finally, for the sake of those to whom nothing can be stated so well but that they misunderstand and distort it, we must add a word, in case they can understand even that. There are very many persons who, when they hear of this liberty of faith, straightway LIBERTY NOT LICENCE turn it into an occasion of licence. They think that everything is now lawful for them, and do not choose to show themselves free men and Christians in any other way than by their contempt and reprehension of ceremonies, of traditions, of human laws; as if they were Christians merely because they refuse to fast on stated days, or eat flesh when others fast, or omit the customary prayers; scoffing at the precepts of men, but utterly passing over all the rest that belongs to the Christian religion. On the other hand, they are most pertinaciously resisted by those who strive after salvation solely by their observance of and reverence for ceremonies, as if they would be saved merely because they fast on stated days, or abstain from flesh, or make formal prayers; talking loudly of the precepts of the Church and of the Fathers, and not caring a straw about those things which belong to our genuine faith. Both these parties are plainly culpable, in that, while they neglect matters which are of weight and necessary for salvation, they contend noisily about such as are without weight and not necessary.

How much more rightly does the Apostle Paul teach us to walk in the middle path, condemning either extreme and saying, "Let not MIDDLE PATH him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth" (Rom. xiv. 3)! You see here how the Apostle blames those who, not from religious feeling, but in mere contempt, neglect and rail at ceremonial observances, and teaches them not to despise, since this "knowledge puffeth up." Again, he teaches the pertinacious upholders of these things not to judge their opponents. For neither party observes towards the other that charity which CHARITY edifieth. In this matter we must listen to Scripture, which teaches us to turn aside neither to the right hand nor to the left, but to follow those right precepts of the Lord which rejoice the heart. For just as a man is not righteous merely because he serves and is devoted to works and ceremonial rites, so neither will he be accounted righteous merely because he neglects and despises them.

It is not from works that we are set free by the faith of Christ, but from the belief in works, that is from foolishly presuming to seek justification through works. Faith redeems our consciences, FAITH REDEEMS OUR CONSCIENCES makes them upright, and preserves them, since by it we recognise the truth that justification does not depend on our works, although good works neither can nor ought to be absent, just as we cannot exist without food and drink and all the functions of this mortal body. Still it is not on them that our justification is based, but on faith; and yet they ought not on that account to be despised or neglected. Thus in this world we are compelled by the needs of this bodily life; but we are not hereby justified.

"My kingdom is not hence, nor of this world," says Christ; but He does not say, "My kingdom is not here, nor in this world." Paul, too, says, "Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh" (2 Cor. x. 3), and "The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God" (Gal. ii. 20). Thus our doings, life, and being, in works and ceremonies, are done from the necessities of this life, and with the motive of governing our bodies; but yet we are not justified by these things, but by the faith of the Son of God.

The Christian must therefore walk in the middle path, and set these two classes of men before his eyes. He may meet with hardened and obstinate ceremonialists, who, like deaf adders, HARDENED CEREMONIALISTS refuse to listen to the truth of liberty, and cry up, enjoin, and urge on us their ceremonies, as if they could justify us without faith. Such were the Jews of old, who would not understand, that they might act well. These men we must resist, do just the contrary to what they do, and be bold to give them offence, lest by this impious notion of theirs they should deceive many along with themselves. Before the eyes of these men it is expedient to eat flesh, to break fasts, and to do in behalf of the liberty of faith things which they hold to be the greatest sins. We must say of them, "Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind" SHUN SHUNNERS (Matt. xv. 14). In this way Paul also would not have Titus circumcised, though these men urged it; and Christ defended the Apostles, who had plucked ears of corn on the Sabbath day; and many like instances.

Or else we may meet with simple-minded and ignorant persons, weak SIMPLE-MINDED IGNORANT PERSONS in the faith, as the Apostle calls them, who are as yet unable to apprehend that liberty of faith, even if willing to do so. These LIBERTY OF FAITH we must spare, lest they should be offended. We must bear with their infirmity, till they shall be more fully instructed. For since these men do not act thus from hardened malice, but only from weakness of faith, therefore, in order to avoid giving them offence, we must keep fasts and do other things which they consider necessary. This is required of us by charity, which CHARITY injures no one, but serves all men. It is not the fault of these persons that they are weak, but that of their pastors, who by the snares and weapons of their own traditions have brought them into bondage and wounded their souls when they ought to have been set free and healed by the teaching of faith and liberty. Thus the Apostle says, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth" (1 Cor. viii. 13); and again, "I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself; but to him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean. It is evil for that man who eateth with offence" (Rom. xiv. 14, 20).

Thus, though we ought boldly to resist those teachers of tradition, and though the laws of the pontiffs, by which they LAWS OF PONTIFFS make aggressions on the people of God, deserve sharp reproof, yet SHARP REPROOF we must spare the timid crowd, who are held captive by the laws TIMID CROWD of those impious tyrants, till they are set free. Fight IMPIOUS TYRANTS vigorously against the wolves, but on behalf of the sheep, not QUOTE TO WM PLEASANT - WHOLE PARAGRAPH against the sheep. And this you may do by inveighing against the laws and lawgivers, and yet at the same time observing these laws with the weak, lest they be offended, until they shall themselves recognise the tyranny, and understand their own liberty. If you wish to use your liberty, do it secretly, as Paul says, "Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God" (Rom. xiv. 22). But take care not to use it in the presence of the weak. On the other hand, in the presence of tyrants and obstinate opposers, use your liberty in their despite, and with the utmost pertinacity, that they too may understand that they are tyrants, and their laws useless for justification, nay that they had no right to establish such laws.

Since then we cannot live in this world without ceremonies and CEREMONIES & WORKS works, since the hot and inexperienced period of youth has need YOUTH of being restrained and protected by such bonds, and since every one is bound to keep under his own body by attention to these things, therefore the minister of Christ must be prudent and PRUDENT faithful in so ruling and teaching the people of Christ, in all these matters, that no root of bitterness may spring up among them, and so many be defiled, as Paul warned the Hebrews; that is, that they may not lose the faith, and begin to be defiled by LOSE THE FAITH a belief in works as the means of justification. This is a thing I.E., BLIND OBEDIENCE TO COVENANT = SALVATION which easily happens, and defiles very many, unless faith be constantly inculcated along with works. It is impossible to avoid this evil, when faith is passed over in silence, and only the FAITH IGNORED ordinances of men are taught, as has been done hitherto by the ONLY OBEDIENCE pestilent, impious, and soul-destroying traditions of our SOUL-DESTROYING INTERPRETATIONS OF uhj pontiffs and opinions of our theologians. An infinite number of souls have been drawn down to hell by these snares, so that you may recognise the work of antichrist.

In brief, as poverty is imperilled amid riches, honesty amid business, humility amid honours, abstinence amid feasting, purity amid pleasures, so is justification by faith imperilled among ceremonies. Solomon says, "Can a man take fire in his bosom, and his clothes not be burned?" (Prov. vi. 27). And yet as we must live among riches, business, honours, pleasures, feasting, so must we among ceremonies, that is among perils. Just as infant boys have the greatest need of being cherished in the bosoms and by the care of girls, that they may not die, and yet, when they are grown, there is peril to their salvation in living among girls, so inexperienced and fervid young men require to be kept in and restrained by the barriers of ceremonies, even were they of iron, lest their weak minds should rush headlong into vice. And yet it would be death to them to persevere in believing that they can be justified by these things. They must rather be taught that they have been thus imprisoned, not with the purpose of their being justified or gaining merit in this way, but in order that they might avoid wrong-doing, and be more easily instructed in that righteousness which is by faith, a thing which the headlong character of youth would not bear unless it were put under restraint.

Hence in the Christian life ceremonies are to be no otherwise looked upon than as builders and workmen look upon those preparations for building or working which are not made with any analogy of scaffolding view of being permanent or anything in themselves, but only because without them there could be no building and no work. When the structure is completed, they are laid aside. Here you see that we do not condemn these preparations, but set the highest value on them; a belief in them we do condemn, because no one thinks that they constitute a real and permanent structure. If any one were so manifestly out of his senses as to have no other object in life but that of setting up these preparations with all possible expense, diligence, and perseverance, while he never thought of the structure itself, but pleased himself and made his boast of these useless preparations and props, should we not all pity his madness and think that, at the cost thus thrown away, some great building might have been raised?

Thus, too, we do not condemn works and ceremonies--nay, we set the highest value on them; but we condemn the belief in works, which no one should consider to constitute true righteousness, as do those hypocrites who employ and throw away their whole life in the pursuit of works, and yet never attain to that for the sake of which the works are done. As the Apostle says, they are "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth" (2 Tim. iii. 7). They appear to wish to build, they make preparations, and yet they never do build; and thus they continue in a show of godliness, but never attain to its power.

Meanwhile they please themselves with this zealous pursuit, and even dare to judge all others, whom they do not see adorned with such a glittering display of works; while, if they had been imbued with faith, they might have done great things for their own and others' salvation, at the same cost which they now waste in abuse of the gifts of God. But since human nature and natural reason, as they call it, are naturally superstitious, and quick to believe that justification can be attained by any laws or works proposed to them, and since nature is also exercised and confirmed in the same view by the practice of all earthly lawgivers, she can never of her own power free herself from this bondage to works, and come to a recognition of the liberty of faith.

We have therefore need to pray that God will lead us and make us taught of God, that is, ready to learn from God; and will Himself, as He has promised, write His law in our hearts; His law in our hearts otherwise there is no hope for us. For unless He himself teach us inwardly this wisdom hidden in a mystery, nature cannot but condemn it and judge it to be heretical. She takes offence at it, and it seems folly to her, just as we see that it happened of old in the case of the prophets and Apostles, and just as blind and blind impious pontiffs, with their flatterers, do now in my case and that of those who are like me, upon whom, together with ourselves, may God at length have mercy, and lift up the light of His countenance upon them, that we may know His way upon earth and His saving health among all nations, who is blessed for evermore. Amen. In the year of the Lord MDXX.

This text was converted to ascii format for Project Wittenberg by Elizabeth T. Knuth and is in the public domain. You may freely distribute, copy or print this text. Please direct any comments or suggestions to: Rev. Robert E. Smith of the Walther Library at Concordia Theological Seminary.

E-mail: cosmithb@ash.palni.edu
Surface Mail: 6600 N. Clinton St., Ft. Wayne, IN 46825 USA
Phone: (219) 452-2123 Fax: (219) 452-2126

End of Project Gutenberg Etext Concerning Christian Liberty, by Luther

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Some might want to compare these various messages on individual conscience with the 29 December 1988 Individual Rights and Freedoms: A Statement of the universal house of justice, which many believe basically interprets individual rights out of existence: <https://bahai-library.org/published.uhj/irf.html>

----- Original Message -----

From: "Bahai Faith" <BI*P*GS@liberty.com>

Newsgroups:

alt.politics.org.un,alt.religion.bahai,alt.religion.christian,alt.religion.christian.roman-catholic,soc.culture.indian,

soc.culture.iranian,soc.culture.israel,talk.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc

Sent: Wednesday, May 08, 2002 9:04 AM

Subject: Re: Individual conscience... uhj's justification for coercion to Maneck.....

Karen,

I had thought perhaps you were aware of some other statement regarding conscience. The letter to Maneck you cite is her old rag from the uhj that she has regularly dredged up for years to justify their fanatical views and doesn't add anything new to the discussion. My comments on it below:

"Karen Bacquet" <karenbacquet@hotmail.com> wrote in message news:udhfrfstjgrib0@corp.supernews.com...

>

>

> --

> "The essence of all that We have revealed for thee is Justice . . ." --

> Baha'u'llah

> Bahai Faith <BI*P*GS@liberty.com> wrote in message

> news:ab67ve\$fnoat\$1@ID-75545.news.dfncis.de...

> > "Karen Bacquet" <karenbacquet@hotmail.com> wrote in message > > news:udd3787ql6j0f3@corp.supernews.com...

> > >

> > > There have also been remarks in more recent UHJ letters disparaging > > > the role of individual conscience.

> >

> > Karen,

> >

> > When you have a chance, could you quote those disparaging uhj letters?

> >

> > I'm sure I would not be alone in finding them interesting.

>

> Dear Fred,

>

> I was thinking of the following passage from the Feb. 8, 1998 letter to Susan Maneck, which I'm sure she has quoted here before. I'm including the whole context -- one the on hand they uphold freedom of conscience, then on the other speak about how limited it is. There is again, in this passage > the disparagement of Christianity that we saw in the other quotes mentioned here. Basically, the only real "freedom" that Baha'is have is the freedom to leave the Faith.

>

> Love, Karen

> *****

> This brings us to the specific points raised in your email of 17 November 1997. As you well understand, not only the right but also the responsibility

>

>

>

> -----
--
> ----
> Dr. Susan Stiles Maneck
> U.S.A. 8 February 1998
> Page 3
>
> ". . . of each believer to explore truth for himself or herself are > fundamental to the Baha'i teachings. This principle is an integral feature > of the coming of age of humankind, inseparable from the social > transformation to which Baha'u'llah is calling the peoples of the world.

It is as relevant to specifically scholarly activity as it is to the rest of > spiritual and intellectual life. Every human being is ultimately responsible to God for the use which he or she makes of these possibilities; conscience is never to be coerced, whether by other individuals or institutions.

So false, given the uhj's incessant harassment and coercion of conscience, Dialogue, Cole, McKenny, Marshall, et al.... The double speak of a tyrant....

> Conscience, however, is not an unchangeable absolute. One dictionary > definition, although not covering all the usages of the term, presents the > common understanding of the word "conscience" as "the sense of right and > wrong as regards things for which one is responsible; the faculty or > principle which pronounces upon the moral quality of one's actions or > motives, approving the right and condemning the wrong".
>
> The functioning of one's conscience, then, depends upon one's > understanding of right and wrong; the conscience of one person may be > established upon a disinterested striving after truth and justice, while > that of another may rest on an unthinking predisposition to act in > accordance with that pattern of standards, principles and prohibitions which is a product of his social environment. Conscience, therefore, can serve > either as a bulwark of an upright character or can represent an accumulation of prejudices learned from one's forebears or absorbed from a limited social code.

Rather, "an accumulation of prejudices learned from" one's fellow fundamentalists, from the "limited social code" current among aparatchiks in Haifa, Wilmette, and elsewhere.... And no member of the Bahai Faith may speak up and say without the wrath of the power-hungry coming down on him or her.... More despicable double speak....

> A Baha'i recognizes that one aspect of his spiritual and intellectual > growth is to foster the development of his conscience in the light of divine Revelation -- a Revelation which, in addition to providing a wealth of > spiritual and ethical principles, exhorts man "to free himself from idle > fancy and imitation, discern with the eye of oneness His glorious handiwork, and look into all things with a searching eye". This process of development, therefore, involves a clear-sighted examination of the conditions of the > world with both heart and mind. A Baha'i will understand that an upright > life is based upon observance of certain principles which stem from Divine > Revelation and which he recognizes as essential for the well-being of both > the individual and society. In order to uphold such principles, he knows > that, in certain cases, the voluntary submission of the promptings of his > own personal conscience to the decision of the majority is a conscientious > requirement, as in wholeheartedly accepting the majority decision of an > Assembly at the outcome of consultation.

The majority can be wrong, secular or religious, or any combination thereof. Much of civilization has learned the bitter lesson of caution when assuming the majority knows best but not the tyrants who ride Carmel, digging their spurs into the souls of Baha'u'llah's subjects....

> In the discussion of wisdom in your email of 21 September 1997, you > observe that maybe "Baha'i academics all too often have not recognized that to a great extent failure to exercise wisdom represents a failure of love." The House of Justice agrees that the exercise of wisdom calls for a measure of love and the development of a sensitive conscience. These, in turn, > involve not only devotion to a high standard of uprightness, but also > consideration of the effects of one's words and actions.

>
> A Baha'i's duty to pursue an unfettered search after truth should lead > him to understand the Teachings as an organic, logically coherent whole, > should cause him to examine his own ideas and motives, and should enable him to see

>
>
>
> -----
--

> ----
> Dr. Susan Stiles Maneck
> U.S.A. 8 February 1998
> Page 4

>
> that adherence to the Covenant, to which he is a party, is not blind > imitation but conscious choice, freely made and freely followed.

"The Covenant": I.e., their literal, intolerant, hateful interpretation of it, which they wield to coerce and silence anyone who reveres Abdul-Baha's unequivocal respect for moderate and sensible freedom of conscience.

> In many of His utterances, `Abdul-Baha extols governments which uphold freedom of conscience for their citizens. As can be seen from the context, > these statements refer to the freedom to follow the religion of one's > choice. In the original of a passage to which you refer in your email of 17 November 1997, He gives the following analysis of freedom.

>
>
> There are three types of freedom. The first is divine freedom, which is one of the inherent attributes of the Creator for He is unconstrained in His> will, and no one can force Him to change His decree in any matter > whatsoever....

> The second is the political freedom of Europeans, which leaves the > individual free to do whatsoever he desires as long as his action does not > harm his neighbour. This is natural freedom, and its greatest expression is seen in the animal world. Observe these birds and notice with what freedom > they live. However much man may try, he can never be as free as an animal, > because the existence of order acts as an impediment to freedom.

>
> The third freedom is that which is born of obedience to the laws and > ordinances of the Almighty. This is the freedom of the human world, where > man severs his affections from all things. When he does so, he becomes > immune to all hardship and sorrow. Wealth or material power will not deflect him from moderation and fairness, neither will poverty or need inhibit him > from showing forth happiness and tranquillity. The more the conscience of > man develops, the more will his heart be free and his soul attain unto > happiness. In the religion of God, there is freedom of thought because God, alone, controls the human conscience, but this freedom should not go beyond courtesy. In the religion of God, there is no freedom of action outside the law of God. Man may not transgress this law, even though no harm is > inflicted on one's neighbour. This is because the purpose of Divine law is > the education of all -- others as well as oneself -- and, in the sight of > God, the harm done to one individual or to his neighbour is the same and is reprehensible in both cases. Hearts must possess the fear of God. Man should endeavour to avoid that which is abhorrent unto God. Therefore, the freedom that the laws of Europe offer to the individual does not exist in the law of God. Freedom of thought should not transgress the bounds of courtesy, and > actions, likewise, should be governed by the fear of God and the desire to > seek His good pleasure.

>
>
> Education of the individual Baha'i in the Divine law is one of the > duties of Spiritual Assemblies. In a letter to a National Assembly on 1 > March 1951, Shoghi Effendi wrote:

>
> The deepening and enrichment of the spiritual life of the individual > believer, his increasing comprehension of the essential verities

>
>
> -----

--

> ----

> Dr. Susan Stiles Maneck
> U.S.A. 8 February 1998
> Page 5

>
>
> underlying this Faith, his training in its administrative processes, his understanding of the fundamentals of the Covenants established by its Author and the authorized Interpreter of its teachings, should be made the supreme objectives of the national representatives responsible for the edification, the progress and consolidation of these communities.

"Training": i.e., coercing of conscience, their interpretation of it.

> Such is the duty resting on the elected institutions of the Faith for > the promotion of the spiritual, moral and ethical lives of the individual > believers. Parallel with this, the Baha'i Faith upholds the freedom of > conscience which permits a person to follow his chosen religion: no one may be compelled to become a Baha'i, or to remain a Baha'i if he conscientiously wishes to leave the Faith. As to the thoughts of the Baha'is themselves --

> that is those who have chosen to follow the religion of Baha'u'llah -- the > institutions do not busy themselves with what individual believers think > unless those thoughts become expressed in actions which are inimical to the basic principles and vital interests of the Faith.

Unless anyone disagrees with the uhj's fanatical coercion of conscience, interpretation, and has the courage of conviction to say so publicly, the willingness to sacrifice themselves on the altar of service and obedience to Baha'u'llah, not the corrupted uhj....

> With regard to the accusation that to make such distinctions borders on restriction of the freedom of speech, one should accept that civil society > has long recognized that utterance can metamorphose into behaviour, and has taken steps to protect itself and its citizens against such behaviour when > it becomes socially destructive. Laws against sedition and hate-mongering > are examples that come readily to mind.

I.e., the uhj has the right to suppress freedom of speech and conscience, and define out of existence what they are. More double speak.

> It will surely be clear to you from the above comments that the > categories of "issues of doctrinal heresy which must therefore be > suppressed" and "the imposition of orthodoxy on the Baha'i community", to > which you refer, are concepts essentially drawn from the study of > Christianity and are inapplicable to the far more complex interrelationships> and principles established by the Baha'i Faith."

More subtle coercion and suppression of conscience according to their own self-serving, twisted interpretation of Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha.

--

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://members.fortunecity.com/bahaicensorship>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: FG[SMTP:FG@hotmail.com]
Sent: Monday, March 09, 1998 8:39 AM
To: talisman
Subject: bahai-faith@coollist.com created

A new unmoderated mailing list on the Bahai Faith has been created: bahai-faith@coollist.com

Those interested can subscribe to it at <https://208.141.98.157/>

The list should be able to be connected before long to alt.religion.bahai, which will allow many people who have not been able to access the alt.* hierarchy to read the discussion there as well as to post back to it.

--
FG

From: FG[SMTP:FG@hotmail.com]
Sent: Tuesday, March 10, 1998 7:53 AM
To: FG
Subject: coollist membership # 1

Josh6396@aol.com
dbikman@bwc.org fglaysh@hotmail.com
FG@hotmail.com
owner@sociologist.com
rmsolem@mke.ab.com

FG

From: Island Business Center (Bill Hyman)[SMTP:billh@samoatelco.com]
Sent: Friday, March 13, 1998 5:38 PM
To: fglaysh@hotmail.com
Cc: Star Saffa
Subject: Request for enrollment

Dear Fred:

I have no antagonism towards you for what you are trying to do. I noticed that I am on your "voted no" list for trb. I have subscribed to bahai-faith@coollist.com in order to determine for myself whether it will become a CB magnet. My observations will help me to decide how I will vote next time. I did check out alt.religion.bahai in the archives and felt that there was greater depth in srb, but that is to be expected as there is a larger readership.

The proposed charter for trb was almost identical to srb, with the major difference being that it would be unmoderated. As I expect you know, Baha'is have been advised not to engage with discussions with CBs. Please explain how flaming or CB content can be controlled without moderators.

My friend Star* Saffa would like to enroll on your coollist, but was not able to. Please enroll her. Her address is starjo@arach.net.au.

Many thanks, Bill

From: Teri Rhan[SMTP:trhan@serv.net]
Sent: Friday, March 13, 1998 2:13 PM
To: FG
Cc: srb-mods@bccca.org
Subject: Re: bahai-faith@coollist.com created

Well Fred, this newsgroup is about the teachings and discussion of the Baha'i Faith. If you can find a way to tie your request into discussing the Baha'i Faith and/or one of it's teachings without the use of advertising and in a respectful manner, I'd be happy to consider it for posting.

Teri Rhan
trhan@serv.net
Co-moderator, soc.religion.bahai

On Fri, 13 Mar 1998, FG wrote:

> I understand your point, I suppose.... I was just hoping SRB would > be willing to lend a helping hand in what appears to me to be > a new environment of possible toleration for freedom of speech > and conscience....
>
> I would hope a less confrontational approach could now be > developed on both sides, helping people of all persuasions to > move forward a little....
>
> Might I reword this message to some extent and see if a > talented Bahai or reader of SRB might not have the technical > ability to help?
>
> FG
> Usenet: alt.religion.bahai
> Listserv: bahai-faith@coollist.com
> (Subscribe at www.coollist.com, or, if you have only email capability, > send me a message requesting you be added to the list.)
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Teri Rhan <trhan@serv.net>
> To: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
> Cc: srb moderators <srb-mods@bccca.org>
> Date: Wednesday, March 11, 1998 12:58 AM
> Subject: Re: bahai-faith@coollist.com created
>
>
> >Dear Fred,
> >I've posted your previous 2 messages about your new email list and felt > >that was pushing it a bit about it but I have to draw the line here. This > >is not a newsgroup for soliciting technical support.
> >
> >Good luck with your new list, I wish that sincerely.
> >
> >Teri Rhan
> >trhan@serv.net
> >Co-moderator, soc.religion.bahai

> >
> >On Tue, 10 Mar 1998, FG wrote:
> >
> >>
> >> FG wrote:
> >>
> >> >A new unmoderated mailing list on the Bahai Faith has been > >> >created: bahai-faith@coollist.com
> >> >
> >> >Those interested can subscribe to it at <https://208.141.98.157/>
> >>
> >> I've received the following reply from Jonathan Grobe, > >> group-mentor:
> >>
> >> >Sorry I don't have the facilities to do this. You need some special > >> >software running on a host (for example mail2news). Ask your ISP, > >> >on the mailing list, on alt.religion.bahai, on news.groups and > >> >news.admin.misc. You might also ask Russ Albury for advice.
> >> >The bit.* hierarchy coordinator used to do this but the current > >> >coordinator will only do it for faculty/staff at American University. No > >> >one that I know is doing it generally.
> >>
> >> Anyone have the facilities and know-how?
> >>
> >> FG
> >>
> >>
> >>
> >
> >
>
>

From: Island Business Center (Bill Hyman)[SMTP:billh@samoatelco.com]
Sent: Wednesday, April 01, 1998 6:37 PM
To: FG@hotmail.com
Cc: srb
Subject: FW: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB

Dear Fred:

Well, I caught this one. Cross posts from other forums are not covered by our charter, so this submission will not be posted.

I noticed that last year some of my moderator comments were quoted on alt.religion.bahai, but that may not be against its charter. I am sure that I did not give my permission, neither do I now, for any list.

For your information there is no official list of Covenant Breakers available to srb moderators, although some of us may have our own lists. The text of messages is usually a giveaway. Yesterday I had two. The first I had to read to determine its status. The second was from the same address so I bounced it without reading it. One, so far, today is questionable and I am attempting to get more information.

The moderators' duties do not include editing, but sometimes, I will do a little extra and correct spelling errors. Long quotations are often snipped. If you want to call us something other than moderators, why not snippers, because we are not really editors. Do I detect a prejudice?

Nancy's quote below, which you agree with, is a little strange on a channel which bears the name bahai-faith@coollist.com. One would presume that there would be mostly members of the Bahai Faith on that channel and they should have a good idea who the Covenant Breakers are.

Bill Hyman
co-moderator
soc-religion-bahai

From: "FG" <FG@hotmail.com>
To: "SRB" <bahai-faith@bccca.org>,"bahai-faith at coollist.com"
<bahai-faith@coollist.com>
Subject: Re: Fw: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB
Date: Wed, 1 Apr 1998 17:33:39 -0500

Well that's exactly it.... Soc.religion.bahai, though, must have one.
Perhaps its editors could post a copy on here for the benefit of all.

--
FG
Usenet: alt.religion.bahai
Listserv: bahai-faith@coollist.com
(Subscribe at www.coollist.com, or, if you have only email capability, send me a message requesting you be added to the list.)

-----Original Message-----

From: LaAeterna <LaAeterna@aol.com>
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com <bahai-faith@coollist.com>
Date: Wednesday, April 01, 1998 5:31 PM
Subject: Re: Fw: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB

>Star's question as to whether or not baha'i-coollist has a list of "CB's"
>and >filters out their messages seems an interesting point, when one considers
>that >each and every group of Baha'is calls the others Covenant Breakers.
Frederick
>would have a heck of a job trying to sort out who is a CB according to whose >group. Bonne chance, Frederick!!
>Nancy

>
> -----<< Advertisement >>-----
> High bandwidth usage? No problems.
>
> <https://www.astrax.com> - Astra X Specialised Web Hosting
> -----
>

From: Rick Boatright[SMTP:boatright@cjnetworks.com]
Sent: Wednesday, April 01, 1998 7:19 PM
To: FG
Cc: sbirkland@aol.com; Brent Poirier; srb-mods@bccca.org
Subject: Re: Fw: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB

Actually, of course, we don't since anyone can set up a hotmail or juno account with any alias in merest moments.

In general, most anything posted from RT66.com is suspect, as the home of the Joel Marguella folks. (Very Odd group.) We stay on the watch for posts which ramble on about "Davidic Kings" which is the signature of the Missula Montana people, and of course we have the giveness names, tho not necessarily the email addresses of people recently declared CB's listed in the American Baha'i. We try _hard_ not to accuse anyone in particular of being a CB, but rather simply argue that we do not accept posts which argue for an alternate succession of authority in the Baha'i Faith.

Coollist of course can't filter on content. With hotmail and Juno accounts being the way they are, I see no way to reliably filter on email address.

Filtering out anyone@rt66.com is probably a "very wise" thing to do however.

Rick Boatright
co-moderator
soc.religion.bahai

> Well that's exactly it.... Soc.religion.bahai, though, must have one.
> Perhaps its editors could post a copy on here for the benefit of > all.
>
> --
> FG
> Usenet: alt.religion.bahai
> Listserv: bahai-faith@coollist.com
> (Subscribe at www.coollist.com, or, if you have only email capability, > send me a message requesting you be added to the list.)
>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: LaAeterna <LaAeterna@aol.com>
> To: bahai-faith@coollist.com <bahai-faith@coollist.com>
> Date: Wednesday, April 01, 1998 5:31 PM
> Subject: Re: Fw: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB
>
> >Star's question as to whether or not baha'i-coollist has a list of "CB's"
> and > >filters out their messages seems an interesting point, when one considers
> that > >each and every group of Baha'is calls the others Covenant Breakers.
> Frederick
> >would have a heck of a job trying to sort out who is a CB according to > whose > >group. Bonne chance, Frederick!!
> >Nancy
> >
> > -----<< Advertisement >>-----
> > High bandwidth usage? No problems.
> >
> > <https://www.astrax.com> - Astra X Specialised Web Hosting
> > -----
> >
>
>
>
>

From: FG[SMTP:FG@hotmail.com]
Sent: Saturday, April 18, 1998 7:28 AM
To: FG
Subject: Final list of coollist subscribers 19 artist@coinet.com davecrn11@aol.com

farmid@clinicomp.com
FG@hotmail.com
gsemmler@pdi-corp.com harris632@aol.com

jeffery.decker@usa.net
josh6396@aol.com
jwalker@ozdocs.net.au laaeterna@aol.com lucien.dol@extra.co.nz mbkafes@bestweb.net
mrscotty@mninter.net
owner@sociologist.com
rmsolem@mke.ab.com
shinsato@inxight.com starjo@arach.net.au tommycarter@usa.net whitbrandt@mailcity.com

FG
Usenet: alt.religion.bahai
Listserv: bahai-faith@coollist.com
(Subscribe at www.coollist.com, or, if you have only email capability, send me a message requesting you be added to the list.)

From: LaAeterna[SMTP:LaAeterna@aol.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: Fw: Annotated NO voter's list: talk.religion.bahai

I think the part that disturbs me the most about this forwarded series of messages is the antagonism evident in the postings about alt.religion.baha'i.
I never have understood why there must be such a confrontational attitude towards those who wish for a non-moderated environment within which to discuss different aspects of the faith?

Nancy

-----<< Advertisement >>-----
High bandwidth usage? No problems.

<https://www.astrax.com> - Astra X Specialised Web Hosting

From: Semler, Gretchen[SMTP:gsemler@PDI-CORP.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: NO voter's list: LaAeterna comment

>I never have understood why there must be such a confrontational attitude >towards those who wish for a non-moderated environment within which to discuss >different aspects of the faith?
>Nancy

Nancy, I understand your viewpoint, as I share it. Unfortunately, as with anything else people feel strongly about, some will inevitably find that the very idea of discussing other opinions about something they "know" is "true" causes great anger. Humans, in our fragile physical bodies, are various degrees of strong in willpower not to flame others or try to block others. Ditto the acceptance ability. It can be learned, but many don't see it as needful.

I would not worry. Nothing can stop those who wish to discuss ideas with others. I ran across a quote the other day, while visiting a site, that had to do with Baha'u'llah (spell?) saying something along the lines of truth shining through only after the clash of differing opinions. (I don't think I remember the whole quote, so I'm just writing that much.)

Many other faiths have this same problem. Indeed, more and bitterer wars were begun from a difference of opinion over religion than from any other reason, through the history of mankind. We've a sad history, but as long as there's a core (from all over the world) that keeps striving to become "more," there will always be hope for all.

G Semler

-----<< Advertisement >>-----
High bandwidth usage? No problems.

<https://www.astrax.com> - Astra X Specialised Web Hosting

From: LaAeterna[SMTP:LaAeterna@aol.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: Fw: Knowledge of good and evil

Fran Baker states she doubts whether Baha'is can tell good from evil...and that Abdul Baha's writings on the subject are "hopelessly banal..." I infer from her statements that she hopes to find the answer for what is supposedly good and what is evil within a human's own conscience? But then she quotes from the Bible--this reinforces my impression that the very concept of good vs evil is not one which she can trace back to someone who had an apple fall on his/her head, so to speak (to borrow shamelessly from a Newtonian myth :) The discussion of morality has been pretty much originated by the Manifestations and has evolved from "Know thyself" (and then forget thyself, hopefully!) to the Golden Rule, to "do unto others.." and finally: "treat others BETTER than you might treat yourself..." difficult concepts, perhaps banal to someone not inclined to self sacrifice, but definitely appealing to many, for they lay a foundation of behavioral standards which when followed increase the possibility of a peaceful world.
Nancy

-----<< Advertisement >>-----
Superior connectivity. World class hosting.

Astra Labs WebHosting - <https://www.astraweb.com>

From: LaAeterna[SMTP:LaAeterna@aol.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: Fw: Robert Henderson & Abortion

Derrick Evanson objects to the deliberate concealment of the law against elective abortion. I think the UHJ put this out publicly in a letter to the believers (or perhaps to one believer, I don't exactly recall). It was posted on srb about a month ago, so if you have archives available you can pull that up. The question is: how many people actually READ what is put out by the UHJ? There shouldn't be any ignorance about their official position, unless these letters and manifests are being kept away from the believers (not being privvy to any of the material, I depend on some friends to send them to me so I can see what's happening in that community). I think the problem lies largely in the general atmosphere of trying to create 'entry by troops." You are presenting a conservative agenda to a society that has degenerated to a point of animalistic behavior, and who doesn't want to hear about self control, chastity, no drugs, no alcohol, etc. This leads to resistance, which leads to lack of inductees, so to speak. I think this is why the Faith has more success in countries where life is simpler and some moral values linger. When my parents were young and pioneered for the Faith, they were amazed and horrified at the manner in which many Baha'is "watered down" the Teachings to make them acceptable to possible converts. Too many young people were coming into the Faith not knowing that alcohol was forbidden and promiscuous sex as well. When they found out about these injunctions, they left again, in what Dr Cole calls the "revolving door" effect.

It is but a fulfillment of Shoghi Effendi's warnings: we have become a sick society indeed. It is up to the Baha'is to demonstrate that living a life of self discipline can actually feel good, rather than trying to hide the fact so people don't think you're a prude, or too "straight," or whatever label they come up with for those who try to live sanely in an insane world...

nancy

-----<< Advertisement >>-----
Superior connectivity. World class hosting.

Astra Labs WebHosting - <https://www.astraweb.com>

From: LaAeterna[SMTP:LaAeterna@aol.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: Fw: Baha'i teachings

I think the problem with the Resurrection discussion lies in the importance Christians (and Dale, evidently) attach to physicality vs spirituality. If you will recall, in the history of the Christian faith, Christ's "godhood" wasn't as great an issue until the Council of Nicaea, where the bishops met and decided this interpretation was the only valid one. They then proceeded to persecute as heretics those who did not agree with them(as I recall, two bishops disagreed right then and were banished). This came about some three centuries after Christ's death, which would imply that until then the believers didn't all think Christ was the Son of God, nor did they have the concept of the Trinity, something created later by these bishops (i.e. the evolution of the Nicene Creed).

I would ask: why is the physical so important, that it transcends any discussion of the spiritual? Also, if God has children, doesn't that create an anthropomorphic vision of His reality, one which limits Him to our interpretations and understanding? Furthermore, doesn't that imply some sort of centrality of importance of planet earth vs the rest of the universe, a position the Church has had to let go of gradually since medieval times? The Baha'i vision is one of universality and infinity, concepts which cannot agree with those which state that the earth is the only place in the universe where God would have manifested Himself by bearing a child, because He loves "us" (read: the human species) above all other species in the infinite universe. This concept is at variance with the Baha'i understanding of spiritual evolution .

Nancy

-----<< Advertisement >>----- 200,000 exposures for $450? Where?

--> Coollist - <https://www.coollist.com/advertise.htm>

From: LaAeterna[SMTP:LaAeterna@aol.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: Fw: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB

Star's question as to whether or not baha'i-coollist has a list of "CB's" and filters out their messages seems an interesting point, when one considers that each and every group of Baha'is calls the others Covenant Breakers. Frederick would have a heck of a job trying to sort out who is a CB according to whose group. Bonne chance, Frederick!!

Nancy

-----<< Advertisement >>-----
High bandwidth usage? No problems.

<https://www.astrax.com> - Astra X Specialised Web Hosting

From: rmsolem@mke.ab.com[SMTP:rmsolem@mke.ab.com]
Sent: Tuesday, June 02, 1998 2:26 PM
To: bahai-faith@coollist.com
Subject: Re: Posting Bahai-faith messages on SRB

>Star's question as to whether or not baha'i-coollist has a list of "CB's" and >filters out their messages seems an interesting point, when one considers that >each and every group of Baha'is calls the others Covenant Breakers. Frederick >would have a heck of a job trying to sort out who is a CB according to whose >group. Bonne chance, Frederick!!
>Nancy

The SRB (soc.religion.bahai) newsgroup deletes all Covenant Breaker posts.
The ARB (alt.religion.bahai) newsgroup is for the most part inaccessible and not used.
The Talisman list asks that people not post Covenant Breaker content, but isn't firm on keeping that rule.

So here we are on the new Baha'i-coollist. Please can't we finally have an OPEN DISCUSSION without any deletions or self censorship? Let's see the spark of truth come out of the clash of differing opinions and not modify our discussions to meet the criteria for SRB. We are not SRB, if we were why would this list even exist?

As it was pointed out above, who actually is a Covenant Breaker is an open question and it depends on who you talk to. In addition to that how long are these Covenant Breaking ideas considered to be dangerous?

I can go back to Baha'i books and find out in detail what some early divisions were about and I'm totally immune to falling into any of those ideas that seems petty or ridiculous now. With some study I could refute all of them.

I have found out that Shoghi Effendi himself dealt with those Covenant Breakers concerning the authenticity of 'Abdul-Baha's Will & Testament and then we are told not to address believers questions concerning some of the current Covenant Breaker ideas?

Now the issue still remains concerning the details of the establishment of the Universal House of Justice following the death of Shoghi Effendi, 41 years ago! If people are still trying to shut people up about this it makes me suspicious of why they feel it's still necessary to do so. New Baha'is come into the faith every day and this repeatedly seems to be a difficult area for them to understand. I know it was for me. Let's talk about it and teach! Dysfunctional families ignore their problems, healthy ones lay it all out on the table. Is this really a Covenant Breaker issue or just history?

In the book (can't remember the exact title because I don't own it) "The Babi and Baha'i Faiths Bibliography in the English Language" they have cataloged all of the Covenant Breaker writings and have even summarized many of them. So does this mean that archivists are somehow immune to their ideas because they have read them? There appears to be a double standard here.

Call me naive but you'd think that an open and free discussion of these issues for those who choose to discuss them would either clear the air or develop into a meaningful debate that we all could learn from. I've seen some of these Covenant Breaker posts and for the most part I don't think most Baha'is actually have the knowledge to discuss them intelligently. It's time we all learned how to address this stuff.

I say post everything and let the user decide what to read, what to delete and what to reply to.

Robert Solem

-----<< Advertisement >>-----
High bandwidth usage? No problems.

<https://www.astrax.com> - Astra X Specialised Web Hosting

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Juan R. I. Cole <jrcole@umich.edu>
To: T.ALBERT-ISHMAEL ANDERSON <talishman@usa.net>; talisman@umich.edu <talisman@umich.edu>
Subject: Re: Covenant Breakers
Date: Tuesday, March 03, 1998 3:21 AM

The point is that there were about 170 individuals subscribed to Talisman I, including numbers of LSA members, assistants, ABMs, and even occasionally NSA members from outside the US. There was, I believe, one CB subscribed. (This is not counting, of course, the loyal and committed Baha'is who were later falsely and outrageously accused of contravening the covenant by reason of their postings). Since Talisman@indiana.edu was run off a listserv, subscriptions were automatic, anyway, and Indiana University rules were not such that potential subscribers could be excluded because of their religious views, which would have been a form of discrimination.

Talisman differed from the AOL, Microsoft, Compuserv and other Baha'i chatrooms, and even from Soc.Religion.Bahai in this regard. All of these places in cyberspace had hugely more covenant breakers signed up, and in all of those places the CB's posted freely and frequently, nor was there anything the Baha'is could do about it but ignore them.

Counsellor Birkland's attack on talisman@indiana.edu in winter of 1996 therefore can only have been an unfair singling out of this list. Why didn't he come on AOL and warn its Baha'i chatroom that the covenant was being endangered by the presence of CBs and imply that everyone should sign off? Especially since no Remeyites or others had ever dared actually post anything on talisman, because it was fairly obvious that the high powered Baha'i academics would easily defeat them in debate. It was a ploy on Birkland's part. He had been instructed to attempt to destroy talisman, and that was his opening gambit. It failed so miserably that in its aftermath he looked a bit silly. He did manage in the end to decommission the Indiana service (at a rather high cost to the faith), but he never did succeed in destroying talisman--in fact as far as I can tell he multiplied the talismans. Nor did he succeed in preventing the sorts of statements to which he and his handlers had objected from being made.

But, well, the Baha'i administration is a bureaucracy, and bureaucracies are not good at dealing with new situations. Everybody, including the intellectuals, was caught off guard at the dynamics of the new medium, and none of us could imagine our email traffic being taken so seriously as to eventuate in formal heresy charges! As the Information Revolution unfolds, either the Baha'i faith will find a way to adapt to it more productively, or it will recede back into obscurity. Because this is the Wave of the next millennium, and whoever doesn't catch it is going to be road kill.

cheers Juan

At 03:24 PM 3/2/98, T.ALBERT-ISHMAEL ANDERSON wrote:
>Hm! "almost no covenant breakers" on talisman@indiana.edu sounds very much like "almost pregnant".
>Juan R. I. Cole wrote:
>>
>> Dear Dean:
>>
>><deleted> >>Being savvy about cyberspace, they knew that the >> list was distinguished from others in having almost no covenant breakers >> signed up and in being a high powered intellectual environment where they >> dared not actually say anything.
>><deleted>
>>
>> Enjoy the fast!
>>
>> cheers Juan
>
>
>
>

>Get free e-mail and a permanent address at <https://www.netaddress.com>
>
>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Juan R. I. Cole <jrcole@umich.edu>
To: talisman@umich.edu <talisman@umich.edu>
Subject: criticism and attacks
Date: Tuesday, February 10, 1998 12:16 AM

Alas, Susan is falling into the typical stance of the Baha'i Right. First of all, any criticism of any policy of any Baha'i institution is branded a scurrilous "attack" and "slander" and so forth. It is ruled out of court that these institutions might ever be naughty and in need of being criticized so that they can improve their performance. There is a difference between "attacks and slander" and criticism. And this difference is what makes liberty possible, what makes it possible for human beings to be more than slaves to their rulers, whether civil or ecclesiastical.

For instance, if I say, "X is ugly and smells bad," that is an attack. If I say, "Bob Henderson falsely accused the editors of Dialogue magazine of "negative campaigning" and Firuz Kazemzadeh violated their rights to privacy by reading their private correspondence out on the floor of the National Convention," then that is not an "attack." It is a criticism. They certainly performed the actions indicated, and these actions certainly rode roughshod over the rights of the editors. That doesn't mean they are unredeemable. It means they overstepped their authority and acted badly. My point in making the criticism is to attempt to persuade them to stop acting like that, not merely to have the satisfaction of condemning them.

And if I say that when the editors appealed to the universal house of justice, the latter body, instead of making a fair and equitable decision, sided in a knee-jerk fashion with Kazemzadeh and Henderson and unjustly punished the editors for a crime it was never proven they committed, then that is also a criticism of the uhj, not an attack. An attack on the uhj would take the form of saying, e.g., "the Baha'i universal house of justice always does evil things and one hopes it will be abolished." But the universal house of justice has done many wonderful things. At the height of the Reagan cold war, its members courageously issued the beautiful Peace Statement. The uhj has promoted community development in the 3rd world. It cooperated in the campaign, which Firuz Kazemzadeh spearheaded, finally to pass the anti-Genocide bill in the U.S. Congress. So it has done many positive things, and hundreds of thousands if not millions of people look to its members for spiritual guidance. I think it generally does an ok job at leading the religion. But it really did egregiously wrong the Dialogue editors, and it has a history of having some kind of hang-up with Western Baha'i intellectuals, and its members obviously really dislike open discourse, especially liberal Baha'i discourse. So I think there is a blind spot here, an area of performance that needs working on. And I think public criticism is the best way to work on the blind spots, and this is something `Abdul-Baha implicitly endorses in the Secret of Divine Civilization when he says that the whole point of having elected officials is that they might be deterred by the threat of being unelected from acting unjustly. When elected officials declare themselves infallible in all their doings and above criticism, and try to make criticism impossible, they remove that bulwark against tyranny that `Abdul-Baha thought so crucial.

So if all that is an "attack" and makes me an "enemy," so be it. I'm already an "enemy" to most of the ayatollahs in Iran because I "attacked" them over their treatment of the Iranian Baha'is. "Attacking" (i.e. criticizing) the ayatollahs is also frowned upon over there. So I can be the "enemy" of all religions, "attacking" tyranny, injustice, and the abuse of basic human rights wherever any religious leadership commits those things. But I actually think those religions will be better off for having been "attacked."

Susan's way, of personal love and devotion even to people who occasionally act like tyrants toward others, is the way of medieval nuns toward the Pope. That's fine if it works for her, and even admirable in a way. But it is also an acquiescence in slavery and an abdication of personal conscience and autonomy. It is not a way I would wish on the whole world; in fact, it is a way that I would fight bitterly against if anyone attempted to impose it on me. Moreover, despite what she keeps implying, it is not the way of Baha'u'llah, who rather had nasty things to say about tyrants.

cheers

Juan

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From:  Bahai Faith *****
(BI*P*GS@LIBERTY.COM) Subject: Re: "crush the oppressor who flourisheth" -- Baha'u'llah Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,
talk.religion.bahai
Date: 2003-03-11 04:14:11 PST

Paul,

I respect your conscience, while not sharing it.

Baha'u'llah's Teachings do not include pacificism. There is a time for war, and this is it. If only we were living in a world of simple choices, rather than this vale of tears, forced to choose between evil and worse evil. In my view, as a fervent life-long supporter of the United Nations, I believe it has indeed failed, thus far, in its central obligation to defend the principles codified in its Charter, a bitter, difficult, but necessary truth to recognize. There's plenty of blame to go around.... I discuss that elsewhere.

"Evil continues and endures." --Abdul-Baha. The Creator has put us in a world that requires us to fight it or allow it to crush and destroy ourselves and others, though many live in vague dreams....

"Bind ye the broken with the hands of justice, and crush the oppressor who flourisheth with the rod of the commandments of your Lord, the Ordainer, the All-Wise." --Baha'u'llah

--

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Terry Culhane's attempt at defense of the tyrannical and oppressive system of interrogation discloses the appalling lack of liberty and freedom of conscience within the baha'i faith and its betrayal of Abdul-Baha's Teachings:

From: TLCULHANE <tlculhane@aol.com>
Subject: My case - a letter to my friends
Date: Wednesday, July 28, 1999 2:12 PM

Dear Friends,

I had hoped my case would not be a topic of public conversation and especially an uninformed topic of conversation. One of the dangers of lack of knowledge is sheer speculation that allows for the assertion of preformed ideological templates to dominate discourse.

Please consider this an open letter to my friends. It will be the only public response I will make. If anyone wishes to continue to speak with me about it I will do that in a private conversation as among friends.

In February I had a meeting with two ABm's. The original purpose of the meeting was to gather information about a workshop I had presented at Bosch Bahai school. Two people (out of 62 attendees) had written to the House of Justice protesting what they understood about my comments.

The House of Justice passed the 'protest message' to the NSA and the Continental Counselors for follow up. The Counselors in turn authorized two ABm's to meet with me to gather information about what had taken place at Bosch. So far so good.

One of the ABm's concluded that this was an opportunity to do more than inquire after information. This person effectively conducted the meeting

as though it was an interrogation of my theological views among them my views of the station of Baha u llah, my interest in the Maiden writings of Baha u llah and ,of course, my discussion of the Mashriqu l Adhkar . That was the problem
as well as how the meeting was arranged and conducted by the ABm.

I was not informed two ABm's would be present, nor who authorized the meeting or to whom the ABm's would be reporting.

Friends I am quite human and cycled through a series of emotions from anger to betrayal, to disgust, to bewilderment and frustration and relief. I went thorough this twice, once in February and again in May after the April 7 letter became public.

How did I handle this 'test' of my faith and why have I chosen to remain a Bahai? The simple explanation is I love Baha u llah. As many of you know I am a mystic by temperament which explains my attraction to the spiritual and social reality of the Mashriqu l Adhkar and the "Maiden " writings of Baha u llah.
Both times during my "emotional cycle" S/He came to me and I was draped in that "silken Robe of Light." As best I can describe in words we "talked" about my pain and anguish and " My distress and banishment in this remote prison." This is the personal God who reached in and touched my soul and said I understand and shared with me that "perfume of a grace which to tongue can describe." I was reminded that "this not a field for the foolish and faint of heart." If I thought the vision of Baha u llah was easily realized, that all the hope
and redemption that His message represents was attainable without effort or without transformation I learned better. The course of human history in general
and religious history in particular will change but it will be through multigenerational blood sweat and spirtual tears.

In the midst of this struggle I wrote to the Counselors and the House of Justice , the latter on March 30. I have met with Counselor Birkland twice and we have spoken for several hours about my case and what I called in my letter to the House the "far too widespread culture of fear and suspicion in the community.

The Counselor extended me an apology for what happened and he assumed responsibility for it. There was no passing the buck or kicking the proverbial dog in his response to me. Our conversations were honest, open and reflective on both our parts. He was gracious and loving in his conversations with me. he also clearly said to me that as Counselor he has no problem with my theological views and they were not at issue. This saga has also affected my community and he has been most supportive of the LSA and its goals and has publically expressed that support. I have great respect for anyone who is capable of admitting mistakes, assuming responsibility for them and looking for ways to move forward and heal divisions and misunderstandings. This is exactly how Counselor Birkland responded to me and therefore it can be stated I have great respect for his character as a man.

In the course of my conversations with the Counselor and my observation of his interaction with the LSA and the community I have been able to observe in action what I write about as the ethic of consultation and its requirements of mutual recognition and reciprocity. I understand consultation to be a non adversarial form of communicative action and the recognition and reciprocity involved is fundamentally about the recognition (the irfan) that we are all made in the image and likeness of God. That is the starting point of Bahai discourse in my view. I have observed the Counselor engage what I write about. I had similar conversations with Counselor Ghadirian, and Paul Dodenhoff will understand my reference here, whom I found to be an example of Abraham Heschel's "analysis of piety."

In late May the famous April 7 letter became public. I was very concerned about its reference to the Mashriqu'l Adhkar as I had raised this question directly with the House in my March 30 letter to them. This letter , which I have said before and will state again is one of the more poorly written letters to come from the World Centre. Poor writing style is something which can be clarified and improved upon. It is not "proof" of dictatorial behavior. On May 26 I wrote a summary of my views of the Mashriqul Adhkar and sent a copy of it, with reference to my March 30 letter to the House of Justice. On May 31 I received a letter from the House of Justice which stated:

" The House of Justice very much appreciates the clarity and candor of your expression in regard to the issues troubling you. It wishes, first of all, for you to be assured that it did not say or feel that you had violated any of its policies or had been disobedient to it in relation to your discussions about the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar."

The response of the House of Justice is hardly a case of "Plausibility structures and denial. I am perfectly capable of discussing "plausability" as it is used in the sociology of knowledge especially as formulated by Berger and Luchmann. The ideological twist to it is inaccurate on theoretical grounds and inapplicable to the comments of the House of Justice. Their letter was a response to my questions two months earlier before anything related to the April 7 letter became a public issue. The disingenuous combination of the sociological concept of plausability structures with the ideological concept of "plausible denial" is an example of a preformed template that will generate conclusions even in the absence of substantive knowledge of a case. In this situation the facts of my case.

My conversations with the Counselors have reinforced my conviction that this comment in the April 7 letter did not and was not intended to refer to my actions. As early as March 20 Counselor Birklnad reiterated that point to me in our conversation. I also know for a "fact" that the Counselor had been in communication with the World Centre about my case and that the House wanted the Counselor to meet with me and resolve this problem.

Furthermore the House of Justice wrote:

"That the meeting to which you were invited by the Auxiliary Board members became a cause of distress to you is deeply regretted by the House of Justice. But it was glad to learn from your email that Counsellor Stephen Birkland met with you subsequently in a sympathetic attempt to remedy the difficulties of your experience. You should therefore feel assured that your concern has been taken seriously and an earnest attempt made to deal with it. The House of Justice trusts that the burden of your heart has thus been relieved and that you can now refocus your energies on continuing your dedicated service to the Cause."

Friends, dictators and totalitarians do not express deep regret that a soul was disressed or estranged by certian actions. They most assuredly do not take steps or direct that steps be taken to resolve the anguish or distess of *one human being. yet that is exactly what the House of Justice did in my case. They intervned on my behalf because of the mistakes that were made in my case by Institutional representatives.

For anyone who is unable to distinguish bettween acts of love and care and hypocritical PR damage control I have compassion. This kind of cynical linkage is an example Orwellian newspeak where love becomes hate. Are we really so long gone and so far from Baha u llah that acts of love, kindness,magnanimity cannot be perceived for what they are?Iis the world truly that barren ?

I am many things but pollyanna is not one of them. I am Jamesian twice born soul who has hope. And that hope involves believing in spite of the evidence and watching the evidence change. It is easy to be cynical. In a world that needs the hope and promise that life can be lived at a higher level and that needs to know human history canchange,however slowly or haltingly cynicism and prolonged despair is a betrayal of the centuries long aspirations of human beings. I believe with all my heart that anyone, of whatever background or religious tradition who indulges such despair has not simply forgotten God but has forgotten humanity. My challenge to my friends is to forego the temptation of cynicism and despair because the "wondrous system" of Baha u llah has not attained perfection. Perfection and transformation do not happen in the abstract they happen with real human beings. The "system" of Baha u llah will only function as well as the people who comprise it. There is much work to be done and it is the spiritual obligation of each of us to engage the struggle of hope and redemption in both its meaning of overcoming 'sin' and imperfection and as the fulfillment of a promise.

I don't say this in ignorance. I say this as one who has had his faith severely tested in ways that are only meaningful to me. In the past year both my daughters brain surgery and stroke and my theological interrogation have been major spiritual battles. They have rocked me at the core of me being. Baha u llah upheld the ante for Terry Culhane. I want to "see": my beloved and she says "how many Husayns greater than thee have professed their love. I hope my willingness to engage the struggle and keep turning to Baha ullah is some measure of my love. I often said that if one wants Paradise, Baghdad the abode of peace, the road to that place passes through Tehran and the Siyah Chal. Each of us has our Siyah Chal our secret place of fear and despair of dreams lost and hopes dashed. yet I can say that we are never alone, the order of that silken Robe of Light is there. Our response is a matter of "learning the art of love's ways and the secret of heart surrender." My dear friends go ahead and learn that art and surrender. Give yourself permission! I am a nobody, a garden level mystic who Baha u llah did not abandon and who the House

of Justice did not abandon.

The House is keenly aware of the limitations and imperfections of the community ,including the functioning of its administrative bodies And they did not ask me to preten all was yet paradise, there was no denial nor attempt to stifle me ot shut me up. They acknowledge reality but hey refuse to sink into a cynical despair.

They offered me the same challenge Baha u llah has offered me to believe and do the work in spite of any evidence and to watch and make the evidence change.

In response to my concerns about problems "mistakes" and the culture of fear and suspicion that I noted they wrote"

" A perspective that may assist in your review of the experience is that the institutions of the Faith operating throughout the world, like individual believers, are struggling to achieve the high ideals set for them in the Writings, and they inevitably make some mistakes even with the best of motives. Fortunately, the consequences of such mistakes often provide them with the empirical bases for shaping their evolution towards maturity. To the extent that the individuals affected are able to deal successfully, both spiritually and practically, with the tests involved, the institutions and individuals derive mutual benefits. The believers and their God-given institutions are intimately joined in a common endeavor to advance the development of a new World Order. A significant degree of magnanimity on the part of each is essential."

The House of Justice openly acknowledges mistakes were made and have been made. Please be fair in your judgement. Do dictators openly acknowledge mistakes on the part of governing bodies and express hope that both those governing bodies and the individuals harmed will learn from them and move forward?

They express the recognition that mistakes are trying and can cause "distress" to souls. They also express the Hope that individuals such as myself will 'hang in there.' And most important they recognize that 'hanging in there' requires 'magnanimity'. Even a dictionary can provide us with the richness and challenge of the concept of magnanimity. Yet in the midst of all that and in the recognition of mistakes they asked me to consider the struggles of the Institutions in our common enterprise. In other words they asked me to consult, to put *my money where my mouth is about consultation as mutual recognition and reciprocity. That recognition is that we are in this together. Notwithstanding that request they close that section of my letter with the following comment.

" This does not mean, of course, that mistaken actions on their part should be ignored."

Again be fair in your judgement. Do those bent on dictatorial control suggest that mistakes should not be ignored.?

There is no monolithic system around the Bahai world bent on crushing people. There are folks everywhere with varying perceptions of what is important about the Faith of Baha u llah. We all have to face the struggle to engage the standards of Baha u llah and not succumb to cynicism and despair when the inevitable imperfections and "mistakes" appear. That is even more true when we encounter the bona fide jerks within the community. Baha u llah promised many things in His redemptive message. He did not promise that jerks would not become Bahais. How do we respond to mistakes -- with magnanimity and with the expectation that consultation must and will take place to address mistakes. That consultation is a non adversarial communicative ethic that recognizes and reciprocates the spiritual dignity and humanity, the likeness of God present in each participant.

What message do I see in my recent situation? I do not see evidence of a monolithic power structure. I see abundant evidence of people willing to work to overcome divisions and heal hearts and minds. I see people watching my response without my knowing it. Far from driving a wedge between people, between believers and governing bodies it appears my experience and my response are doing something else. I know of three people who have enrolled as Bahai's because of my experience. I know of at least a dozen more, previously unknown to me who have been uninvolved or marginally involved in the community but who have come out of the woodwork and want to engage the spiritual struggle to transform themselves and offer hope and redemption to the world. That is the message of my case. If it were in my power that is the message I would offer to you my friends in your journey to the land of the Most Holy.

warmest regards,
Terry Culhane

Homepage

April 27, 1994, Wednesday, FINAL EDITION

Psychiatrist cuts deal on sex assault charges

The Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons has withdrawn charges of sexual impropriety against a psychiatrist who is the past secretary general of the Baha'i faith in Canada. Dr. Hossain Banadaki Danesh, 56, was a former associate professor of psychiatry and family medicine at the University of Ottawa before joining the Baha'is of Canada, where he was secretary general from 1985 to 1989. Conditions for dropping the charges include Danesh's immediate resignation and an agreement not to practice again.

----- Date: April 26,
1994

Page A8

Source: By Dale Anne Freed, Toronto Star

Sex charges withdrawn when psychiatrist resigns

The College of Physicians and Surgeons withdrew charges of sexual impropriety yestery against a psychiatrist who is past secretary general of the Baha'i faith in Canada.

Charges were withdrawn against Dr. Hossain Banadaki Danesh in exchange for Danesh's immediate resignation and his "written undertaking not to reapply for another licence to practice medicine in Ontario or to apply to practice medicine anywhere else, at any time."

He has also agreed to post $10,000 security toward costs incurred by the college in paying for therapy for the complainants.

Charges were laid by three former patients.

Danesh, 56, has not admitted to any sexual impropriety with any of his patients.

Danesh came to Canada from Iran in 1970 and is well-known in the Baha'i community for his marital counselling and seminars, as well as his lectures on non-violence, said Gerald Filson, executive director of public affairs for the Baha'i community in Canada.

A former associate professor of psychiatry and family medicine at the University of Ottawa, Danesh left that position to serve on the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Canada, the national executive, where he was secretary general from 1985 to 1989.

Formerly of Burlington, Danesh now resides on Vancouver Island and is still a member of the governing council for the Baha'i faith of Canada, Filson said. Danesh is one of nine elected members on that council. He resigns that position effective this Saturday, April 30, prior to a move to Switzerland within the next two months, where he will accept an academic post, Filson said.

-
- Return to Documents
 - To Baha'i Studies
 - To Talisman

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Juan R. I. Cole <jrcole@umich.edu>
To: talisman@umich.edu <talisman@umich.edu>
Subject: democratic (ha!)
Date: Friday, December 12, 1997 2:49 PM

Richard:

After the barbaric and dishonest way the "universal" house of "justice" dealt with Michael McKenny, you are in some state of doubt as to whether there is a fight going on? The fight is to determine whether those who hold the views I listed yesterday may continue to be Baha'is in good standing. The answer is: only if they hide their consciences from view, quaking in fear of the conservatives and fundamentalists who have clawed their way onto the universal house of justice, and who are eager to institute inquisitions and expulsions against anyone who dares actually be a Baha'i and think for him or herself. And the point of these inquisitions and expulsions is to ensure conservative hegemony, to ensure that no voice can be heard in the community save a conservative one. This is not only a fight, it is a full-scale persecution. That would be all right if this were the sort of thing Baha'u'llah or `Abdul-Baha had ordained. But it isn't. It is the most profound betrayal of a prophet by his successors since the popes instituted the Inquisition.

Quanta:

I should think the current universal house of justice has by its pronouncements and actions made abundantly clear that it is not interested in consultation or group reasoning together as a means of problem solving. These people have worked themselves into a state of mind that they think they are prophets speaking with the voice of God, and you either agree with them or you are not a Baha'i and they can arrange to make your life miserable. (They even think they have the authority to say something about legitimate academic methodology! That's the funniest thing of all). They have said this over and over again in the past two years. They are not interested in your faith or sincerity or grappling with difficult questions or trying to work together through consultation to resolve problems. They are interested in dictating a narrow ideology to all Baha'is (despite the fact that there isn't the slightest scriptural mandate for their behaving in this manner), and in having all Baha'is kowtow to it. They don't throw around the word Supreme so much because they like Motown.

Since most people don't join a religion because they are desperate for someone to tell them what they can or cannot think or say, the result of this sort of narrow-mindedness is to keep the religion tiny in literate countries. I can't tell you how many ex-Baha'is I have met in cyberspace who complain bitterly about being regimented and shepherded. I mean, you could understand this sort of thing in the Amish, who want to be a small isolationist sect, or in the Catholics, who have believers to spare. But as a tactic for a very small group (I doubt there are really more than 1 1/2 million Baha'is) to attract believers and grow itself into a world religion, it sucks.

There are some issues on which it is worthwhile writing to them. This is not one of them. My advice: Do your own thing as long as you can.

cheers Juan

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Juan R. I. Cole <jrcole@umich.edu>
To: JoySafari <JoySafari@aol.com>; talisman@umich.edu <talisman@umich.edu>
Subject: Re: democratic (ha!)
Date: Monday, December 15, 1997 8:36 PM

The Baha'i faith as an organization has become extremely over-centralized under the Guardian-less uhj, since 1963, which has the effect of snuffing out individual initiative and scotching most worthwhile programs. You are right that if something is not perceived as the idea of the higher-up "suits" then it goes nowhere (i.e. it is squelched).

So I think for the foreseeable future the hope for the Baha'i community is in the local communities. There are lots of sweet, wonderful courageous Baha'is in the hustings, and they are doing marvellous things. Most often they have no idea what's really wrong with the religion in Wilmette and Haifa, and just assume that the administrators are humble and good Baha'is. Although it is true that the uhj has been trying to use its assistants and abm's (the number of which it has vastly multiplied) to control local communities' deepening programs & so forth, it is nevertheless still true that things can be gotten away with at the local level.

I personally think that prayer meetings with chanting and music, deepenings on scholarship and the Writings, and small community service projects are the places to start. I was appalled all the time I was a Baha'i at how little interest there seemed to be in these three areas. Instead you had these gonzo assistants (aiming to become abm's, counselors and then uhj members) talking about a goal of converting 3,000 people next week through pamphleteering (for which you were to do the work and they were to get the credit). It was like a surreal Amway convention.

Moreover, I think local communities should try to keep more of their resources in the local community, and should send very little to Wilmette and Haifa to be wasted on boondoggles, monumental architecture, and flying counselors around to conduct Inquisitions. More resources locally would mean more growth and more activity locally. Basically, just take back your religion.

cheers Juan

At 06:03 PM 12/15/97 EST, JoySafari wrote:

>What issues do you think would be worthwhile? I am interested in knowing what >you believe is a topic that might make a change... since I am at a loss for >any topics and quite frankly, I am close to thinking that my chances of >igniting change(s) are hopeless. On the other hand, I am studying the >writings on courage and on fearlessly defending the Faith since I think they >will only change when and if they want to - period - and this sort of thing is >similar to a lot of male egos I have come across: if you don't let _them_ >think that it's their own idea that they come up with, then it's hopeless.

>
>In a message dated 97-12-13 07:43:47 EST, jrcole@umich.edu writes:

>
><< There are some issues on which it is worthwhile writing to them. This is >not one of them. My advice: Do your own thing as long as you can.

>
> >>
>
>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Dear Mr. Glaysheer,

Last Saturday I published a first article regarding David Kelly and the possible influence the Baha'i-movement might have had on his work. I enclose in this e-mail the article. It's written in Dutch, but the content is based mainly upon quotes and resources you gave me and my own study of Bahai-documents from their library. The bottom line is that more research into Kelly's Baha'i-past is the least the Hutton-inquiry could do in order to shed light on some very puzzling questions one asks after reading and analysing public available information. I am intending to continue work and research on this issue, and keep you updated.

Kind regards,
Maarten

Article published in De Morgen, 06-09-2003, by Maarten Rabaey

[De Morgen: Is a quality newspaper with a progressive and pro-Belgium oriented editorial board. It is published by De Persgroep, which also publishes Het laatste Nieuws and is printed daily on 41.000 copies.]

Duistere krachten in het hoofd van Kelly
Het werd wel eens vermeld in een klein zinnetje in een Britse krant, maar niemand stond er tot nu toe echt bij stil. De Britse VN-wapeninspecteur David Kelly, die ten grondslag lag aan een omstrede BBC-reportage over het 'aandikken' van Blairs dossier over Saddams massavernietigingswapens, was lid van de Baha'i-religie. Een sekte, zeggen haar eigen dissidenten, met een bizarre hidden agenda in Irak.

Waren dit de 'hogere krachten' waar Kelly net voor zijn dood over sprak?

Maarten Rabaey bericht.

Afgelopen maandag getuigde Janice Kelly, weduwe van David, voor de

Hutton-commissie die de omstandigheden van zijn zelfmoord op 18 juli onderzoekt. In de zaal kon je een speld horen vallen toen de vrouw, die

aan artritis lijdt, via een videoverbinding met haar huis in Oxfordshire haar getuigenis aflegde. Na over de wetenschappelijke carrière van David te hebben gepraat, sneed openbaar aanklager James Dingemans het geloof van David Kelly aan.

- 'We hebben gehoord dat Dr. Kelly een lid werd van het Baha'i-geloof.

Weet u daar iets van?'

- 'Heel weinig maar. Hij hield dat heel privé, voor hemzelf. Het was pas een paar jaar geleden, misschien vijf of zes jaar, dat ik me realiseerde dat hij de koran las. Hij werd zachter in de omgang. In zekere zin ging hij door een spirituele openbaring. Hij las heel veel over het onderwerp en ontmoette een paar mensen. David ging zeker naar een paar ontmoetingen in onze regio, tot zowat twee jaar geleden.

Daarna nam het geleidelijk af."

- 'Daarna nam het geleidelijk af?'

- 'Ja, op het gebied van vergaderingen. Zijn geloof verminderde niet.

Dat was zéér belangrijk voor hem, tot op het einde. Geloof ik toch.'

- 'Weet u waarom het geleidelijk afnam?'

- 'Ik denk dat de structuur van gebedswakes in onze regio veranderde. In plaats van grotere groepen beperkten de ontmoetingen zich tot contacten met twee of drie mensen. Hij vond dat minder comfortabel.'

Doel van de sekte: Bagdad

Janice Kelly kende niet de hele waarheid. Of werd daar niet om gevraagd door de openbare aanklager. Of wou ze niet aansnijden.

David Kelly was veel meer betrokken bij de wakes van zijn geloof dan de buitenwereld aanneemt. Eind juli lekten al de eerste berichten uit over een speech die Kelly op 5 oktober 2002 gaf voor een dertigtal Baha'ileden in Oxfordshire. Daar drukte hij volgens de aanwezigen zijn bezorgdheid uit over de "interpretatie" van inlichtingen uit het regeringsdossier van september over Saddams massavernietigingsarsenaal.

Kelly, die in 1999 lid werd van de vijfduizend gelovigen tellende Britse
Baha'i-gemeenschap, gaf zijn toespraak ten huize van Geeta en Roger Kingdon, in Abingdon, Oxfordshire. Hij sprak gedurende veertig minuten en gaf zelfs een slide-presentatie over zijn werk als wapeninspecteur in Irak. Hij eindigde met een vraag--en-antwoordsessie over het dossier, dat tien dagen daarvoor openbaar was gemaakt in een poging om de publieke opinie achter de oorlog in Irak te krijgen.
Kingdon verklaarde na Kelly's dood dat de wetenschapper verteld had dat de inlichtingen in het dossier accuraat waren, maar hij zich ongemakkelijk voelde over de wijze waarop het document werd geïnterpreteerd.
De spin-doctors van de regering-Blair vertelden de media immers dat het rapport bewees hoe het Iraakse leger binnen de vijfenvierzig minuten chemische en biologische wapens kon afvuren, dat de Iraki's aanzienlijke hoeveelheden uranium uit Afrika konden betrekken en dat Irak binnen de één tot twee jaar een kernwapen kon produceren, als Saddam de nodige splijtstoffen kon verzamelen.
BBC-journalist Andrew Gilligan gooide eind mei de knuppel in het hoenderhok door in het ochtendprogramma Today van Radio 4 te melden dat
"anonieme, welingelichte, bronnen" meenden dat het dossier om de oorlog aanvaardbaar te maken voor het volk "aangedikt" was.
Dat was, in zekere
zin, ook de visie van Kelly, die met de BBC had gesproken.
Roger Kingdon verklaarde in de Britse pers dat Kelly "ambigu" bleef over wie hij schuldig achtte aan de foute interpretatie van het dossier: de

regering, de media of beide. Het Hutton-onderzoek, dat deze week zijn eerste sessie verhoren afrondde, zal daar vanaf volgende week verder uitsluitsel proberen over te krijgen. Het antwoord op één vraag zal het onderzoek alvast niet kunnen geven. Waarom gaat een 59-jarige wetenschapper met een rijkgevulde carrière op een zucht van zijn pensioen drie kilometer van huis tegen een boom aan zitten, slikt hij het artritismedicijn co-proxamol van zijn vrouw en zet hij zijn boyscoutsmes in zijn linkerpols? Volgens critici houdt het Hutton-onderzoek te weinig rekening met zijn Baha'i-geloof. Kelly, het echtpaar Kingdon, en de andere aanwezigen deelden immers meer dan alleen maar geloof. Ze deelden een religieuze organisatie met een hogere missie, waarvan einddoel in Bagdad ligt.

Door zijn vele reizen als wapeninspecteur naar de Iraakse hoofdstad, werd Kelly door zijn geloofsgenoten beschouwd als een bevoorrechte getuige. In het dictatoriale Irak van Saddam, waar godsdienst werd onderdrukt, kon hij immers in de voetsporen treden van Baha'u'llah (Arabisch voor 'Gods Glorie', mr). Deze Perzische edelman vluchtte halfweg de negentiende eeuw naar Bagdad na een gevangenschap in Teheran, waar hij een visioen kreeg over 'Gods wil voor de mensheid'. Baha'u'llah zag zich als een nieuwe boodschapper die de tegenstrijdigheden uit de nalatenschap van Mozes, Boeddha, Jezus en Mohammed moest verzoenen. Veertig jaar lang liet hij geschriften na over zijn mens- en maatschappijbeeld die vandaag als de basis worden gezien van het Baha'i-geloof, dat wereldwijd al vijf miljoen aanhangers telt in 200 landen. Hun huidig hoofdkwartier bevindt zich in het Israëliische Haifa maar vooral Bagdad heeft voor de Baha'i een enorme symbolische betekenis. Naast het 'Huis van Baha'u'llah' claimen ze er ook het eigendomsrecht van de 'Tuin van Ridvan' (Paradijs), een plek aan de

oevers van de Tigris waar hun stichter in 1863 na twaalf dagen meditatie openbaringen kreeg.
Dat Kelly zijn wetenschappelijke opdracht voor de VNwapeninspectieteams en de Britse regering heeft laten beïnvloeden door de Baha'i lijkt in eerste instantie vergezocht. Toch wordt ze vandaag wel aannemelijk gemaakt door dissidente Baha'i, die al enkele jaren vaststellen hoe hun liberale en mystieke filosofie steeds meer gedomineerd wordt door een fundamentalistische, sectaire, strekking.
Een dissident spreekt

"De bemoeienis van de Baha'i-administratie in Dr. Kelly's werk zou
ernstig overwogen en onderzocht moeten worden", zegt
FG
in een gesprek met De Morgen. Glaysher is een Amerikaanse academicus uit Michigan, en lid van de Baha'i sinds 1976. "Alle Baha'i worden geacht
volledig gehoorzaam te zijn als hen iets wordt gevraagd.
Kelly zal geen uitzondering op die regel geweest zijn. Integendeel. De fundamentalisten binnen onze beweging hebben wellicht zelfs wat meer met hem gewerkt
omdat hij zo'n waardevolle bekeerling was, in navolging van Baha'u'llahs uitspraken over prominenten."
In de internetbibliotheek van de Baha'i zijn inderdaad talrijke geschriften terug te vinden van Abdul-Baha, Baha'u'llahs zoon die het roer van hem overnam van 1892 tot 1921, zoals 'The Importance of Guiding Distinguished Souls to the Cause' - 'Het Belang om Befaaamde Individuen naar de Zaak te Leiden'.
De 'Zaak' van de huidige Baha'i wordt vandaag niet meer bepaald door profeten, maar door het zogenaamde Universal House of Justice in Haifa.
Deze interne verkozen instelling bemoeit zich officieel niet met politiek, maar dat wijzen de dissidenten met talrijke voorbeelden van de hand.
"Hoewel de religie geregeerd wordt door een verkozen instelling hoeft

die geen verantwoording af te leggen aan het electoraat", schreef ex-Baha'i Karen Bacquet in het vakblad van de American Family Foundation: "Meer, het hoogste instituut wordt geacht onfeilbaar te zijn. Achter de liberale en sociale uitstraling schuilt een autoritaire leidersschapsstructuur. Conformiteit wordt afgedwongen door intimidatie, sancties, excommunicatie en verstoting uit angst voor een interne vijand. Baha'i worden aangespoord zoveel mogelijk persoonlijke offers te brengen. Hoewel ze aangespoord worden zich te mengen onder de andere godsdiensten worden de huidige wereldsystemen, inclusief de westerse democratie, gezien als inferieur aan het systeem van Baha'i-bestuur en aanzien als gedoemd om te verdwijnen."

De 'Zaak' wordt vastgelegd in Vijfjarenplannen. Glaysher tipt aan dat het heroveren van Irak en de heilige plaatsen van Baha'u'llah voor het geloof een topprioriteit is. De Baha'i-leiding heeft daarom, wars van zijn pacifistische filosofie, nooit de Amerikaans-Britse inval in Irak veroordeeld maar eerder aangemoedigd. Dat stelt ook een boodschap van het House of Justice naar aanleiding van het Ridvan-feest, in mei van dit jaar: "De gevolgen van de oorlog in het Midden-Oosten zijn niet minder significant voor de vooruitgang van onze gemeenschap van de Allergrootste Naam dan de evolutie van de globale samenleving. Dat de gebeurtenissen van deze crisis direct een gebied beïnvloeden met een rijke Baha'i-erfenis zoals Irak, springt in het oog." 'Duistere krachten'

Aanhangers werden door de Britse en Amerikaanse nationale leiding, in een rondschrijven aangespoord níet te gaan betogen tegen de oorlog. Vreemd, voor een religie die zich als pacifistisch laat omschrijven. Meer, de geschriften van de Baha'i lijken het principe van Amerika's preventieve oorlog door de vingers te zien. Ze stellen dat "een verovering een lovenswaardige zaak kan zijn, en er tijden zijn waarbij oorlog de machtige basis wordt van vrede." Lovenswaardig wordt de oorlog ook voor de beurs van de Baha'i, zegt Glaysher. "Het Huis van Baha'u'llah en de Tuin van Ridvan zijn sleutelsites. De vastberadenheid om zich het eigendomrecht toe te eigenen en er nieuwe pelgrimsoorden van te maken zijn door de Baha'i al vaak aangekondigd. Het is goed mogelijk dat men op het verhoogde inkomenspotentieel aasde. Er zijn in het laatste decennium conflicten ontstaan binnen de Baha'i over geld, over wiens reisagentschap de boekingen krijgt voor de pelgrimstochten naar Haifa. Onlangs nog werd 700.000 dollar gestolen door de schatbewaarder van de beweging in Houston. De site in Bagdad is razend belangrijk voor de beweging."

In de laatste Ridvan-boodschap werden de leden aangespoord geld in te zamelen voor het World Center Endowment Fund. Er is sprake van "noodzakelijke uitgaven" die dringend moeten worden gedekt. Kelly, die schatbewaarder was in zijn Baha'i-gemeenschap, was hier zonder twijfel van op de hoogte. FG: "Ik denk dat het uiterst naïef zou zijn om te denken dat Kelly níét onder immense druk van de Baha'i kwam te staan om de oorlog mee te laten goedkeuren. Maar het is aan Lord Hutton om te beslissen wat Kelly's visie was. Na 27 jaar lidmaatschap weet ik heus wel hoe binnen de Baha'i naar de gunst van prominenten wordt gedongen en hoe ze overtuigd worden. Op manieren die je je als buitenstaander niet kan voorstellen." Kelly verkoos zichzelf een definitieve stilte op te leggen. De verontrustende uitspraken binnen zijn familie en onder collega's over "duistere krachten die aan het werk waren" roepen nu vragen op. Met deze woorden leek Kelly - uiteraard - te doelen op de Britse inlichtingendiensten of Blairs spin-doctors. Wie vertrouwd is met de machtscenakels van de Baha'i is geneigd een mogelijke andere lezing te zien. Dissidenten van de beweging zoals Glaysheer noemen het goed mogelijk dat Kelly op een of andere manier geïntimideerd werd als een 'convenant-breker', zoals de Baha'i zijn interne dwarsliggers noemt, omdat hij 'de Zaak' in een slecht daglicht kon stellen. Zijn geloofsgenoten uit Oxfordshire hebben ondertussen per brief een spreekverbod gekregen. Alle communicatie verloopt via de secretaris, Barney Leith, die tot dusver ook als enige Baha'i gehoord is door de commissie-Hutton. Hij zei dat Kelly ten huize van de Kingdons niet over het septemberdossier had gesproken, in tegenstelling tot wat het gemuilkorfde echtpaar vertelde. Leith verklaarde eerder niet te weten of de wetenschapper zelfmoord pleegde uit een of ander schuldbesef, maar voegde er raadselachtig aan toe dat "de leer van de Baha'i sterk het belang benadrukt dat... iemand zijn woord houdt." Kelly deed dat op een angstaanjagend berekende manier. Tijdens de Hutton-hoorzitting op 21 augustus haalde de Britse diplomaat Richard Broucher een e-mail boven waarin Kelly "de vrees uitdrukte dat zijn Iraakse contacten zich na een invasie verraden zouden voelen en dat sommigen gedood konden worden als gevolg van zijn acties". Toen Broucher vroeg wat er dan zou gebeuren, schreef Kelly terug met de woorden: "Ik zal dan waarschijnlijk dood in het woud worden teruggevonden."

A crude computer translation

Dark strengths in the head of Kelly it was sometimes mentioned in small zinnetje in a British newspaper, but nobody stood there so far real at quiet. The British vn-wapeninspecteur David Kelly, who lay Bbc-reportage controversial at basis to concerning ' thickens ' of Blairs file concerning Saddams mass destruction weapons, was member of Baha'i-religie. A sect, says its own dissidents, with bizarre hidden agenda in Iraq.

 This were ' higher strengths ' where Kelly exactly for its dead concerning spoke? Reported at Rabaey.
 Last Monday testified Janice Kelly, examine widow of David, for Hutton-commissie the those circumstances of its suicide on 18 July. In the room you could hear a speld falls then the woman, who suffers from arthritis, by means of a video connection with its house in Oxfordshire its deposition took off. After concerning the scientific career of David to have talked, public indicter cut James Dingemans the belief of David Kelly.
 - We have heard that Dr. Kelly a member became of Baha'i-geloof.
 Weet you of it something? - Very little but. He kept that very private, for himself. It just a couple had been suffered year, perhaps five or six years, which I realised myself that he read the koran. He became more gently in the ambulatory. In a certain way he went by a spiritual revelation. He read as lot of concerning the subject and met a couple people.
 David went certainly to a couple meetings in our region, up to zowat two years suffered.
 Afterwards it decreased gradually.- Decreased ' afterwards it gradually?' - Yes, in the field of meetings. To be belief diminished not.
 That was zéér important for him, to on end. I nevertheless believe.- ' Weet
 you for which decreased it gradually?' - I think that of speech vigils in our region change the structure. In place of larger groups set limits the meetings to contacts with two or three people. He found that less comfortably. Aim of the sect: Bagdad Janice Kelly did not know complete truth. Or it was not asked there for by the public indicter.
 Or she did not want cut. David Kelly the much more had been involved in the vigils of its belief then outside world adopts. By the end of July leaks already the first bulletins concerning speech which Kelly on 5 October 2002 spent for about thirty Baha'i-leden in Oxfordshire. There he expressed himself mass destruction arsenal according to the people present its concern concerning the "interpretation" of information from the government file of September concerning Saddams.

Kelly, which became in 1999 member, of the five thousand gelovigen counting British Baha'i-gemeenschap, gave at huize van Geeta and Roger Kingdon to its speech, in Abingdon, Oxfordshire. He spoke during forty minutes and even gave slide-presentatie concerning its work as a weapon inspector in Iraq. He finished with a question -- en-antwoordsessie concerning the file, which ten days for that public had been made in a attempt the public get opinion behind the war in Iraq. Kingdon explained after Kelly's dead that the scientist had told that the information in the file was accuraat, but he felt himself uncomfortably concerning the way in which the document was interpreted.

Spin-doctors of regering-Blair told to the media that the report proved how the Iraqi army could fire chemical and biological weapons, which the Iraki's considerable quantities uranium from Africa could involve and that Iraq within the one up to two years a nuclear weapon could produce within the forty-five minutes as Saddam the necessary splijtstoffen could collect.

Bbc-journalist Andrew Gilligan threw by the end of May the pole-axe in the hoenderhok by communicating that in the morning programme to Today van Radio 4 "anonymous, well-informed, sources" thought that the file was to make the war acceptable for the people "thickened". That was, in a certain way, also the vision of Kelly, which had spoken with the BBC.

Roger Kingdon explained in the British press that Kelly "ambiguously" remained concerning he who he considered guilty to the wrong interpretation of the file: the government, the media or both. Hutton-onderzoek, which these yielded its first session interrogate wound up, will try get there as from next week further definite answer. The answer on one question it research in advance is able give. Why does a 59 person whose birthday it is will sit scientist with rijkgevulde career on a sigh of its pension three kilometres of house against a tree to, does swallow he the artritismedicijn proxamolproxamol proxamol of its woman and does put he is boyscoutsmes in its linkerpols? According to critici Hutton-onderzoek take into account too little with its Baha'i-geloof. Kelly, the couple shared Kingdon, and the other people present more than only belief. They shared a religious organisation with a higher mission, of which end aim in Bagdad lies.

By its vele travel considered as a weapon inspector to the Iraqi capital, Kelly were belief-enjoyed by its as favoured getuige. In the dictatorial Iraq of Saddam, where religion was oppressed, he could step in the foot tracks of Baha'u'llah (Arab for ' god glorie ', Mr.). This Persian edelman escaped half-way the nineteenth century to Bagdad after a captivity in teheran, where he got a visioen concerning ' god wants for humanity '. Baha'u'llah saw yourself as a new messenger who the contradictions from the heritage of Mozes had reconcile, boeddha, Jesus and Mohammed. For forty years he left writings after concerning its people - and society picture which as the basis are seen today of Baha'i-geloof, which worldwide already five millions partisans count in 200 countries. Their current hoofdkwartier is itself in the Israeli Haifa but especially Bagdad has an enormous symbolic meaning for the Baha'i. Beside the ' house of Baha'u'llah ' they claim there also the eigendomsrecht of the ' garden of Ridvan ' (paradise), a spot to the banks of the tigris where their founder in 1863,

 got revelations after twelve days meditation.
 That Kelly its scientific task for Vn-wapeninspectieteams and British government has let influence by the Baha'i seems in the first place
 far-fetched. Toch she is made today, however, plausible dissidente Baha'i, whom already some years determines their liberal and mystic philosophy is how more and more dominated by fundamentalist, sectaire, scope.
 A dissident speaks The intervention of Baha'i-administratie in Dr. Kelly's will consider work seriously and examined must become, Frederick say
 Glaysher in a conversation with the morning. Glaysher have been an American academician from Michigan, and member of the Baha'i since 1976. Become all Baha'i to have considered entirely obedient as them something it is asked.
 Kelly no exception on that rule will be is. On the contrary.
 The
 fundamentalisten have our movement possibly even what more with him worked because he was such a valuable bekeerling, in imitation of Baha'u'llahs judgements concerning prominent people. In the internetbiblioteek of the Baha'i indeed many writings are retrieve of Abdul-Baha, Baha'u'llahs zoon who took over the rudder of him from 1892 up to 1921, such as ' The Importance or Guiding Distinguished Souls to the Cause ' -
 ' the importance for famous individuals to the matter in Leiden ' .
 The ' matter ' of the current Baha'i is today no longer stipulated prophets, but by the so-called Universal house or Justice in Haifa.
 These internal did not prefer institution interfere themselves officially with politically, but that rejects the dissidents with many examples.
 "although the religion is governed by a preferred institution must that no give account to the electorate", ex-Baha'i wrote riding Bacquet in the profession booklet of the American Family foundation: The more, highest institute becomes to have considered infallible. Behind liberal and social irradiation authoritarian leidersschapsstructuur hide.

Conformiteit are enforced intimidation, sanctions, excommunicatie and verstoting fear for an internal enemy. Baha'i are exhorted as much as possible personal sacrifices to bring. Although they are exhorted to mix itself under other religions the current world systems are considered, including Western democracy, as inferior to the system of Baha'i-bestuur and look such as are doomed to disappear. The 'matter' is set out in five year plans. Glaysher exact to that reconquering Iraq and the saint places a top priority of Baha'u'llah for the belief is. For this reason Baha'i-leiding, true of its pacifist philosophy, Amerikaans-Britse have never condemned the irruption in Iraq but rather encouraged. That puts also a message of house or Justice as a result of Ridvan-feest, in May of this year: The impact of the war in the Middle East is not the less significant for the progress of our community of the greatest name then evolution of the overall society. That the events of this crisis directly influence an area with rich Baha'i-erfenis such as Iraq, catch the eye.' dark strengths ' Partisans by the British and American national control, in a circular being exhorted niet to will demonstrate against the war. Strangely, for a religion which defines himself as pacifist late. The more, writings of the Baha'i seem the principle of Amerika's preventive war seeing the fingers. They state that a conquest can a laudable matter be, and there, are times where war the powerful basis becomes of peace. Laudably the war also becomes for the grant of the Baha'i, says Glaysher. The house of Baha'u'llah and the garden of Ridvan is key sites. The vastberadenheid has been already frequently announced to eigenen itself the eigensdomrecht and new pilgrim harbours to make by the Baha'i. It is well possible that one had one's eye on on the raised inkomenspotentieel. There have arisen in the last decade conflicts within the Baha'i concerning money, concerning whose travelling agency gets the charges for the pilgrim excursions to Haifa. Recently still became 700.000 dollars stolen by of the of the movement in Houston. The site in Bagdad is furious important for the movement. In last Ridvan-boodschap the members were exhorted money in at zamelen for the World Center Endowment Fund. There is talk of "necessary expenditure" that urgent must be covered. Kelly, which of the was in its Baha'i-gemeenschap, were informed of this without doubt. FG: I think that it would be extremely naive think that Kelly let approve niét under immense very of the Baha'i came to stand the war. But it is to Lord decide hut barrel what Kelly's vision were. After 27 years membership weet I heus, however, how it is sollicitte within the Baha'i to the grace of prominent people and how they are persuaded. In manners which you yourself if buitenstaander cannot present. Kelly preferred themselves a definite imposing silence. alarming judgements its family and under colleagues concerning "dark strengths which were to the work" recall now questions. With these words seemed Kelly - of course - aim on the British information services or Blairs spin-doctors. He who it is trusted with the machtskenakels of the Baha'i is inclined a possible other see reading. Dissidents of the movement such as Glaysher call it well possible that Kelly in or an other manner were intimidated as a ' covenant-breker covenant-breker covenant-breker ', as the Baha'i are internal cross-pieces call, because he could put ' the matter ' in a bad daglicht. To be belief-enjoyed Oxfordshire have in the meantime got a spreekverbod by letter. All communication goes by means of the secretary, Barney Leith, who is so far also heard as some Baha'i by commissie-Hutton. He said that Kelly had not spoken at huize of the Kingdoms concerning the September file, in contrast to what the gemuilkorfde couple told. Leith explained rather if not to know the scientist committed suicide from or an other debt notion, but joined enigmatic that the leathers of the Baha'i strongly emphasise the importance that... keeps someone its word. Kelly did that in a terrifying calculated manner. During Huttonhoorzitting on 21 augusts obtained the British diplomat Richard Broucher a e-mail above in which Kelly expressed themselves "apprehension that Iraqi contacts have been betrayed themselves after an invasion would feel and that some could be killed as a result of its action".

When Broucher asked what would happen then, Kelly wrote back with the words:
I will be retrieved then probably dead in the forest.

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith >
Bahai in Politics

Roger Kingdon versus Barney Leith's Account
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly100502.htm>

Mai Pederson (Al-Sadat) Arab Kuwaiti American Baha'i
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/KellyMai.htm>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Help preserve these documents for study by future bahai scholars!

DSL or Cable Modem Recommended. 130+ Megabytes. Includes all Archives.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/archives/BahaiCensorship.zip>

Successfully Scanned with Anti-Virus Software before and after zipping

Google Archive for

alt.religion.bahai

<https://groups.google.com.au/group/alt.religion.bahai/about?hl=en>

talk.religion.bahai

<https://groups.google.com.au/group/talk.religion.bahai/about?hl=en>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

I provide the "headlines" below for newcomers and Bahais on talk.religion.bahai and alt.religion.bahai. Otherwise, other than my periodic reposts to preserve the historical record, I expect to be posting less frequently, having learnt during the last years, since fall 1996, what I needed to know about my fellow Bahais and the uhj....

I am content to have played a central role in the propagation or creation of alt.religion.bahai and talk.religion.bahai, forums where others of all points of view and persuasions may now speak freely about the Bahai faith.

Should anything be posted that might be especially suitable for my website, I'd appreciate someone emailing a copy to patrick_Henry@bigfoot.com with "Bahai" in the subject line.

Unlikely as it may be, should the uhj come to its senses and abolish "review," I'd appreciate someone informing me to that effect....

In the meantime, I must return to my literary interests, prepared for, and now accepting, a more arduous psychomachia....

Others will have to step forward....

Patrick Henry.... The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience: bahai.htm

Newcomers might want to start here:

The Baha'i Technique Essential Reading

soc.religion.bahai - Brief Quotations Documenting Censorship

alt.religion.bahai & talk.religion.bahai FAQ(Frequently Asked Questions)

Bahais on AOL Late 1998 & early 1999

Bahai Attacks I & II Fall & Spring 1999

Bahai Threats of Lawsuits During Spring 1999

Discussion Agenda for Talk.Religion.Bahai (Topics Bahais never discuss)

Continuing Harassment 1/31/2000

To uhj 12-10-1999

To the Universal House of Justice - July 24, 1998

To the Universal House of Justice - March 31, 1997

Juan Cole surveys the major incidents of Bahai censorship:

"The Baha'i Faith in America as Panopticon, 1963-1997"

"The Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Baha'i Scriptures"

Assorted Controversial Documents

"A Modest Proposal" 1987 David Langness

"The Service of Women" 1988 Several authors

[Bahai] "Psychiatrist cuts deal on sex assault charges" 4/94 re Dr. Danesh

The Majnun Post 2/7/96 (On talisman) John Walbridge

The Pickering Tape 4/96

"Crisis of Faith" 5/15/96 Steven Scholl

Letter: Stephen Birkland, Continental Board of Counsellors 7/16/96

"Baha'i Leaders Vexed by On-Line Critics" Winter 1997

Stephen Scholl re the suppression of Dialogue Magazine 1997

Mark Towfiq's NO Vote Campaign on BCCA mailing lists 3/12/97

Michael McKenny - uhj throws him out of the Bahai faith 7/97

BCCA Collusion Suppressing talk.religion.bahai Fall 1997

Susan Maneck's NO Vote Campaign on AOL 12/7/98

Nima Hazini - ex-Bahai - NSA warns Australian Bahais 11/4/97

Nima Hazini - ex-Bahai - his response to Bahai NSA Surveillance 9/7/99

My case - a letter to my friends 7/28/99 Terry Culhane

Juan Cole, Dismissal of NSA Member Judge James F. Nelson... April, 1999A

Brief History of Douglas Martin, member, uhj 1/31/00

"Suppression and Distortion in . . . Baha'i Literature" Vance Salisbury

How "Review" acts as Censorship 3/28/00 Alison Marshall re Bahai World

Alison Marshall - "Removed your Name from Membership Rolls" 3/29/00 Full

Text of UHJ's Letter of April 7, 1999

Juan Cole, "Commentary" on UHJ's "outburst of vehement ignorance"

Letter of Resignation - Paul Dodenhoff, Assistant to the Auxiliary Board

Universal House of Justice

From the UHJ: 14 October 1997

From the UHJ: 19 December 1997

To the UHJ: December 21, 1997

Newspaper Articles/Releases

"Critics chafe at Baha'i conservatism" IRA RIFKIN c.1997 Religion News Service "Such Freedoms": New York Times, January 1998 NSA

Media Release 12/6/1998

For the full text of the messages above, see bahai.htm

Professor Juan Cole, of the University of Michigan, discusses related issues in his journal article "The Baha'i Faith in America as Panopticon, 1963-1997," which surveys the many, many incidents of censorship and oppression that have taken place in the Bahai faith during the last decade or more:

<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/1999/jssr/bhjssr.htm>

Also see:

Juan Cole, "Commentary" on UHJ's "outburst of vehement ignorance" Outburst.htm

Letter of Resignation from Paul Dodenhoff, Assistant to the Auxiliary Board
LetterResignationPD.htm

I believe it is the counter on my website, registering over 17,000 hits as of early May 2000, that inspires the desperate, futile efforts of my fellow Bahais to silence and discredit me, as well as their fanatical attempts to suppress any possible knowledge of the truth documented there.

In February 2000, I filed a police report regarding a variety of items and placed a trace on my telephone line. Other actions have been taken.

While my fellow Bahais continue to attack, harass, malign, and slander me on talk.religion.bahai, alt.religion.bahai, AOL, and elsewhere, falsely accusing me of "spamming," of misrepresenting the intrigues of the "universal" house of "justice" to silence and ostracize people, of being mentally unstable and so on, it has been widely observed by other Bahais and non-Bahais that Bahai fundamentalists routinely refuse all discussion of the facts and EVIDENCE of the oppression and tyranny committed by the uhj.

Those interested in impartially judging my sanity and background for themselves may find my bio helpful:
<https://fglaysher.com/bio.htm>

The non-Bahai observer might want to give careful consideration to the probability that the uhj itself supported and encouraged this person in his continual harassment of me since I notified them of his actions on January 30, 2000, receiving back confirmation of their receipt of my message, while he continued hounding me for weeks. The three-plus year record of Bahai tyranny, on my website, documents that fundamentalist Bahais have gone from one attempt to another in the hope of silencing me and many, many others.

On January 30, 2000, I wrote to the uhj:
A Bahai continues to harass me despite my polite requests that he cease emailing me his insults and threats. I hold the uhj directly responsible for the actions of this and other Bahai fanatics. The uhj routinely inspires this type of fundamentalism in my fellow Bahais and then uses them to suppress and control others.

I shall be sending a copy of this message to the uhj along with the individual's name and email address.

As a member of the Bahai faith since 1976, I have every right to express my conscience and beliefs as both Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha guaranteed their followers....

--

Patrick Henry.... "Give me liberty or give me death!"
The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience:
bahai.htm

----- Original Message -----

From: Bahá'í World Centre <secretariat@bwc.org>
To: <EarthrisePress@hotmail.com>
Sent: Sunday, January 30, 2000 11:09 AM
Subject: RE: Bahai>>> Continuing Harassment

Dear Friend,

This is an automated acknowledgement.

Your message has been received at the Bahá'í World Centre.

Electronic Communications Operation, Bahá'í World Centre

When I asked him to desist, he spammed my account with a dozen copies of this message:
>I will post you and I will stand behind everything I wrote.....

One of his earlier messages was:

> You have truly mastered the high-tech form of rhetorical masturbation.

> You continue to post the things which seem to excite you the most to people > who don't really care what you are posting. It is a shame that you feel > that this has become such a deep seated motivation for so much of your time. I have heard all the drivel you are posting, before, and it has always come > from individuals who have had their hand slapped for one reason or another.

> Get over it. The Baha'i Faith is divine and nothing you can say (mostly > imagination) can ever effect it in the least. You will never have the > opportunity to understand the significance of the UHJ or its members in > your lifetime. Jealousy takes all forms. Why not stick to an area of your > expertise and get out of this one? No one here cares anymore about you or > your fantasies.

"Mark Elderkin" <elderkin@nor.com.au> wrote in message news:JuXu4.20$1j4.2147@nsw.nnrp.telstra.net...

>

> > It was a common stratagem of the Soviets and > > their academic puppets in the West to smear

> > the characters and reputations of people who > > had the courage and honesty to confront the reality > > of the use of terror and tyranny by Stalin and his > > ilk.

> >

> > Comparably speaking, it will require a great effort on > > the part of those interested in the truth about the > > current Bahai uhj if they are not to be misled by my > > fellow Bahais and their deceptions on talk.religion.bahai > > and elsewhere.

>

> It is nice to see that Fred can actually write a real posting here. Now if we can get Fred to quit cross-posting to people who don't want to here or see of him. I have an idea. I think Fred needs to quit hiding behind his > usual spam postings of Patrick Henry. So here goes..... 'give me > liberty or, > give Fred a call:

> xxxXXXX

> and as you can see, I have cross-posted this to all of Fred Preselected > news-servers. Let your fingers do the walking.

> Mark

"Mark Elderkin" <elderkin@nor.com.au> wrote in message news:hH1v4.125$1j4.6711@nsw.nnrp.telstra.net...

> Pat and all others concerned,

> I probably misstepped the guidelines by posting Freddys Facts

> but I think it will give Fred a chance to realize that he is not-so > anonymous anymore and might wish to quit cross-posting. I understand that > there are a lot of crazys out there that might not like the things he > regularly posts and now he can't hide behind his mothers dress. I have > posted my own phone number before and will always make myself available for > anyones input. Thanks.
> Always Remember... Let your fingers do the walking.
> Mark

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Doug Martin, member of the bahai universal house of justice, Boston Baha'i Center -- Monday, September 23, 2001

"We have inherited a dangerous delusion from Christianity that our individual conscience is supreme.

This is not a Baha'i belief. In the end, in the context of both our role in the community and our role in the greater world, we must be prepared to sacrifice our personal convictions or opinions. The belief that individual conscience is supreme is equivalent to "taking partners with God" which is abhorrent to the Teachings of the Faith."

<https://www.bahai-library.org/talks/martin.watson.html>

Search for full text. (Edit > Find > "conscience")

Compare Horace Holley, 1925: "The individual conscience must be subordinated to the decisions of the elected Spiritual Assembly." Page 74, Ruth White, Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament. Beverly Hills: Ruth White, 1946.

Compare: "This attitude of subservience and servility among the believers has been studiously cultivated by Mr. Horace Holley who, in an article . . . writes: The individual conscience must be subordinated to the decisions of a duly elected Spiritual Assembly. Now, it happens that Abdul Baha thought otherwise, as can be seen in A Traveller's Narrative, written as far back as 1874" (91). Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. The Will and Testament of Abdul Baha, An Analysis. New York: Universal Publishing, 1944.

Compare Doug Martin and Horace Holley to Abdul-Baha's actual words regarding freedom of conscience

"the conscience of man is sacred and to be respected; and that liberty thereof produces widening of ideas, amendment of morals, improvement of conduct, disclosure of the secrets of creation, and manifestation of the hidden verities of the contingent world."

Karen Bacquet cites other passages by Martin, Peter Khan, and the uhj denouncing individual conscience via Christianity

Re: Individual conscience... and Martin's statement.
5/12/2002 Prof. Juan Cole, Ron House

See also Brief History of Douglas Martin 1/31/2000
Juan Cole

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Dmoz & Google Directories Compromised & Censored

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/DmozGoogle.htm>

https://dmoz.org/Society/Religion_and_Spirituality/Baha%27ism/

I appeal to DMOZ and Google to intervene and correct the fundamentalist Baha'i bias that has found its way into its directories, in the interest of the very values of open free speech, liberty, and conscience that make DMOZ and Google possible.

Libelous Description:

Obviously, the technical people at DMOZ did not write the Description quoted below, which appears in the DMOZ Bahaism listings. The DMOZ Description for the Reform Bahai Faith, which propagates throughout the Internet, is libelous and represents a fundamentalist interpretation of Baha'u'llah's Teachings and a consistent derision for other denominations, all of which had to have been fed to DMOZ through fundamentalist channels:

"A religious movement espousing the Revelation of Baha'u'llah while opposed to the Administrative Order instituted through the Covenant ordained by Baha'i Scripture and upheld by the Universal House of Justice."

https://dmoz.org/Society/Religion_and_Spirituality/Baha%27ism/Reform_Bahai_Faith/desc.html (should have a "suggest URL" link)

https://dmoz.org/Society/Religion_and_Spirituality/Baha%27ism/desc.html (should have its own category: The Reform Bahai Faith)

Both Descriptions are libelous and express a fanatical and fundamentalist Baha'i interpretation of the Reform Bahai Faith, with which neither I nor other Reform Bahais agree, and which is intended to discredit and slander our Faith throughout the world via DMOZ and Google, as well as that of various Baha'is of other denominations. DMOZ and Google should NOT be permitting such fanaticism and FURTHERING it. The 7 million figure is ludicrously inaccurate.

REPLACE ALL Descriptions with something neutral:

"The official web presence of the Reform Bahai Faith. 95 Theses of the movement, statement on liberty, communities, contacts, and links."

In the interest of fairness, it cannot be overemphasized that other Baha'i denominations are similarly being misrepresented in the DMOZ and Google databases.

Non-bahais: If you're unfamiliar with the record of Baha'i fanaticism, please read or skim "The Baha'i Technique":

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

AND > Shunning > Menu

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Shunning.htm>

Homepage

Why are so many of my friends leaving the Baha'i Faith? What can we do about it?

September 10, 2007 on 2:30 am | In

I am a 30'ish white male in America. I've noticed that many of my Baha'i friends are really struggling with their personal faith these days. There are a variety of reasons for each one. Some have become inactive Baha'is, others have left the Faith entirely and turned to agnosticism or atheism. This trend deeply concerns me. These were young men and women with incredible capacity. They were well-deepened, well-educated, and inspired with zeal and enthusiasm for the Baha'i Faith. They were tremendous assets to the Baha'i community, and I am truly saddened for the loss of their contributions to the Cause.

No excuses

On the surface of it, it is their choice. They are making a decision of their own free will. But on the other hand, I think the Baha'i community does have a role to play in this process. I think the Baha'i community can make it harder for my friends to stay Baha'is, and this is something we can change. Instead of making it harder for them to stay a Baha'i, I believe we can make it harder for them to leave the Baha'i Faith,.

A more complex problem

I would explore all the reasons I think my friends struggle with their personal faith and how the Baha'i community actually makes it harder for them in this struggle, but this blog post would probably take on epic proportions. Suffice it to say that they face many mental tests. Some face tests from their coworkers, others face tests from their higher education environments, others face tests from the other Baha'is and the institutions. Many of them feel like they were betrayed, like they were brainwashed, or taken advantage of in their youth. They were made to believe during youth institutes, study classes, and conferences that the world was black and white, that teaching the Faith and devotion to the Cause were simple equations of personal will triumphing over lesser ideologies, and that if they stayed true to the Baha'i Faith that they could overcome anything. They often adopted Baha'i heroes who they held up as examples of sacrifice, intellectual achievement, and devotion to the Faith.

The double-edged sword of age and experience

As they got older, they found out that the world was not black and white. They found out that even we Baha'is are flawed human beings, that their heroes had flaws, weaknesses, and limitations. They discovered that the problems of the world are far more complex and entrenched than the way they were described in Sunday school, and that the non-Baha'i world also logical explanations for the difficult questions of our time. These other explanations also made sense and were far more elaborate and developed, and often proven with rational and scientific analysis. Finally, many of my friends found out (often to their horror) that they themselves could slip up and fall to moral, spiritual, and materialistic temptations of society. Their black-and-white explanations did not hold and more. Without a more flexible intellectual and spiritual conception of reality, they were left to drift away. This made them question the very foundations of that black-and-white world.

The wrong way to respond

Unfortunately, when they question the foundations of the Baha'i Faith, they were often met with criticism and fear. We have a strange fear of criticism in the Baha'i Faith. We sometimes treat people who have honest doubts about the teachings of the Faith as if they are weak, ignorant, or otherwise lesser. Even worse, sometimes we even get defensive and accuse the doubters of flirting with breaking the covenant. I think there is a better way to deal with this.

Here are some ideas on how we could try to stop this hemorrhage of some of the most intelligent, enthusiastic, and devoted young Baha'is.

1. Create a structured mentorship program

We should create a database of knowledgeable, wise, and educated Baha'is who will offer their services to be mentors to young Baha'is. This mentorship program should be structured so that the young Baha'is have regular contact (via phone, email, Instant Messenger) and arrange regular meetings of mentors and their mentees. So many of my friends are going off to fancy pants colleges and universities and being sucked into the ivory towers and adopting their professors as their role models. These professors are incredibly self-confident, educated, and secure in their beliefs. Additionally, the professors are often held in a god-like aura by students which only adds to the tests that young Baha'is must face. Other times, young adults go off to work in business environments where their bosses and organizations set up strict hierarchies and achievement milestones that can completely absorb a person's sense of identity and goals in life.

Sending our young Baha'is off to be educated and trained in such environments is often like sending lambs off to the slaughter. Having a strong mentorship program where mentors can help young Baha'is deal with the trials, tests, and difficulties of life; and where mentors can offer encouragement, inspiration, and challenge to the ideologies and established orders of such man-made organizations can help our young Baha'is keep balanced and focused during times of difficult mental testing. These mentors should also be weary of being held up on pedestals for hero worship. Mentors should share their own weaknesses and limitations freely and openly so that the young people recognize that there is no perfect Baha'i life and that we are all in this struggle together. Instead of trying to be a Baha'i hero, mentors should strive to be a friend, a confidant, a supporter, and a guide.

2. Create a safe forum for full and free intellectual debate

We also need to make it safe for people to air their doubts. We need to openly, freely, and honestly debate the things that make people question their own faith. We need an environment where it is encouraged to ask the fundamental questions about what we believe, why we believe it, and why it matters. Currently we have organizations like the Association for Baha'i Studies and annual conferences and retreats that too often pay lip-service to intellectual matters and are more just excuses for people to get together, see friends, and shop for potential mates. Too often the topics at these events are superficial, esoteric, overly-academic, or myopic. Additionally, I fear that we have created an environment of intellectual repression where people who question the system are labeled trouble-makers and outsiders who 'just don't get it.' We need to end this attitude. We could do this by creating journals or periodicals, forums and mini-conferences where young people are directly asked to air their most difficult questions and the community of participants is encouraged to offer Baha'i defenses to those questions. We could create online communities and forums where people are encouraged to ask honest questions and engage in debates on these issues. We could openly ask and re-ask the questions that challenge our Faith and invite new perspectives, new analyses, new approaches to solving them. The days of relying on Abdu'l-Baha's talks alone to defend against the philosophical, sociological, theological, and spiritual questions of the day are passed. This is not to say Abdu'l-Baha was wrong or that His arguments were defective in any way, rather, it is to recognize that we are not dealing with a 19th Century understanding of the world anymore. We have to admit that the world that Abdu'l-Baha was addressing was a very different world than the world of today. We need to build on the works of the Master and find ways to bring His Wisdom and the Wisdom of the Baha'i Writings into the language, mentality, and capacity of our own Age.

3. Encourage people to intellectually explore, define, and defend Baha'u'llah's World Order and its implications for humanity

We also need to give our young people some intellectual challenges. I believe that merely asking them to hold Ruhe study circles and children's classes does not exercise their capacities to their fullest potential. We need to challenge them to define the Baha'i World of the future. We need to challenge them to explore the implications of the teachings of the Baha'i Faith for humanity. We need a constantly growing and evolving body of communal work that excites, inspires, and builds our collective capacities. We need to ask our young intellectuals to propose ways that societies can be re-ordered and re-built, communities can evolve, technologies can be developed, processes can be improved, tactics can be adjusted, and on and on. We can create a brain trust that the Baha'i Institutions of the world can turn to for ideas, solutions, and energy. Our creativity, energy, and capacity for analysis needs to be captured, harnessed, and appreciated in a productive, systematic, and on-going manner. Any Baha'i who wants to participate should be invited, empowered, and encouraged to think about building the Baha'i world.

4. Never leave a fellow soldier behind

Finally, we must not leave our Baha'i brothers and sisters behind. We must do everything in our power to keep them active in the Faith. It is our duty. These young men and women should be treated as treasured resources that must be discovered, cultivated, and harnessed and never left to drift away and be lost forever.

1. This is an interesting idea, unfortunately in the age of Ruhi I doubt you will find any official sponsorship. Perhaps something you could pursue on your own, but I think we all know what happens to projects we pursue on our own.

Cheers, Randy

Comment by Randy Burns — October 2, 2007

2. Thanks for the comment Randy. I was thinking the same thing. That's what inspired the next post actually. Thanks for reading!

Comment by — October 6, 2007

3. I recently left the faith, as of two days ago. I received my letter from the US NSA confirming it. I applaud and approve of what you wrote in this article.

The truth is, it is a two way street. I could have been a better asset to the community I lived in, and they could have been better to me by allowing me to be open and free.

Neither of us are solely to blame for me leaving. In fact, the onus is on me completely. Fortunately, I don't believe in a God that will punish me and send plagues upon me because I don't attach an Arabic word to my identity.

4. By the way, I had a somewhat of a mentor/mentee relationship and I did not like it. So, I don't completely agree with the part about the mentoring. Then again, my relationship with that person sort BECAME a mentor/mentee relationship without me asking for it. So, your idea is probably much different than what I experienced.

Comment by Anonymous — October 10, 2007

5. I have just become a Baha'i last year in September, and even then, I feel that there are so many tests that really push me towards thoughts of leaving the Faith either soon or later.

Being a Baha'i and being part of a city where things between the Universal House of Justice and the opinions of other Baha'is are blurred, make things for me difficult, and I feel that there is not enough to be done with creating a Baha'i society where freedom and unity come together. With the repetitions of people being elected on Assemblies, I have always remarked to myself that the Faith is still too young to develop capacities in other people so that they can become voted too...

But I feel that the more other younger people come into the Spiritual Assemblies, the less rigid the way the Baha'i organisation may become. After all, we must remember that as religion is progressive, so are the minds of those who are part of that religion. Without the ideas and opinions of the younger people influencing the Faith and rather following the blind imitations of our Fathers, we subject ourselves in a state where there is no renewal nor essentially spiritual responses that use the energies of the times.

There was one woman who suggested putting limitations on the amount of service one does on such Assemblies, and I find that a very good way of reducing the repetitions of the same people on them. Your mentorship program seems like a large-scale program, but if you are able to possibly do so, then I will fully support it!

And I just have to agree bang-on with our fear of criticism, that it has become equalised to Covenant-Breaking, when really it is a matter of independent investigation of truth. Healthy doubt is sometimes necessary to become stronger in any faith or belief, and without doubt, then there is no search involved. I will not stand and let the intellectual capacities and potentialities that the Faith be muted. But going about it will be the most difficult thing for me to do...

Allah-u-Abha!

Comment by Keyvn Bello — October 20, 2007

This was an inspiring article. I think there are some wonderful ideas here, and the tone is so loving and earnest!

One thing about Ruhi courses, if you are a facilitator, you can always hold a class with others who share your interests in free discussion and dialogue, and then run a Ruhi course that is full of free inquiry, tough questions, and real heart-to-heart bonding and love. It can be done. Ruhi courses don't have to be, by definition, awful.

Comment by

Leave a comment

Categories:

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Evil

25. O SON OF SPIRIT! Vaunt not thyself over the poor, for I lead him on his way and behold thee in thy evil plight and confound thee for evermore.

(Baha'u'llah: Arabic Hidden Words, Page: 25)

We, verily, have commanded you to refuse the dictates of your evil
passions and corrupt desires, and not to transgress the bounds which the Pen of the Most High hath fixed, for these are the breath of life
unto all created things.

(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Pages: 19-20)

So bewildered are they in the drunkenness of their evil desires, that they are powerless to recognize the Lord of all being,
Whose voice
calleth aloud from every direction: "There is none other God but Me,
the Mighty, the All-Wise."

(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Page: 33)

For how long will ye worship the idols of your evil passions?

(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Page: 34)

Your evil doings can never harm Us, neither can your good works profit Us.

(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Page: 40)

Sorrow not for that which hath befallen thee. Erelong will God raise up within thee men endued with mighty valour, who will magnify My Name with such constancy that neither will they be deterred by the evil suggestions of the divines, nor will they be kept back by the insinuations of the sowers of doubt. With their own eyes will they behold God, and with their own lives will they render Him victorious.
These, truly, are of those who are steadfast.
(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Pages: 78-79)

Whenever I ponder my evil doings and Thy benevolence, my heart melteth within me, and my blood boileth in my veins.
(Baha'u'llah: Aqdas: Other Sections, Page: 97)

Thou seest the Dawning Place of Thy signs veiled by evil suggestions:
Where are the fingers of Thy might, O Power of the worlds?
(Baha'u'llah: Baha'i Prayers (US), Pages: 216-217)

O would that I were beneath the depths of the earth, so that my evil deeds would remain unknown to Thy servants!
(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Page: 5)

I know not, O my God, which among my evil doings to mention before the billowing ocean of Thy favor, nor which of my trespasses to declare when face to face with the splendors of the suns of Thy goodly gifts and bounties.
(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Page: 7)

By the righteousness of God! We were in no wise connected with that evil deed, and Our innocence was indisputably established by the tribunals.

(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Page: 20)

O ye followers of this Wronged One! Ye are the shepherds of mankind;
liberate ye your flocks from the wolves of evil passions and desires,
and adorn them with the ornament of the fear of God.
(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Page: 29)

And further We have said: "Doth it behoove you to relate yourselves to Him Who is the God of mercy, and yet commit the things which the Evil One hath committed?
(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Page: 54)

"This servant and the loved ones of God are perplexed.
On the one hand the Pen of the Most High hath forbidden all men to engage in sedition, contention or conflict, and on the other that same Pen hath sent down these most sublime words: `Should anyone, in the presence of the Manifestation, discover an evil intention on the part of any soul,
he must not oppose him, but must leave him to God.'
Considering that on the one hand this binding command is clear and firmly established, and that on the other calumnies, beyond human strength to bear or endure,
have been uttered, this servant hath chosen to commit this most grievous sin. I turn suppliantly unto the ocean of God's bounty and the heaven of Divine mercy, and hope that He will blot out with the pen of His grace and bounteousness the misdeeds of this servant.
(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Pages: 109-110)

The Prophet - may the blessings of God and His salutations be upon Him - is stated to have said: "In Akka are works of supererogation and

acts which are beneficial, which God vouchsafed specially unto whomsoever He pleaseth. And he that saith in Akka: `Glorified be God, and praise be unto God, and there is none other God but God, and most great is God, and there is no power nor strength except in God, the Exalted, the Mighty,' God will write down for him a thousand good deeds, and blot out from him a thousand evil deeds, and will uplift him a thousand grades in Paradise, and will forgive him his transgressions.
(Baha'u'llah: Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, Page: 180)

The Evil One hath stirred up mischief in their hearts, and they are afflicted with a torment that none can avert. They hasten to the wicked, bearing the register of the workers of iniquity. Such are their doings.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 41)

Behold how their evil doings have hindered them from recognizing, in the Day of Resurrection, the Word of Truth, exalted be His glory. We cherish the hope that this people will henceforth shield themselves from vain hopes and idle fancies, and will attain to a true understanding of the meaning of Divine unity.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 69-70)

Whatever, therefore, He saith unto you is wholly for the sake of God, that haply the peoples of the earth may cleanse their hearts from the stain of evil desire, may rend its veil asunder, and attain unto the knowledge of the one true God - the most exalted station to which any man can aspire.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 85)

Watch over yourselves, for the Evil One is lying in wait, ready to entrap you. Gird yourselves against his wicked devices, and, led by the light of the name of the All-Seeing God, make your escape from the darkness that surroundeth you. Let your vision be world-embracing, rather than confined to your own self. The Evil One is he that hindereth the rise and obstructeth the spiritual progress of the children of men.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 94)

We beseech God that He may shield His creatures from the evil designs of His enemies. He verily hath power over all things.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 96)

That which can make Me ashamed is the conduct of such of My followers as profess to love Me, yet in fact follow the Evil One.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 117-118)

Walk not in the paths of the Evil One.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 126)

God grant that thou who art the fruit of My Tree, and they that are associated with thee, may be shielded from its evil consequences.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 133)

So bewildered are they in the drunkenness of their evil desires, that they are powerless to recognize the Lord of all being,
Whose voice
calleth aloud from every direction: "There is none other God but Me,
the Mighty, the All-Wise."
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 138)

. Your evil doings can never harm Us, neither can your good works

profit Us.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 140)

Follow not, O people, the steps of the Evil One; follow ye the Faith of the All-Merciful, and be ye of them that truly believe.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 146)

Every good thing is of God, and every evil thing is from yourselves. Will ye not comprehend? This same truth hath been revealed in all the Scriptures, if ye be of them that understand. Every act ye meditate is as clear to Him as is that act when already accomplished. There is none other God besides Him.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 149-150)

The Evil One is lying in wait, ready to entrap you.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 168)

Let no one imagine that by Our assertion that all created things are the signs of the revelation of God is meant that - God forbid - all men, be they good or evil, pious or infidel, are equal in the sight of God. Nor doth it imply that the Divine Being - magnified be His name and exalted be His glory - is, under any circumstances, comparable unto men, or can, in any way, be associated with His creatures.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 187)

The voice of the Divine Herald, proceeding out of the throne of God, declareth: O ye My loved ones! Suffer not the hem of My sacred vesture to be smirched and mired with the things of this world, and follow not the promptings of your evil and corrupt desires.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 200)

How great, how very great, the gulf that separateth Us from them who, in this Day, are occupied with their evil passions, and have set their hopes on the things of the earth and its fleeting glory!

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 201)

Be fair in your judgment. Did they whom you curse, upon whom ye invoke evil,
act differently from yourselves?
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 222)

Follow not, under any condition, the promptings of thine evil desires.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 231)

Know thou for a certainty that whoso disbelieveth in God is neither trustworthy nor truthful. This, indeed, is the truth, the undoubted truth. He that acteth treacherously towards God will, also, act treacherously towards his king. Nothing whatever can deter such a man from evil, nothing can hinder him from betraying his neighbor, nothing can induce him to walk uprightly.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 232-233)

He that giveth up himself wholly to God, God shall, assuredly, be with him;
and he that placeth his complete trust in God, God shall, verily, protect him from whatsoever may harm him, and shield him from the wickedness of every evil plotter.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 233)

In the day time and in the night season, at even and at morn, We pray to God on thy behalf, that He may graciously aid thee to be obedient unto Him and to observe His commandment, that He may shield thee from the hosts of the evil ones.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 240)

Pass beyond the narrow retreats of your evil and corrupt desires, and advance into the vast immensity of the realm of God, and abide ye in the meads of sanctity and of detachment, that the fragrance of your deeds may lead the whole of mankind to the ocean of God's unfading glory.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 241)

That which can hurt Him are the evil deeds which the beloved of God commit, and which they impute to Him Who is the Sovereign Truth.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 244)

He should cleanse his heart from all evil passions and corrupt desires, for the fear of God is the weapon that can render him victorious, the primary instrument whereby he can achieve his purpose.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 272)

Cleanse from your hearts the love of worldly things, from your tongues every remembrance except His remembrance, from your entire being whatsoever may deter you from beholding His face, or may tempt you to follow the promptings of your evil and corrupt inclinations. Let God be your fear, O people, and be ye of them that tread the path of righteousness.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 275)

O thou that hast fled thy home and sought the presence of God! Proclaim unto men the Message of thy Lord, that it may haply deter them from following the promptings of their evil and corrupt desires, and bring them to the remembrance of God, the Most Exalted, the Most Great. Say: Fear God, O people, and refrain from shedding the blood of any one. Contend not with your neighbor, and be ye of them that do good. Beware that ye commit no disorders on the earth after it hath been well ordered, and follow not the footsteps of them that are gone astray.

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 276-277)

If Thou smellest from any one the smell of the love of Thy Lord, offer up Thyself for him, for We have created Thee to this end, and have covenanted with Thee, from time immemorial, and in the presence of the congregation of Our well-favored ones, for this very purpose. Be not impatient if the blind in heart hurl down the shafts of their idle fancies upon Thee. Leave them to themselves, for they follow the promptings of the evil ones.

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 283-284)

Say: O people of the Bayan! Did We not admonish you, in all Our Tablets and in all Our hidden Scriptures, not to follow your evil passions and corrupt inclinations, but to keep your eyes directed towards the Scene of transcendent glory, on the Day when the Most Mighty Balance shall be set, the Day when the sweet melodies of the Spirit of God shall be poured out from the right hand of the throne of your Lord, the omnipotent Protector, the All-Powerful, the Holy of Holies?

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 292)

Evil fall upon them, and the chastisement of God, the All-Powerful, the Almighty, afflict them! By Him Who shineth above the Day Spring of sanctity!

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 297-298)

Verily I say: Incline your ears to My sweet voice, and sanctify yourselves from the defilement of your evil passions and corrupt desires.

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 298)

Shield them, I entreat Thee, O my Lord, from the assaults of their evil passions and desires, and aid them to obtain the things that shall profit them in this present world and in the next.

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 300-301)

I am he, O my Lord, that hath confessed to Thee the multitude of his evil doings, that hath acknowledged what no man hath acknowledged.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 311)

Retrace your steps, O My servants, and incline your hearts to Him Who is the Source of your creation. Deliver yourselves from your evil and corrupt affections, and hasten to embrace the light of the undying Fire that gloweth on the Sinai of this mysterious and transcendent Revelation.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 325)

O My servants! Deprive not yourselves of the unfading and resplendent Light that shineth within the Lamp of Divine glory. Let the flame of the love of God burn brightly within your radiant hearts. Feed it with the oil of Divine guidance, and protect it within the shelter of your constancy. Guard it within the globe of trust and detachment from all else but God, so that the evil whisperings of the ungodly may not extinguish its light. O My servants!
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 325-326)

Suffer not your idle fancies, your evil passions, your insincerity and blindness of heart to dim the luster, or stain the sanctity, of so lofty a station.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 327)

We, verily, have commanded you to refuse the dictates of your evil
passions and corrupt desires, and not to transgress the bounds which
the Pen of the Most High hath fixed, for these are the breath of life

unto all created things.
(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Page: 331)

The civilization, so often vaunted by the learned exponents of arts and sciences, will, if allowed to overleap the bounds of moderation, bring great evil upon men. Thus warneth you He Who is the All-Knowing.
If carried to excess, civilization will prove as prolific a source of evil as it had been of goodness when kept within the restraints of moderation. Meditate on this, O people, and be not of them that wander distracted in the wilderness of error. The day is approaching when its flame will devour the cities, when the Tongue of Grandeur will proclaim: "The Kingdom is God's, the Almighty, the All-Praised!"

All other things are subject to this same principle of moderation.

Render thanks unto thy Lord Who hath remembered thee in this wondrous Tablet. All-Praise be to God, the Lord of the glorious throne.

(Baha'u'llah: Gleanings, Pages: 342-343)

Say: What! Will ye give that which is for your good in exchange for that which is evil? Wretched is that which ye have falsely exchanged!

Surely ye are a people, evil, in grievous loss.

(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Iqan, Page: 116)

With all his heart should the seeker avoid fellowship with evil doers, and pray for the remission of their sins. He should forgive the sinful, and never despise his low estate, for none knoweth what his own end shall be. How often hath a sinner, at the hour of death, attained to the essence of faith, and, quaffing the immortal draught, hath taken his flight unto the celestial Concourse. And how often hath a devout believer, at the hour of his soul's ascension, been so changed as to fall into the nethermost fire. Our purpose in revealing

these convincing and weighty utterances is to impress upon the seeker that he should regard all else beside God as transient, and count all things save Him, Who is the Object of all adoration, as utter nothingness.
(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Iqan, Pages: 194-195)

In the day-time and in the night season, at even and at morn, We pray to God on thy behalf, that He may graciously aid thee to be obedient unto Him and to observe His commandment, that He may shield thee from the hosts of the evil ones. Do, therefore, as it pleaseth thee, and treat Us as befitteth thy station and beseemeth thy sovereignty. Be not forgetful of the law of God in whatever thou desirest to achieve, now or in the days to come. Say: Praise be to God, the Lord of all worlds!
(Baha'u'llah: Proclamation of Baha'u'llah, Pages: 53-54)

The Evil One hath stirred up mischief in their hearts, and they are afflicted with a torment that none can avert. They hasten to the wicked, bearing the register of the workers of iniquity.
Such are their doings. Say: The heavens have been folded together, and the earth is held within His grasp, and the corrupt doers have been held by their forelock, and still they understand not. They drink of the tainted water, and know it not. Say: The shout hath been raised, and the people have come forth from their graves, and arising are gazing around them. Some have made haste to attain the court of the God of Mercy, others have fallen down on their faces in the fire of Hell, while still others are lost in bewilderment. The verses of God have been revealed, and yet they have turned away from them. His proof hath been manifested and yet they are unaware of it. And when they behold the face of the All-Merciful, their own faces are saddened, while they are disporting themselves. They hasten forward to Hell Fire, and mistake it for light. Far from God be what they fondly imagine! Say: Whether ye rejoice or whether ye burst for fury, the heavens are cleft asunder, and God hath come down, invested with radiant sovereignty. All created things are heard exclaiming: 'The Kingdom is God's, the Almighty, the All-Knowing, the All-Wise.'

(Baha'u'llah: Proclamation of Baha'u'llah, Pages: 100-101)

44. O COMPANION OF MY THRONE! Hear no evil, and see no evil, abase not thyself, neither sigh and weep. Speak no evil, that thou mayest not hear it spoken unto thee, and magnify not the faults of others that thine own faults may not appear great; and wish not the abasement of anyone, that thine own abasement be not exposed. Live then the days of thy life, that are less than a fleeting moment, with thy mind stainless, thy heart unsullied, thy thoughts pure, and thy nature sanctified, so that, free and content, thou mayest put away this mortal frame, and repair unto the mystic paradise and abide in the eternal kingdom for evermore.
(Baha'u'llah: Persian Hidden Words, Page: 44)

I implore Thee, O Beloved of my heart and the Object of my soul's adoration, to shield them that love me from the faintest trace of evil and corrupt desires.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 9)

I implore Thee, O Thou Who art the beloved Companion of Baha, by Thy name, the All-Glorious, to keep safe these Thy servants under the shadow of the wings of Thine all-encompassing mercy,

that the darts of the evil suggestions of the wicked doers among Thy creatures, who have disbelieved in Thy signs, may be kept back from them.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 16)

Praised be Thou, O Lord my God! I implore Thee by Thine Ancient Beauty and Most Great Name, Whom Thou hast sacrificed that all the dwellers of Thine earth and heaven may be born anew, and Whom Thou hast cast into prison that mankind may, as a token of Thy bounty and of Thy sovereign might, be released from the bondage of evil passions and corrupt desires, to number me with those who have so deeply inhaled the fragrance of Thy mercy, and hastened with such speed unto the living waters of Thy grace, that no dart could hinder them from turning unto Thee, nor any spear from setting their faces towards the orient of Thy Revelation.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 44)

Every time any one of them testifieth before Thee to his evil doings, shame covereth my face, for they are Thy servants who have tasted of the cup of woe in Thy Cause, who have quaffed from the chalice of adversity when the light of Thy countenance was lifted upon them, and who were so vexed by trials that peace was utterly denied them within the precincts of Thy court.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 61)

Do Thou accept all that we have done for love of Thee, and for the sake of Thy pleasure, and all that we have left undone as a result of our subjection to our evil and corrupt desires.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 84)

I entreat Thee, therefore, O my God, by Thy name by which Thou hast separated between truth and denial, to purify their hearts of all evil

suggestions, and to enable them to draw nigh unto Him Who is the Day-
Spring of Thy names and Thine attributes.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Pages: 107-108)

Supply us also with that which is best for us, and write us down with such of Thy servants as have repudiated the Idol (Mirza Yahya), and firmly believed in Thee, and been so established on the throne of certitude that the whisperings of the Evil One have been powerless to hinder them from turning their faces towards Thy name, the All-Merciful.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 132)

This is the Sun that shineth in the heaven of Thy will and the splendor of which the veils of the workers of iniquity and the doubts
of the evil doers can never cloud.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 154)

I know not, O my God, how long will Thy creatures continue to slumber on the bed of forgetfulness and evil desires, and remain far removed from Thee and shut out from Thy presence.
Draw them nearer, O my God, unto the scene of Thine effulgent glory, and enrapture their hearts with the sweet savors of Thine inspiration, through which they who adore Thy unity have soared on the wings of desire towards Thee, and they who are devoted to Thee have reached unto Him Who is the Dawning-Place of the Day-Star of Thy creation.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 201)

I implore Thee, O my God, by Thy mercy that hath surpassed all created things, and to which all that are immersed beneath the oceans of Thy names bear witness, not to abandon me unto my self, for my heart is prone to evil. Guard me, then, within the stronghold of Thy protection and the shelter of Thy care. I am he, O my

God, whose only wish is what Thou hast determined by the power of Thy might. All I have chosen for myself is to be assisted by Thy gracious appointments and the ruling of Thy will, and to be aided with the tokens of Thy decree and judgment.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 210)

Enrapture my soul, O my Lord, with Thy most mighty signs, and draw me out of the depths of my corrupt and evil desires.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 216)

Attire, O my Lord, both my inner and outer being with the raiment of Thy favors and Thy loving-kindness. Keep me safe, then, from whatsoever may be abhorrent unto Thee, and graciously assist me and my kindred to obey Thee, and to shun whatsoever may stir up any evil or corrupt desire within me.
(Baha'u'llah: Prayers and Meditations, Page: 225)

Some Answered Questions, by `Abdu'l-Bahá, pp. 124-125:
For the spirit and the soul of Adam, when they were attached to the human world, passed from the world of freedom into the world of bondage, and His descendants continued in bondage.
This attachment of the soul and spirit to the human world,
which is sin, was inherited by the descendants of Adam, and is the serpent which is always in the midst of, and at enmity with, the spirits and the descendants of Adam.
That
enmity continues and endures. For attachment to the world has become the cause of the bondage of spirits, and this bondage
is identical with sin, which has been transmitted from Adam to His posterity. It is because of this attachment that men have been deprived of essential spirituality and exalted position.

Some Answered Questions, by `Abdu'l-Bahá, pp. 263-265:

The epitome of this discourse is that it is possible that one thing in relation to another may be evil, and at the same time within the limits of its proper being it may not be evil. Then it is proved that there is no evil in existence; all that God created He created good. This evil is nothingness; so death is the absence of life. When man no longer receives life, he dies. Darkness is the absence of light: when there is no light, there is darkness. Light is an existing thing, but darkness is nonexistent. Wealth is an existing thing, but poverty is nonexistent. Then it is evident that all evils return to nonexistence. Good exists; evil is nonexistent.

(Baha'u'llah: Tablets of Baha'u'llah, Pages: 176-177)

This lowly one hath read the descriptions of the dialogue with the traveller which thou hast recounted in thy letter to my Lord, may my life be offered up for His sake. The explanations which were set forth awaken the people from the slumber of heedlessness. Indeed the actions of man himself breed a profusion of satanic power. For were men to abide by and observe the divine teachings, every trace of evil would be banished from the face of the earth. However, the widespread differences that exist among mankind and the prevalence of sedition, contention, conflict and the like are the primary factors which provoke the appearance of the satanic spirit. Yet the Holy Spirit hath ever shunned such matters. A world in which naught can be perceived save strife, quarrels and corruption is bound to become the seat of the throne, the very metropolis, of Satan.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Disclaimer: Given Abdul-Baha's respect for the individual's conscience and the frequent lack of it in everyday Bahai life, I must emphasize all ideas and opinions belong to their authors and do not necessarily reflect my views. Given the difficulty of authenticating identity on the Internet, I caution the reader that it is possible that people of ill-will of various opinion, whether Sunni or Shia Muslims and others, opposed to the Bahai teachings, however interpreted, might misrepresent themselves. It is left up to the individual to make such judgements for him or herself.

Many other ex-Bahais have explained their decision. Their comments may be found scattered around this website. See also the site Former Bahais.

Roy Hilbinger We Only Fool Ourselves, August 29, 2008

BAHA'I A Field Guide to the Faith by MrDonut. 2008.
With Help From His Companion Human Nancy Ellen Walker

2007

Inge Barthel, a German Baha'i,
<https://bahaiblog1919.blogspot.com/2007/12/un-resigned-resignation.html>

Dale Husband, Why I quit the Baha'i Faith
<https://circleh.wordpress.com/2007/10/19/why-i-quit-the-baha%E2%80%99faith/>

Steven Scholl - "Why I voluntarily left the religion"

Why I Left.... 2-16-07

2006

March 2006, philosophy and religious studies [Professor Dann May\[6\] and his wife\[7\] Phyllis E Bernard](#), current Robert S. Kerr Jr. Distinguished Professor of Law Director of the Center on Alternative Dispute Resolution, Oklahoma City University

2002

Selected Messages from Ex-bahais for 2002

2001

My brother's experience - Thanks 12/16/2001

My experience as a member of the Baha'i Faith Dennis James Rogers 9/6/2001

Selected Ex-Bahais for 2001

2000

Selected Ex-Bahais for 2000

1999

Jenifer Tidwell to The LSA of the Baha'is of Arlington. Massachusetts 3/ 21/1999

Letter of Resignation from Paul Dodenhoff, Assistant to the Auxiliary Board 6/25/99

Karen Bacquet, My Life in the Baha'i Community

Karen Re: My "Ex-Baha'i" Story 11/8/99 Eye witness of NSA denunciation of Dialogue magazine

Karen Re: My "Ex-Baha'i" Story 11/6/99

Karen Personal testimony of a recent ex-Baha'i. 10/18/99

Nima - ex-Bahai Tracked & Harassed around the Globe 9/7/99

Nima Hazini 7/26/99

Codi del Mundo 7/20/99

Robin Peters 2/24/99

Roxanne Rieske 1/4/99

Shakti3

Gibro28W

Yu Zir

Kathleen R. Mccolloch-Bodi

Why I left - Maryam

Darrick Evenson

Cathy

Ian Mayes

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Another ex-Bahai speaks out!
From: berekiah1@my-deja.com
Date: 1999/10/18
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai,alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc,soc.culture.israel
fyi. Personal testimony of a recent ex-Baha'i. Berekiah [forwarded by]

--

My Life in the Baha'i Community

It has taken me a long time to decide whether or not to publicly tell the story of how I became a Baha'i and why I left the Baha'i community. However, I've decided that I am probably not important enough for anyone to persecute. Also, I find that there isn't much written about the experience of Baha'is in small communities, even though most Baha'i communities in the U.S. have less than 30 members. This is not meant to be an examination of philosophical differences with the Baha'i Faith, but a simple recounting of my experience.

For the sake of continuity, I have decided not to digress in order to explain Baha'i terms and history. Such information is abundantly available in other Baha'i websites and publications, for non-Baha'is who are interested.

I first heard of the Baha'i Faith through a friend of mine, who was an inactive Baha'i. I almost certainly would never become a Baha'i had I been exposed to the typical teaching project. However, I became intrigued because of the teachings on the unity of religion, which is something I already believed in. At first, I was completely unaware that a Baha'i group was just forming in my town, but I simply investigated on my own for about three months, before even meeting the local Baha'is.

The Writings of Baha'u'llah were what made me a Baha'i. I decided that if these writings were not a revelation from God, then such revelation does not exist. That is still true for me. Take Baha'u'llah away, and the whole Western prophetic tradition falls like so many dominoes. So if the reader wonders "Why did she stay so long when she was so unhappy?", that is the main explanation. That, and the fact I made a commitment and felt I had an obligation to make it work.

After enrolling in the Baha'i community, I endured a series of three shocks that I never quite got over, although I tried for many years:

The first, and actually the least important was the discovery that in spite of the Baha'i principle of equality between men and women, women cannot be elected to the Universal House of Justice, which is the supreme elected body in the Baha'i world. The reason for this is that 'Abdul-Baha said that this must be the case, and that the reasons for it would be revealed in the future. Like most Baha'is, I was not willing to abandon the Faith on that account, saying "Well, I don't like it, but I guess I have to live with it." The composition of the House of Justice is a rather distant matter and does not intrude on the local life of the community, where women are very much a part of the authority structure.

Some scholars have questioned whether the prohibition of women was meant to be a permanent and fundamental principle of administration. This is an interesting debate, but I would not expect it to change anything in the near future.

The second shock was, although I had been told that Baha'is do not proselytize, there was intense pressure to "teach the Faith." In fact, community life is supposed to be organized around this mission.

I don't believe that this is a deliberate attempt at deception. The idea that "proselytizing" and "teaching" are different come from Shoghi Effendi, who was Oxford-educated and had a real feeling for fine distinctions between words. For him, "teaching" was explaining the principles of the Faith to an interested listener, while proselytizing was a more aggressive attempt at conversion. However, the average American doesn't see much difference between "proselytizing", "converting", "teaching" or "sharing". It all amounts to the same thing, and most people find it pretty obnoxious. Another thing that happens is that frustration at the slow growth rate of the American Baha'i community leads some believers to cross the line.

There actually is a good deal of pressure to do so. A lot of this pressure is internal: the Writings are clear that teaching the Faith is one of the obligations of a Baha'i. However, there always seems to be other people around to remind you should you forget. Occasionally, some hot-shot makes it his business to give the community a good dressing down for not meeting their responsibility to the Faith. I know of at least two people who left the Faith after such a scolding.

This pressure also consumes the community's time with futile projects. I never knew anybody to come into the Faith through a teaching project; it was always by personal contact. This endless drive towards teaching deprives the community of its spiritual center: namely, the Writings of Baha'u'llah. There is this sense that Baha'is must always be rushing about doing some activity or another and there is never any time for study, contemplation, or even fellowship.

Another problem where teaching is concerned is that very few new converts are active even six months after signing their card. I don't know how many times I was introduced to a new believer, then never saw them again. Until we are able to create a fulfilling community life, there really isn't much point in teaching anybody. People will stay where they are nurtured, and they won't stay where they aren't nurtured. It really is that simple.

The final shock, and the worst of all, is the utter all-pervasiveness of administration. I became Secretary of an LSA within months of becoming a Baha'i. Many times during those early days I felt as if the Baha'i Faith had found me a seeker of truth, but for some inexplicable reason, wanted to turn me into a bureaucrat. In fact, I went searching through the Writings, and of course, the letters of Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi, looking for a way I could be a Baha'i and not have all this endless administrative stuff hanging over my head. I had just undergone the profound religious experience of recognizing Baha'u'llah, and I was hurt and disappointed to find His community consumed with things that seemed rather trivial.

My research only pulled me deeper into the administrative web. According to traditional Baha'i thinking, there really is no escape from administration. It was mostly laid down by Shoghi Effendi, the infallible interpreter of the Writings of Baha'u'llah, who was appointed by Abdul-Baha, who was appointed by the Manifestation Himself as an infallible interpreter. When I came to understand the doctrine of the Covenant, I was basically trapped. (I should note as an aside that to new believers who don't research these matters find administration completely meaningless, and this is one reason why they drift away.) Administration was inescapable. Not only did I have frequent LSA meetings, but administration takes up one-third of Feast, and elections must be attended to during Ridvan, the most joyous holiday of the Baha'i year. (No matter how "spiritual" you claim an election is, it still is basically business, not a celebration.)

The basic problem is, that in a small community, the Assembly and the community amount to the same thing; that is, virtually all active members are on the LSA. Inevitably, the assembly activities take precedence over community-focused ones. Most disappointing of all, in this situation, no one has the time for actual study of the Writings: all the other obligations take precedence. Just try to organize a deepening in a community of between 8-12 people, and see how far you get!

Worst of all, is that this administrative activity, for which so much is sacrificed, never seems to result in much. I'm very familiar with the old saw that we cannot judge the results of our teaching activity, since it may have an influence that we don't get to see. However, when year after year goes by with very few new believers, and those hard-won souls drop out of sight within months, then it is only sensible to question the validity of what you are doing.

Another inexplicable roadblock put in the way of small communities is the separation of the urban area from the surrounding countryside. It is, in a word, insane. One long-time believer told me that years ago, they begged the NSA to allow the "city" community and the "JD" community to merge, but the pleas fell on deaf ears. "We lose people out in the country", this believer sighed, and he's right! We've got to be the only religion on the planet that asked new converts whether or not they live within the city limits. I personally have had the experience of driving into town from the JD, through the city, past the very place where the city was having their Feast, to the other side of town where our Feast was. I know this policy contributed to my isolation in later years.

After living with, and considering this problem for many years, I've finally come to the conclusion that the National Spiritual Assembly doesn't give a rodent's hindquarters about the quality of community life at the local level, but is only concerned about how good the statistics look. Why have only one LSA, when you can have two? They both might be completely defunct; they may only exist on paper, but when we tally up the statistics for the public, it sure looks good. At one point, there were over 20 Baha'is living in my county, but they were divided up into two communities, and two "isolated believers". Instead of a strong, continuous community, we had two assemblies that were always jeopardized, bumped down to group status, or barely rescued by Ridvan.

Worst of all, it reduced all of us to just cogs in a big machine. Perhaps typical of this attitude was a strange phone call I got quite recently: A Baha'i lady from the "city" community called, after hearing a rumor that I had come back to the Faith. She did not call to see how I was, or to invite me to an event, or even just to chat. She called me to see if I would help with the Unit Convention which they are hosting in October! Why worry about the state of someone's soul, when they have a pair of hands?

Activity in our community went in "pulses", as one of the long-time locals described it. Activity would gear up, usually sparked by someone new moving in. Things would chug along pretty good for a while, then key people would move out and things would fall apart, until the cycle started all over again. I served on LSAs, when we had them, for nine years, in spite of my distaste for this kind of work. It's hard to just bow out and say "You guys can do all the work". Besides, I was a Baha'i. How could I not want to help the Cause? But I resented it terribly, and felt guilty about my resentment, and so those years were ones of intense conflict for me.

This contributed to my decision to move to another town in the county, with a population of 400, which by historical accident happens to be incorporated. (That wasn't the only reason we moved there. Finding an affordable, adequate house was the main thing.) I thought, with a twinge of guilt, that I could enjoy the best of both worlds, able to attend the events of two communities while escaping the administrative net. However, it didn't turn out that way. The JD community basically consisted of two busy families who could never find a mutually agreeable time to meet. The city, for some reason couldn't stick to a calendar, even when it bothered to print one. Many times I found myself on a front porch for an advertised event only to be informed that it had been cancelled, or that I should have called first, or there was simply nobody there. When I was informed of events, it was often scant hours beforehand. Basically, if you weren't in the inner circle of four or so that constituted the most active people, it was impossible to get accurate information about what was going on. To this day, I'm not sure whether or not my exclusion was deliberate or simply the lack of organization. Often, city community members would refer to me as a "homefront pioneer" and made it clear they expected me to raise up my own community by converting people in my little town.

Eventually, I decided I wouldn't bother about Baha'i activities, except for children's classes, which were very important to me. They always seemed to start off with a bang in the Spring, meander on haphazardly through summer, then be completely defunct by October. The final straw, as far as putting up with the local community was concerned, came in the fall of 1998. I called, as usual, to check if children's classes would really be there, and was told that they were having a big intercommunity event over Labor Day Weekend. I would be called back when children's classes began again. About a month later, I saw Baha'i children's classes advertised in the local paper. I was very hurt that no one had bothered to call me, but I took my children into town anyway. And, for the last time, I stood on a front porch where nobody answered the door and something snapped. I finally didn't care anymore whether anybody called me or not.

I was furious. While at this point, I had no plans to leave the Faith, I did have one recurring thought: if the administrative order were ordained by God, surely it would work better.

In spring of 1999, I went back to school in pursuit of my teaching credential, and for the first time had access to the Internet. And I found that article entitled "A Modest Proposal", which, if you aren't familiar with it, was an article slated for publication in Dialogue magazine containing proposals for reform in the Baha'i community.

As it happens, I attended the now-infamous 1988 National Convention with a friend of mine who had been elected delegate. I was a subscriber to Dialogue magazine, and was a bit distressed to hear Firuz Kazemzadeh denounce it on the floor of the Convention. I had sometimes found articles in the magazine disturbing, but I mostly found it a refreshing change from the "official" stuff that seemed to bear so little relevance to the real struggles we were going through.

I don't recall exactly what Dr. Kazemzadeh said. I most clearly remember a Persian believer say that these people were worse than Covenant-breakers, which I thought was a bit of an overstatement. However, the impression I got was that the "Baha'i dissidents" behind the magazine were snotty and disrespectful, and that I should withhold my support.

And there I was, eleven years later looking at "A Modest Proposal", and I knew I'd been lied to. All the "dissidents" had done was make proposals that could improve the situation in the American Baha'i community. All they had done was express opinions. I think what the NSA feared most was that these proposals might sound reasonable to more than a few Baha'is, and might actually result in change.

I withdrew from the Baha'i Faith on Naw-Ruz, after nearly fourteen years as a Baha'i.

The more I've investigated, the more I am confirmed in my belief that leaving the Baha'i organization was the right thing to do. I am appalled at how legitimate scholars have been treated. As far as I'm concerned, the National Spiritual Assembly have betrayed the Message of Baha'u'llah.

You can't investigate truth without asking questions. You can't claim that science and religion agree, then persecute the scientists. If the Covenant must be defended by dishonesty and injustice, then maybe its not worth defending.

I still am, and always will be, a believer in Baha'u'llah, though that faith was severely shaken for a while. I've had time now to work through the anger, which would have been impossible if I'd remained in the Baha'i community. I am hoping, instead, that someday there will be a real Baha'i community, one in which people care about each other and the good of mankind. A community that serves God, not a bureaucracy that cares little for the people that support it. I'm keeping my eyes open, and I'm waiting. (September 24, 1999)

<https://www.angelfire.com/ca3/bigquestions/Bahai.html>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Roxanne Rieske 1/4/99

From: Roxanne Rieske <rokzane@dimensional.com>
Subject: Re: BAHAI METHODS
Date: Monday, January 04, 1999 1:49 PM

I haven't had anything like that happen to me. Most of the years I spent as a bahai'i were happy ones..I was born into the faith to bahai parents..everything was different then..the whole attitude was to get out there and do good for people..now it's all about recruiting people and they've lost touch with the true meaning of worshiping God and the true meaning of the faith. I've since distanced myself from the baha'i community because it's all turned so unappealing to me. Religion has turned unappealing to me and I just don't want any part of it anymore.

best wishes,
Roxanne

On Mon, 4 Jan 1999 joanmiller@looksmart.com wrote:

>
>
> I have been a victim of what I can only describe as a psychological assault > by a Bahai recruiter who has all the warning signs of a zealot who will do > anything to enlarge his little group of Bahai. Since he is in a profession > which requires a license in my state and since I was subjected to his > bizarre methods while in his "care" I have taken what legal steps I can to > prevent this from happening to others. My stay in the faith was brief and > painful and I am angry about what happened. Anyone out there with a similar > story?
>
> jm
>
> -----== Posted via Deja News, The Discussion Network =====
> <https://www.dejanews.com/> Search, Read, Discuss, or Start Your Own
>
>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Kidnykid <kidnykid@aol.comspamfree>
Subject: Re: Baha'i Schools of Thought
Date: Wednesday, February 24, 1999 11:56 PM

>It seems to me that the existence of different schools of thought within the >Baha'i community is a reality at the present time,

I must share an observation at this point.

One of the things that actually drove me away from the faith is the similarity of interpretations and viewpoints. Now, I'm not talking about believing that Baha'u'llah was the Founder or that Shoghi Effendi was the Guardian. I consider these givens that a Bahai must accept.

However, it seemed to me that people giving lectures on certain topics sounded almost identical to each other on every single detail - not the essentials, but every single detail, as if they had to run their oral statements by Wilmette like a book or magazine article.

I don't like that - I don't want to say what it smacks of but suffice it to say that it isn't pleasant.

Robin Peters
One casualty - my wits, as in frightened out of.
Leonard McCoy, MD, ship's surgeon, USS Enterprise

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: My "Ex-Baha'i" Story
From: kalamity@my-deja.com
Date: 1999/11/06
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai
Dear friends,

I appreciate all the feedback about my story about leaving the Faith. I've got lots of supportive and positive emails back. Several people told me they so identified with my story that it could have been them writing it.

However, I think I should make clear the reason I left, because I did not see it addressed. Yes, I did spend many years in a frustrating and unsatisfying community situation, and did gradually grow more alienated and inactive as time went by. But I did not leave the Baha'i Faith for that reason. I left upon my discovery of how the NSA lied about Dialogue magazine. I was at the 1988 National Convention and heard it denounced, so when I discovered that there really was no attack from Dialogue I felt like I had been personally lied to and used for political purposes. The NSA completely betrayed my trust in them, and this threw me into a spiritual crisis from which I barely recovered my faith in Baha'u'llah. The reason I am not an enrolled Baha'i is that I don't trust the institutions. Period.

Love, Karen

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: My "Ex-Baha'i" Story

From: kalamity@my-deja.com

Date: 1999/11/08

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

In article <19991108030523.07308.00003540@ng-cg1.aol.com>, smaneck@aol.com (Smaneck) wrote:

> >I left upon my discovery of how the NSA lied about > >> Dialogue magazine

>

> Dear Karen,

>

> The whole Dialogue episode got extremely confused and convoluted. I would not > assume that the NSA deliberately lied about what happened. But I do think > there is reason to think they were misinformed on the one hand, and interpreted > events quite differently from the way you heard them on the other.

> Susan Stiles Maneck

> History, Stetson University

Dear Susan,

I don't have time for a detailed reply today, but I will remind you of something: I was there. I heard the denunciation of Dialogue, and believed it. I even threw away my copies of the magazine, believing that to be a loyal thing to do. And eleven years later I found myself reading the unpublished article "A Modest Proposal", that no sane person would regard as an attack. This is not something someone told me second hand. At the time I found this, I wasn't even aware of the other controversies going on over the Internet. My opinion of the NSA's honesty is based upon the evidence of my own senses.

Love, Karen

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: "full name deleted"
Subject: Narrative Update
Date: Thursday, May 08, 2003 3:42 PM

Dear Fred,
Could you please update my narrative, I no longer have any religious affiliations....thanks.
Dennis

My experience as a member of the Baha'i Faith By Dennis full name deleted

I became a member of the Baha'i Faith in the early seventies while an undergraduate at a small private midwestern university. The initial attraction was to the social teachings of the Faith particularly the tenets about gender and racial equality. I had been raised as a Roman Catholic and had attended parochial and public schools, but was not very well versed in Biblical Christianity. Since the sixties and seventies were a time of social upheaval and turmoil, the Baha'i Faith seemed like a rational alternative to traditional religious dogma. My connection to the group was minimal during my college years but picked up after I graduated in 1973. I had "accepted" the Faith based on a conversation with a Baha'i teacher who asked me if I agreed with the basic nine tenets of the Faith, I told him I did and he said I was a Baha'i. This was quite ironic considering that one of the basic tenets is "independent investigation of the truth". I had not taken the time to investigate nor done a thorough examination of its history or doctrine, something that I would not do until many years later while pursuing a role as a Baha'i apologetic.

In 1974 there was an International Convention held in St. Louis to initiate one of the plans that the Baha'i Administrative Order imposes on the rank and file.

The plans originated with Shoghi Effendi, the Guardian of the Baha'i Faith, they are ten-year plans, five-year plans, four-year plans, and seven-year plans or as little as one year plans. The plans have goals for teaching (expansion and consolidation) and "pioneers" which are similar to missionaries with the exception that pioneers are not subsidized by the organization, pioneers are expected to finance their own travel expenses, find employment and establish themselves as part of the city, village or community in which they are pioneering. The pioneer is to teach the faith, find new converts, establish a local spiritual assembly, (a local governing body consisting of nine adults) and then move on to a new pioneering post after the task has been completed. The Universal House of Justice, the international governing body for the Bahá'is, generally established what the goal areas were with input from the National Spiritual Assemblies, the national governing bodies. I must comment that many pioneers I met, rarely if ever established Local Spiritual Assemblies and generally left their "posts" to return home.

Pioneering is considered a glorious spiritual station and a certain degree of social pressure is put upon the members to become pioneers.

The pioneers I met in the United States who came from the Middle East, primarily from Iran, were people of means, educated and wealthy. The early pioneers of the Baha'i Faith (from the West} were also people of means. This can be verified by the early written Baha'i history of the United States and Canada.

Being a new member of the group, I was not aware of the Baha'i culture, I was first asked to answer telephone calls from people interested in the Faith, there was considerable publicity on television, bill boards and newspapers about the convention with a phone number to call for people interested in finding out more information concerning the Faith. I was to answer questions, secure addresses and phone numbers to send literature for follow up by Baha'i teachers. The older members, not wanting to answer phones, attended the conference, which was presented by the ruling Baha'i elite. The nine members of the Universal House of Justice and the remaining living "Hands of the Cause". The Hands were individuals who had been appointed by Bahá-u-lláh, Abdul Bahá or Shoghi Effendi. The rank and file members, due to their high spiritual station of "servitude", regarded them as spiritual giants. Their main function was to protect and propagate the Faith. They were to protect the Faith from schism, but were apparently unsuccessful after the death of Shoghi Effendi in 1957, the only appointed Guardian of the Baha'i Faith. There have been, since his death, two main splinter groups, the Orthodox Bahá'is and the Bahá'is Under the Provision of the Covenant (BUPC) that I am aware of. I do not know what the other group's membership numbers are or their exact doctrines since contact with them is forbidden. They are to be shunned as "covenant breakers" and are considered "spiritually diseased" by the Baha'i Administrative Order. To be quite honest, I really was not that interested in them.

I attended a general session where several of the "Hands" spoke. Most of the talks were anecdotal in nature, encouraging the members to bring in more converts and step up the "teaching efforts". Though Bahá'is claim they do not proselytize, semantics, all their efforts are aimed at bringing in more new members to establish the "New World Order"; this is to occur when there are mass conversions or "entry by troops". A term I discovered taken from Sura 110 in the Qu'ran entitled. "Help". (Rodwell's edition pg.429).

One of the elements that I found disturbing during the conference was an underlying anti-Christian sentiment, which is what eventually contributed to my leaving the Bahá'is later, it was and is something not so overt as much as an arrogant attitude that many Bahá'is feel. There were Christians offering literature outside of the convention center, which were not allowed in, and heavily criticized by the Baha'i attendee's. They consider themselves to be spiritually superior to Christians because Bahá'is believe they have all the answers to humanity's problems for this day. One of the "Hands" stated that most Christians "were dead from the neck up." I purchased this speech on audiocassette tape and had also heard the comment live. This individual was upset that the Christians had more heart and moral fiber than the Bahá'is. Christians were getting into Africa, South/Central America and Asia with missionaries before the Baha'i pioneers could "open" those areas. This "Hand" also felt that Americans were really not worth trying to teach the Faith to, since they were so entrenched in the culture and their churches. They were basically doomed, not worth saving. The Bahá'is should therefore concentrate their efforts on native peoples who did not have so many "veils". A term frequently used by the membership to denote someone who could not accept the station of Bahá-u-lláh as God's savior for the world. After the conference was over, I was introduced to a Baha'i couple that lived in the municipality where I resided. This introduction and my experience with this couple would have lasting implications for me for the rest of my life.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, as I will call them, were a very charismatic and charming couple, they took me into their home and became my "spiritual parents". Though I did not live with them I spent much time there. They were in their mid forties and had an adult daughter, whom I never met. Mr. Smith was about six foot four and had a very intimidating presence if he chose to and Mrs. Smith was about five foot seven and on the full figured side. She was very soft spoken with a mild southern drawl.

The couple immediately took me under their wing, seeing I was a new young and impressionable recruit gave them license to teach me as they saw fit. We began having "firesides", weekly teaching meetings in their home, for "seekers" as they are referred to (potential Bahá'is). We held public meetings at the local library and community center, picnics at parks, anywhere we could attract attention to the Faith to bring in new members or seekers to invite to firesides. During this time I became a very persuasive teacher under Mr. Smith's tutelage and as a result many young people "declared " their belief in Bahá-u-lláh, including one of my older brothers, his wife and several of my friends. So many people were enrolling in the Baha'i Faith, coming to firesides and meetings that it attracted the attention of the National Spiritual Assembly and they began to send people to investigate our activities. I found out decades later that the more conservative Baha'i administration at that time were alarmed at the number of "long hair hippie types" and African-Americans who were enrolling into the Baha'i Faith. Professor Juan R.I. Cole, a historian and former member of the Bahá'is has gone into this in some detail in a published paper entitled "The Baha'i Faith as Panopticon". The website address is; <https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/1999/jssr/bhjssr.htm> For those wishing to read the article.

The Smiths had me under their control and completely indoctrinated into the Baha'i Faith. I was their "spiritual son" and anything Mr. Smith said I took as truth. He began handing out "fez's", hats like the early Middle Eastern Bahá'is wore, to the younger male Bahá'is in the community. A symbol of his discipleship I suppose. This was alarming to the members of the National Spiritual Assembly who really took offense at this action, but did not confront Mr. Smith about it directly. I on the other hand and the other new young believers thought this was normal, wearing the fez, since none of the other older Bahá'is in the area said anything to him or us about it. At this time I was alienated from my family and former non-Baha'i friends. Everything I did was Baha'i, I felt I had all the answers and refused to listen to anyone else outside of the Baha'i Faith. Mr. Smith began to get verbally abusive and authoritarian with me if I disagreed with him on any issue. He never struck me, but he did on one occasion force me to prostrate myself before him and beg for forgiveness because I had disappointed him. I had wanted to get married and start a family and he wanted me to move away to another state with him. I need to add without going into too much detail that Mr. Smith sometimes would slip drugs into glasses of punch that he would give me and others to drink while we were guests in his home. On several occasions after giving me the "punch", he proceeded to lock me in a small room on the second floor of his house, a prayer closet he called it, and tell me to pray and meditate. Several times I hallucinated while in the "prayer closet" and he would grill me as to what I had experienced. It was some years later that I realized what he had done to me and how sick an individual Mr. Smith really was. To this day I do not know what the nature of the drugs were he had given to me.

The Smiths moved away out of state, as there were enough adult members in the community to form a Local Spiritual Assembly. (LSA). I was elected Chairman of the LSA and had been in that position for less than a year when the Assembly was summoned to a meeting at a local hotel with members of the Baha'i Administration. I must add that when Mr. and Mrs. Smith left the area I was greatly relieved and thought to myself "good riddance". I did occasionally speak to him on the telephone, when he called to see how I was doing.

What happened next when the LSA met with the Administrative representatives was something that I had kept to myself for over twenty years. We, the Local Spiritual Assembly members, thought we were going to be praised for all the teaching activity that had occurred and tripling the number of new believers. On the contrary, we were seated in a large hotel suite and then I was read a list of charges against me which included "conspiring" with Mr. Smith to run the Local Spiritual Assembly from out of state and for "claiming a station", whatever that meant. When I protested and attempted to defend myself, I was told to "sit down and shut up, we know all about you and anything you say will be just lies." I said I was leaving and they locked and blocked the door leading out of the room, there were about seven of them and they forced me and the other members of the Local

Spiritual Assembly to listen to them for two hours. This is what
the Bahá'is call "loving and frank consultation". I was humiliated, demeaned and my character assassinated in this meeting. Two of the members of the Local Spiritual Assembly came to my defense and stated that the charges were not true and that the picture that was being presented of me by them was inaccurate. My accusers never confronted me;
I came to find out later that the National Spiritual Assembly and other Administrative bodies had used members of the Local Spiritual Assembly
and the community as "informants". The concept of due process is foreign in the Baha'i Faith.

The result of this "consultation" had me removed from the assembly and ostracized from the community at large.
Several of the Local Spiritual Assembly members left the Faith after this incident; as did several people that I had taught the Faith to. I seriously considered it, but decided not to because I was isolated and felt I deserved to be punished because of my association with
the Smiths. I was instructed not to ever speak to them or have contact with the Smiths again, but not told why. If they contacted me I was to report
it immediately to the Baha'i Administration.

The next step that the Baha'i Administration did was to "reeducate" me in the Baha'i teachings. They arranged for me to attend "deepening classes"
(a Baha'i term used to denote in-depth study) with an older Baha'i teacher who had very little regard for me, almost to the point of open hostility. If I
questioned him about certain doctrines that did not make sense to me he would become extremely defensive and caustic in speech. One time he hung up on me during the course of a telephone conversation after calling me an arrogant punk when questioning him about a prophetic statement in the Baha'i writings. He stated there was no such passage and when I read it to him over the phone he became very upset and hung up. I did not study with him much after that. Many of the Bahá'is and the Baha'i Administration considered him one of the best teachers in the United States and would rave about him. I found him to be offensive, sarcastic, demeaning to his students and to be without any formal training as an educator. He published a book through the Baha'i Publishing Trust, which I thought was confusing and incoherent, he was in his mid sixties when I met him. Since many of the new Bahá'is we had taught had left the faith, the numbers in the community went down, so I was reinstated to the Local Spiritual Assembly by default. Much of my time was spent planning firesides, public meetings, picnics and fundraising. In the fifteen years that followed there was very little growth in the community in terms of the numbers of new believers, there was a revolving door so to speak, and people would come into the Faith and then either become inactive or just resign. This was particularly true of the African-American Bahá'is coming from a church background. There was very little structure or community life that resembles a church community. Most, if not all of Baha'i activity centers on meetings, teaching activities and fundraising. There was very little time left to develop interpersonal relationships or socialization. One last painful episode, which further alienated me from the faith, was the fact that my wife at the time, we are now divorced, developed a close friendship with a "home front pioneer". These are Bahá'is that move to an area for a short time to fulfill some arbitrary local goal of the Baha'i Administration to establish a group or Local Spiritual Assembly. This individual, unbeknownst to me, tried to coerce my wife to divorce me and marry him during his tenure in the community. She told me about the relationship after he left the country to pioneer to South America. She is still on the rolls of the Baha'i Faith to my knowledge.

During the divorce process the community abandoned me, since divorce is frowned upon. An incident that occurred while going through the divorce, (a year of patience is required by Baha'i law), was when I attended a Baha'i Sunday class where I was confronted by several members of the community and chastised in the class for going through the divorce, I did not defend myself, but I must add that a Persian Baha'i man stood up for me and said in my defense that no one knows what goes on between two people and that it was not for anyone to judge. Despite that I did not attend any meetings for the next two years, nor was I contacted by any of the "friends" during that time. The community has a history of abandoning its members when they no longer can attend the meetings or participate in teaching activities. I cannot truly characterize the Baha'i Faith as a "cult", though in my opinion there are strong social controls in place by the Baha'i Administration. Those controls filter down to the individuals who are afraid of openly questioning the decisions of that administration for fear of being labeled a "covenant breaker". Which is tantamount to being excommunicated from the community. The leadership has used this effectively since the beginnings of the religion to "purge the ranks of the believers". Once a person has been declared a covenant breaker, the Baha'i community shuns that person and contact with such an individual could cause "spiritual contamination" of the "Cause" as it is referred to. There are parallels in the Jehovah's Witnesses and Mormon groups, as I understand it. The discussion of "unquestioning loyalty and obedience" to the Baha'i covenant and administration is paramount to maintaining order within the community. Though membership in the Baha'i Faith is completely voluntary, individuals such as myself who based their entire lifestyle around the faith find it difficult to separate themselves from family and friends who are Baha'i even if they know there are contradictions within Baha'i doctrine. One risks those relationships and being isolated from the community. It took me three painful years to extricate myself and resign as an enrolled member. Since leaving the Baha'i Faith in the fall of 2000, I have had little or no contact with people I had been friends with for many years, friends whose children grew up with my children. Most of them believe I lost my faith in God. Those that I have spoken to are surprised that I am doing fine.

Some of the contradictions that began to surface for me were a result of a radio broadcast I heard by Rev. Robert Pardon of the New England Institute of Religious Research (NEIRR) on a Lutheran radio station in St. Louis. He was giving an overview of the Baha'i Faith and I called to challenge him and his sources. I felt he was misrepresenting the Faith and had gotten his source material from "covenant breakers" or enemies of the Faith. I thought about what he had said and contacted him through his web site, I was finally beginning to investigate the Baha'i Faith after twenty-seven years. He sent me facsimiles of his source material and I began to meticulously go over it. Checking it against what had been presented to me by the Bahá'is. I also began writing letters and asking questions of Baha'i administrators and academics. I discovered that several contemporary Baha'i historians and academics had been forced out of the Faith because of their research and publications. Baha'i academics have to go through a review process before publishing anything about the Faith. If an author does not pass the review process one is not published. Their work essentially is censored. This is why almost all Baha'i literature and historical works are redundant. All the books and pamphlets are rewritten from the same "approved" source material. As a result of this, most Bahá'is are unaware of the early history of the Faith, the power struggles that ensued from the founders family members and instead are directed to the Baha'i approved materials. Other sources are considered suspect, labeled as unauthorized or from enemies of the faith.

Though the Faith teaches tolerance for other religions, the truth is taught that the Baha'i Faith is the "Ultimate Truth" for this day.

All the previous "Manifestations of God" and revealed religions are essentially null and void. Humanity must follow the Baha'i Faith or suffer severe punishment. Jesus Christ, the Messiah and Savior for the entire human race is reduced to the station of a "Divine Educator". His revelation is no longer considered relevant for this day, in fact Christ's dispensation ended with the coming of Muhammad in the sixth century C.E. The clergy and a misunderstanding of scriptural interpretation have led all Christians astray. Personal salvation is no longer important; the salvation of the human race is the priority now.

An intimate personal relationship with God is not possible, "the door leading unto the Ancient of Days is forever closed to man", (paraphrase from the Baha'i Writings). As I began to study the Bible in depth and outside of a Baha'i context, I began to understand the perspective of the Christian objection to the Baha'i Faith. A great deal of the social teachings and all of the spiritual teachings, which the faith presented as new, I discovered in Old and New Testament scripture. Some of the phrases from the Bible I found transcribed into Baha'i prayers. However the main source of contention for me was the arrogance of many Baha'i who became incensed at Christian authors trying to give accurate accounts regarding the Baha'i Faith and its history. Yet they thought nothing of explaining away two thousands years of historical Christianity and exegetical study, while engaging in the worst form of eisegesis. On a more personal level, I was concerned about my soul and salvation, I never really felt forgiven or saved as a Baha'i or that Bahá-u-lláh was a personal savior. When reading how Jesus taught us to forgive our enemies and to pray for them in the Gospels, I compared that to how the Baha'i Faith historically condemned and shunned its enemies. (Many who were the disciples, spouses and relatives of the central figures of the Faith, even Shoghi Effendi, the Baha'i Guardian, excommunicated his own parents!). I began to ask God to open my eyes and guide me to the truth.

With the help of Rev. Bob Pardon, (NEIRR) Pastor Todd Wilken and Jeff Schwartz of radio station KFUE in St. Louis, I began the task of "testing the spirits" to determine what was true. I tested the Bahá'is by raising questions at Baha'i meetings about historical and doctrinal contradictions as well as prophetic statements in the Baha'i Faith that had not come to pass. Dates had been given where certain events were to have transpired and did not occur. Many Bahá'is were desperately trying to rationalize these unfulfilled prophecies. This line of questioning was making me very unpopular to say the least, particularly when I began to post those questions on the local Baha'i chat list. I started to receive calls from the local Baha'i authorities as well as from some of the "friends". (A term Bahá'is use to refer to each other). I finally officially withdrew my membership and posted it on the chat list. I received numerous calls and e-mails from the "friends" wanting to counsel me, I then posted and requested that I not be contacted, which of course did not occur, finally I posted my reasons for leaving the Baha'i Faith and that I no longer could follow the doctrines or obey the Administrative Order. An Administrative Representative who wished to meet with me concerning my statements contacted me. His real intent was to declare me a "covenant breaker" and therefore have me shunned so as not to "infect" any other Bahá'is with doubt. I agreed to meet with him. He had books with him and was prepared to contend with me. I chose not to engage him on doctrinal issues, I instead stated that I did not believe that Bahá-u-lláh was the return of Christ and relayed to him the incidents I had suffered at the hands of Bahá'is and the Administration. He repeatedly apologized and stated he would ask the Bahá'is to respect my wishes that I not be contacted and harassed about my decision.

I bear no malice towards the Baha'i Faith or individual Bahá'is. Some of them are very kind, gentle and loving souls. This testimony is intended to help those members of the Baha'i community, who may have experienced similar situations and come to a personal realization regarding doctrinal contradictions. There is hope, peace and life outside of the Baha'i Faith for those who choose to seek it

Dennis full name deleted

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: SBoozie3@aol.com[SMTP:SBoozie3@aol.com]
Sent: Sunday, December 16, 2001 11:55 PM
To: f_glaysher@hotmail.com Subject: Thanks

Dear Mr. Galysher

My brother became active in the Baha'i Faith before the age of the Internet and it took a lot of searching to get the real story about this religion. Now all kinds of things pop up when you run a search on "Baha'i", nevertheless your web site stands out as an outstanding source of information. And its much more up to date than the traditional William McElwee Miller and Samuel Wilson books.

I have come to the conclusion that the Baha'i Faith as it is currently administered is a cult. However there is nothing in the teachings that compels it to be so. The Baha'i Faith is whatever its people make it. If they choose to follow an "infallible" Universal House of Justice and all its teachings regarding covenant breakers and censorship so be it but much damage is done by going down that path.

I guess what bothers me the most is their disregard for historical truth, especially the destruction of books and the rewriting of them so that what they say conforms with current teachings. I could never accept a religion that does this without informing its members that the text has been changed. It seems so dishonest.

Anyway thanks for proclaiming the truth. Having met many Baha'is I can say that what attracts people to the Faith is the example of individual believers and their belief in Baha'u'llah. This is an argument that cannot be refuted.

PHILLIP SHERWOOD

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

In March 2006, philosophy and religious studies Professor Dann May[6] and his wife[7] Phyllis E Bernard, current Robert S. Kerr Jr. Distinguished Professor of Law Director of the Center on Alternative Dispute Resolution, Oklahoma City University[8] received correspondence from the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States, questioning the couple's desire to leave the organization, and seeking to arrange for representatives of the National Spiritual Assembly to fly to May and Bernard's residence for further discussions regarding their withdrawal. May and Bernard's reply is cited below:

From: COMMUNITY [mailto:COMMUNITY@usbnc.org]
Sent: Friday, March 10, 2006 10:01 AM
To: May, Dann
Subject: Request to meet with you Importance: High

Mr. Dann May

Dear Baha'i Friend,

The National Spiritual Assembly has tried twice to reach you and your wife by phone at the only phone number we have for you, so we hope that this email address is current. The National Assembly was sorry to learn of your desire to withdraw from membership in the Baha'i Faith and would like to hear in fuller form the thoughts you expressed in your January letter.

To that end it has asked that two representatives fly to Norman, OK on Saturday, March 18 to meet with you and your wife at a time that is convenient for you. We hope that you will be agreeable to sharing your perspectives and concerns with these representatives and ask that you kindly reply at your earliest convenience so that airline tickets may be purchased.

With loving Baha'i greetings,
Marie Scheffer
For the Office of the Secretary

To all those concerned:

Perhaps you don't understand – we already view ourselves as no longer members of the Baha'i community and we regularly attend Unitarian and Buddhist activities.

We do not present ourselves as Baha'is and do everything we can, when people try to introduce us as Baha'is, to politely disabuse them of that perception.

We have not attended feast in over a year, or for that matter, any other official Baha'i activity.

I think that it would be best for all those concerned, that we simply be allowed to withdraw.

We are deeply disillusioned with the unofficial and official Baha'i views on the war in Iraq, with the rise of Baha'i fundamentalism and intolerance and with the growing "ghettoization" of the Baha'i community in general.

We increasingly feel unwelcome at Baha'i events where everything seems to be scrutinized by rather mindless "Ruhi Book" mentalities rather than thoughtful discussions of the Baha'i Sacred Texts.

One-size-fits-all mass theology serves to only alienate anyone and everyone who wishes to pursue spiritually inspired and independent investigations of the truth. There appears to be, these days, little room or toleration for Baha'i scholars, Baha'i scholarship, or thoughtful approaches to the Baha'i sacred texts.

We are outraged over the Kalimat Press decision! We are, therefore, increasingly embarrassed to be associated with the Baha'i community. We often hear from our colleagues in the academic world, that they too perceive the Baha'i community as increasingly becoming more and more fundamentalist, alarmist, and cultish.

We are not interested in talking to anyone from the National Center and we will not meet with them, even if they come to Norman. Please do not send your representatives to Norman.

Use the funds for their plane tickets to do some good at one of the Baha'i schools or to feed the homeless. Please let us get on with our lives. Your response only convinces us more completely that the Baha'i community has become an authoritarian and fundamentalist movement.

Most religious scholars' perceptions of cults are that they make it difficult for members to resign or leave the community with their reputations intact – please don't confirm our suspicions! Let us resign and withdraw quietly and without fanfare or with inquisition-like exit interviews. We are willing to leave the Baha'i community without recriminations, regrets, or active criticisms on our part. Please let us fade from the Baha'i community as gently and as quietly as possible.

Sincerely,

Dann May and Phyllis Bernard

Posted by: New Yorker / 9/13/2006 12:03:00

AMhttps://bahaiadmin.blogspot.com/2006_09_01_archive.html#115813112812407983

Dann May

Wimberly School of Religion, Oklahoma City University, accessed February 9, 2010.

<https://www.okcu.edu/religion/faculty.aspx>

Phyllis Bernard
https://www.okcu.edu/Law/facultyandadministration/faculty_bernard.php

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: YUZIR@webtv.net (YU ZIR)
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai
Subject: Re: fw Timothy Mulligan Re: Why I left
Date: Sun, 16 Aug 1998 16:48:13 -0400 (EDT)

As an outsider and, like T Mulligan a former Baha'i, I find interesting his reasons for resigning his membership. Perhaps even more interesting are the reactions to it by the loyal Baha'is who have posted here.

Mulligan's objections are completely reasonable. Like so many searching souls, groping through the futility of temporal life, he seeks a clear vision of life's plan, purpose and meaning. Turned off by the mainstream Christian churches which hold to no eternal principle (but only to the socio-babblgical fad of the moment), repulsed by the scandal plagued ministries of Swaggart, Baker and others, and subjected to the propaganda of the predominantly liberal media (only 2% of journalists ever see the inside of a church or synagogue on any regular basis, I'm told), it is little wonder that people like Mulligan despair of finding spiritual truth in this world.

The kinds of churches that do attract and hold people like Mulligan are those that espouse clear, coherent teachings, and which forgive but do not excuse the breaking of rules. That may be too simplistic a description. They don't really attract many people in the sense of persuading them to join, but they are the kinds of churches to which TM and others like him will often respond favorably.

The Baha'is who replied to TM probably did more to confirm his disillusionment than any contra-Baha'i could have done. They did this through a subconscious duplicity that seeks to avoid giving answers to honestly asked, embarrassing questions. The contradictions which TM (and I, and many others) find in Baha'i teachings are not the benign products of misunderstanding, nor are they cultural or translational, or of any similar cause. They are real. They are the inevitable result of any vast body of literature generated by any fallible human being(s). The Baha'i literature is an unsteady house of cards that collapses beneath the weight of honest scrutiny.

Saying that "all" religions contain contradictions is not only a cop-out, it is false. For many years I believed that the Bible contains contradictions. Only after I investigated these supposed contradictions for myself did I find that they were not so.

Really, when I read some of the apologies in this NG, I wonder if the writers themselves really believe them, or whether they are clinging desperately to a belief system for fear of a truth they would like less. People like TM see right through it.

This attitude would go a long way toward explaining the censorship at SRB. Maybe the folks who run that site have thought this through as clearly as TM has, come to the same conclusions he has, but taken a different path. Just a speculation.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: kate_mccolloch_bodi@my-dejanews.com <kate_mccolloch_bodi@my-dejanews.com>
Subject: Since leaving 5 years ago
Date: Tuesday, August 18, 1998 12:50 PM

Since leaving the Baha'i Faith almost five years ago, I have long wanted to have the opportunity to talk to people familiar with the Baha'i community. I want to ask them whether my experiences with the community were some uncommon phenomena or representative of the faith in general. After reading Tim Mulligan's posting and all of the responses, I sigh, and remember clearly why I left without word or explanation, perhaps a heretic but probably still signed up on someone's card count.

I don't know exactly how or why my ex-husband became Baha'i, but I suspect it was for the favors that were offered him. I myself recall a Baha'i agreeing to sell us a vehicle on-time at a steal of a price, but only if I signed my card. When my (now)-ex-husband told me to sign, I did.

I don't know exactly how or why I became a teacher for the faith during my first community meeting. Perhaps it was because no-one else would watch all the children as the adults had their meetings. I remember that I had no idea what the faith was about. They said "that's okay, here's a book and invite non-member children also." When my children's classes drew dozens of non-member children, the Baha'is wanted to teach them and took my classes away.

I don't know exactly how or why the spiritual assembly decided that they should support my ex-husband after he was jailed for assault and stalking me. Perhaps it was because I would not tell them about the incident myself. I remember feeling embarrassed about the whole thing and then getting very, very angry as the "Community" went to court to testify about how I was setting my ex-husband up.

Even now, at the university I attend, I see these young faces at their booth on the commons, with pamphlets talking about unity and the equality of men and women. I want to walk up to them and ask if my experience was some surreal fluke. But the closer I look, the younger their faces appear to me and I know they probably could never understand what I was asking. Questions like, Is a faith a reflection of its members, or the reverse? What is the purpose of a community meeting if half of your community is alienated? What can a spiritual assembly really know about a marriage? How can a man and woman be treated equally, if a man takes on a "year of patience" for his errant wife to come to her senses and do what she is told once again? Do you really think some words in book by Abdul Baha can sooth pain like this?

Sincerely,

Kathleen R. Mccolloch-Bodi
Formerly of Juneau, Alaska

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: r.woodlock@bigfoot.com <r.woodlock@bigfoot.com>

Subject: Why I left

Date: Tuesday, August 18, 1998 3:59 AM

I think K.Paul Johnson has a good point. When people have asked me why I left the Faith I invariably give a different answer every time. I usually believe what I am saying to be true - so why so many answers?? (I used to think people would not think I was telling the truth about it).

Religious conversion is a complex phenomenon. Initially when I left, I think it was more to do with a growing attraction to Islam than a whole series of thought out beliefs that the Baha'i Faith was not true - but since then I have read and seen much (without my previously blinding "love of Baha'i" spectacles that filtered all things) that has confirmed my decision. I look back and see the genesis of my having left in a time period of about two years where I swayed to opposite ends of the pendulum "being a Muslim" and "being a Baha'i".

The first post I wrote to soc.religion.bahai (which I desperately begged the moderators not to post - so they didn't) concerned the deletion of an unfulfilled prophecy from "Baha'u'llah and the New Era", yet all of my early newsgroup posts were full-on "Baha'i". I came >< close to going to the mosque to say shahaada in November/December 96, yet January '97 I was participating in an intensive youth teaching project.

My Islamic beliefs have changed over time as well. At first I sought a simplistic answer to things, having been nurtured in the comfort of set-in-stone and infallible Baha'i beliefs, but have since grown more flexible and modernistic and am revelling in the freedom.

Whereas once I used to hand out pamphlets in the street, I now feel uncomfortable when Baha'is "teach" to me. I don't want the "pat" answers, I want to turn around and ask them what they think of John Hick's pluralism!

There are subjects with which I take issue with the Baha'i Faith, that never posed a problem in my mind as a Baha'i: but not believing that Baha'u'llah or the UHJ is infallible, means that I am free to question and re-mould myself and my opinions.

I also believe there are many positive things about the Baha'i Faith, and I still believe I can write on "Baha'i beliefs" (eg. my most recent posts on Titles of the Manifestations), I love the freedom to be able to profit from what good exists in that religion, and throw away all the negatives. If it means I can't be a declared Baha'i - then so be it. I am at the stage where I believe tawhiidian monotheism of Islam is the most perfect form of religious truth, but I am open to other religions being more suitable comforts for other people. If someone needs to believe that Baha'u'llah is watching their every move and pushing and prodding them in a divinely ordained direction: then that is their choice. I don't think the idea that God is an Unknowable Essence that I must approach through a human being (Baha'u'llah) is a particularly useful theology to me, but that is my current state of religious evolution.

Oh well, just some thoughts I guess,
Regards
Maryam

In article <35d85986.0@vlinsvr>, pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson) wrote:

> Seeing an exchange about the honesty and reliability of an > ex-Baha'i's story of "why I left" inspires some comments. There > are so many ways to parse the question "Why did you leave?" that > I think a couple deserve mention. First would be "What were your > conscious thoughts at the time you chose to withdraw concerning > the reasons for doing so?" Another would be "What reactions were > going on unconsciously at the time that you can now look back on > and recognize as motivating factors?" In my own case, the > answers to these two questions would be quite different. First > would be that the claims of the Bab and Baha'u'llah about > their own status and their place in history no longer were > persuasive to me. Second would involve so many aspects of being > turned off by dogmatism, implausible readings of history, > totalitarian hopes for the future, etc. etc., that it took me > years to realize all the factors involved.

>
> I'd think that at this stage Tim might be learning more of those > second-order motivating factors, since it takes a long while to > process such things.
>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: darricke@hotmail.com <darricke@hotmail.com>
Subject: Letter to Robert C. Henderson
Date: Monday, September 14, 1998 11:58 AM

TO: Robert C. Henderson, Secretary-General of the National Spiritual Assembly of Baha'is in the United States FROM: Darrick Evenson DATE: 16 August 1998
SUBJECT: Withdrawal of My Request for Reinstatement

Dear Dr. Henderson,

I hereby withdraw my request for reinstatement in the Faith. My reasons are as follows:

- 1) I do not believe you or the NSA have any intention of reinstating me; under any circumstances. I believe you believe me to be a threat to your interpretation of the Faith.
- 2) Although I accept Baha'u'llah as a Manifestation of God, as an incarnation of the Holy Spirit, I still feel--after many agonizing months of deep thought and soul-searching--that He is subordinate to Jesus Christ; the Son of God. I feel this way because of His statements that Jesus is "the Lord of the Visible and the Invisible" and "the Lord of all being".
- 3) I had an overwhelming spiritual experience, which convinced me to return to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I can only explain it as a feeling of TOTAL peace and assurance.

Intellectually, I had every reason to join the Faith. It seemed to me to be the fulfillment of Mormon prophecies concerning the coming of the Millennial Kingdom. However, while my head says the Faith is foremost, my heart tells me otherwise. My heart is too attached to Jesus Christ for me to exist in a religious community which views Jesus as merely a "forerunner" of Muhammad, or "a teacher of peace and tolerance" or merely a Prophet who came to "advance civilization". The Gospels and the entire New Testament declare--in no uncertain terms--that Jesus came to offer His blood as a sacrifice for sin for the remission of sins. He is the Lamb of God; slain before the foundations of the Earth. He is so much more that what Baha'is believe; merely a Prophet to prepare for Islam, or to improve the status of minorities and women! Such explanations only cheapen Him, and distort His true station.

I had hopes that I could teach the Friends of the true station and purpose of Jesus, but--from my observations of soc.religion.bahai, I can see that this will be mostly in vain. The NSA collectively, and you personally, will oppose me every step of the way. You have created your own false "Jesus"; a Prophet concerned only with teaching Liberal-Humanist values (or should I say the lack thereof). Your Jesus is NOT the Jesus of the New Testament; nor even the Jesus of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdul-Baha, but a false, watered-down, Liberal/Humanist/ Unitarian "Jesus" that was invented by men to replace the true Jesus; Who came to offer Himself as a final sacrifice for sin, and preach the repentance from sin. I cannot belong to any organization which so cheapens and distorts my Lord and Savior! And I cannot teach the Friends when you will constantly prevent me from doing so.

Those are my reasons, I hope you can understand them.

Before saying adieu, I would like to comment on some things I've observed about the Faith in this country.

Shoghi Effendi once said, in a pilgrim's note, that his "greatest fear" was that the Baha'is would water-down the Faith in order to make it acceptable to the World. This is what you have done here in the U.S.! You've watered-down the Faith into a mere set of 12 social-goals you call the "12 Principles of the Faith". These were explanded from the original 9 Principles of World Unity that were numbered and outlined by both Baha'u'llah and 'Abdul-Baha in the Writings (Baha'i World Faith). None of these "12 Principles" have to do with sin or salvation, or repentence, or heaven or hell. They all have to do with World Unity. While World Unity was the Mission of Baha'u'llah, the 9 (now 12) principles were _never_ supposed to be presented as the "summon bonum" and raison-d'etre of the Faith! Yet, this is exactly what they have become. The Faith has become a mere set of social-principles: sans sin, sans salvation, sans repentence, etc. The Faith has been watered-down into merely a "World Peace/ Race Unity/Moderate Feminist" social-activist organization with a few religious overtones! How sad! Is it any wonder why the Faith can't grow in this country?

I resigned initially because of the fact that I was so upset and shocked with the total apathy of the NSA, and many or most of the American Baha'is, toward the 1.4 million pre-natal child-murders in this country. Even the Guardian clearly wrote that abortion was "the illegal taking of human life" and "absolutely forbidden in the Faith. But he had no way to know that Liberal religionists--such as yourself--would simply _ignore_ those laws and directives which are at variance with Liberal-Humanist principles! If this is not _hypocrisy_ in it's _fullest_, then I don't know _what_ is! You justify yourself by writing a letter saying that abortion is forbidden, then watering-down it's interpretation, then storing the letter and only releasing it to those who specifically _request_ it! You utterly refuse to publish it in The American Baha'i, or in any other way let the Friends even know it exists! You also don't even reprimand any Baha'i who procures or performs an abortion; for _ANY_ reason! Let me assure you, when you come before the Heavenly Judge, you will be _held accountable_ for _every_ child who is murdered in the womb by an American Baha'i who did so out of ignorance; because _you_ had the divine responsibility to inform them, and you failed completely to do so. When you proudly and openly ignore the Laws of God when they are made plain before your face, then you _will_ be _held accountable_!

You seem to view the Faith as a "means to an end"; that end being a Liberal/ Humanist World Federation. You have set the Faith and the Laws of God on it's head; promoting the lesser aspects, and ignoring or distorting the greater ones: like sin, repentence, and salvation. Baha'u'llah wrote:

"My sole duty is to remind you of your failure of duty towards the Cause of God, if perchance ye may be of them that heed my warning. Wherefore, hearken ye unto my speech, and return to God and repent, that He, through His grace, may have mercy upon you, may wash away your sins, and forgive your trespasses. The greatness of His mercy surpasseth the fury of His wrath, and His grace encompasseth all who have been called into being and been clothed with the robe of life, be they of the past or of the future." (Gleanings, p.130)

The words are for you, Robert, would you but know it!

You will discover that your 4-Year Plan will fail, and fail miserably; not because the Faith is untrue, but because your generation of American Baha'is have so distorted it, so watered-it-down, that it has lost it's spiritual power for most people. It has become merely a "World Peace/Race Unity" club with a few prayers thrown in. But, you see, _most_ people aren't looking for a religion that promises World Peace as it's Alpha and Omega. Most people are joining religions which promise _Inner Peace_. That is why--for example--the Liberal/ Humanist "mainline" Protestant have lost _millions_ in the past 30 years. This is why conservative churches like the Assemblies of God, and the Mormons, have _gained_ millions in the past 30 years. People are seeking salvation (remission of sins), and rewards for the righteous and publishments for the wicked in the Afterlife; and this is what Jesus offers them. An offering of a literal Heaven (which is more than just 'feeling good' about working for the improvement of the status of minorities and women), the forgiveness of sins ("sin" is basically an unknown word in the Baha'i Faith), and moral guidelines (which are suggested, but have no real meaning in the Faith) beats out "Esperanto" and "Race Unity" any day of the week!

The Baha'i Faith in this country is a dismal failure, and Liberal Humanist Baha'is (such as yourself) will guarantree continued failure for many years to come. Why? Simple. Most people just aren't looking for a religion that doesn't offer them anything other than the Democratic platform!

As I told you in my letter of resignation two years ago, I will never give- up Baha'u'llah! I believe He is the Spirit of Truth. And the "good news" is that I don't have to! There is a doctrine in Mormonism which teaches that the Holy Ghost will Himself incarnate into mortality and perform some great missio for the world. Brigham Young taught that He would establish an organization which would rule the nations, a nd guarantee the rights of all men; regardless of race, color, or creed.

I have been critical of you and the NSA NOT because I wish to bring schism, but because I care about those children who are murdered by their Baha'i mothers and Baha'i physicians--with your silent blessing! It makes me sad to see the Faith so rudderless in this country. You were chosen to lead the Faith in this country solely because of your incredible voice, and that fact you were black. The Friends didn't know that you secretly are Pro-Choice, and Pro-Gay; two things which violate the Laws of God, and the Directives of the Guardian. I have more respect for a Baha'i who is openly Pro-Choice and Pro-Gay, than for a "Baha'i" who works secretly behind the scenes.

I can only admonish you (for any good it will do):

- 1) Do as the Guardian said and preach vehemently against abortion. You will save many innocent lives.
- 2) Begin to teach the Friends the moral and religious aspects of the Faith--not just the social-teachings. Emphasize more the concepts of sin, repentance, and personal salvation via the atonement of Jesus Christ; as 'Abdul-Baha taught.

I DO wish the Faith well; both here and worldwide. It is the Millennial Kingdom of God, so victory is assured. The only question is "When?".
Sincerely,
Darrick Evenson

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: cathy613@my-dejanews.com <cathy613@my-dejanews.com>

Subject: returning bahai gifts

Date: Tuesday, September 22, 1998 3:14 PM

Hello everyone,

I have recently resigned from the Bahai faith as has my husband. We were members for a very short time and we still have some gifts from members of the LSA which were given to us to welcome us into the group. I don't feel right about keeping them, and since they are specifically "only for Bahai's" I'm not sure what to do about them. Destroying them seems sacrilegious. I am trying to stay out of contact with the group because its still painful for me to not be a part of it anymore. I guess I could send them to the LSA but they's probably send them back. Any ideas?

Cathy

-----== Posted via Deja News, The Leader in Internet Discussion
==-----

https://www.dejanews.com/rg_mkgrp.xp Create Your Own Free Member Forum

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Shakti3@aol.com <Shakti3@aol.com>
To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: I would post on srb but they have been censoring me since May 1998
Date: Friday, December 04, 1998 7:15 PM

Dear Fred:

Sorry to hear that you've been suppressed on srb. Your comments were always very "right on." Altho it does not surprise me one bit, seeing the way these newsgroups operate.

I stop by the ng every now and then but really don't have any interest in perusing it on a regular basis. I was a Bahai for about 6 months -- long enough to realize that this was NOT a faith I wanted to be a part of for many reasons.

Good luck with your campaign and on the path!

Namaste,
Shakti

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: My Letter for Leaving the Baha'i Faith
Date: 12/14/1998 2:59 PM Eastern Standard Time
From: Ian Mayes
Message-id: <19981214145954.25334.00002211@ng100.aol.com>

12-12-98

Dear Baha'is,

Ever since I read Baha'u'llah's statement that "truthfulness is the foundation of all human virtue" I have been trying to live my life as truthfully and un-hypocritical as possible. Honesty is indeed the best policy there is, no matter what the out-come. It is in precisely this spirit that I write this letter and make this declaration. Please do not chastise me for what I am about to say, nor should you be up-set for what I am about to say. This is a moment of evolution for me, a moment of personal growth and understanding.

For about three years now I have been intensely engaged in a special kind of inner turmoil regarding what my beliefs are in terms of the Baha'i Faith, and now I have decided to finally and clearly put an end to it all and move on with my life. I am not a Baha'i. I can no longer reconcile the beliefs, standards and positions of the Baha'i Faith with those that I have discovered for myself through my own personal "Independent Investigation of Truth." For a very long time now I have been desperately trying to find correlation between what has been set out in the Baha'i Faith and what is evident to myself. Every connection, interpretation, twisting of meaning, and coincidence I have used as some kind of personal "proof" to myself that what I believe and what I am is in accordance with the Baha'i Faith. I have now decided to no longer put the wool over my eyes and I am determined to call it as it is, this means accepting that the Faith has no real significance over any other religion or philosophy in my personal beliefs and standards.

The truth of the matter is that I am primarily an anarchist. It is the philosophy of Anarchism where my real dedication and commitment lies. I could not reconcile that the Baha'i Faith encourages patriotism and dedication to government where I seek the absolute abolition of all government. Nor could I reconcile it's dedication to hard work in the "work as worship" attitude when I see the work in our Capitalist economic system as primarily aiding an elite few, oppressing the majority of the people and destroying our natural environment. Most of all, Anarchism seeks the abolition of all forms of authority, political, economic, social and religious, while the Baha'i Faith is a religion based upon authority and which takes great pride in that it has relied upon authority to keep it together all this time. I do not see justice and humanity in relying upon guardians, masters, councils and assemblies while we all remain human beings who are more than capable of thinking, deciding, working and living for ourselves. A major component of what makes up the Baha'i Faith seems to be its administration. Right after the beliefs, principles and "central figures" are all explained to the Seekers, descriptions of "Baha'i Administration" are always given. I can never believe in administration or government. I can believe in self-administration and self-government, but I can never believe in a body of people appointed to do this.

Perhaps the biggest factor that has contributed to my leaving the Baha'i Faith is that I do not believe in God in the traditional sense. I am a Pantheist. I see "God" as being synonymous with ALL existence and ALL reality. I quite literally view "God" as being everything everywhere in every way. I do not centralize "God" into a single being, entity, force, essence, thing, spirit, person, or manifestation. I decentralize "God," and see it as being the totality of all that is. Therefore, there could be no "Creator" or thing that we must pray to, worship and pay homage to. There is only existence and reality itself and our own personal spiritual connections with it. After reading the famous anarchist Mikhail Bakunin's book "God and the State" a couple of times, I have come to agree with him that "if God really did exist, it would be necessary to abolish Him." That is, if a single centralized being, entity, force, etc. existed which demanded that we obey it and be subservient to it, then I would actively seek its destruction. As Bakunin pointed out, all authority is in itself inherently degrading and destructive to humanity and the higher the authority, the more degrading and destructive it is to humanity. The Baha'i Faith refers to "He who is the Most High" and places God way above us all. Likewise, Baha'u'llah has referred to humanity as being of significance which is "less than dirt." I simply can not follow such a religion. The Baha'i Faith is based on such a blatantly hierarchical foundation which puts humanity in such a very low position. God should not be "above" us nor should any Satan-like entity be "below" us. We need an equal footing and an equal mutual cooperation.

Another aspect of my beliefs, which is core to who I am, is Pacifism. I abhor any and all violence and find the Baha'i stand of looking down upon without totally condemning all war and violence as simply not being good enough. If one truly does want a peaceful, loving, unified humanity, absolutely no violence whatsoever would be tolerated. However, this is not the ONLY time where the divisive anti-unity attitude of the Baha'i Faith is apparent, the condemnation of homosexuals as being "spiritually diseased" and of Covenant Breakers merely for being Covenant Breakers goes directly against any semblance of "unity in diversity." Because of this, I have decided to follow the advice of Abdul-Baha himself when he said in Paris Talks: "If religion becomes a cause of dislike, hatred and division, it is better to be without it."

The Baha'i lifestyle is another thing which I can not accept. "Obligatory prayer," the required pilgrimage to Haifa, the money that must be paid by each individual to the Faith, the standards of dress, the standards of language and the laws of "chastity" and marriage (which happens to be another institution that I am opposed to) are all things that go directly against personal freedom, personal choice, natural instinct, diversity and creativity. Nobody should ever become the drone-slave that such a life-style inevitably entails.

I have been mentioning how anarchism is antagonistic to the Baha'i Faith, however, after reading and consulting the Baha'i sacred writings themselves, I have discovered that the Baha'i Faith is antagonistic to anarchism as well. Some examples that I have found are in the "Messages to America" by Shoghi Effendi on page 50, where he states that the Baha'i Faith and its Covenant are designed by God Himself to be "the sole refuge against anarchy." In "The Promised Day Is Come" by Shoghi Effendi on pages 6 and 7 he says that anarchism is conclusively disproved by the tenets of the Baha'i Faith and the conduct of its followers. He also says there that anarchism "unwittingly or maliciously injures the Cause." And in "Directives of the Guardian" by Shoghi Effendi on pages 53 - 54 he goes into a thorough attack of BOTH Pacifism and anarchism. Also within the Baha'i writings, Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha, Shoghi Effendi and the Universal House of Justice all denounce and attack "anarchy." However, when they use the term "anarchy" it is clearly usually synonymous with "chaos" and "disorder," which is the popular misconception and mis-usage of the term. The word "anarchy" really means a society that operates under the principles of anarchism; it comes from the original Greek meaning "No rulers." However, it is always emphatically stressed within the Baha'i Faith that each and every single word that is ever uttered or written by Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha, Shoghi Effendi and the Universal House of Justice is always very carefully thought out and chosen. If this is true, I would then assume that they would all know the true meaning of the word "anarchy" and would thereby have to conclude that the Baha'i Faith very frequently attacks and denounces that which is the core to what I am. If this is not true, then I have direct evidence of the ignorance and fallibility of these supposedly infallible God-sent people, as well as proof that the Baha'i Faith has lied to me.

The destruction of the faith and devotion of each individual Baha'i lies within its own teachings and principles. If one happens to take all of its principles at face value, the seed for the eventual demise of the Baha'i Faith is right there. I am referring to the "Independent Investigation of Truth." I have ALWAYS loved the "Independent Investigation of Truth." It has always been the most attractive thing to me about the Baha'i Faith. To me, it seemed to greatly set apart the Baha'i Faith from all of the world's other religions. However, if one really does follow this principle, if one always DOES question, if one is always looking, searching, investigating and THINKING, then one will always inevitably be led away from the Baha'i Faith. Because the truth is that there is a whole world out there outside of the Baha'i Faith, a whole world which has a great variety of answers and ideas to each and every single thing. When literally millions of other ways exist, the chances of the Baha'i Faith being right each and every time on even the majority of subjects is statistically improbable. Taking the Independent Investigation of Truth at face value and combining it with the reality of statistics can't help but have people wind up like me, finding value in other philosophies, ideas and possibilities. It is in precisely the same spirit as the "Independent Investigation of Truth" that I found solace in the open-mindedness of the philosophy of anarchism. Mikhail Bakunin did indeed say: "No theory, no book, no ready-made system will ever save the world. I cleave to no system. I am a true seeker."

However, the Faith is aware of this inherent flaw, and it has taken measures to counter it. This is why the "Independent Investigation of Truth" is used as nothing more than a ploy, as sugarcoating to get people into the Faith, and then it is abandoned as soon as they are confirmed believers. It was evident, at least in my experience, that once I was a confirmed Baha'i that the "Independent Investigation of Truth," which was so important to me, became overshadowed by things which made me totally uncomfortable, such as the Persian Hidden Words # 11 and a multitude of other demands for obedience, subservience, conformity, and submission. After one has declared, it is discovered that the "Most Holy Book" is also the "Book of Laws," and each and every petty detail of how to hand one's independent freethinking soul over to The Supreme Authority is then detailed. Explicit or implied rules, laws, commands, dictates are abundant EVERYWHERE within the Baha'i Faith. Everywhere you look, every page of the sacred texts, every prayer, every Hidden Word contains more and more and more of the things that we must do. I can not accept this, as Bakunin said: "Every command is a slap in the face of liberty."

In fact, the very term "seeker" is abandoned once one has become a Baha'i. It is implied that one is only "seeking" when one is not a Baha'i. I consider being a "seeker" a wonderful, beautiful, even "sacred," thing. I do not see it as just something to label "the uninitiated." I hold freethinking, open-mindedness and new creative ideas as some of the most beautiful and endearing qualities of humanity. I have discovered that the real meaning of the Baha'i term "Unity in Diversity" is not at all used like the anarchist term "Libertarian Socialism." "Unity in Diversity" is instead used to mean that the Baha'i Faith accepts all different races, ethnicities, nationalities, sexes and involuntary physical appearances. In other words, all the "diversity" that the Baha'i Faith accepts are things which one is born with, no room is left for diversity of thought, ideas and life-styles. As soon as one leaves their mother's womb, no further "diversity" is allowed. Anarchism to me represents the ideals of the French Revolution, "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity." The Baha'i Faith destroys liberty through its continued insistence on obedience to the many Laws, and God's Will. It destroys equality through its condemnation of homosexuals and Covenant Breakers, as well as the fact that only a select few can serve on the Administration at any given time. Also it destroys fraternity because every gathering of Baha'is has the higher ideal of The Faith as it's sub-text and under-lying theme, the goal is something above them, not they themselves. I admit, a good deal of fraternity exists within the Faith, this is partly why I have stayed with it for so long. This is partly why I joined the Faith to begin with as well, because I was so enamored and awed by the power of human closeness and fraternity which was expressed at the Louis Gregory Baha'i Institute in the summer of 1995. I had mistaken the Baha'i Faith for the power of fraternity itself. I have now discovered that it is the empowerment, invigoration and sense of belonging that such communal environments create within us that appealed to me.

The truth is this has indeed been a rough, agonizing and even painful decision for me to make. Words simply can not express to you how much emotion, time, energy, and thought has been put into this. I have read, investigated, communicated around the world, thought out, prayed and meditated, and the truth is now finally revealed to me. Now, it has all finally come down to this irrefutable fact: I can no longer reconcile my true beliefs with the Baha'i Faith. I can neither pretend to be a Baha'i when I am certain that I am not one nor can I live with the inner turmoil of trying to be both an anarchist and a Baha'i when the two are mutually antagonistic. I have to declare what my beliefs really are now. I have to break from the Baha'i Faith and I must now live my life without it. I ask of you now, please do not try to convince me otherwise; please do not argue with me. Please do not try to "heal/save my wayward soul." Please do not talk down to me. Please do not try to change my mind. Please do not try to obstruct my decision here. After a great and life-long journey, my personal decision has been made, and that is all there is to it. I am an anarchist. That is my true life's calling. As Alexander Berkman said: "Anarchism is the most beautiful thought that humanity has ever had." I will die for anarchism, but more importantly I will LIVE for anarchism.

I am enclosing my Baha'i membership card to return to you. It says it is your "property." Though I do not believe in property, I do not want it on my person any longer since, not only am I no longer a Baha'i, I neither believe in nor do I want myself interred according to the Baha'i standards of burial. Please, remove my name and Baha'i number from any and all records and registries that you have, thereby officially ending my association with and membership to the Baha'i Faith. I do not want to receive any mailings, publications or announcements from you any longer. However, I do request you to reply to this letter with a letter confirming I have been completely taken off the books.

The Baha'i Faith has indeed been a vital part in my life-long personal growth and development for me in innumerable ways. It has been with me from day one since I was born and raised in a Baha'i household, and it has definitely shaped who I am as a human being. The "Independent Investigation of Truth," the anti-racist, anti-sexist, anti-ethnicist, anti-nationalist and general anti-prejudice attitudes, the individual directly controlling their own spiritual health and well-being, and the belief that all of humanity should be loved and united are all aspects of the Faith that will stay with me forever. I do feel as if I have grown out of and beyond the reaches of the Baha'i Faith, but I will never forget the role it has played in the first twenty years of my life. I genuinely do thank you, and I wish you all the best.

Sincerely,

Ian Mayes

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Codi del Mundo <EnterEmailaddress@here.com>

Subject: Baha'is and marriage... have you ever had the experience of....?

Date: Tuesday, July 20, 1999 10:59 PM

I used to be a member of the Baha'i Faith, and though it has some very good points, it ultimately fails to pass the test of independent investigation. Baha'is usually seek an image as being very liberal and open-minded, to attract seekers no doubt. Once within the community however, you are very limited in terms of how you should feel about any aspect of life... it has to be the "Baha'i Way" or no way. In fact, you may find yourself in a ridiculous situation if you have unique family situations...

Are you adopted? Oh, too bad if you were wanting to get married.... Better hope you can track down your biological parents, or you will face a real nightmare, because you need their permission before you can marry if they are still living. If they, let's say, don't like "negroes" and you want to marry interracially, then despite the fact that they have never seen you before in their lives (because they dumped you at an orphanage) you are forbidden to marry, and face severe penalties if you do so anyways. Have you, or anyone you know, had an experience where you faced a four fold conflict with: the love of your life, a biological parent you've never met (or a hard-headed parent with prejudices against your love's race), the Baha'i religious administration, and your own conscience.

Thought I would also pass along these quotes posted here before on liberty from the Baha'i writings for your contemplation. Notice several type-os so you might want to verify them with the original sources. Pass along your personal stories.

David Fiorito and Jennifer Spotila wrote in message ...

>Here is the quote from Baha'u'llah - the Kitab-i-Aqdas:

>

>Consider the pettiness of men's minds. They ask for that which injureth >them, and cast away the thing that profiteth them. They are, indeed, of >those that are far astray. We find some men desiring liberty, and priding >themselves therein. Such men are in the depths of ignorance.

>

>123

>Liberty must, in the end, lead to sedition, whose flames none can quench.
>Thus warneth you He Who is the Reckoner, the All-Knowing. Know ye that the >embodiment of liberty and its symbol is the animal. That which beseemeth man

>is submission unto such restraints as will protect him from his own >ignorance, and guard him against the harm of the mischief-maker. Liberty >causeth man to overstep the bounds of propriety, and to infringe on the >dignity of his station. It debaseth him to the level of extrème >depravity and wickedness.

>

>124

>Regard men as a flock of sheep that need a shepherd for their protection.
>This, verily, is the truth, the certain truth. We approve of liberty in >certain circumstances, and refuse to sanction it in others. We, verily, are >the All-Knowing.

>

>125

>Say: True liberty consisteth in man's submission unto My commandments, >little as ye know it. Were men to observe that which We have sent down unto >them from the Heaven of Revelation, they would, of a certainty, attain unto >perfect liberty. Happy is the man that hath apprehended the Purpose of God >in whatever He hath revealed from the Heaven of His Will that pervadeth all >created things. Say: The liberty that profiteth you is to be found nowhere >except in complete servitude unto God, the Eternal Truth. Whoso hath tasted >of its sweetness will refuse to barter it for all the dominion of earth and >heaven.

>
>-- Bahá'u'lláh, The Kitab-i-Aqdas, p. 63-64
>
>
>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: "Fred Glaysher" <f_glaysher@hotmail.com>
To: <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Fwd: The Baha'i Faith
Date: Friday, September 08, 2000 6:13 AM

>From: "David W. Lehning" <dwlehning@home.com>
>To: <patrick_Henry@bigfoot.com>
>Subject: The Baha'i Faith
>Date: Tue, 05 Sep 2000 14:28:20 -0400
>
>
>Hello Patrick,
>
>I was looking at talk.religion.bahai and found your post. I then visited the >link that you had provided there. I am a former Baha'i who was more or less >driven out of the Faith by an increasingly authoritarian, manipulative, and >controlling administration. I am also gay, which makes the matter even >worse! It seems to me that these conditions have become worse since I have >left. I found my way to this news group after visiting a gay Baha'i's Web >site and then from a post in his message board. I am interested in spiritual >mysticism and the mystical aspects of sacred writings, but there was a time >quite a few years ago when I was even accused of being a Covenant Breaker >because of my "unauthorized interpretation" of the Sacred Baha'i Writings.
>I finally said enough, left the Faith, and really have no interest in >returning, but I had become curious about the status of gays in the Faith, >and, as I said, that led me here. It does seem that people in the Faith wear >many faces. They can turn their friendly "Nice loving Baha'i" face, then >later, turn a very angry, judgemental, authoritarian face. To me, the Baha'i >faith is no better than any of the other organized religions. They are just >as controlling, and prejudiced as everyone else. If you are still active in >the faith, you are a very brave soul. I desire to remain a free spirit, >seeker and mystic, unfettered by doctrines and religious authorities. But >for you, keep up the fight.

>
>Kind Regards,
>David W. Lehning

From: "Michel Boucher" <alsandorz@netcom.ca>
Subject: Re: Old Friends
Date: Tuesday, June 27, 2000 6:13 PM

bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA (Michael McKenny) a écrit dans <8japmh$an2$1@freenet9.carleton.ca>:

>Greetings.
>An old friend looked in here to find my e-mail address.

You said enough in our brief meeting the other day to indicate where I might "find" you.

>Ah, how time flows and memories stir in the breeze of the years. How >much has passed since you told me of this wondrous medium of >cyberspace.

Lemme see...that would have been around 1988, so twelve years :-)

>The USSR has ceased to be, and I in starry eyed >innocence walked into Talisman to read the provisional translations >of writings by Baha'u'llah not available elsewhere.
And this petit >gars from Ottawa became one of the articulate voices encouraging the >Baha'is to choose a way embracing the open-mindedness so >refreshingly a fundamental aspect of the teachings of their prophet.

Oooo...bad form...:-)

>I was one of them at the time, and you may enjoy reading some of >what the spirit of this faith wafted at that time. The archives of >this list contain copies of some of this material, and you may >assess, as may any independent seeker of truth, the value of the >thoughts of these people who were hounded until they said they >weren't Bahai's or, if they persisted in saying they were, were >declared to be unqualified for membership in this religion.

In the immortal words of Mr. Fromkiss (the landlord in Dick van Dyke's minor comedy The Art of Love, with Elke Sommer (1965)):

"My wife and I are a busy man".

>Personally, I became a Baha'i overwhelmed that God could be providing >for humanity to avoid the darkness of nuclear confrontation and >guiding the species to harmonious life. Yet, when they so >demonstrated, I accepted the evidence that those whose obligation it >was to further this goal of the maturity of the Terran species had >instead replicated the defects of previous totalitarian and divisive >systems.

I questioned my reasons for joining the community, but I never questioned my reasons for leaving. To me, the entire matter was an intellectual exercise (which I still remember fondly) but it never had a spiritual dimension. I believe that it was the community life (or what the Children of God called

"flirty fishy") that attracted so many, myself included.

I was not seeking spiritual salvation, nor was I depressed or unhappy. I saw a vast field of research that was still to be undertaken and I undertook it. I did my level best to get copies of every Baha'i book, I read everything, not as a personal message but as an event in time. When I left, in 1975, after the breakdown of my marriage (my first...I have since successfully remarried twice ;-)), it was because I felt dishonest. I lost some good friends at that time and kept some others, you included, I trust. Some people shunned me even on the street, some felt it was their duty to tell me I had made a mistake.

The thing is, I don't feel I made a mistake. My life in the last 25 years has been more productive and more fulfilling, both personally and socially, than it was during my stint as a Baha'i.

>I do not know whether it was ever humanly possible to achieve the >vision of Baha'u'llah, as we saw it in the old days, one vast >diverse garden of humanity, fostering the open-minded search for >truth, the harmony of reason and faith, the freedom of thought and >expression, the balance of the feminine and masculine wings of the >bird of the species -- ah, such golden dreams we had so long ago.

Yeah, well...the best laid plans o' mice and men gang aft a'gley...

>Anyway, if you wish, go ahunting for the thoughts of your old friend >and others such as Juan Cole from those halcyon days in the mid 90s.
>And, judge for yourself the quality of opinions decreed heretical >(in a religion whose author strove to overcome the concept of >heresy).

I must admit that I was most taken aback by the institutional fascism I have been reading about of late. I admit that I did occasionally lurk in these newsgroups, but never for very long. This phenomenon started after I left, I have to admit. I don't recall any of this when I went to firesides or feasts, or in personal dealings with assemblies or their members.

>I have spent a lot of time recently very deeply exploring the ways >of those who were not monotheists. Unlike Juan Cole and some others, >my opinion is that the inability of the UHJ to escape the contagion >of power regardless of principle exposes the incapacity of the >revealed monotheistic paradigm to provide for a mature human >species.

So far, history supports you. All monotheistic religions (and I suspect organized polytheistic religions as well) are subject to a deformation of the fundamental message. And it always tends towards the more drastic and eventually community-reducing actions: shunning, denial, inquisitions...

Speaking of denial, I have been most surprised by the ability of the Egyptian religion(s) to persist, although this may be as much a function of the almost complete illiteracy of the believers as in the messages that were brought by the gods (Stargate SG-1 fans back off! Get your own sandwich! ;-))

>There are many strengths in polytheism, and the chief need, >in my opinion, humanity has when it comes to religion, is the >separation of church and state with the state based on liberal >democracy.

In the Roman sense, religion is about binding people together who share a common belief. In the early days of Christianity, when Saul of Tarsus was not within earshot to chide and cajole, there was some chance of achieving local unity. But after the Council of Nicea, it was pretty well up to the cool dude in Rome to say what went.

Perhaps one of the most serious situations that the Baha'i Faith has faced and will continue to face is the fact that there is no Guardian. Without a Guardian (a divine institution), the House (another divine institution) is left without the balance it was intended to receive.

- >Humans are too prone to catch the disease of dictatorial
- >totalitarianism regardless of the particular source of their
- >theoretical and practical power to allow leaders a legitimacy
- >transcending liberal democracy, human rights, etc.

Not entirely. Some humans.

"Eating fries with cheese makes sense, mon eustsi."

Guy

To send private mail, get the zed out.
ICQ: 69205479 (take the five out)From:
<kimsrobinson@my-deja.com>
Subject: Ex-Bahais
Date: Saturday, July 01, 2000 7:45 AM

"I think many Bahai's, inadvertently, have been leaving their spiritual education 'indoors'."

"Bahaism works better as a philosophy than as a religion or theocratic political system, as a world-embracing attitude rather than as an absolutist, infallible institution."

"In ordinary times I'd struggle to visualize some examples of, have empathy with and have belief in the concepts of synergy and interdependence. Then, with a spell of some Bahai writings, these aspects would become concrete and seem attainable."

"Having gone through the process of inactive withdrawal I do know that it is only because of my significant Baha'i other, that I do have contact with any Baha'is. Not because I do not like them (I still do like many of the individual Baha'is I have known) but I feel like I am the human face of a reality that is being vigorously denied and ignored. I'm someone who said, albeit not with words, "I can't get healing or help from this community no matter how hard I try; I don't think the community is healthy; I don't want to become a teaching clone; I'm not staying for my own sake." "

Want to take part in the dialogue?
<https://clubs.yahoo.com/clubs/exbahais>

Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
Before you buy.From: "Mr Mahdi" <mrmahdi@aol.com>
Subject: Another bahai leaving the faith, was it because of Wendy?
Date: Saturday, April 22, 2000 8:25 PM

Wendy, one of the most notorious fanatical bahai missionary on the Internet has probably helped another bahai leave the Bahai cult. Her rude behavior has turned many people away from the bahai faith, and the town she lives in only has 16 bahais. Her is a post from a now ex-bahai that was posted in the AOL Message Boards:

Subject: My reasons for leaving the Baha'i Faith
Date: 4/22/00 6:52 PM Central Daylight Time
From: Wher888No
Message-id: <20000422195234.18303.00002868@ng-fz1.aol.com>

Today I have decided to leave the Baha'i Faith. I became a Baha'i in 1994 after searching for what I believed was a tolerant religion. I always believed in God and wanted to follow a religion that I believed truly represented God.

When I became a Baha'i, my fellow Baha'is were always nice to me and treated me with respect. I began to study more about the Baha'i Faith and felt it to be very true. I started to discuss my new religion with Christians, Buddhists, Muslims, atheists, etc. I wanted and often tried to prove how the Baha'i Faith fulfilled all the prophecies of all religions.

But some of the teachings of the Baha'i Faith kind of disturbed me. I felt that women should be allowed to participate in the UHJ and that gays should have more rights given to them by the Baha'i Faith. Later on I felt that trying to separate certain beliefs of religions from their creed wasn't always right because it made the non-Baha'is who followed their religion to be somewhat going against their religion. Other factors such as the shunning of Covenant Breakers made not a whole lot of sense to me.

Today was the day I decided to leave the Baha' Faith. I wanted to seek advice in the chat room when Wendy made me feel unwelcome. She told me to leave the Baha'i Faith. I felt hurt by her statements. I am not saying that Wendy was the main reason why I left the Baha'i Faith today, but she sure helped the process of me leaving because when I came in the chatroom, I had no plans of leaving the Baha'i Faith. I first met Wendy in the chatrooms 7 months ago and had a good relationship with each other, often we were trying to clear up the lies launched against the Baha'i Faith in the chatroom by enemies of the Faith. It is sad that she acted like this, and I hope that she and the rest of humanity have the best in life.

I would like to thank all the Baha'is who were so kind to me. They gave me comfort when I needed it and always showed me respect. I felt the Baha'i Faith has been a very positive experience in my life but I can no longer follow its teachings because of my personal beliefs. I forgive Wendy for her actions and hope that she continues her work in becoming the best Baha'i she can be.

May we all live in happiness

Denis

Mahdi

<https://hometown.aol.com/mrmahdi>

From: "Snoop81485"

<snoop81485@aol.comspamfree>

Subject: Re: Welcome to unmoderated NGs on BF (was: Roman Catholic ...)

Date: Sunday, December 17, 2000 11:11 AM

>While such a person >is a Baha'i, everything they see is simply not up to their Baha'i >standards and there is no point in them doing a thing about it but >rolling their eyes, wringing their hands and reciting "tsk" 95 times.

My own position as a former Baha'i - now Catholic - is that I got a similar response to whatever I proposed. Little or no honest consultation was held - just "this is the decision of the LSA and you'd better live with it."

There is a general feeling among Baha'is that if a decision is made after consultation - even if that decision is wrong - Baha'is had best accept it if they are members of the rank-and-file. This is highly offensive to those of us who take our American right to free speech seriously (I threw in the word "American" because I know a lot of you are citizens of other countries). We want the right to assert ourselves and not be forced to accept a decision we know to be wrong.

Robin Peters

My Themestream author's link, if you wish to read my articles:

<https://www.themestream.com/authors/73826.html>

One casualty - my wits, as in frightened out of.

Leonard McCoy, MD, ship's surgeon, USS Enterprise

Eliminate "spamfree" to email me

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: "François-Xavier MARTIN de LASSALLE" <tiriel@club-internet.fr>
Subject: Re: Happy Naw-Ruz
Date: Tuesday, March 20, 2001 4:40 PM

Allah'u'Aba !

When I meet Bahai'Faith, it was a great revelation for me. It was the first time I saw a religion who was tolerant, and in which I could feel perfectly well.

Baha'u'lah was a prophet who continued the mission of Zoroastre, Moises, Christ, Muhammad and his teaching was in this continuity. And it was great.

The new world order seems to me so magnificent, and the decisions of the House of Justice so clever.

But when I saw how was organised the learning, in way to bring in people, it looks like brain washing, like a secte... and so, i had to leave to keep my liberty of conscience.

I do regret this practice, and I hope that this way of teaching (as the Ruhi's method) will be abandonned ... and maybe i will join Baha'i Faith again.

Please, answer me to tell what do you think about my reaction.

Sincerely yours.

Tiriel.

pdodenhoff 6/28/01 1:01 PM 17 out of 23

Americakelsey wrote:

"Juan Cole has never been named a covenant-breaker, nor have the friends been forbidden to read his books or articles. He is an unenrolled Baha'i"

to which krahmet replied:

"Certainly Americankelsey you would still have to admit that J. Cole still is very intent on publicly rebuffing the entire Baha'i Administration. There is hardly a day on T9 that Mr. Cole doesn't attribute something devious to either the Universal House of Justice or someone in the AO. Certainly this agenda must play a critical factor in Mr. Coles's translations.

K"

America kelsey, you are correct that Baha'is have never explicitly been forbidden to read Juan Cole's books or articles. However, I can tell you that when I was a Baha'i and an Assistant for Protection, there was certainly a good deal of covert pressure on Baha'i's to not only not read Juan's material but to disparage his scholarship and his character. Indeed, at the time I was completing post-graduate work in American Religious History and it was told to me many times that as an academic I still had no responsibility to examine Professor Cole's work as he was "an enemy of the Faith." (In fact, it was in not a few conversations that he was freely referred to as a "Covenant Breaker" and frequently as someone with mental problems. And while certain AO members said that such things should not be said, they never went out of their way to put a stop to such nonsense. It was this continued attitude and policy of milieu control by various members of the NSA and the AO that caused me to question what could possibly be so bad about this guy! So, against all the so-called advice (which was really a demand) I began to read Juan's articles and his then newly released book. I also began to communicate privately with him to hear his side of the story.

Krahmet, what I found in Professor Cole was a person who, in my opinion, is far more interested in upholding the Baha'i covenant than in personal power and control. His translations of Baha'i texts, many of which were requested by the World Center* are without peer. This, and the continued policy of the NSA and the UHJ of trying to censor and control what Baha'i academics wrote and said led to my break with the Baha'i Faith.

Professor Cole's translations in no way reflect any attempt to undermine the Baha'i Faith, or the Baha'i AO. In fact, if you read them, you will discover, always, a sincere and I think successful attempt which is both accurate and devotional. If anything, Baha'is should be very thankful to him for his efforts.

But it appears, krahmet, that when light shines in a dark place, the Baha'i AO would rather ignore it or cover it up than be open and engage in real investigation of truth.

Yours,
Paul

Whiterabbit on BeliefNet.org
6/10/01 7:48 PM 39 out of 44

I wasn't going to say anything else on these boards, others seem to be saying anything I would say. I do call myself an ex-Baha'i, and proudly, what with letters like this coming from the House. I only have a couple of comments:

>>If he persists in his intention, the Assembly would normally accept the withdrawal unless there were grounds for suspecting that he is acting insincerely out of some ulterior motive, such as to violate a Baha'i law with impunity.<<

SO WHAT if somebody wants to "violate Baha'i law with impunity?" I mean, if they have withdrawn (and I, for one, withdrew in my heart before I sent any letters off), what right does the Assembly have for judging their motives? Certainly my former Assembly didn't come asking me why I really wanted out. I did give my reasons, to one member, prior to my withdrawal. If somebody is not a Baha'i, then what's the problem with them breaking Baha'i law?

I did my best to follow the Baha'i laws while I was a Baha'i. I wouldn't have quit just so that I could go out and break them. I don't think any sincere convert to any faith would do that unless they had joined with vastly distorted ideas of what they were converting to.

>>An analogous situation arises when a person when a person who is engaged in some activity which he suspects would result in his being declared a Covenant-breaker withdraws from the Faith under the impression that this step would prevent such an outcome.<<

So, then, by the House's definition, they're no longer Baha'is. What's the problem? They can do what they want!

>>The Universal House of Justice may conclude that the withdrawal provides adequate protection of the community from the person in question.<<

Surely the Baha'i community isn't so weak that it needs "protection" from ex-members. I mean, if faith can't stand up to challenges, what's the point of faith?

>>However, if he persists, following his withdrawal, in trying to undermine the Covenant or joins forces with Covenant-breakers, he may be judged to have broken the Covenant, and the friends would be told to have no association with him. Each such case would be considered in the context of its specific circumstances.<<

Aha! So somebody who is officially not a Baha'i can STILL be called a Covenant-breaker and should be shunned? This is a truly frightening idea. Even if they still consider themselves Baha'is, if they aren't registered with the Haifan administration, how can that administration decide that they are breaking rules that shouldn't apply to people who aren't on those rolls? And what if they don't believe at all, how can they then be accused of breaking a Covenant that they don't believe in?

This is so far from the Faith that I thought I'd joined several years ago...I am so glad I got out when I did.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

False Statistics for Baha'i Membership in the USA, India, & Elsewhere (updated August 2010)

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/FalseStats.htm>

NOTE WELL: I state at the bottom of this page that "Recent claims of 140,000 in 2004 are certainly highly exaggerated."

"During my time as a Baha'i, I saw potential converts lied to by Baha'is regarding the membership of the Faith. The Baha'is, especially the Baha'i leadership, have always grossly inflated the 'official' numbers in order to present an inaccurate picture to the world (as well as to individuals considering conversion) and to make the Faith seem much more successful and influential than it really is. " --Scott

(The special case of India is discussed throughout and at the end. See former India NSA member Ravi Kumar for his disclosures on the official census figures and actual membership statistics in India.) On India and Russia, elsewhere, see BAHA'I CENSUS "They claim to be a 2.2 million strong community in India alone, which is absolute exaggeration of numbers."

BANK FRAUD - Re: Baha'i technique of loan application (using false, inflated statistics to qualify for loans)

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/BANK%20FRAUD.htm>

Baha'i Faith "Fraud Shop" Israeli concerns about the source of funding

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Bahais_in_My_Backyard_Fraud_Shop.html

Professor Juan Cole of the University of Michigan commented in April 2001 that, since 1968, 50% of the people who entered the bahai faith have left it. According to him, the usual figure for most Christian denominations is approximately 80% retention, meaning about only 20% decide to leave once they become a member. See Professor Cole's comment below that even 5 million Baha'is worldwide is exaggerated by the Baha'i administration.

50% is truly a remarkably high number and reveals emphatically that something is indeed wrong about the atmosphere within the bahai faith. Often the new adherent quickly comes to realize something is wrong behind the facade of love and brotherhood.

The FULL TEXT of the New Mexico lawsuit reveals what many of the problems are that are driving sensitive and thoughtful people out of the bahai faith in droves.

Juan Cole has also stated that according to the official census figures of India there are approximately only 5,000 bahais that they were able to find in the country compare with the millions claimed by the bahai administration, a fact worth lingering on....

Upon further reflection, a better estimate might be arrived at for true Baha'i world membership statistics than 6.7 million by extrapolating what is generally accepted regarding USA Bahai membership. The Bahai administration regularly claims 140,000 US Bahais. Having never seen such large numbers of US Bahais, most thoughtful Bahais prefer the figure of 60,000 US Bahais based on the widely known existence of actual mailing addresses for that number, many of whom though never participate in Bahai activities, being regarded as "inactive." If we subtract the "inactive" Bahais from the 60,000, we have the figure of approximately only 25,000 Bahais who show up regularly in the United States. Taking these two widely held figures, I calculate 43% and 19% of the 140,000 claimed by the Bahai administration:

140,000 X 43 % = 60,200 addresses for "Bahais" in US
140,000 X 19% = 26,600 "active" US Bahais

Applying that formula to the similarly inflated figure of worldwide Bahai membership of 6.7 million, I believe the true worldwide membership numbers to be close to the following:

6.7 million X 43% = 2,881,000 known "addresses" worldwide
6.7 million X 19% = 1,273,000 "active" Bahais worldwide

Rounding up, giving the benefit of the doubt, and there are probably only a maximum of 3 million Bahais at best worldwide, especially since there are essentially no Bahais in Europe beyond a negligible few hundred to a thousand in most countries, as in Japan. Many Bahais have for decades been suspicious of the administration's claims of millions in the developing world.

Hope this helps the Encyclopedia Britannica in its effort to ascertain a reliable figure.

I should like to add two points:

1) A number of Bahais or ex-Bahais who worked at the NSA of the United States have stated online over the past years that they knew for a fact that only about 60,000 addresses existed for American Bahais--all other snail mail would bounce.... Hence, the 60,000 figure.

2) TENS of THOUSANDS of people have entered the Bahai faith and then left, or been driven out, often without caring enough to bother with officially "withdrawing." It would appear approximately 80,000 of them....

Both facts should be considered by the Encyclopedia of Britannica when attempting to determine worldwide membership and probably both corroborate further my estimates based on 43% and 19% according to known discrepancies in the United States enrollment figures.

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Juan,

Thanks for contacting the Encyclopedia Britannica.

I myself doubt 5 million Bahais exist. The statistics for India and other countries of the developing world are certainly inflated and they usually have only the vaguest idea of what they're doing when they sign a Bahai card, never or seldom to show up again for any Bahai activity. 3 to 4 million would still be too many.

Anything below 6.7 million, though, is headed in the right direction. Obviously, the Bahai institutions are unreliable.

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

FYI:

Thanks, Fred. I wrote them that even 5 million is an exaggeration.

cheers JRIC

[Juan Cole]

FYI

mdiller@us.britannica.com <mdiller@us.britannica.com>:

Hello.

Your comment has been bouncing around our email network, from editors to World Data authorities, and the resolution is that we would like to revise our figures for Baha'i membership worldwide provided we can come across hard statistical data to go by. Given that our current figures are based on the best available statistics currently at our disposal, however, we will not be able to make such a change unless you can point us in the direction of publications that indicate exaggerated membership totals in the areas you mention. Do you know of such a reference source that we could consult?

Sincerely,

Mark Diller, Ph.D.
Online Editor, Religion
Britannica.com, Inc.

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Trumbull, Charles

> Sent: Tuesday, January 11, 2000 8:54 AM

> To: Sturgis, Joseph; Diller, Mark

> Subject: RE: False Bahai membership statistics on Encyclopedia > Britannica

>

> Our figure this year for total Bahais worldwide is about 6.9 million. I'm > sure the authors of the table would be interested in any hard statistics > any of these readers may have that indicate our figures are too high.

>

> Charlie

>

>

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Sturgis, Joseph

> Sent: Tuesday, January 11, 2000 7:02 AM

> To: Trumbull, Charles

> Subject: FW: False Bahai membership statistics on > Encyclopedia Britannica

>

>

>

> -----Original Message-----

> From: Diller, Mark

> Sent: Monday, January 10, 2000 08:31 AM

> To: Sturgis, Joseph

> Subject: FW: False Bahai membership statistics on > Encyclopedia Britannica

>

>

>

>

>

> RE: World Religions Table. Joe Sturgis

>
> -----Original Message-----
> From: Himick, Michael > Sent: Sunday, January 09, 2000 4:34 PM
> To: Diller, Mark
> Subject: FW: False Bahai membership statistics on > Encyclopedia
> Britannica

FYI

A response from the Encyclopedia of Britannica:

Dear Mr. Glaysher,

Thank you for your feedback regarding the Britannica.com site. We value and appreciate all comments from our visitors. Your suggestions have been forwarded to the appropriate department.

Thank you again for contacting Britannica.com.

Sincerely,
Jin
Britannica.com Customer Service www.britannica.com

-----Original Message-----
From: FG
Sent: Monday, January 03, 2000 5:33 AM
To: editorial-comments@us.britannica.com
Subject: False Bahai membership statistics on Encyclopedia Britannica

Actually the Encyclopedia Britannica figure (6 million) is misleading. There has been a discussion on numerous Baha'i lists for some years about the actual number of "active Baha'is" in the world and the number is closer to 1 million than 6+ million. The numbers claimed for the global south, for example, in such places as India, Africa as well as Latin America are often exaggerated.

cheers,
Nima

In article <84l8ip$67f$1@nnrp1.deja.com>,
patrick_henry@bigfoot.com wrote regard Washington Post article:
> <https://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-srv/WPlate/2000-01/01/136l-010100-idx.html>
>
>

> "Bahai's 6,764,000"

>

Patrick Henry <patrick_Henry@bigfoot.com> wrote in message news:s7123gsg5k2185@corp.supernews.com...

> I've emailed the Encyclopedia Britannica regarding these > false Bahai membership statistics.

>

[The Washington Post took as accurate the inflated figure of Bahai membership and reported it in its paper:]

> > In article <84l8ip$67f$1@nnrp1.deja.com>,

> > patrick_henry@bigfoot.com wrote:

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-srv/WPlate/2000-01/01/136l-010100-idx.html>

"Bahai's 6,764,000"

Juan Cole, in the following articles, places Bahai membership in the USA at 60,000, a figure that, in my opinion, is still too high:

"Race, Immorality and Money in the American Baha'i Community" Religion 30, 2 (2000)

It is difficult to assess how reliable the numbers are below. Recent claims of 140,000 in 2004 are certainly highly exaggerated.

Baha'i Population Statistics

Document issued to Delegates to the annual National Spiritual Assembly Elections, April 1979

Membership Statistics of the U.S. Baha'i Community:

Category	Number
1. April 15, 1978
In possession of Administrative Rights:	70, 248

Without Administrative Rights:	1,850
Total:	71,899
Gains as of 15 April 1979:
New Enrollments:	5, 417
Transfers-in - Pioneers	118
Transfers-in - Non-Pioneers:	1, 832
Reinstatements from Withdrawals:	37
Administrative Corrections:	29
Total:	7, 433
Losses as of 15 April 1979:
Deaths:	612
Transfers Out - Non-Pioneers:	394
Transfers Out - Pioneers:	153
Withdrawals:	633
Administrative Corrections:	119
Prisoners:	15
Mental Patients/Institutionalized:	10
Total:	1,936
2. Total Baha'is as of 15 April 1979:
Total Baha'i Membership as of 15 April 1979:	77,396
In Possession of Administrative Rights:	75,448
Without Administrative Rights:	1,948
Total Membership:	77,396
The Total membership of Baha'is in possession of their administrative rights is categorized as follows:
Category	Adults	Youth	Total
Total Baha'is with Known Addresses:	45,389	2,968	48,357
Baha'is CategorIzed as "Address Unknown:"	14,525	241	14,766
Mail Returns and Unidentifiable Other than Address Unknown	11,941	384	12,325
Totals as of 15 April 1979	71,755	3,593	75,448
144 youth reached the age of 21 years during the reporting period of 16 March 1979 to April 1979.

Original at <https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/docs/vol2/usstats1.htm>

India

The Baha'i administration for many years claimed two million members in India and has lately it seems quietly revised it down to about one million. Many people have always realized enrollment there was much lower. Here is a recent email I've received on the subject of Baha'is in India which is probably pretty close to the mark:

----- Original Message -----

From: [deleted]

Sent: Tuesday, June 14, 2005 9:16 PM

Subject: [bahai] Interesting Reading

Dear Friend,

.... Sadly, the emphasis today is on attending courses and increasing numbers.

In India there were 2 million declarations recorded some years ago! However there are not even 5000 "active" members....

Warm regards,
[deleted]

Other views and approaches regarding Baha'i membership statistics:

From: avicenna9012...@yahoo.com

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

Subject: Baha'i Census is a big LIE with wildly exaggerated number of adherents and localities

Date: 5 Aug 2005 08:00:11 -0700

<https://groups.google.com.au/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/f5df9dd0a518d1f0?dmode=source&hl=en>

The Baha'i census that claim 6 to 7.2 million adherents is -A LIE- A LIE- an actual exaggeration of the real numbers.

It is estimated that there are no more than *ONE Million real Baha'is worldwide.

Now below one finds wildly exaggerated number of localities- on the lower end we see 18,000 localities and then on the upper end we see 124000 localities. Then there are statements of 100,000 and 110,000 localities.

Finally the number of countries and localities varies with each web site. There is no concensus regarding the actual number of countries, the actual number of localities, and the actual number of Baha'i followers.

If one takes the estimated 100000 localities and figures that there are at least 5-9 Baha'is. We find that the census is going to show 500,000 to 900,000 Baha'i adherents worldwide.

That should make anyone who is a Baha'i very depressed. Not 6 million, not 5 million, but a little less than 1 million Baha'is worldwide- with 30% still in Iran and 6-7% in the US.

Henry Villar

<https://groups.google.com.au/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/f5df9dd0a518d1f0?dmode=source&hl=en>

[It's highly doubtful that the 30% or 300,000 claimed to be in Iran actually exist.]

SEE ALSO:

BANK FRAUD - Re: Baha'i technique of loan application (using false, inflated statistics to qualify for loans)

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/BANK%20FRAUD.htm>

----- Original Message -----

From: "diamondsouled" <>

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai,soc.culture.iranian,alt.religion.bahai,alt.religion.islam

Sent: Tuesday, September 26, 2006 1:55 PM

Subject: Re: The Rise of Bahá'í: A Protestant Islam

....Of the 3 million supposed Baha'is in India the greater majority are from the 'untouchable' caste.

The primary motive for such individuals to convert to Buddhism, Islam or Baha'i is in an attempt to escape the prejudice of the caste system.

I suggest you look into the Dalit movement in India for a better understanding.

As William Garlington stated from his personal on the ground experience in India Baha'i converts in India are only required to declare: " their belief in Baha'u'llah as an avatar". Thing is Warren Hindus also believe that Buddha was an avatar but this doesn't make them Buddhists. The Baha'i claim of some 3 million Baha'is in India is most obviously bogus.

Something else you should ask yourself Warren is on whose authority was Shoghi Effendi's stated requirement for membership in the Baha'i faith (the one used on declaration cards in North America), waived?

The number of "address unknown" people who are claimed as members of the Baha'i faith in North America is high. From my personal experience the NSA's are always scrambling to keep 9 members in many communities so they can pad the LSA numbers. After they get their numbers the people who were sent in to 'pioneer' to the area often go home or to another community so they can have an 'active' LSA. This practice is well known and has been going on for many years.

Why the need to send people around to keep LSA membership up to nine if the Baha'i faith is actually growing?

Truth is Warren that as Baha'is pass away they are not being replaced. Not even many children of Baha'is are signing up? Why, because it has become apparent to many people that the Baha'i faith is the same old, same old; that the Baha'i faith is in fact indistinguishable from past organised religions - more of a cause of disunity in the world than a cause of unity.

I refer to facts and you resort to name calling, such is the way of many Baha'is.

Yours

Larry

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

FAQ - Frequently Asked Questions for Alt.Religion.Bahai, Talk.Religion.Bahai

This FAQ will be reposted approximately every four weeks.

See also <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/FAQ2.htm>

Free reading and posting, including the largest Usenet archive:
<https://groups.google.com/groups?hl=en&group=talk.religion.bahai>

Alt.religion.bahai and talk.religion.bahai are available on America Online (AOL) Keyword, Newsgroups, then search for alt.religion.bahai or talk.religion.bahai An unmoderated Italian Bahai newgroup is now available: it.cultura.religioni.bahai

If your ISP does not offer talk.religion.bahai, follow this news.groupie advice: "If your ISP doesn't have the group shortly, I suggest that you ask the newsmaster there to add it (Try news@isp.net, or newsmaster@isp.net) Ask politely. Include the msg ID of the results posting, and of the newgroup msg."

See 1st RESULTS Archived at <https://www.faqs.org/usenet/news.announce.newgroups/talk/talk.religion.bahai>

Dave Cornejo's RESULT posting:
<https://x3.dejanews.com/getdoc.xp?AN=431106082&CONTEXT=918305125.781648012&hitnum=0>

David Lawrence's newgroup msg creating talk.religion.bahai:
<https://x3.dejanews.com/getdoc.xp?AN=434026333&CONTEXT=918304600.713490686&hitnum=3>

NOTE: Not all people agree on the interpretations given below.
Question #1 "Why create arb or t.r.b.?"

ANSWER #1: Because many people believe they experienced or are continuing to experience censorship when attempting to post to soc.religion.bahai. See the quotations from Abdul-Baha:
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

ANSWER #2: Because the Bahai writings support free speech and religious conscience.
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

ANSWER #3: [fill in the blank according to your own opinion.]

Question #2: "Why do the srb moderators oppose trb?"

ANSWER: Perhaps they'll supply an answer to place here.
(Three years later their NO votes are their only answer.)
Question #3: "Are Bahais opposed to freedom of speech and conscience?"

ANSWER: Despite glowing words of love and support for other people's opinions, despite the Universal House of Justice stating at least publicly it is not opposed to an unmoderated forum, the record of actual behavior by Bahais and on soc.religion.bahai and the experience of TENS of THOUSANDS of Bahais and people who have left the Bahai Faith give serious reason for concern.

Chronology of major events: talk.religion.bahai & alt.religion.bahai

January 17, 1997: The 1st proposal for talk.religion.bahai was submitted to news.announce.newgroups.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/1stRFD.htm>

Early March 1997: Mark Towfiq, chairman of the BCCA, the Bahai Computer and Communication Association, posts to three Bahai-only mailing lists a call for Bahais to vote NO against talk.religion.bahai.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Towfiq.htm>

March 1997: soc.religion.bahai bans all discussion of talk.religion.bahai from its newsgroup. This ban is still in effect more than a year and a half later.

March 31, 1997: The 1st proposal was defeated 157 YES to 691 NO.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/1stRESULT.htm>

April 3, 1997: Jonathan Grobe, a non-Bahai, creates alt.religion.bahai.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/arb.htm>

October 14, 1997: The Universal House of Justice releases a message stating it has no objection to unmoderated newsgroups:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/UHJ1.htm>

November 1997: At a time when discussion was highly favorable in support of talk.religion.bahai, the BCCA deprives FG of access to the private Bahai-only mailing list bahai-discuss and all of its other lists, inflaming Bahai passions against trb. See bahai-discuss archived files and correspondence between FG and the BCCA committee:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/archive.htm>

December 19, 1997: The Universal House of Justice releases a message that suggests it does not understand the nature of Usenet interest polling:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/UHJ2.htm>

January 12, 1998: The 2nd proposal for talk.religion.bahai was submitted.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/2ndRFD.htm>

February 22, 1998: The 2nd proposal was defeated 109 YES to 65 NO.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/2ndRESULT.htm>

May 25, 1998: srb bans all messages from FG that contain his signature file:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/srb23.htm>

September 9, 1998: America Online (AOL) places a Bahai-inspired TOS against FG; AOL removes the TOS after considering both sides of the issue, i.e., Bahai messages attacking and threatening him and the experience of others:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/AOL.htm>

September 14, 1998: soc.religion.bahai extends its ban on FG's signature file to include all signature files and URLs from all posters, allowing only email addresses and the name of the poster:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/srbban.htm>

October 14, 1998: Soc.religion.bahai moderator Bill Hyman backbites and casts aspersions on proponent Ron House and attempts to undermine the new support for the "neutral" RFD:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/srb67.htm>

December 3, 1998: The Call For Votes (CFV) was posted to news.announce.newgroups and news.groups for the 3rd interest poll for talk.religion.bahai.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/3rdRFD.htm>

December 7, 1998: Bahai scholar Susan Maneck begins her NO vote campaign on AOL and alt.religion.bahai.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck1.htm>

January 10, 1999:

Talk.religion.bahai passes 218: 63.

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/3rdRESULT.htm>

It should be noted that talk.religion.bahai eventually passed despite of the opposition of Bahais. The annotated RESULT may be read at

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/3rdRESULT.htm>

The annotated NO voters list may be read at

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/NOvoters3rd.htm>

For past discussion of censorship on soc.religion.bahai and other issues, including censorship within the Bahai community, see the website The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Professor Juan R. I. Cole, University of Michigan, "Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community," Religious Studies Review, Vol. 43, no. 3 (March, 2002):195-217:
<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2002/fundbhfn.htm>

Karen Bacquet, "Enemies Within: Conflict and Control in the Baha'i Community." Published in American Family Foundation's Cultic Studies Journal, Volume 18, pp.109-140:

<https://www.angelfire.com/ca3/bigquestions/enemies.html>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

REVISED : FAQ - talk.religion.bahai & alt.religion.bahai - Usenet - FAQ

Newcomers may confirm that I am the founding proponent for the formation of talk.religion.bahai by reading in the Usenet archive the REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION (RFD)

<https://www.faq5.org/usenet/news.announce.newgroups/talk/talk.religion.bahai>

<https://www.faq5.org/ftp/usenet/news.announce.newgroups/talk/talk.religion.bahai>

Talk.Religion.Bahai > MENU - Passed Jan 10 1999 - All Related Documents

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/trbmenu.htm>

During the last few years since the formation of talk.religion.bahai in 1999, numerous fundamentalist posters have slandered, libeled, and maligned anyone on talk.religion.bahai who does not share their fundamentalist views of the Baha'i Faith. Such people have a very long record of harassing people on AOL, talk.religion.bahai, talisman9, BeliefNet, and other Internet discussion groups, which even a glance at the links below will confirm.

The situation has become intolerable and we are reclaiming the electronic territory from them by exposing what they have done to others, as attested to by roughly a DOZEN people regarding their incessant lying, bullying, abuse, and deceit:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck8.htm>

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hate16.htm>

It is understandable that they would seek to misrepresent their treachery and further malign and SLANDER anyone opposed to their medieval tactics.

Given the issues of religious freedom and conscience involved, which are VERY complicated within the Baha'i Faith, I urge newcomers to decide for themselves by skimming or reading some of the material at the links below: Other useful material may be accessed through The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

FG

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

--

Shunning > Menu

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Shunning.htm>

Compare "The Bahai Technique" - Slander & Shunning

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

Susan Maneck, Baha'i scholar

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck8.htm>

talisman9 "moderator" Steve Marshall - "babytorturer"

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hate16.htm>

--

Why I Don't Respond to Fundamentalists

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Why1.htm>

REQUEST FOR DISCUSSION (RFD)

RESULT

unmoderated group talk.religion.bahai passes 218:63

<https://www.faqsg.org/usenet/news.announce.newgroups/talk/talk.religion.bahai>

RATIONALE: talk.religion.bahai

The newsgroup talk.religion.bahai is proposed to meet the need for an open and unmoderated forum for discussion of the Baha'i Faith within the structure of the Big 8 hierarchies.

The proponents intend that talk.religion.bahai will complement, rather than supplant, the existing moderated group soc.religion.bahai, and will provide those without access to alt.religion.bahai the opportunity to participate. It is noted that the alt.* hierarchy is less well propagated than the talk.* hierarchy; this has meant that many people who have voted YES on earlier proposals have been unable to join discussions on alt.religion.bahai.

CHARTER: talk.religion.bahai

All topics or ideas relevant to the Baha'i faith -- its history, teachings, theology, etc. -- would be appropriate areas for discussion.

Talk.religion.bahai fills the need for a fully open and universally accessible Internet forum about the Baha'i Faith. Postings may take any point of view with regard to the Baha'i Faith. While this allows criticism, it also fully opens the door for enquirers to see with their own eyes and not through the eyes of their neighbors, asking questions and reading replies from anyone who is interested in their question.

Readers are asked to observe standard netiquette in their use of this newsgroup.

Readers are asked to observe Baha'i standards of conduct and not to start or prolong flamewars in the group, but to focus instead on articles and threads written in more moderate terms.

The posting of articles not relevant to the Baha'i Faith is prohibited. Large ASCII graphics, large binaries, pornography, spam, and any postings of a purely personal or commercial nature are prohibited. To facilitate viewing in news readers that are not HTML-capable, HTML-formatted postings are strongly discouraged.

Cross-posting to irrelevant groups is also discouraged, and readers are encouraged to redirect follow-ups to reduce excessive cross-posting. Readers may also post articles that have been rejected >from soc.religion.bahai, so long as they conform to this charter.

END CHARTER.

An older, historical FAQ may be found at FAQ - Frequently Asked Questions for arb, trb
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/FAQ.htm>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

November 17, 2005

Farewell Friends,

A number of changes have taken place in my life during the last several months that necessitate I forgo my continuing defense of Abdul-Baha's respect for free speech and conscience, at least as an active online participant on talk.religion.bahai, BeliefNet, talisman9, and elsewhere. Since many might well imagine the rumors and libel that would circulate, should I just disappear from cyberspace, I feel it necessary to post this farewell note.

Having witnessed and suffered Baha'i tyranny and slander, on and offline since 1996, I little expect it to diminish with my withdrawal to literary pursuits and other responsibilities. However, I leave heartened by the knowledge that so many thousands of people now know the truth about the fundamentalists among my fellow bahais and their many shameful acts of tyranny, oppression, disinformation, and injustice. Equally encouraging are the many voices of conscience, throughout bahai cyberspace, that have arisen to champion the sanctity of the individual soul.

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience will remain online for those who find it a useful resource and archive. Should any major document or incident take place or come to light, I would be happy to make it available and preserve it for the benefit of my fellow bahais, who follow Abdul-Baha's clear and unequivocal Teaching, and for my fellow citizens, lest they be further deceived with impunity.

Those who have stood and fought for the rights of the individual, in the face of a corrupted administration, have my undying respect.

May God grant you the inner strength and resources to carry on for the sake of what is human and eternal....

I may be reached at the email address via the Contact link on my homepage.

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Interested persons and newcomers may glean my personal story from

To the Universal House of Justice - March 31, 1997
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/To-UHJ1.htm>

"Please remove my name and address from your mailing list."
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/nsa1996.htm>

Why I Don't Respond to Fundamentalists among my Fellow Baha'is
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Why1.htm>

Letters from the American Desert: 1989 - 1994
<https://fglaysher.com/LettersAmD1989-1994.htm>

Signposts of a Journey 10/29/2004

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

"Foul deeds will rise, Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes." —Hamlet

Ruhiyyih Khanum: "How to assume the reins of authority, with no document to support us, other than the general theological statements about the Hands?"

(Ministry of the Custodians, p. 9)

"More detrimental still to religious understanding has been theological presumption. A persistent feature of religion's sectarian past has been the dominant role played by clergy. In the absence of scriptural texts that established unarguable institutional authority, clerical elites succeeded in arrogating to themselves exclusive control over interpretation of the Divine intent. However diverse the motives, the tragic effects have been to impede the current of inspiration, discourage independent intellectual activity, focus attention on the minutiae of rituals and too often engender hatred and prejudice towards those following a different sectarian path from that of self-appointed spiritual leaders. While nothing could prevent the creative power of Divine intervention from continuing its work of progressively raising consciousness, the scope of what could be achieved, in any age, became increasingly limited by such artificially contrived obstacles."

(Commissioned by The Universal House of Justice, One Common Faith)

See Ruth White for further details

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Fran Baker

Re: Anatomy of a lie 1/12/99

Re: Spiritual civilization 8/27/98

re Answers to Robert's Questions 8/26/98

Re: Free investigation vs. threats 8/19/98

Re: fw Timothy Mulligan Re: Why I left 8/13/98

"holy" deluded 8/21/98

Re: Baha'i & Scientology 8/10/98

Re: Baha'i & Scientology 8/10/98

Re: Baha'i & Scientology 8/7/98

Re: fw Ron House Rejected by the Moderator:

soc.religion.bahai 8/3/98

More often than not... 7/30/98

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>
Subject: re Answers to Robert's Questions
Date: Wednesday, August 26, 1998 5:32 PM

Robert,

Wow. I am impressed with your response. Much food for thought there! You are quite idealistic about the process by which religions establish themselves. Yes, religious inspiration has been an extremely important force in civilization, but that doesn't mean that Baha'i theology is true.

I would like to address specifically your view of the Baha'i Faith's role in this great historical progression (assuming for the moment, for the sake of argument, that it exists). I know that the Baha'i stance on racism is excellent, as is its support of sustainable economic development. But, on the whole, I shudder to think of the Baha'i social rules being the foundation of a global civilization. The Baha'i views on homosexuality and intellectual freedom are pretty clearly not steps forward for humanity, no matter how the apologists dance around them. There is also a disturbing amount of ambivalence toward women and other religions, not to mention contempt for unaffiliated inspiration and wisdom. The reverential focus on an individual (no matter how inspired) and his (gerrymandered and male-dominated) "holy" family is also backward. Add to that capital punishment, no separation or balance of powers (if the Baha'i administrative order is the model), an underclass of pariahs (CBs), and at the top, infallible theocrats. I don't think this contribution is on the level of those of the preceding religions that the Faith claims to be on a par with.

The evidence that what Baha'u'llah's words constitute an epoch-making divine message to humanity (even if you accept that there are such things) is unconvincing to most people, and probably always will be. There is too much dirty laundry, too many medieval notions, and too much "bad fruit" among the faithful for this to be the next great push for humanity (not that it couldn't use one!).

Thank you for your eloquent and thought-provoking response.

--Fran

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>
Subject: Re: Spiritual civilization
Date: Thursday, August 27, 1998 11:44 AM

"Barry Gerstner" <gerstner@bart.nl> writes:

>Hi Fran,

>I hope you don't mind if I put in my two cents in this conversation.

Please do.

> "A race of men," is Baha'u'llah's written promise, "incomparable in >character, shall be raised up which, with the feet of detachment, will >tread under all who are in heaven and on earth, and will cast the >sleeve of holiness over all that hath been created from water and >clay."
> (The Advent of Divine Justice, Page: 31)

Sorry, but Hitler also said things like this. No, I don't mean that Baha'u'llah was evil like Hitler, I just mean such "fine words" can hide a vision that is not necessarily good for humanity.

>>>There is too much dirty laundry, too many medieval notions, >>and too much "bad fruit" among the faithful for this to be >>the next great push for humanity (not that it couldn't use one!).

>I can well imagine where you get these ideas -- from reading >alt.religion.bahai.

This is not the case. My impressions were well formed before ARB even existed. Mainly they came from attending Baha'i events open to the public, participating in SRB and other (rather high level)
Baha'i forums, observing the behavior of my community's LSAs, reading Baha'i literature, reading the American Baha'i and Baha'i youth-oriented publications, etc. I might add that I know several extraordinarily admirable Baha'is, not the least of whom is my father-in-law, Dr. William Baker of Bolivia, son of Dorothy Baker, and the whole Baker family actually, of which I am proud to be a member. I originally regarded this religion as a benign, ecumenical movement; I now see it as, for the most part, a largely fundamentalist movement like born-again Christianity with a different Jesus or Hasidic Judaism with a different Rebbe.

Maybe something like a TRB forum will open it up and it will become more spiritual and tolerant, less arrogant (less "teaching") and less paranoid (less focus on CBs and censorship), less materialistic (less relentless fundraising).

As Owen Fiss (of Yale Law School) points out in "The Irony of Free Speech," there is libertarian freedom (wherein he who screams the loudest drowns out the other) and democratic freedom (wherein a full and balanced range of expression is maintained). The latter is what moderators are supposed to achieve, but often do not because they are not committed to freedom at all. Something in between SRB and ARB/TRB would be the best in my view, but alas, that isn't an option. This is a balance we each have to achieve for ourselves by selecting from the libertarian clamor, as Roger has wisely suggested.

--Fran

>Warmest regards,

>Suzanne Gerstner

>The Hague, The Netherlands

>"Where there's love nothing is too much trouble, >and there's always time." -- 'Abdul-Baha

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>

Subject: Re: Anatomy of a lie

Date: Tuesday, January 12, 1999 3:38 PM

I think part of the problem is that some of the people involved in this discussion do not understand what it is NOT TO PROSELYTIZE. I am Jewish and it is very deeply ingrained in me that it is presumptuous, rude, and inappropriate to try in any way to persuade someone to change their religion. (You can convert to Judaism, but it is not easy.) Yes, there are some exceptions, e.g., some orthodox Jews try to persuade secular Jews to return to being observant, but these are noteworthy as exceptions. When I heard that Baha'is didn't proselytize, I assumed this meant that they made no efforts to obtain conversions, just as I was used to. This is far from the truth. The reason this fact is misrepresented is the same reason that many facts about the nature and history of the Baha'i religion are misrepresented, internally contradicted, etc.: the ideological desire to expand and ultimately to dominate. Initially, I think this was borne of the delusions of the founder (a common sort of delusion in his time and place), but now I think one can chalk it up in most cases to one of three things: cynical opportunism (lying), enthusiasm rooted in naivete or ignorance, or confusion/self-deception (believing one's own propaganda).

Ulterior motives are ugly things in conversations. The conversation (or convert-sation, as I like to call it) is nothing but manipulation.

Fran

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>
Subject: Re: Baha'i & Scientology
Date: Friday, August 07, 1998 2:53 PM

byrd@acm.org (Jim Byrd) writes:

>On Fri, 7 Aug 1998 08:37:11 -0400, "FG" ><FG@hotmail.com> wrote:

>>The first attempt was defeated 157 to 691, a massive onslaught >>of Bahai voted NO in outrage and intolerance at the notion that >>anyone might say something that had cleared an official Bahai >>censor.... Mark Towfiq, a member of the Bahai Computer and >>Communication Association (BCCA), posted a message >>soliciting NO votes to three Bahai-only mailing lists working >>behind the scenes to crush the legitimate desires of 157 >>Bahais and non-Bahais who tired of censorship on >>soc.religion.bahai....

>Interesting. It's not my quarrel (I'm not Baha'i, my wife is), but >Mark Towfiq is a friend of my family. I'll have to ask him about this >the next time he comes over to my house.

>I really find it hard to see what you're so upset about here. You lost >a vote to form a usenet group. Big deal.

Hi Jim,

The problems with what Mark Towfiq did, in my opinion, are (1) he campaigned for a NO vote, which seems against the spirit of the Baha'i policy on voting (confirmed by the UHJ's statement on the vote) and (2) he urged people to vote NO by playing on their fears of free discussion and of possibly seeing CB material, which are supersitious and self-destructive fears. As I said, this is my opinion. Even though, like you, I am not a Baha'i but my spouse is, I do see it as "my quarrel" because I believe strongly that it is best for the world (including the Baha'is) not to be afraid of ideas and free discussion. I have experienced having my polite and relevant (I think) postings turned away on grounds that are clearly applied arbitrarily by the SRB moderators. TRB would be healthy for the Baha'i community and for people interested in this religion. No one is forced to use it. Personally, I would like to see the spam weeded out, but that's the price you pay for this degree of freedom, and some of us think it's worth it.

Sincerely,
Fran

"We are born innocent. Believe me, Adia, we are still innocent."
--Sarah McLaughlin

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>
Subject: Re: Free investigation vs. threats
Date: Wednesday, August 19, 1998 6:08 PM

xensky@aol.com writes:

>This is my meaning: Say I have a child who thinks he knows it all and does >not wish to admit that he is under my authority. Say it is the ad of Winter >outside and I warn him that he must put on his coat, hat and mittens before >he ventures outside.

Many times Baha'is fall back on this metaphor: the adult human being as child who just doesn't or can't know enough to question the religious authority. Not only is this an insulting metaphor, it collapses on itself...if I judge the metaphor apt, am I not using my much-maligned rational faculties? Or is the listener supposed to experience a kind of satori? It is not arrogance or a claim to know everything that causes people not to accept such authority; what is lacking is not humility (though it may be docility); skeptics usually simply don't believe that this "divine authority" is something that exists.

To submit to an authority freely means to have made some decision about the appropriateness of doing so; that appropriateness with regard to Baha'u'llah is not at all obvious to most people. This is why there is no Entry by Troops. These metaphors do not make it more obvious.

Similarly the metaphor of each religion being a grade in school; one isn't really better than the other, but still one must progress (in some way that isn't supposed to imply any invidious comparisons) from one to the other. It is very naive (at the least) to think Jews, Christians, and Muslims will think that is simply swell and hop on board.

Fran

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>
Subject: Re: fw Timothy Mulligan Re: Why I left
Date: Thursday, August 13, 1998 11:57 AM

Timothy,

I don't know if you'll see this, since it is only posted to arb, but here goes (maybe Fred can forward, if necessary).

If there is a talk.religion.bahai, then it is more likely that rank and file Baha'is and other will see posts like yours and perhaps benefit from a good look in the mirror. I think the problems you see have become this intense only relatively recently (last 20 years or so). This tide could be reversed, and I think that is what Fred wants. I am also tempted to tell him to take his wife to the Bahamas and sit on the beach with a very large and strong pina colada! But since he is willing to bang his head against the wall one more time and has some chance of getting this passed, I am willing to help.

I do agree with you that the Baha'i Faith is THE religion of contradictions and intellectual hypocrisy. The obsession with converting, controlling, and fundraising (all meta-activities, not religious/spiritual activities) is the final bankrupting of the movement. (And stop making me ROTFL with your pot shots at Baha'u'llah. You're a very bad boy!)

Warmest unaffiliated regards,
Fran

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

-----Original Message-----

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai

Date: Monday, August 10, 1998 11:26 AM

Subject: Re: Baha'i & Scientology

>"FG" <FG@hotmail.com> writes:

>

>>Graham@acemake.comREMOVE wrote in message

>><54ELjDapB1y1EwIF@fragrant.demon.co.uk>...

>>>In article <6qfif6$ev1$1@chaos.crhc.uiuc.edu>, Fran Baker

>>><fran@gershwin.dgii.com> writes

>>>>Hi Jim,

>>>>

>>>>The problems with what Mark Towfiq did, in my opinion, are (1) he >>>>campaigned for a NO vote, which seems against the spirit >>>>of the Baha'i policy on voting (confirmed by the UHJ's statement >>>>on the vote) and

>>>

>>>

>>>Here we go again..

>

>I did not see this response to my posting for some reason, but

>I would like to respond to the following snippet that Fred cited:

>

>>>

>>>He did not "Campaign" He sent ONE message which is not therefore a >>>"Campaign".

>

>

>It is my understanding that if someone posted something like this--

>

> You should vote for So-and-so for LSA or public office or > you should vote for such-and-such proposition on the state > ballot. You should do so for these reasons, and here is > exactly how to do it (e.g., check "YES" on the state ballot).

>

>on SRB or said as much in a Baha'i gathering that this would be >considered campaigning in the sense frowned upon or disallowed >in the Faith. Am I wrong? This is precisely what Mark did.

>His doing so is water under the bridge, and I don't know him and >he is probably a fine fellow, but this was something he, as a >Baha'i, probably should not have done.

>

>--Fran

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

-----Original Message-----

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai

Date: Monday, August 10, 1998 11:39 AM

Subject: Re: Baha'i & Scientology

>michaelv@igs.net writes:

>

>

>

>>If the worst thing that anyone can pin on the Bahais is bouncing some posts on soc.religion.bahai, they can not be all that bad. Compare their heinous crimes with, say, criminal fraud as practiced regularly by, say, Scientology.

>

>I agree wholeheartedly that the Scientologists are worse in many respects.

>The problem as I see it is this: The Baha'is would like to see their laws >govern all mankind. Some of their laws (like the laws of other religions >and societies) would benefit from change based on questioning and >discussion,e.g., they would have capital punishment for arsonists. If uncensored >discussion is officially forbidden or unofficially feared and/or >punished (if only by shunning), then this makes their religion >much less attractive and more dangerous in my opinion.

>

>I would also like to note that the moderators seem to apply their criteria >for refusal to post arbitrarily in a way that makes me, as a non-

>Baha'i poster, doubt their sincerity and integrity (which I did >not start out doing). See Fred's site for what happened to me >recently as a case in point.

>

>--Fran

>

>>Cheers

>>Michael

>

>>--

>>Michael Voytinsky

>><https://www.igs.net/~michaelv>

>>Ottawa Ontario Canada

>

>>---- In Xenu We Trust!

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

-----Original Message-----

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai

Date: Monday, August 03, 1998 11:43 AM

Subject: Re: fw Ron House Rejected by the Moderator: soc.religion.bahai

>

>

>>>Suzanne Gerstner wrote:

>>>

>>>> First I'd like to say something though. Personally, the subject line:

>>>> "Baha'i Wives to Obey Husbands" bothers me tremendously because it's >>>> very misleading, so to balance it, I've changed it to say roughly the >>>> opposite. :-) Taken out of context the first sounds very "old world >>>> order". It gives the wrong impression about the principles of the >>>> Baha'i Faith. There are people who know nothing of the Baha'i teachings

>>>> on the family, consultation or the equality of the sexes who could draw >>>> a wrong conclusion from this subject line without ever really >>>> investigating further.

>

>The mentality expressed here, that of dressing up Baha'i tenets and history >for consumption by potential Baha'i converts (often to the point of >misrepresenting and downright lying) is one of the cancers in the body >of the Faith. It is also harmful to the intellectual and moral health of >the individuals who engage in it, to use another phrase, it is bad for >the soul. It also tends, in my observation, to seep into other part of >one's life. It is ironic to think on Bahauallah's (I think it was his) >warning about not trusting an atheist because someone who could lie about >god could lie about other things. Just another Baha'i irony.

>The other poison is the concept and treatment of "covenant breakers."

>Between the two (putting on a good face to get converts and >declaring/reviling >covenant breakers), it has to make you wonder just what tortured >relationship the Baha'i Faith has with the ideas of truth and human >brotherhood.

>

>--Fran (<---member of an obsolete religion that does not, with very rare >exception, convert or excommunicate.)

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>
Subject: "holy" deluded
Date: Friday, August 21, 1998 4:14 PM

Timothy Mulligan <tmulligan@central.uh.edu> writes:

> Some have asked me to return to the Baha'i Faith, to build it up > rather than tear it down. I cannot return to the Baha'i Faith, because > I do not believe in the claims of Husayn Ali (alias Baha'u'llah).

Sometimes Baha'is seem to have a hard time understanding that someone does not find his claims either believable or appealing.

> Let me share with you what I suspect about Husayn Ali. I want to > emphasize that this is only a guess, because I have no way of knowing.
> But it is a common consequence of the "unitive" experience of God (the > highest mystical state that can be achieved in this life) that one feels > one actually is God. The mystics of all traditions, including the > Hindu, Catholic, and Buddhist, all attest to this. And in Islam, for > instance, a famous Sufi (whose name, I think, begins with an "H") ran > through the streets shouting "I am the Truth!", and he was burned at the > stake for it. What he experienced was correct, because at the summit of > mystical experience, one actually feels one's identity with God. It > requires a wise elder mystic and a religious community with experience > in such matters to make sure the mystic does not draw improper > conclusions. I don't think Baha'u'llah had the benefit of such > correction. In short, I believe he was deluded. But it's not a black > and white situation. He may have been very close to God. And yet, for > reasons we don't know, God allows even his closest friends to be > seriously mistaken.

> It does seem to me, however, that elements of ego inflation poisoned > Husayn Ali's message. His flights of self-glorification are peppered > with claims to be "lowly" that, on their face, are self-serving. I > remember being particularly put off by Husayn Ali's comment on the > crucifixion of Christ that he longed to suffer the same fate, or > something to that effect. Yuck!

I have a very similar assessment of Baha'u'llah.
I think his being born a male Persian aristocrat also had something to do with it; they are treated as little gods from birth.
I think he was definitely delusional after his traumatic imprisonment. I don't know whether he actually had mystical experiences, but he may well have, and I'm happy to give him the benefit of the doubt. His subsequent delusions and egomania (so evident in his letters to world leaders, for example) along with his homophobia, sexism, puritanism, and barbaric notions of punishment have left their unfortunate mark on this religion. their mark on this religion and severely undermine any claims to inclusiveness and enlightened social reform.

--Fran

>Tim Mulligan
>tmulligan@central.uh.edu

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Fran Baker <fran@gershwin.dgii.com>

Subject: More often than not...

Date: Thursday, July 30, 1998 12:16 PM

Donald Zhang Osborn <osborndo@pilot.msuNOSPAM.edu> writes:

>I think more often than not, it is not that people ignore >others' opinions, but disagree and choose not to engage >in argumentation;

I think more often than not it is that people respond to other's opinions with poor quality argumentation, specifically, pat answers that satisfy them in their own certainty but fail to convince many others. This is what happens when you spout a religious salespitch or sound bit rather than really listening to either yourself or your critic. Baha'i "teaching," like other conversion-driven conversation, usually includes a "teacher" with a closed mind and a "pupil" who suffers fools gladly.

--Fran

"Why do we kill people who kill people to show that killing is wrong?"

--a bumper sticker

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Abdul-Baha's Fraudulent will and testament

Also see Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

https://www.reformbahai.org/Covenant_comments

A Bahai wrote on talk.religion.bahai, to a Haifan Baha'i,
>The non sequitor, red herring and straw man is all yours who refuse to show this thing [the purpo will and testament of Abdul-Baha] to anyone.

My response:

They can't. It's a fraudulent will. Any qualified person will agree with Dr. Mitchell, who was eminently qualified to judge its authenticity in 1930. Only slander and the Baha'i Technique have concealed it for the past 87 years from most Bahais. That day is over. People can see for themselves, with their own eyes, that something dreadfully wrong has been perpetrated by the "administration." The evidence is all over the Internet.... and in the ruined lives and families of many tens of thousands of Bahais....

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

<https://groups.google.com/group/alt.religion.bahai/msg/efa00735b4cb41e6?hl=en&dmode=source>

--

Larry,

You say below "the fact that the world order of Baha'u'llah is in deed and in fact mutilated is denied by all those who claim to be Baha'i regardless of which of the nine sects of Baha'ism they belong to."

Actually, there are at least two Bahai denominations that do not look to the fraudulent will and testament of Abdul-Baha, written by Shoghi Effendi or someone else in his family, seeking worldly power and wealth. The results of that fraudulent will have been witnessed and experienced now by generations of Bahais. I am sorry that you too have been personally impacted by it.

I believe, however, that the Faith of Baha'u'llah is beyond any one interpretation of it, especially one that has demonstrated so thoroughly, over so many decades, how far astray it has gone from the Teachings.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

--

Friends,

Souls continue to enter the Reform Bahai Faith from all over the United States, Canada, Europe, and other parts of the entire world, asking for guidance, care, direction, sustenance.

While Quaker John Woolman walked the highways and byways of America, Reform Bahais surf the electronic information highway that now girdles and unites the earth.

For those of you who might be unaware of it, I must inform you that the Wilmette and Haifan Baha'is on December 6, 2006 commenced a lawsuit against the Orthodox Baha'i Faith and the Bahá'ís Under the Provisions of the Covenant, alleging in the courts of Illinois copyright and trademark infringement. Court documents can be found on the Internet via www.FG.com/bahaicensorship/

While the Wilmette NSA has since the 1930s repeatedly attempted to settle issues of religious doctrine, liberty, and conscience in the courts of the United States of America, I urge Reform Bahais to eschew such misguided efforts to decide theology under the guise of corporate legalisms as unseemly and contrary to the very spirit of brotherhood and unity that Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l-Baha taught. Let us recall Abdu'l-Baha's luminous Words, "This movement eludes organization -- it is the realization of a new spirit."

In the contentious context of this latest sully of Baha'u'llah's Faith, we might reflect too on this passage from "On Bahai Liberty":

"Reform Bahais choose to leave those who choose hatred, denunciation, shunning, endless and unproductive argument and recrimination over Abdu'l-Baha's Will and Testament, seeking justification for fanaticism, over the Will of Shoghi Effendi, which he never wrote or implied, or over the successors he never intended or appointed, or over the oppressive organization Baha'u'llah Himself never envisioned nor proclaimed." www.reformbahai.org

Surely the many decades of denunciation and recrimination over Abdu'l-Baha's purported will, by those of all ideological viewpoints who claim to be its guardians and interpreters, demonstrates how flawed it is, as it was judged in 1930, and that the Baha'i Faith was led down the wrong path by those attempting to use a fraudulent will for their own benefit. Reform Bahais distinguish themselves by returning to the indisputable central Teachings of the Faith, the oneness of God, religion, and humanity, leaving those who are motivated by lust for power and control to coerce and discredit one another in the legal system.

Surveying the last eighty-five years of Baha'i history, Reform Bahais can not doubt for a single moment that our sister denomination has shown us what Abdu'l-Baha meant when he said, "The Bahai Movement is not an organization. You cannot organize the Bahai Movement."

Let us together seek His meaning in "The Bahai Movement is the spirit of the age. It is the essence of all the highest ideals of this century. The Bahai Cause is an inclusive movement. The teachings of all religions and societies are found here."

Is this not the time to build the Reform Bahai Faith, to seek together how it is not an "organization" but yet a "Movement"?

I call again upon Reform Bahais to consider a Convocation to seek His Will.

Reform Bahai Faith
www.reformbahai.org
January 22, 2007

<https://groups.google.com/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/c610dea05274c08b?hl=en&dmode=sour>

--

The attempts in this thread to discredit Dr. Mitchell and Ruth White are the usual ones used for over 75 years by the usurpers of the Faith of Baha'u'llah. Slander and ad hominem are no more convincing now than they have ever been. Note the attempt to shift from his conclusions and call for an examination of the original to the man himself.

I ask the reader to reflect on the fact that Dr. Mitchell remains one of the most respected forensic researchers of the 20th century and is still quoted and cited by academics and legal experts. His professional integrity is beyond question as is his ability to assess the authenticity of the purported will itself. As the document curator for the British Museum, Dr. Mitchell used techniques and methods still widely used and recognized whether or not one has a command of the language to be scrutinized. Knowledge of a language in and of itself has never been the essential for handwriting experts, and informed people know that to be a fact. Those who seek to conceal the act of forgery hope to confuse the uninformed about what is involved.

"Documents And Their Scientific Examination" (1920)

Author: C. Ainsworth Mitchell

Date 1920

<https://www.archive.org/details/DocumentsAndTheirScientificExamination>

Ruth White:

"Dr. Mitchell's report also shows that none of the handwriting of the alleged will is the same as the authentic specimens of Abdul-Baha's handwriting that were submitted to him" (69).

"Most persons are unaware of the fact that handwriting experts use modern inventions that measure the slants, the spaces, and the tremors of writing so accurately that it makes the difference between two specimens of different writing overwhelmingly apparent, when these are enlarged, even though one of the specimens may be so clever a forgery of the other as to appear identical to the naked eye" (69-70).

"Those Bahais who assert that they are familiar with the handwriting of Abdul-Baha, and have compared it with the writing of the will, and have found them identical, reveal the fact that they are either totally unaware of the science used by the best handwriting experts, or else fear has prompted them to assert their belief in the authenticity of the will--fear of being excommunicated if they so much as question the document. This science that the best handwriting experts use is so mathematically accurate that any number of experts using these modern inventions will arrive at the same results" (70).

"Dr. Mitchell not only spent months examining the enlarged specimens submitted to him, but he examined minutely every line of the ten photographs of the alleged will, and his conclusion is that it is not written throughout by the same person. This fact, in addition to others, indicates that the will is spurious, especially if we bear in mind that Shoghi Effendi, and the Spiritual Assembly of Bahai's, assert that every word of it is written in the hand of Abdul-Baha. Also if we bear in mind that it is undated and unwitnessed, and that it contradicts the teachings that both Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha gave during their lifetimes--that the Bahai Cause is a spiritual democracy and not a theocracy. The appointment of an hereditary guardianship contradicts this" (69).

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Ruth%20White.htm>

Ruth White. Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament.
Beverly Hills: White, 1946.

It has always been the desperate strategy of those who forged a will for Abdul-Baha to discredit the incontestable evidence of their perfidy.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

<https://groups.google.com/group/alt.religion.bahai/msg/2890806e912505de?hl=en&dmode=source>

--

"In England, C. Ainsworth Mitchell was a public analyst interested primarily in questioned documents and the chemistry of inks during the early twentieth century" (25).

Introduction to Forensic Sciences. William G. Eckert.

Published 1997 CRC Press

Legal Reference / Law Profession

390 pages

ISBN 0849381010

https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Forensic-Sciences-Second-Library/dp/0849381010/ref=sr_1_1/104-9380573-1324751?ie=UTF8&s=books&qid=11760774048

The authenticity of my quotation from the Introduction to Forensic Sciences, regarding Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, may be verified by Previewing the book and selecting page 25.

NOTE WELL: In 1997, decades after his Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha in 1930, Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell's reputation in the field of "questioned documents" continues to command the respect of his colleagues capable of evaluating his abilities and of educating new students.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

<https://groups.google.com/group/alt.religion.bahai/msg/b20e7cda913293a9?hl=en&dmode=source>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Negar Mottahedeh <motta003@MAROON.TC.UMN.EDU>
To: Multiple recipients of list H-BAHAI <H-BAHAI@H-NET.MSU.EDU>
Subject: Freedom of speech and conscience, and Interpretation
Date: Tuesday, October 21, 1997 12:32 PM

Date: Mon, 20 Oct 1997 20:09:31 -0400
From: jrcole@UMICH.EDU (Juan R. I. Cole)
Subject: Freedom of speech and conscience, and Interpretation

I agree with both Peter Terry and Mike Furst about contemporary Baha'i administrative practice with regard to issues in freedom of conscience and speech. That is, I agree with Peter that the Baha'i administration appears to be acting like Orthodox Rabbis and with Mike Furst in his views of that.

Historically speaking, during the Inquisition the Roman Catholic church denied the freedom of conscience, so that even private remarks could get you tortured.

Among the Protestant states that rebelled against this practice was the Netherlands, and the Dutch Republic enshrined freedom of conscience in the Treaty of Utrecht in the 1500s. However, "freedom of conscience" is a very weak right. It is the right to hold private beliefs at variance with public orthodoxies, as long as one does not speak them publicly or beyond certain venues (that is, as long as one does not make them a public cause).

Thus, even under a regime of "freedom of conscience," the Dutch Republic allowed the Jewish community to excommunicate Spinoza for his views, and occasionally Mennonites and Arminians were sanctioned, and Catholics and Lutherans had to keep a low profile. In England, where Anglicanism also recognized the "freedom of conscience," George Fox was jailed for preaching the Inner Light on street corners. Protestant "dissidents" (non-Anglicans) were barely tolerated, but only if they did not speak publicly. A similar regime was still in place in the 1770s in Virginia, where it came to Thomas Jefferson's attention that Quakers were being punished by the Established Anglican Church for not having their children baptized.

The Enlightenment brought a new and broader right, to freedom of speech as well as of conscience. Thus, Locke had argued that magistrates had no business sanctioning even vocal dissidents from the Anglican church. And the First Amendment insisted that the U.S. government should make no law regarding the Establishment of religion (that is, backing an official religion) or abridging individual freedom of religion, speech or the press.

Given that the Baha'i administration conceives of itself as an embryonic theocracy, its policy of allowing "freedom of conscience" but not freedom of speech essentially takes things back to the 1500s and 1600s in the Dutch Republic and England. It is a revocation of modernity and a flight back into the Renaissance and Reformation period.

The question is, are current restrictions on freedom of speech consonant with scriptural Baha'i principle?

I personally see a contradiction. `Abdul-Baha complained about the persecution of Baha'is in Iran, saying:

"Yet nought has been effected and no advantage has been gained; no remedy has been discovered for this ill, nor any easy salve for this wound. [To ensure] freedom of conscience (azadigi-yi vujdan) and tranquillity of heart and soul is one of the duties and functions of government (vaza'if va savalih-i hukumat), and is in all ages the cause of progress in development and ascendancy over other lands."

He adds: "Inteference with creed and faith in every country causes manifest detriment, while justice and equal dealing towards all peoples on the face of the earth are the means whereby progress is effected."

He makes an argument similar to that of Locke, for religious liberty (and not just private, limited freedom of conscience) when he says,

"In other countries when they perceived severity and persecution in such instances to be identical with . . . incitement, and saw that paying no attention was more effectual, they abated the fire of revolution. Therefore did they universally proclaim the equal rights of all denominations, and sounded the liberty of all groups (lihadha bi kulli i`lan-i musavat-i huquq-i ahzab namudand va azadigi-yi `umum-i tava'if gush zad sharq va gharb)."

In order to illustrate the pragmatic benefits of liberty, he contrasts the religious policy of Shi`ite Iran, which was weak and losing territory in the nineteenth century, with that of the British Empire. British administrators, building on a century of thought and law concerning toleration, on the whole developed a policy of impartiality across religious groups. The British, he says, implemented equality and "uniform political rights" for diverse religious groups. Finally, `Abdul-Baha affirms that such a policy of allowing equality among the adherents of various religions is not areligious, and can be pursued by state officials who are themselves pious believers, just as the British bureaucrats who foreswore a Christian assault on India were themselves Christians. He seeks to deny any necessary link between freedom of conscience and irreligion or atheism.

Note that the example `Abdul-Baha gives of the best religious policy is that of Liberal Great Britain of the late nineteenth century, which had granted liberty of religious expression to all subjects.

He criticizes medieval intolerance and argues of European nations during the Enlightenment that : "But when they removed these differences, persecutions, and bigotries out of their midst, and proclaimed the equal rights of all subjects and the liberty of men's consciences, the lights of glory and power arose and shone from the horizons of that kingdom in such wise that those countries made progress in every direction . . . These are effectual and sufficient proofs that the conscience of man is sacred and to be respected; and that liberty thereof produces widening of ideas, amendment of morals, improvement of conduct, disclosure of the secrets of creation, and manifestation of the hidden verities of the contingent world."

(Above quotes from A Traveller's Narrative keyword search at <https://SunSITE.unc.edu/Bahai/TrueSeeker/ts-kwicd.html>)

Now, it may be objected that even if the Baha'i administration has theocratic tendencies, it is after all the steward of a religion and that `Abdul-Baha had not meant to tie its hands in making it put up with adherents who openly and publicly spoke their individual views. But in fact `Abdul-Baha makes an explicit analogy between the sort of political liberty granted individuals in democracies and his hopes for individual rights of free speech even in the religious sphere:

"Just as in the world of politics there is need for free thought, likewise in the world of religion there should be the right of unrestricted individual belief. Consider what a vast difference exists between modern democracy and the old forms of despotism. Under an autocratic government the opinions of men are not free, and development is stifled, whereas in a democracy, because thought and speech are not restricted, the greatest progress is witnessed. It is likewise true in the world of religion. When freedom of conscience, liberty of thought and right of speech prevail--that is to say, when every man according to his own idealization may give expression to his beliefs--development and growth are inevitable."

(Promulgation of Universal Peace p. 197)

Note that `Abdul-Baha here does not limit himself to advocating the "weak" right of conscience only, but openly advocates the liberty of conscience, thought and speech.

`Abdul-Baha did not authorize Baha'i institutions to punish the public expression of individual belief, only "behavior." The attempt to subsume Baha'is' email traffic under "behavior" rather than speech does obvious violence to the distinctions `Abdul-Baha was careful to make in saying that polite expression of conscience could not be punished, only infractions of religious law.

Moreover, since the Universal House of Justice has no prerogative to engage in authoritative Interpretation, it is not obvious how it could be within its rights to impose its interpretation of Baha'i scripture on an individual adherent and prevent him or her from expressing an individual interpretation, as long as the latter was clearly marked as individual.

So, I personally see a rather vast chasm between Baha'i scriptural ideals with regard to liberty of conscience and speech, and current administrative practice that puzzles me deeply.

cheers

Juan Cole
History
University of Michigan

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Negar Mottahedeh
<motta003@MAROON.TC.UMN.EDU>
To: Multiple recipients of list H-BAHAI <H-BAHAI@H-NET.MSU.EDU>
Subject: Freedom of speech and conscience, and Interpretation
Date: Wednesday, October 22, 1997 10:22 AM

Date: Wed, 22 Oct 1997 01:56:20 -0400
From: jrcole@umich.edu (Juan R. I. Cole)
Subject: Freedom of speech and conscience, and Interpretation

Dear Susan:

In my posting, I tried to make a number of points:

1) that a very weak and limited "freedom of conscience" without a freedom of public speech was a feature of Public Religions (not just states) of the Early Modern period, 1550-1789.

2) that from 1789 we see the advent of a much stronger freedom, that of public speech, beyond just private conscience;

3) That `Abdul-Baha clearly advocated not only freedom of conscience but also freedom of speech and a democratic society

4) That `Abdul-Baha explicitly forbade Baha'i institutions from punishing polite speech about religious beliefs as opposed to behavior such as breaking religious law

5) That since the Universal House of Justice may not authoritatively Interpret the Baha'i writings, it in any case appears to lack any juridical standing in imposing a narrow orthodoxy on individual believers.

In your reply, you ignored points 3-5, and seem to say that because the Baha'i faith is not yet in a position to implement its policies as policies of state, my argument is flawed. Since 3-5 do not depend on the Baha'i faith actually coming to power as a theocratic state, however, your statement does not in fact demonstrate any flaw in my argument. Moreover, the Letter on Individual Rights and Freedoms of 1988 does argue for policies extremely similar to those of early modern Protestant regimes that allowed private freedom of conscience but disallowed freedom of public expression. That there is a similarity here between Dutch Reformed Calvinism of 1550-1789 and current Baha'i administrative practice seems to me a promising comparison that I am sorry you simply dismissed.

I find it difficult to believe that you really hold that complete social ostracization of people because of their individual views is not a derogation of their autonomy and basic rights as defined by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

As for the right of a "religion" to define itself, I am astonished that you should reify the matter in this way. What we are really discussing is the prerogatives of the Baha'i administration to define the religion. I do not see in Baha'i scripture any bestowal on houses of justice of the right to interpret the scriptures authoritatively, to make doctrine, or to require assent to dogma/orthodoxy (which in the nature of the case could only be their Interpretation of dogma/orthodoxy). Further, I find explicit denials in `Abdul-Baha of their right to punish polite speech or doctrinal unorthodoxy in adherents.

Finally, you end by attacking the Enlightenment. First of all, I was not endorsing the entirety of the Enlightenment project. I was pointing out that the Enlightenment was that point at which freedom of private conscience was supplemented by freedom of public speech. Moreover, it was *`Abdul-Baha* who praised the Enlightenment, in *A Traveller's Narrative*, for abolishing Medieval restrictions on freedom of conscience and of speech, thereby making modern liberty and science possible. You have not addressed `Abdul-Baha's support for aspects of the Enlightenment.

As for Voltaire, he was a believer in God and morality, and in a form of religion compatible with Reason. When he said "crush the infamous thing," he was referring to Roman Catholic practices of intolerance, which had led to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes and therefore to the repression of the Huguenot Protestants; Jews were also unfairly treated and taxed. The pre-Enlightenment Roman Catholic Church, which did not even recognize a right to freedom of conscience, was a major oppressor of non-Roman Catholics, backed by the coercive might of the Old Regime State. Voltaire was right to want that coercion of consciences and denial of basic human rights "crushed," and was right to call it "infamous."

>Religion was to be privatized in order to prevent it from impacting >society as a whole. Is this really a solution? If religion is not allowed >to transform the way in which we live, what good is it?

There is a strong and frankly somewhat frightening Utopian strain in this question. It is very similar to Marx's dictum that philosophers must cease talking about the world and must now actually change it. The problem with Utopian programs of world transformation is that they are open to becoming extremely coercive in practice.

Religion is dying off in the industrialized world. Forty percent of the French don't believe in God, fifty percent of Swedes don't, and the Dutch are similar, as are the peoples of the former Soviet Union. Even in Tunisia 20% of the population is unbelievers, and I suspect it is higher in Turkey. In China it is not clear that very many people at all have any serious "religious" beliefs. Why have all these billions of people fled organized religion? Because they found it coercive. They don't want you to set things up so that their lives have to be transformed in the way that you dictate. The places where religion still does fairly well, such as the U.S., are places where religion is in fact recognized in law as a private activity, unlike Sweden where it is very public and tied to the state. So the evidence is that the sort of religion you advocate produces irreligion, whereas the Enlightenment privatization of religion, as in the U.S., allows it to thrive in relative terms. Life is full of paradoxes.

cheers

Juan R. I. Cole
History
U of Michigan

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Re: Yes but, who are the Fundamentalists anyway?
Date: Tuesday, September 25, 2001 4:35 AM

Order of these two sections reversed from the original message. What is Baha'i Fundamentalism QUOTED by Nima Hazini from another author's work:

What is Baha'i Fundamentalism

The first major ideological characteristic of fundamentalism, is a reaction against the marginalization of religion in secular societies. Among Baha'i fundamentalists, this reaction takes the form of a belief in a future theocracy, in which they expect Baha'i ecclesiastical institutions to take over the civil state, and which differentiates them from Baha'i liberals and moderates. The belief appears to be rooted primarily in oral traditions attributed to Shoghi Effendi and letters written on his behalf by secretaries, since although he does speak of a future Baha'i commonwealth in his published works, its character remains vague. Hand of the Cause John Robarts reported his version of a long conversation with Shoghi Effendi expatiating on this idea (Robarts 1993). Some Baha'is believed that he held that a melding of religion and state would not occur during the thousand-year dispensation of Baha'u'llah himself, but only toward the end of the Baha'i "cycle," of some 500,000 years (Hofman 1953). There are two problems for Baha'i fundamentalists. The first is that Baha'u'llah's own writings, and those of `Abdul-Baha are frankly anti-theocratic. The second is that in Baha'i law, oral traditions are supposed to be discounted in favor of written texts. Fundamentalists thus tend to hew to generalities when explaining their belief, lacking scriptural support.

The second feature of fundamentalism is selectivity. Fundamentalists select and reshape aspects of the tradition, all the while asserting that they have recaptured its pristine essence. They are also selective in their responses to modernity. They embrace some aspects of it (such as certain types of technology), while vehemently rejecting others. Baha'i fundamentalists engage in all three types of selectivity as well. They frequently make a claim to be engaging in traditional practices that are in fact innovations, and can do so with some success because the history and texts of the Baha'i faith are relatively little studied and authorities have often actively suppressed historical sources. We have already mentioned the problem that theocratic beliefs are unscriptural. That is, the scriptural tradition in the Baha'i faith strove for a separation of religion and state as a way of making room for liberty of conscience for Baha'is in Shi`ite Iran (McGlinn 1999, Cole 1998c:17-47). In his Treatise on Leadership of the early 1890s `Abdul-Baha said that religious institutions, including Baha'i ones, are never to intervene in affairs of state or political matters unbidden, and that whenever in history they have done so it has resulted in a huge disaster. (`Abdul-Bahain Cole 1998a). He clearly envisaged the state and religious institutions as complementary, "like milk and honey."

Baha'is, including Baha'i fundamentalists, have for the most part embraced modernity. They have a vision of building a peaceful global society and for the most part have a positive view of technological advances. Still, the selectivity of Baha'i fundamentalists toward modernity can be witnessed in the severe misgivings that some of them have expressed about the Internet" or such issues as democracy and the separation of religion and politics.

Fundamentalist Baha'is put special emphasis on moral Manichaeism. They see the world as comprised of a small cadre of those "firm in the Covenant." They....admit a larger number of Baha'is who are "infirm" but perhaps not dangerously so. They worry about smaller numbers of "liberal" or "dissident" Baha'is who [they believe] attempt to "undermine" the Covenant.

Baha'i fundamentalism puts great emphasis on the absolutism and inerrancy of scripture. This belief is quite widespread but not universal. It is tested most fiercely with regard to issues such as evolution. `Abdul-Baha maintained, in Sufi and Neoplatonic fashion, that human beings have always been a distinct species and that human beings are not animals, insofar as they are endowed with a soul. He also argued that the morphological similarities between humans and apes might be merely functional (e.g, sharks and porpoises resemble one another but are not immediately related), and maintained that "the missing link" would never be found. These assertions have foundered against the DNA revolution, which has found that humans, chimpanzees and bonobos share 98 percent of the same genes and are clearly closely related. During a discussion of his statements on evolution, a typical poster to SRB wrote, "Dear all, On the topic of evolution: Clearly we should understand as clearly as possible what 'Abdul-Baha says on this subject. Because we believe

His statements on matters pertaining to the Revelation of Baha'u'llah and all of creation are infallible, we must be clear about what it is we believe, or are accepting" (SRB 6 July 1997).

Baha'i fundamentalists emphasize belief in an imminent catastrophe they refer to as "the Calamity" (Smith 1982). One contributor to a Baha'i-only list wrote, "I would like to open a discussion on a subject which many of us are somewhat unwilling to address - namely, the impending (year 2,000) calamity which is supposed to create grave upheaval (literally) not only here in California, but also on the East Coast, and other parts of the world . . ." (Pers. Comm, March 14, 1994).

Fundamentalist Baha'is have an authoritarian view of how the Baha'i "administrative order" should function. There is a great emphasis on obedience. The typical logic of Baha'i fundamentalists roots obedience in the legitimacy of authority, disallowing a rational examination of the substance of a command or an inquiry into whether the body giving the command has the "constitutional" prerogative to give it. In this way, arbitrary commands by Baha'i bodies are made to be an either-or proposition. If one accepts Baha'u'llah, one accepts his administrative order, and must obey whatever it orders one to do, whether one agrees in conscience or no. Rejection of the command, ipso facto, represents a rejection of Baha'u'llah (Semple 1991). Thus, fundamentalist Baha'is secretly consider liberals and some moderates "not Baha'is" at all because they do not demonstrate sufficient willingness to immerse their wills in the authority of the Baha'i administration.

Fundamentalist Baha'is believe that Baha'i institutions such as the local assembly or the NSA can be divinely guided, and that the Universal House of Justice is infallible. The technical terminology in Persian is not unambiguous, and Baha'i texts make distinctions that this approach disregards. Contemporary Baha'i fundamentalists avoid thinking constitutionally about such issues, asserting the infallibility of the House of Justice in an undifferentiated manner. [One] American Baha'i and mystery writer...wrote, "The Guidance and infallibility of the Universal House of Justice are assured and promised. We are specifically directed, as an act of faith, to offer instant, exact, and complete obedience to Baha'u'llah's House of Justice. We are warned of the dire spiritual dangers inherent in ignoring this directive, and we are admonished to be vigilant, firm, and uncompromising in our loyalty, support, obedience and love for the this Divinely Ordained Institution." (Talisman9 Archives, 23 May 2000).

Fundamentalist Baha'is view "the member's time, space and activity" as "a group resource, not an individual one" (Almond et al. 408). In some communities enormous pressure is put on individuals by fundamentalists to "teach the faith" or proselytize others. Some more liberal (or just shy) Baha'is report being extremely uncomfortable with this pressure and cite it as a reason they became inactive or withdrew from membership. Constant appeals are also made for Baha'is to donate money, to "give till it hurts," and most of these donations appear to go to monumental building projects at the Baha'i world center in Haifa or to bureaucratic purposes at the National Baha'i Center in Wilmette. The Baha'i administration appears to do almost no charity work (measured as a percentage of their budget), especially for non-Baha'is. Although Baha'is do not have a distinctive form of dress, they do have special ritual forms of prayer, and they fast in the Muslim way.

They are under surveillance for behavior that might contravene Baha'i law.

[Originally the first section.]

<long essay snipped>

--

It looks like I'll have to trot out a version of this post from time to time as a permanent feature of this NG.

--

The 9 typologies of Fundamentalism (according to the high 'doyens' of Fundamentalism studies in the Academy, Marty/Appleby):

1) Fundamentalism mounts a protest against the marginalization of religion in secularizing societies.

2) Fundamentalism selectively reshapes the religious tradition (i.e. it may represent itself as a restatement of the essence of the religion, but in fact it picks and chooses from the tradition) and it accepts some aspects of modernity while rejecting others.

3) Fundamentalism sees the moral world as divided sharply into good and evil.

4) Fundamentalism emphasizes the absolutism and inerrancy of its scriptures (and thus rejects Western critical academic scholarship on that corpus).

5) Fundamentalism has a millennialist emphasis.

6) Fundamentalism has an elect, chosen membership.

7) Fundamentalism draws sharp boundaries between the saved and the sinful.

8) Fundamentalism maintains an authoritarian, charismatic leadership structure.

9) Fundamentalism has strict behavioral requirements for its people.

In another important work on the fundamentalist phenomena in Christianity, Judaism and Islam, i.e. _The Defenders of God: The Fundamentalist Revolt Against the Modern Age_ (Columbia SC: 1995), Professor Bruce B. Lawrence of Duke University (Religious Studies) points out that, Fundamentalism is the affirmation of religious authority as holistic and absolute, admitting of neither criticism nor reduction; it is expressed through the collective demand that specific creedal and ethical dictates derived from scripture be publicly recognized and legally enforced (p. 27).

Earlier he pointed out,

Fundamentalism is shaped both by its interaction with modernity and its reaction against modernism. It is a two-way, not a one-way, exchange. It affects "secular humanists" as well as their fundamentalist opponents. And it is an exchange that has taken place, and continues to take place, on a global scale, drawing into its orbit all religious traditions not just Islam [Judaism or Christianity] (p xiv).

Later on he notes,

...Fundamentalist challenges have arisen in several traditions. One could locate cadres that are Sikh or Buddhist, _Baha'i_ [he references Denis Maceoin's "Baha'i Fundamentalism and the Western Academic Study of the Babi Movement"] or Hindu (p. 6).

On pp. 100-101 Lawrence delineates the common "traits" of fundamentalists:

1. Fundamentalists are advocates of a pure minority viewpoint against a sullied majority or dominant group. They are the righteous remnant turned vanguard, and even when the remnant/vanguard seizes political power and seems to become a majority, as happened in Iran in 1979, they continue to perceive and project themselves as a minority.

2. Fundamentalists are oppositional. They do not merely disagree with their enemies, they confront them. While the evil Other is an abstract sense of anomie or uprootedness, it is located in particular groups who perpetuate the prevailing "secular" ethos. Fundamentalists confront those secular people who exercise political or judicial power. Often they also confront "wayward" religious professionals [or perceived "wayward" scholars or intellectuals].

3. Fundamentalists are secondary-level male elites. They claim to derive authority from a direct, unmediated appeal to scripture, yet because interpretive principles are often vague, they must be carried by charismatic leaders who are invariably male. Notions of a just social order in Iran, or a halakhic polity in Israel, or a Christian civilization in America require continuous, repeated reinterpretation. In each instance what seems to an outsider to be arbitrary retrieval of only some elements from a common past is to fundamentalists the necessary restoration of an eternally valid divine mandate. And it is a mandate mediated through exclusively male interpreters.

4. Fundamentalists generate their own technical vocabulary. Reflecting the polysemy of language, they use special terms that bind insiders to each other, just as they preempt interference from outsiders. Halakha for Jews, shari'a for Muslims, [the "covenant" or "infallibility" for Baha'is], and "creation" for Christians represent...[four]...terms, each of which would be open to several interpretations but which fundamentalists invest with particular meaning that exceptionalizes, even as it appears to validate, their ideological stance.

5. Fundamentalism has historical antecedents, but no ideological precursors. As Marc Bloch warned, one should never confuse ancestry with explanation. Though the antecedents of fundamentalism are varied and distant - Maccabean revolt for Jews, the Protestant Reformation for Christians, the Wahhabi revolt for Sunnis Muslims, the martyrdom of Husayn for Shi'is - fundamentalism as a religious ideology is very recent. It did not emerge in Protestant America until the end of the last century. It has only become apparent in Judaism during the last fifty years, and since it represents a delayed reaction to the psychological hegemony of European colonial rule, it could only occur in majoritarian Muslim countries after they had become independent nation-states, that is, in most instances, after World War II.

So given all this, it is a rather big non sequitor (i.e. fallacy of reasoning) to assert that fundamentalism is merely a Western boggeymen ploy or that Armstrong and others who are studying the phenomena are conflating or misconstruing nationalism and religious identity assertion and lumping them all under a tenuously common rubric. For the reasons stated above, the global phenomenon of fundamentalism is a very real one and one only need look at the the IRI or the Taliban regime as two sore thump examples of its presence and existence.

The discourse of Liberalism (as opposed to Fundamentalism) makes the following set of assumptions,

1. Discursive dynamicity (i.e. liberal discourse) is the product of a continuous process of rational discourse.

2. Rational discourse is possible even among those who do not share the same culture, religion, belief system nor even the same ideological consciousness.

3. Rational discourse can produce mutual understanding and cultural/philosophical consensus, as well as sometimes agreement on particulars.

4. Consensus permits of stable social arrangements, and is the rational basis of the choice of coherent strategies.

5. Rational strategic choice is the basis of improving the human condition possibly through collective action.

6. Liberalism as such can exist only where and when its social and intellectual prerequisites exist.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Juan R. I. Cole <jrcole@umich.edu>
To: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: forward too to UHJ?
Date: Wednesday, December 03, 1997 1:54 PM

Dear Frederick:

About 20 people have almost certainly already forwarded the message to the authorities.

They are going to declare you a covenant breaker eventually, you know, if they don't just drop you off the rolls the way they did McKenny. You are among the persons whom an anonymous remailer would benefit.

cheers Juan

>May I also simultaneously, in public, forward your remailer >message to the UHJ as evidence of the widening perception >in cyberspace of Bahai suppression of conscience and >invite them again to enjoin upon Bahais not to vote NO?
>
>
>FG
>UseNet: alt.religion.bahai
>The RFD for talk.religion.bahai can be found on news.groups, >news.announce.newgroups, or at <<https://www.baha.demon.co.uk/rfd2.htm>>
>
>
>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Gnosis Magazine, Winter 1997

"Baha'i Leaders Vexed by On-Line Critics"

K. Paul Johnson

The Baha'i faith is the newest world religion, claiming more than 5 million followers around the globe. Its founder, Baha'u'llah (1817-92), was an Iranian nobleman who proclaimed the unity of humanity and the unity of all religions.

Generally regarded as a peaceful, liberal, and forward-looking movement, Baha'i proclaims itself to be devoted to "independent investigation of Truth." But it has become the only major religious group to launch an inquisition against prominent members for their opinions expressed on an Internet discussion group.

In the early 1970's, Baha'i membership in the United States quadrupled to nearly 100,000 after an influx of idealistic baby-boomers and rural Southern blacks. But despite a strong emphasis on numerical growth, Baha'i membership levels in the United States have been nearly stagnant for the last twenty years. Some of the young converts of the 1970s became scholars in Persian, Arabic, Middle Eastern history and related fields. This generation of Baha'i scholars, now in middle age, has become a source of irritation to the faith's leadership.

In October 1994 the electronic mail list Talisman was created by Indiana University professor John Walbridge for scholarly discussion of Baha'i history, doctrines, and current affairs. Walbridge is a specialist in Islamic philosophy, and his wife Linda, an active participant in the list, is an anthropologist specializing in contemporary Islam in the United States; she also teaches at Indiana University.

Talisman's initial core group of participants with scholarly and literary backgrounds included Juan R. I. Cole, then-director of the Center for Middle Eastern and North African Studies at the University of Michigan and now professor of history there. Two participants were publishers: Anthony Lee of Kalimat Press, a Baha'i publishing house; and Steven Scholl of White Cloud Press, publisher of the annual "Common Era: Best New Writings in Religion" and other interfaith-oriented titles.

Beginning with a dozen or so subscribers, Talisman grew in the first year to more than a hundred, most of whom were not academicians. After eighteen months of existence, Talisman became the focus of a series of investigations ordered by authorities at the Baha'i World Center in Haifa, Israel.

Liberal scholars on Talisman scrutinized several aspects of current Baha'i theology and administration, including the exclusion of women from the Baha'i governing body, the Universal House of Justice, even though Baha'i claims to teach the equality of the sexes. Academicians familiar with source documents debated whether or not Baha'u'llah had intended this exclusion, and advanced textual arguments in favor of reconsideration.

Another frequent bone of contention was the policy of literature review, which requires that any Baha'i who writes about the faith for any publisher submit the work for prior censorship by a "review committee" composed of the Baha'i National Spiritual Assembly in the country of publication. Scholars were particularly emphatic about wanting to abolish this policy - which had been deemed "temporary" when introduced early in this century - on the grounds that it compromises scholarly independence and integrity.

Perhaps the most interesting debates were about the future of Baha'i institutions, which most rank-and-file members believe are destined to take over all functions of local and national government and to create a new international government in a Baha'i-dominated world. The scholars disputed this totalitarian vision, citing evidence that Baha'u'llah envisioned no such future. There was also extensive discussion of the Baha'i electoral process, which allows no nominations or public discussion of candidates. Almost no incumbents on the American National Spiritual Assembly have been unseated in elections during the last 30 years. Term limits were proposed as one possible way to open up the system to new blood.

Although the questions and criticisms expressed by the scholars in Talisman were generally respectful of Baha'i authorities, many of the newer members of the list became irate that such matters were discussed at all. The worldwide Baha'i community has rigid controls for discourse on internal matters, with all publications controlled or censored by the administration; even mild dissent is regarded as treasonous.

Complaints may be made through the process of "consultation" with various levels of administrators, but may not be expressed outside that context and especially never in public. Thus Talisman offered participants the first chance to discuss flaws in the Baha'i community outside administrative channels, and many were shocked by the debate that ensued. Soon it became common for more conservative Baha'is to insinuate that the scholars and their sympathizers were "Covenant-breakers," which is the greatest of sins in Baha'i theology. The "Covenant" is the line of succession from Baha'u'llah to the Universal House of Justice, the world governing body, which was first elected in 1963. To break the Covenant is to attack the center of authority within the faith and to advocate an alternative source of authority; such disputes have arisen with each change in leadership. Baha'is are ordered to avoid all contact with Covenant-breakers.

None of the Talisman scholars challenged the legitimacy of the governing body, nor did they show sympathy for past "Covenant-breakers," a few thousand of whom continue in various small sects. Nevertheless the Talisman discussions were viewed with alarm by authorities at national Baha'i headquarters in Wilmette, Illinois, and in Haifa. This generated an investigation by Stephen Birkland, a member of the Continental Board of Counselors for North America, acting under direction of the Haifa authorities.

Birkland personally interrogated Langness, Lee, Cole, and John Walbridge. Scholl agreed to meet with Birkland only on condition that the meeting be recorded for accuracy, a condition that was deemed unacceptable. Cole and Walbridge refused a second meeting requested by Birkland. David Langness had his rights to voting and attendance at major functions removed by the American National Spiritual Assembly, which never specified the charges against him but implied that it was punishing him for a posting he made on Talisman.

Cole, upon being told he was being investigated for "statements contrary to the Covenant," resigned his membership, as did Linda Walbridge after similar remarks. Birkland had chosen to confront Cole and the Walbridges in late-night telephone calls. The ultimate fate of Langness, who appealed his punishment to the Universal House of Justice, and John Walbridge, who has not resigned, remains to be determined. When contacted by e-mail, Birkland declined to comment on the controversy.

Defending its actions, the Universal House of Justice wrote to a family member of one of the accused; the letter later appeared on the front page of the journal "The American Baha'i." It argues that Talisman was the continuation of a conspiracy born in the mid-1980s involving a liberal Baha'i journal, "Dialogue," which closed after Baha'i authorities accused it of being subversive.

The letter goes on to describe the Talisman scholars as a "dissident group of Baha'is who are attempting to arouse widespread dissatisfaction in the community and thereby to bring about changes in the structure and principles of Baha'i administration, making it accord more closely with their personal notions." It accuses them of "publicly and privily assailing the institutions of the Cause" and "generalizing specific accusations of injustice to such an extent as to accuse the entire system of corruption, not only in practice, but also in form and theory."

John Walbridge closed Talisman in May of 1996. Juan Cole, now an ex-Baha'i, opened a new Talisman list the following month. Its e-mail address is talisman@umich.edu.

K. Paul Johnson was an active participant in Talisman from its beginnings through its demise. He was a Baha'i from 1969 to 1974. His article on Edgar Cayce appears in this issue.

The monthly newsletter Religion Watch reports in its January 1997 issue on my Gnosis article about Talisman. This is "a newsletter monitoring trends in contemporary religion" and features reports on such things as church burnings, Christian Coalition politics, churches' reactions to welfare reform, and research findings on tithing practices. -K.P.J.

BAHA'I MOVEMENT TARGETS DISSENTERS

The Baha'i movement is experiencing growing conflicts and dissent over its members involvement in computer forums, reports Gnosis, (Winter), a magazine on esoteric spirituality. While regarded as a liberal and nondogmatic religion, the worldwide Baha'i community has enforced "rigid controls for discourse on internal matters, with all publications controlled or censored by the administration; even mild dissent is regarded as treasonous," writes K. Paul Johnson. The Baha'is gained most of their members in the U.S. in the early 1970s (increasing nearly to 100,000), although membership levels have been stagnant since. Some of the young converts of the 1970s became scholars of Persian, Middle Eastern history and related fields. In 1994, a discussion group on the Internet was started by these scholars which often questioned or addressed controversial teachings.

Dissent was voiced over women's exclusion from the Baha'i governing body, the Universal House of Justice, and the teaching that Baha'is are destined to take over all functions of local and national government and create an international government. The position that any Baha'i writing about the movement has to submit such writings for review to Baha'i leaders also drew a good deal of criticism from the discussion group (which numbered about 100 members), which is called Talisman. After almost two years of existence, Talisman became the focus of a series of investigations by authorities at the Baha'i World Center in Haifa, Israel and also by leaders in the U.S. Baha'i leaders have called the scholars and their sympathizers "dissidents," with more conservative members charging that they are "covenant breakers," which means advocating an alternative source of authority in the religion. Baha'is are ordered to avoid all contact with covenant breakers. Although Talisman disbanded last May, an ex-Baha'i has recently opened a new Talisman group.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Author: Jonathan Grobe author profile

Email: grobe@netins.net

Date: 1997/03/29

Forums: alt.config

The vote for the unmoderated group talk.religion.bahai has just failed 157:691

But given that there were 157 Yes votes I believe there is sufficient interest for an alt.* group.

For your newsgroups file:
alt.religion.bahaiBahai faith.

[Adapted from the talk.religion.bahai proposal]

RATIONALE: alt.religion.bahai

All newsgroups and listservs given to the discussion of the Bahai faith are moderated. A need exists for an unmoderated forum, and this proposed newsgroup would meet that need.

It is intended that alt.religion.bahai will complement, rather than supplant, the existing moderated group soc.religion.bahai. The establishment of unmoderated companion groups is a well-accepted practice on Usenet.

CHARTER: alt.religion.bahai

All topics or ideas relevant to the Bahai faith -- its history, teachings, theology -- and so on would be appropriate areas for discussion.

Crossposting of articles not specifically relevant to the Bahai faith is strongly discouraged. Also discouraged are personal messages, large ASCII graphics, special-format files, and any postings of a purely commercial nature.

Readers are asked not to start or prolong flamewars and excessive crossposts. Articles may be crossposted to soc.religion.bahai -- subject, of course, to the approval of the moderator of that group.

Readers may also post articles that have been rejected from soc.religion.bahai, so long as they conform to the charter above.

--

Jonathan Grobe <grobe@netins.net> Note: All my comments on the group-mentors list and alt.config are simply my opinion.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Author: Jonathan Grobe author profile

Email: grobe@netins.net

Date: 1997/04/03

Forums: alt.religion.bahai, alt.config, news.groups, soc.culture.iranian, alt.religion.islam,
talk.religion.misc

The vote for the unmoderated group talk.religion.bahai has just failed 157:691. But given that there were 157 Yes votes I believe there is sufficient interest for an alt.* group.

alt.religion.bahai, a newsgroup for the discussion of the Bahai faith has just been created.

The message to create the group may take from a couple hours to a few days to reach your site. Many news administrators only add new alt.* groups on user request. So if it has not been added to your site in the next few days ask your news administrator to add it: Write to him at the address news or usenet at your site or to the technical support people there (address: support)). Because of the poor propagation of new alt groups it will be a while before a significant amount of traffic shows up.

[Adapted from the talk.religion.bahai proposal]

RATIONALE: alt.religion.bahai

All newsgroups and listservs given to the discussion of the Bahai faith are moderated. A need exists for an unmoderated forum, and this proposed newsgroup would meet that need.

It is intended that alt.religion.bahai will complement, rather than supplant, the existing moderated group soc.religion.bahai. The establishment of unmoderated companion groups is a well-accepted practice on Usenet.

CHARTER: alt.religion.bahai

All topics or ideas relevant to the Bahai faith -- its history, teachings, theology -- and so on would be appropriate areas for discussion.

Crossposting of articles not specifically relevant to the Bahai faith is strongly discouraged. Also discouraged are personal messages, large ASCII graphics, special-format files, and any postings of a purely commercial nature.

Readers are asked not to start or prolong flamewars and excessive crossposts. Articles may be crossposted to soc.religion.bahai -- subject, of course, to the approval of the moderator of that group.

Readers may also post articles that have been rejected from soc.religion.bahai, so long as they conform to the charter above.

--

Jonathan Grobe <grobe@netins.net>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

H-Net is a tax-supported national and international database for scholars in the humanities and social sciences, located at Michigan State University.

For at least several months, the web pages listing dissident Bahai books have again been unavailable to the general public of tax payers and researchers. Over the years, I have seen this happen with H-Net many times on a variety of issues. If you click "Digital Library," you'll receive a menu with the option of "Sources in European Languages." Click it, and you'll see another menu for "Books," as of 11-10-09, that the link does not lead to an active webpage:

<https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/>

<https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/index/diglib/diglib.htm>

<https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/index/diglib/books.html> 2-2012

Here again is the URL that's conveniently defective: <https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/index/diglib/books.htm>

A second link exists for those to whom the editors of H-Bahai wish to grant access. Here is what H-Bahai is trying to suppress and bias the reader against, what it should be for the general Internet user, Bahai or otherwise, <https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/index/diglib/books.html>

<https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/index/diglib/books.htm>

Through such stratagems, plausible deniability, if you will, Baha'is, scholarly and otherwise, routinely suppress information that they do not want people to know about and manipulate dissent. The headnotes and other introductory material to some of these books is highly tendentious and misleading to the uninformed person.

This tactic has been especially applied over the decades to the books of Ruth White, Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, and Julie Chanler.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Having received many messages of Bahai harassment and hate mail, over a number of years, or endured similar threats to intimidate me into silence, it seems to me samples ought to be posted:

Hate mail: talk.religion.bahai 3/14/97

A Personal Threat 6/9/97

Bahai "art"/hate mail 7/8/97

[\[Subject left blank but from a regular poster to Bahai-Discuss\]](#) 9/29/97

Re: U.S. Baha'is to Iran's Pres. Khatami re Baha'is in Iran \(a 1/23/98

Re: U.S. Baha'is to Iran's Pres. Khatami re Baha'is in Iran \(a 1/27/98

Re: talk.religion.bahai 1/28/98

Are you or are you not? 1/29/98

Harassing, vilifying hate mail.... 1/29/98

Re: Threatening Bahai email 5/28/98

Re Murder of Dr. Daniel Jordan 7/28/98

Death of JB Marangella 10/11/99

Netabuse - Update 6/26/99

Continuing Harassment 1/31/2000; 2/24/2001

From: the white hot ball of anger in my gut 9/14/2001

Hate Mail 2001

Hate Mail 2002

Hate Mail 2004 "babytorturer" - slander by talisman9
"moderator" Steve Marshall

Hate Mail 2005 "Vilification"

Hate Threats & Intimidation 2008

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Bahai "art"/hate mail
From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Date: 1997/07/08
Message-ID: <33C23801.4DE0@hotmail.com>
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc,soc.religion.iranian,soc.culture.israel,soc.rights.human
[More Headers][Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]
Bruce Limber wrote:
>

> > FG wrote:
> > There is no art allowed in the Bahai Faith.... only propaganda.... > > what passes for "art" is really only the crudest banalities > > permitted....

>
> Of which the tripe you never seem to tire of posting is the prime example.
>
> If you have nothing constructive to say, kindly do yourself and the rest of > us a favor and SAY NOTHING WHATEVER.
>
> I regret that you seem to wish only to demonstrate how we should _not_ act.

Another topic not allowed in the Bahai Faith: That propaganda is propaganda
even when called "art."

--
FG
UseNet: alt.religion.bahai

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: A personal threat
From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Date: 1997/06/09
Message-ID: <339BE64F.7275@hotmail.com>
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc,soc.rights.human,soc.culture.iranian,soc.culture.israel
[More Headers]
[Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]

Someone sent the following message to my email account last Friday.
I'm not sure how this was done but I have contacted hotmail.com and request that if anything appears on alt.religion.bahai or elsewhere in my name that is not congruent with my past postings it be taken with a grain or ton of salt.... I'd even appreciate being notified about it. This message was not sent from my own account....

-----begin message:

From FG@hotmail.com Fri Jun 6 17:22:33 1997
Received: from hotmail.com ([205.161.129.79]) by basement.replay.com (8.8.5/RePlay, Inc.) with SMTP id CAA21398
for FG@hotmail.com; Sat, 7 Jun 1997 02:22:25 +0200 (MET DST)
Date: Sat, 7 Jun 1997 02:22:25 +0200 (MET DST)
From: FG@hotmail.com
Message-Id: <199706070022.CAA21398@basement.replay.com>
Subject: So! The truth comes out...

I know what you are. You will be exposed. You have been warned.
-----end message

--
FG

UseNet: alt.religion.bahai

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: fw Neo Luddite Re: [bahai-faith] Re murder of Baha'i leader Dr. Daniel Jordan
Date: Tuesday, July 28, 1998 8:00 AM

FYI

-----Original Message-----

From: Neo Luddite <neoluddite@mailcity.com>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Cc: Milissa Boyer Kafes <mbkafes@bestweb.net>
Date: Sunday, July 26, 1998 4:05 PM
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] Re murder of Baha'i leader Dr. Daniel Jordan

>On Sun, 26 Jul 1998 11:00:08 Milissa Boyer Kafes wrote:

>

>> Mr Glaysher, do you have any idea what you have > done???

>

>Dear Milissa,

>

>Glaysher knows exactly what he did, and he did with malicious intent. Glaysher studied, and I believe taught, "rhetoric," the art of persuasion. He is as precise as a scientist in selection of words and in his use of email lists and Usenet groups.

>

>I am very sorry and very angry about what Glaysher did to you and your husband. Yet he has revealed his true nature to you. Glaysher has a long history of using people's private email without permission. He twists and bends and exploits people's words to suit his purposes. And in this case, as you point out, it is quite evident that he is a blatant liar about when he sent your husband's post off to everyone before contacting you NOT after.

>

>Glaysher is a trojan horse. His issue, his crusade is supposedly "censorship." But I suggest you study his posts. At least half of them either present the Faith in a negative light or quote someone else doing the same. His real attack is on the Faith itself. I will post, if you like, his vicious, racist remarks about Persians as just an example of one of hundreds of posts carefully calculated to undermine and discredit the Faith.

>

>About censorship: Glaysher makes a big deal of the events surrounding the Talisman I list. What Fred doesn't tell you that on a list that was full of angry flames and hostile attacks, Glaysher was the ONLY person to be permanently banned from that list because he was so disruptive. Glaysher was banned from the BCCA lists for the same reason.

>

>

>It is neither; it is my freedom of expression, what Glaysher advocates. Just as was Glayher's abuse of husband's private email and his calumny about the unsolved murder of Daniel Jordan. We both are free to say what we want to say.

>

>With malice aforethought rather than a "heavy heart," Galysher wrote:

>

>"It is with a heavy heart compelled by the weight of conscience that I observe that the murder in 1982 of Dr. Daniel Jordan in Stamford, Connecticut, then a member of the NSA, remains unsolved. What with the ever-worsening pattern of tyranny and intrigue, I suggest he case should perhaps be reopened and serious investigation given to the possibility that Bahai fanaticism lies hidden at the root of his cruel execution-style murder."

>

>Whatever might be the internal difficulties within our community, murder conspiracies are not one of them.

>

>

>Milissa, should you or your husband wish to pursue libel, copyright or other legal action against Glaysher, let me help. Here is where he is located:

- >
- >Work (deleted):
- >
- >[deleted]
- >[address deleted]
- >Office: [deleted]
- >Voice Mail: [deleted]
- >Pager: [deleted]
- >FAX: [deleted]
- >
- >Home:
- >
- >Frederick and [deleted]Glaysher
- >[deleted]
- >[deleted]
- >Phone: [deleted]
- >
- >The major intersection near his house is [deleted]. and [deleted]Rd. He lives right off the side streets of of [deleted]Ave. and [deleted]Dr.
- >
- >Frederick, feel free to respond with a rant, or whatever, and post and cross-post this to the Universe. Such a post will offer yet more evidence of the "Glaysher-Gospel."
- >
- >Neoluddite
- >
- >
- >
- >
- >Now MailCity offers forwarding so you can check your MailCity messages and other e-mail all in one place. Go to <https://www.mailcity.com>
- >----
- >List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>
- >To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com
- >To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com
- >--
- >Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.Makelist.com> !
- >

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Apparently a Bahai impersonating me posted in my name near the end of the 3rd interest poll for talk.religion.bahai:

From: News Administrator[SMTP:usenet@tahina.priv.at]
Sent: Sunday, December 20, 1998 10:15 AM
To: FG@hotmail.com
Subject: Automatic reply to your test message.

This message has been generated automatically in order to help you track the circulation in the test newsgroups. If you do not wish any reply from this program, just include the words "no reply" or its translation in french or german in the subject line or in the 5 first lines of the body of your message.

Your article <M161Sir.2u96h8pn5T7PCUex.zQIBENDaq0GECz@news3.newsguy.com> was received by tahina.priv.at at Sun, 20 Dec 1998 16:15:51 CET by the path tahina.priv.at!news.netizen.com.au!news.cid.net!news.ems.psu.edu!news.cis.ohio-state.edu!news.maxwell.syr.edu!feed1.news.rcn.net!rcn!newsfeed.cwix.com!

Your message travelled on the network during 0 day(s), 1 hour(s), 54 minute(s), 57 second(s) before arriving here.

Following headers have been recognized in your message:

Path: tahina.priv.at!news.netizen.com.au!news.cid.net!news.ems.psu.edu!news.cis.ohio-state.edu!news.maxwell.syr.edu!feed1.news.rcn.net!rcn!newsfeed.cwix.com
Newsgroups: alt.test.uk.test,swnet.test,han.test,fr.test,news.test,bofh.test,fj.test,news.admin.net-abuse.usenet,alt.irc,news.groups
From: "FG" <FG@hotmail.com>
Approved: Pedophiles@vszbr.cz
Date: 20 Dec 1998 13:20:54 GMT
Subject: cmsg cancel <75aqk2$711@news3.newsguy.com>
Message-ID: <M161Sir.2u96h8pn5T7PCUex.zQIBENDaq0GECz@news3.newsguy.com>
Control: cancel <75aqk2$711@news3.newsguy.com>
Organization: Undocumented Illegal Alien Czech Pedophiles in Denmark Nntp-Posting-Host: ssn.ochin.on.ca
Lines: 2

Following headers are present in your message but have not been recognized by the application. This does not necessarily mean that they are not legal:

X-No-Archive: Pedophile
Pedophile: Barry Bouwsma
Pedophiles: Barry Bouwsma & Friends
Unrepentant-Pederast: Guy Polis
X-Cancelled-By: dritz@primenet.com (David Ritz)
Xref: tahina.priv.at control.cancel:83249

The first lines in the body of your message are:

-> BARRY BOUWSMA IS A PIMPING PEDOPHILE
->

If you have any questions about this software, please send mail to <usenet@tahina.priv.at>.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Death of JB Marangella
From: "Mesbah Javid" <11111174NoSpam@3web.net>
Date: 1999/10/11
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai
JJ,

Last night I had a terrible nightmare in which your dad was dead and just like Mirza Yahya no one was there to bury him, and even you refused to wash him, and the grave digger was fleeing away, and you were saying that he lived long enough to see that all his efforts came to naught and during his own lifetime witnessed the glory of the Faith which for decades had so foolishly, so shamelessly and pitifully striven to extinguish.

Thanks God it was only a nightmare.

(end of original message)

You can view this message and the related discussion by following this link:

https://www.deja.com/%5bST_rn%3dmd%5d/dnquery.xp?search=thread&svcclass=dnserver&recnum=%3c7tt85\$nd3\$1@iceman.tac.net%3e%231/1

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Read and then compare Vinson Jamir

From: Saman Ahmadi <perspolis@earthlink.net>

Subject: Netabuse - Update 6/26/99

Date: Saturday, June 26, 1999 10:13 AM

This is what I have been able to do so far:

1. I have consulted with a lawyer and there is definitely a viable libel case to be made of FG's calumny against "Baha'is" and the "Universal House of Justice".

2. I have contacted Bigfoot.com and ReMarq (sp?) and I should hear back from them regarding FG's posting of repetitive messages and his slanderous comments regarding "Baha'is" and the "Universal House of Justice".

Regarding the potential lawsuit, two things will have to be hashed out:

1. My legal standing as the person bring the suit.

2. FG's fitness to stand trial.

I'll keep you posted (pun intended),
-saman

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Dear reader, I invite you to compare this duplicitous email with the general testimony on this website regarding the tactics used by fundamentalists to suppress freedom of speech and slander and discredit people of conscience. This person is apparently alluding to Mirza Ahmad Sohrab's coining of the term "slandorous vilification" to describe the tactics of Baha'i fanatics against him during the 1940s, tactics still routinely used as witnessed by many people.

----- Original Message -----

From: "Jim Habegger" <ozpeople@yahoo.com>

To: <@comcast.net>

Sent: Friday, April 08, 2005 5:24 PM

Subject: [unclassified] Assault on freedom of conscience

> Dear Fred,
>
> I think you're perceptive enough to see that your > vilification campaigns on the Internet are an assault > on freedom of conscience.
>
> If freedom of conscience really does mean something to > you, I urge you to do some soul-searching, and decide > if selling your books really means more to you than > promoting freedom of conscience.
>
> Jim Habegger

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

talisman9 "moderator" Steve Marshall - "babytorturer"

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hate16.htm>

[https://groups.google.com/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/6b786f5442f3b3fa?
dmode=source&hl=en](https://groups.google.com/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/6b786f5442f3b3fa?dmode=source&hl=en)

Full original messages cited below may be found at talisman9 "baby torturer"

Also see related posts on talk.religion.bahai - "baby torturer"

After extensive harassment from Baha'i fundamentalists, a widely used tactic to control and coerce those who fail to toe the party line, a moderator of talisman9 has requested that her identity be suppressed from these messages, in apparent fear of recrimination by Baha'i fanatics and "administrators."

Dear non-bahai observer:

In July of 2004, Steve Marshall, a "moderator" of talisman9, corrupted my signature file slandering me as a "babytorturer," only to be disingenuously defended by Juan Cole, "moderator" and owner of the list:

> >

This is yet one more incident that calls into question the true motives of the "loyal opposition," Marshall being merely one of many such individuals spreading disinformation and libel in bahai cyberspace, while claiming cover behind the "disenrollment" of his wife Alison Marshall. Far from talisman9 being a place for "liberals" to discuss freely the compelling issues of free speech and conscience, it is as tightly manipulated for the identification and control of "miscreants," "covenant breakers", and other thinking people, and their management, as any of the other more fundamentalist fora, such as BeliefNet or the BCCA's Bahai-Studies list.

NOTE: After harassing me as a "baby-torturer," I am the one THROWN off talisman9, unjustly insulted and libeled by Steve Marshall and Juan Cole, in a manner highly reminiscent of the unjust BCCA's treatment of me in 1997. The non-Bahai observer might very well want to linger on this exchange and what it reveals.

"The best beloved of all things in my sight is Justice." --Baha'u'llah

Dear non-bahai observer:

Please note how Steve Marshall has corrupted my signature file at the very bottom in his reply message censoring my legitimate post to talisman9. It reveals a great deal about his "moderating" tactics on talisman9.

> > FG
> > The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> > [highlighting added]
>

> Juan & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment],
>
> Is there a reason you're tolerating Marshall's continual censoring and > harassing people? He openly slandered me as a covenant breaker early > on, as did others, when I first began to post excerpts from Sohrab and > terrorized others into silence. I repeatedly documented how such > tactics were at variance with talisman9's purported Description, which > is obviously only intended to work one way.
>
> I want it stopped now. Not in two weeks. Or stop the charade. Openly > state talisman9 exists as a deceitful forum for the contemptible > underlings of the administration.
>
> Allowing it to go on reflects poorly on both of you and on anyone else > involved with talisman9.
>
> FG
> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

FYI

Again, I request that something be done immediately instead of tacitly approving Marshall's "moderating" and corrupting my signature file as detailed below: "babytorturer." That's inexcusable. Or remove your "Description" to reflect the type of venue you then are apparently supporting.

FG

> From: Cal E. Rollins (crollins@webtv.net)
> Fred, Steve, Rabia,
>
> Is it legal to change somebody else's signature file? It sure doesn't > sound like it would be. To me it's like forging a check. I doubt that > the authorities would accept, "Gee, Your Honor. I was just having fun > when I forged that check." --Cal
> --
>
> Appears to be great fun to talisman9 "moderator" Steve Marshall and > people like bahai scholar Susan Maneck.... and tells us a lot about the > moral condition of the bahai administration....
>
> --
> FG
> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
>
> Join a new Yahoo Group, Bahai Censorship!
> <https://groups.yahoo.com/group/bahaicensorship/>

----- Original Message ----- From: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

To: FG
Sent: Sunday, July 11, 2004 12:41 AM
Subject: Censorship/Apology

Dear Frederick,

I recognize the substance of your complaint and made the exact same point to Juan Cole on July 9:

>Juan Cole wrote:
>
>>>However, if this was a matter of private communication, it is none of my >>>business,
>>
>>
>
>It isn't a simple matter of private communication when Steve is >communicating with a subscriber in the capacity of a moderator.

>

>[identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

>

Obviously, my point was ignored or deemed irrelevant. Personally, I am sorry for how you have been treated and how the situation was handled.

Sincerely, [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

Juan Cole,

Private email? Not so. He was acting in his capacity, which you, as list owner, in one way or another, gave him, and therefore bear some responsibility, further proven by the fact that Yahoo's customer service advised me to contact you. Yahoo has standards and requirements, which don't include such tactics.

"Babytorturer": You appear to justify, the most despicable, lowest fanatical tactics imaginable. To ignore his actions and support them, blaming the victim, is unworthy of you.

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Join a new Yahoo Group, Bahai Censorship!

<https://groups.yahoo.com/group/bahaicensorship/>

Given the carefully calculated deceit to discredit and malign me, on the part of Professor Cole in his email below, one might want to pause long and hard over what his real loyalties and intentions are. "Blaming the victim" of libel and the just-plain-nasty ill-will and injustice on the part of Marshall, is manifestly absurd. Note Cole appears more motivated to suppress knowledge of Sohrab's experience and writings, the importance of which he himself shouldn't be ignorant of. To counsel me to be "good humored and polite to the moderators," when I'm the butt of an outrageous attack is again deceitful, as is suggesting it was I who was harassing, not harassed! Any normal person would feel outrage and want to defend himself. The non-Bahai observer might very well want to linger on this exchange and what it reveals about one of the supposedly "liberal" discussion groups. Similar incidents have happened many times, indeed regularly, hidden from the public eye, on BeliefNet, Bahai-Studies, AOL Message Boards, soc.religion.bahai, and elsewhere in bahai cyberspace.

>> [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment],

>>
>> Thanks for your note.
>>
>> Cole's equivocations call into question whether he's even >> an honest participant. I continue to believe he should >> resign from being the list owner of talisman9, if he refuses >> to remove Steve Marshall for his actions. Yahoo should >> remove Cole or delete the entire group. There can be no >> excuse for smearing me as a "babytorturer," and THAT >> is what Cole is seeking to justify....
>>
>> FG
>> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
>> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

talisman9 "moderator" Steve Marshall - "babytorturer"

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hate16.htm>

[https://groups.google.com/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/6b786f5442f3b3fa?
dmode=source&hl=en](https://groups.google.com/group/talk.religion.bahai/msg/6b786f5442f3b3fa?dmode=source&hl=en)

This file contains the FULL copies of the messages involved. A more easily readable version of these messages may be found at talisman9 "babytorturer" slander

In July of 2004, Steve Marshall, a "moderator" of talisman9, corrupted my signature file slandering me as a "babytorturer," only to be disingenuously defended by Juan Cole, "moderator" and owner of the list.

This is yet one more incident that calls into question the true motives of the "loyal opposition," Marshall being merely one of many such individuals spreading disinformation and libel in bahai cyberspace, while claiming cover behind the "disenrollment" of his wife Alison Marshall. Far from talisman9 being a place for "liberals" to discuss freely the compelling issues of free speech and conscience, it is as tightly manipulated for the identification and control of "miscreants," "covenant breakers", and other thinking people, and their management, as any of the other more fundamentalist fora, such as BeliefNet or the BCCA's Bahai-Studies list.

NOTE: After harassing me as a "baby-torturer," I am the one THROWN off talisman9, unjustly insulted and libeled by Steve Marshall and Juan Cole, in a manner highly reminiscent of the unjust BCCA's treatment of me in 1997. The non-Bahai observer might very well want to linger on this exchange and what it reveals.

"The best beloved of all things in my sight is Justice." --Baha'u'llah

----- Original Message -----

From: " CAUTION > Bahai Censorship " <BI*P*GS@LIBERTY.COM>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Thursday, July 08, 2004 4:36 PM

Subject: Open Letter to Juan Cole & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] - talisman9

Dear non-bahai observer:

Please note how Steve Marshall has corrupted my signature file at the very bottom in his reply message censoring my legitimate post to talisman9. It reveals a great deal about his "moderating" tactics on talisman9.

--

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

----- Original Message -----

From: "FG" <fg...>

To: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

Cc: <jrcole@... >

Sent: Thursday, July 08, 2004 4:27 PM

Subject: [personal] talisman9 - ao forum

> Juan & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment],

>

> Is there a reason you're tolerating Marshall's continual censoring and > harassing people? He openly slandered me as a covenant breaker early > on, as did others, when I first began to post excerpts from Sohrab and > terrorized others into silence. I repeatedly documented how such > tactics were at variance with talisman9's purported Description, which > is obviously only intended to work one way.

>

> I want it stopped now. Not in two weeks. Or stop the charade. Openly > state talisman9 exists as a deceitful forum for the contemptible > underlings of the administration.

>

> Allowing it to go on reflects poorly on both of you and on anyone else > involved with talisman9.

>

> FG

> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

>

> --

> Date: 7/08/2004 12:20:59 -0000

> From: "Steve Marshall" <asmash@es.co.nz>
> To: "FG2003" <fg... >
> Subject: Message not approved: Whatever happened to the Justice List?
> All headers
> Hi Fred and everyone on TRB,
>
> "Talisman is a discussion list not a chat list. Messages are expected > to be constructive. Posters should back up their opinions with > evidence and argument."
> <https://groups.yahoo.com/group/talisman9/>
>
> Thanks for offering this message to Talisman. Unfortunately, lone > rhetorical questions, particularly ones as cryptic as this is, don't > meet the Talisman rules. I look forward to seeing this message on TRB, > though, and hope my response is good enough to merit publication there > as well.
>
> cheers > Steve
>
>
> > Baha'u'llah's Justice or the incorporated organization's justice?
> >
> > Which does talisman9 represent?
> >
> > My, how so many questions are rhetorical....
> >
> > FG
> > The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> > [highlighting added]
>
>

Dear Frederick,

Thank you for the information. I sincerely share your concerns, but as one moderator I have no real input on anything. Apparently only the list owner Juan Cole can make this decision. Juan's address is <jrcole@umich.edu>

Steve's moderating shift began July 3. I will take over beginning on July 17 for two weeks. You are welcome to send your posts to talisman at this time and I will post them.

Sincerely, Marleen

FG wrote:

>FYI
>
>Marleen,
>
>Steve Marshall is censoring and suppressing my messages. See below. It >is to be noted he and others slandered my early posts on Sohrab, >tactics supposedly not acceptable according to talisman9's >Description. If you're running an honest forum, he should be removed >from "moderating."
>
>FG
>The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
><https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
>
>
>-----
>
>Date: 7/07/2004 02:45:19 -0000
>From: "Steve Marshall" <asmarsh@es.co.nz>
>To: "FG2003" <>
>Subject: Message not approved: Why is T9 a bastion of social >alienation? All headers >Hi Fred,
>
>"All messages about list moderation are to be sent privately to the >acting moderator, or to the list owner and moderators at >talisman9-owner@yahoogroups.com. Do not send messages about moderating >to the list."
><https://groups.yahoo.com/group/talisman9/>
>
>cheers >Steve
>
>
>
>
>
>>--- In talisman9@yahoogroups.com, [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] wrote:
>>
>>
>>>Dear William,
>>>
>>>I can't remember if what I am going to attempt to paraphrase was >>>originally posted on talisman or another list. A past or present
>>>
>>>
>>member
>>
>>
>>>of the US NSA (Firuz K.?) was reported to have said that when
>>>

>>>
>>Americans
>>
>>
>>>choose to became Bahais they voluntarily give up some of their
>>>
>>>
>>civil
>>
>>
>>>rights which conflict with Bahai principles, such as free speech
>>>
>>>
>>to
>>
>>
>>>criticize political leaders. Perhaps someone else on the list can >>>provide more information.
>>>
>>>[identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]
>>>
>>>
>>--
>>
>>My prediction is that if anyone attempted to provide more >>information it would be censored "for the good of the faith"....
>>
>>FG
>>The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
>><https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
>>
>>
>
>
>Date: 7/06/2004 12:18:57 -0000
>From: "Steve Marshall" <asmarsh@es.co.nz>
>To: "FG2003" <>
>Subject: Message not approved: Sohrab > impulse to Bahai Obscurantism
>All headers
>Hi Fred,
>
>As I said in my last message, these extracts from Sohrab's book have >been running for some weeks now. They've contributed little to >discussion and appear to do little more than advertise Sohrab's book.
>I think you have saturation coverage by now, so I'm introducing a >2-week break from them during my stint. The next moderator may well >feel differently and may well let them through.
>
>cheers
>Steve
>

>
>
>>This is indeed what the bahai faith has become:
>>
>>
>>"The impulse to Bahai Obscurantism, or to any other form of >>obscurantism, arises from a deeply rooted, if not an inherent, >>tendency in human nature to distrust free inquiry. This tendency >>becomes aggravated when it operates in the sphere of religion. An >>uneasy suspicion of knowledge and its results; a dislike for a >>liberal and inquisitive mind, and a feeling of fear in regard to >>independent investigation of the truth as for something not wholly >>good for any one--these sentiments have contributed to the evolution >>of Bahai Obscurantism, which is the herald of professional or class >>exclusiveness in the Cause as exemplified by the National Spiritual >>Assembly, and the local assemblies" (271).
>>
>>--
>>Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. Broken Silence. The Story of Today's Struggle >>for Religious Freedom. New York: Universal Publishing, 1942.
>>Reprinted. H-Bahai: Lansing, Michigan, 2004.
>><https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/diglib/books/P-T/S/sohrab/BS.htm>
>>
>>Sohrab's entire book may be downloaded in one click. 21 megabytes.
>><https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/archives/SohrabBrokenSilence.pdf>
>>
>>
>>--
>>FG
>>The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
>><https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
>>
>>--
>>See Professor Juan R. I. Cole, University of Michigan,
>>"Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community,"
>>Religious Studies Review, Vol. 43, no. 3 (March, 2002):195-217:
>><https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2002/fundbhfn.htm>
>>
>>In his book Modernity and the Millennium, published by Columbia >>University Press in 1998, Professor Cole observes the Baha'i >>administration has increasingly come under the control of >>fundamentalists, "stressing scriptural literalism . . . theocracy, >>copyright, intellectual intolerance, and denying key >>democratic values (196)."
>>
>>

Dear non-bahai observer:

Please note how Steve Marshall has corrupted my signature file at the very bottom in his reply message censoring my legitimate post to talisman9. It reveals a great deal about his "moderating" tactics on talisman9.

--

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

----- Original Message -----

From: "FG" <fg...>

To: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

Cc: <jrcole@... >

Sent: Thursday, July 08, 2004 4:27 PM

Subject: [personal] talisman9 - ao forum

> Juan & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment],

>

> Is there a reason you're tolerating Marshall's continual censoring and > harassing people? He openly slandered me as a covenant breaker early > on, as did others, when I first began to post excerpts from Sohrab and > terrorized others into silence. I repeatedly documented how such > tactics were at variance with talisman9's purported Description, which > is obviously only intended to work one way.

>

> I want it stopped now. Not in two weeks. Or stop the charade. Openly > state talisman9 exists as a deceitful forum for the contemptible > underlings of the administration.

>

> Allowing it to go on reflects poorly on both of you and on anyone else > involved with talisman9.

>

> FG

> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Original Message -----

From:  CAUTION > Bahai Censorship **

To: jrcole@umich.edu

Cc: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] Sent: Thursday, July 08, 2004 4:43 PM

Subject: Open Letter to Juan Cole & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] - talisman9

FYI

Again, I request that something be done immediately instead of tacitly approving Marshall's "moderating" and corrupting my signature file as detailed below: "babytorturer." That's inexcusable. Or remove your "Description" to reflect the type of venue you then are apparently supporting.

FG

----- Original Message -----

From: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

To: "FG" <>

Sent: Thursday, July 08, 2004 5:01 PM

Subject: Censorship

> Dear Frederick,

>

> I will contact Juan Cole about the moderating issues you have raised and > let you know of the results.

>

> Sincerely, [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

>

>

----- Original Message -----

From: " CAUTION > Bahai Censorship " <BI*P*GS@LIBERTY.COM>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Friday, July 09, 2004 8:02 AM

Subject: Re: Open Letter to Juan Cole & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] - talisman9

> To be clear. Here is my usual signature file:

>

> --

> FG

> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

>

> Here is what Steve Marshall changed it to in his capacity as

> "moderator" of talisman9:

>

> > > FG

>> > > The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

>> > >

>

> That change speaks volumes about the tactics and techniques > of fundamentalists among my fellow bahais....
>
> For further details see "The Bahai Technique":
> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>
>
> FG
> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
>
>

----- Original Message -----

From: "Yahoo!Groups" <groups-abuse@yahoo-inc.com>

To:

Sent: Friday, July 09, 2004 2:02 PM

Subject: Re: Abuse - Harassment/Threats (KMM14283705V96115L0KM)

> Hello,
>
> Thank you for writing to Yahoo! Groups.
>
> We appreciate your report of possible abuse in Yahoo! Groups. The owner > and/or moderator is responsible for maintaining the content of the group > and can remove any material (or a member) that is in violation of the > Yahoo! Terms of Service (TOS) and/or Community Guidelines. We recommend > contacting the owner/moderator regarding your concerns. You can do so by > sending an email to:
>
> (groupname)-owner@yahoogroups.com
>
> Please continue to notify us of any questionable content you find in > Yahoo! Groups, especially if you are still concerned after you have > contacted the owner/moderator. Yahoo! is very concerned about preventing > the abuse of Groups, and we will continue to evaluate any material that > violates the Yahoo! Terms of Service.
>
> For more information about the Yahoo! TOS, please visit:
>
> <https://docs.yahoo.com/info/terms/>
>
> Thank you again for contacting Yahoo! Customer Care.
>
> Regards,
>
> Vanessa
>

> Yahoo! Customer Care
> <https://www.yahoo.com/>

>
> 10847630

>
>
>
> Original Message Follows:

> -----
>

> Who Are You Writing About
> FG2003

>
> Subject:
> Harassment/Threats

>
> What Group Are You Reporting
> talisman9

>
> Type Your Feedback Here:
> Steve Marshall is the > current "moderator" of the talisman9 > group. As a fundamentalist bahai, he > has repeatedly censored my messages. I > have repeatedly complained to Juan > Cole and [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment], who have thus > far done nothing about it.

>
> In the message below, my URL in my > signature file was changed from > www.FG.com/bahaicensorship to > www.FG.com/babytorturer THAT is > so outrageous for a > supposed "moderator" to do that I > request you intervene and remove him > from the post, insisting that someone > with a fair and even hand replace him.

>
> Thank you for your time and > anticipated fairness.

>
> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of > Conscience
> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorshi> > p/
> FG2003

>
>
> Date: 7/08/2004 12:20:59 -0000

> From: "Steve Marshall"
>
> To: "FG2003"
> Subject: Message not approved:
> Whatever happened to the Justice List?
> All headers
> Hi Fred and everyone on TRB,
>
> "Talisman is a discussion list not a > chat list. Messages are expected > to be constructive. Posters should > back up their opinions with > evidence and argument."
>
> <https://groups.yahoo.com/group/talisman9>
> /
>
> Thanks for offering this message to > Talisman. Unfortunately, lone > rhetorical questions, particularly > ones as cryptic as this is, don't > meet the Talisman rules. I look > forward to seeing this message on TRB, > though, and hope my response is good > enough to merit publication there > as well.
>
> cheers > Steve
>
>
> Baha'u'llah's Justice or the > incorporated organization's justice?
>
> Which does talisman9 represent?
>
> My, how so many questions are > rhetorical....
>
> FG
> The Bahai Faith & Religious > Freedom of Conscience
>
>
>

----- Original Message -----

From: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

Cc: Juan R Cole

Sent: Friday, July 09, 2004 5:14 PM

Subject: Re: Censorship

Dear Frederick,

I will respond to you within 24 hours, if Juan doesn't respond first.

Sincerely, [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

FG wrote:

I see. A putative moderator perverts my message, smearing me as a "babytorturer," and all of you have to "consult" about it....

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Dear Frederick,

I will contact Juan Cole about the moderating issues you have raised and let you know of the results.

Sincerely, [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

----- Original Message -----

From: " CAUTION > Bahai Censorship " <BI*P*GS@LIBERTY.COM>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Friday, July 09, 2004 9:49 PM

Subject: Re: Open Letter to Juan Cole & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] - talisman9

> From: Cal E. Rollins (crollins@webtv.net)

> Fred, Steve, Rabia,

>

> Is it legal to change somebody else's signature file? It sure doesn't > sound like it would be. To me it's like forging a check. I doubt that > the authorities would accept, "Gee, Your Honor. I was just having fun > when I forged that check." --Cal

> --

>

> Appears to be great fun to talisman9 "moderator" Steve Marshall and > people like bahai scholar Susan Maneck.... and tells us a lot about the > moral condition of the bahai administration....

>

> --

- > FG
- > The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
- > <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
- >
- > Join a new Yahoo Group, Bahai Censorship!
- > <https://groups.yahoo.com/group/bahaicensorship/>
- >

----- Original Message ----- From: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

To: FG

Sent: Sunday, July 11, 2004 12:41 AM

Subject: Censorship/Apology

Dear Frederick,

I recognize the substance of your complaint and made the exact same point to Juan Cole on July 9:

Juan Cole wrote:

>However, if this was a matter of private communication, it is none of my >business,

It isn't a simple matter of private communication when Steve is communicating with a subscriber in the capacity of a moderator.

[identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

Obviously, my point was ignored or deemed irrelevant. Personally, I am sorry for how you have been treated and how the situation was handled.

Sincerely, [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

* CAUTION > Bahai Censorship * wrote:

Juan Cole,

Private email? Not so. He was acting in his capacity, which you, as list owner, in one way or another, gave him, and therefore bear some responsibility, further proven by the fact that Yahoo's customer service advised me to contact you. Yahoo has standards and requirements, which don't include such tactics.

"Babytorturer": You appear to justify, the most despicable, lowest fanatical tactics imaginable. To ignore his actions and support them, blaming the victim, is unworthy of you.

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Join a new Yahoo Group, Bahai Censorship!

<https://groups.yahoo.com/group/bahaicensorship/>

Given the carefully calculated deceit to discredit and malign me, on the part of Professor Cole in his email below, one might want to pause long and hard over what his real loyalties and intentions are. "Blaming the victim" of libel and the just-plain-nasty ill-will and injustice on the part of Marshall, is manifestly absurd. Note Cole appears more motivated to suppress knowledge of Sohrab's experience and writings, the importance of which he himself shouldn't be ignorant of. To counsel me to be "good humored and polite to the moderators," when I'm the butt of an outrageous attack is again deceitful, as is suggesting it was I who was harassing, not harassed! Any normal person would feel outrage and want to defend himself. The non-Bahai observer might very well want to linger on this exchange and what it reveals about one of the supposedly "liberal" discussion groups. Similar incidents have happened many times, indeed regularly, hidden from the public eye, on BeliefNet, Bahai-Studies, AOL Message Boards, soc.religion.bahai, and elsewhere in bahai cyberspace.

--

Date: 7/10/2004 00:14:20 -0400

From: Juan R Cole <jrcole@umich.edu>

To: FG <>

Subject: Re: Censorship All headers

Dear Fred:

I am in receipt of your complaints.

I am writing to say that I don't understand why you are complaining to me about the incident of the changed sig line. As I understand it, it was changed only in a private response to you as a private individual, not in a message that was publicly posted.

I am not in a position to censor or control the private correspondence of individuals.

I am sorry that the relationship between yourself and one of the moderators deteriorated so badly. I agree that some inappropriate things appear to have been said, but am not privy to private correspondence and I suspect the blame is not all on one side. In any case, since the incident was private rather than public, it just is not any of my business.

With regard to a moderator's declining to forward any posts from you to the list, that is the moderator's prerogative. Talisman9 is an edited list. Editors edit. I've had messages rejected myself. Get over it.

I would like to remind you that Talisman9 is dedicated to the study of the Haifa tradition. Sohrab is off-topic and I will thank you to post on some other subject when addressing talisman9.

I would also like to remind you that membership in talisman9@yahooogroups.com is a privilege, not a right. We expect posters to be good-humored and polite to the moderators, who are engaged in a pro bono expenditure of their time, energy and psyches. Harassing moderators about their editing of posts is a grounds for being tossed off the list.

I admire many of your posts, and have of course long appreciated your spirited defense of freedom of speech in the Faith. I can only suggest to you that conducting a vendetta with a talisman9 editor over editorial policy only weakens the list and threatens its future. I plead with you to temper your righteous anger with a sin-covering eye and with some wisdom to go with the high dudgeon. We all need allies and friends on the Baha'i Left, and squabbling among ourselves will only strengthen the Right.

cheers Juan

----- Original Message -----

From: " CAUTION > Bahai Censorship " <BI*P*GS@LIBERTY.COM>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Sunday, July 11, 2004 9:41 AM

Subject: Re: Open Letter to Juan Cole & [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment] - talisman9

> Cal wrote:> > Fred,

>> >

>> > I agree that the baby torturer thing is most out of step and disgusting.

>> > He must have been temporarily insane from drinking all that >> > shark-infested water in New Dunedin. Seems to me that a moderator ought >> > to rise above the watermark when doing the job. Maybe he's trying out, >> > like Susan, for a position on the Board of the Learned. Or is it Lurid?

>> > --Cal

> --

>

> Here's a further outrage. The list owner, we know who that is, seeks to > justify

> Steve Marshall's slanderous vilification of me as a "babytorturer"!

>

> Impartial nonbahai observers might wish to compare and decide > for themselves whether the picture fundamentalists labor so hard > to paint of me is accurate or not:

> <https://fglaysher.com/bio.htm>
>
> --
> FG
> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>
>
> Join a new Yahoo Group, Bahai Censorship!
> <https://groups.yahoo.com/group/bahaicensorship/>
>
>
>
>
>

----- Original Message -----

From: <jrcole@umich.edu>

To: <>

Cc: [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment]

Sent: Sunday, July 11, 2004 2:21 PM

Subject: Re: Censorship/Apology

>
> Dear Fred:
>
> I warned you that I was not going to put up with this kind of harassment, either > of me, or of the list, or of the moderators. If you want the list destroyed, > you are not on it in good faith. I am therefore removing you from it until > such time as you settle down.
>

> Juan Cole
>
>

>
>> [identity suppressed due to fundamentalist harassment],
>>
>> Thanks for your note.
>>
>> Cole's equivocations call into question whether he's even >> an honest participant. I continue to believe he should >> resign from being the list owner of talisman9, if he refuses >> to remove Steve Marshall for his actions. Yahoo should >> remove Cole or delete the entire group. There can be no >> excuse for smearing me as a "babytorturer," and THAT >> is what Cole is seeking to justify....

>>
>> FG
>> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
>> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Also see related posts on talk.religion.bahai - "baby torturer"

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Harassing, vilifying hate mail....

From: "FG" <FG@hotmail.com>

Date: 1998/01/29

Message-ID: <6apsrg$njd@news1.newsguy.com>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,news.groups

[More Headers][Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]

I've received several pieces of abusive and vilifying hate mail from Bahais during the last three or four days. Although I've asked one person not to email me at least twice in the past, he continues to insist on his "right" to harass me. I'd appreciate if other Bahais would generally appeal to such persons either to post what they think in public view or not to contact me in any way....

--

FG

UseNet: alt.religion.bahai

The RFD for talk.religion.bahai: <<https://www.baha.demon.co.uk/rfd.htm>>

The Call For Votes (CFV) for talk.religion.bahai has been posted. You may now vote at this time. The interest poll ends on February 18th. The CFV is also available directly from the votetaker, Rebecca G. McQuitty, via email: mcq@wco.com

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Hate mail: talk.religion.bahai
From: FG@hotmail.com
Date: 1997/03/14
Message-ID: <5gcn3j$3e2$1@bilbo.reference.com>
Newsgroups: news.groups,soc.rights.human [More Headers][Subscribe to news.groups]
IT SEEMS TO ME FAIR THAT OTHERS KNOW WHAT KIND OF FAN MAIL
I'M RECEIVING....

--

Date: Thu, 13 Mar 1997 15:58:55 -0700 (MST)
From: Joe User <user0@boola.frieze.com>
To: FG@hotmail.com
Subject: rantings and ravings of the fringe...

How to even start this message? I guess fairly (don't assume it will stay that way, though - why should I offer you that when you don't give it to others?).

Yes, it seems there is a basis for an unmoderated newsgroup such as you are requesting. Do I want to see one? Not particularly, as I have to interest. In fact, I have voted to abstain (for the meantime).

If it passes, I hope you are finally happy.

So you can then shut the hell up.

You mostly remind me of a child having a tantrum in a store because mother won't let you run around screaming and cussing at the other shoppers.

You really need to grow up!

Again, in all fairness, it does seem that, yes, maybe <some> of your posts were rejected a little too easily. But what do you respond with? Names, accusations, parralels to dictators bent on genocide, etc. You could have pleaded with them to reconsider; you could have talked about it, maybe compromising on both sides so that each is happy. Instead, you scream "fascist" at the politest request of rewording!

I've read the lot of the rejected posts, and most of the dialogue on news.groups. And, most often (about 95% of the time), you're kneejerk reaction to diplomacy comes across as someone merely vying for attention.

Don't you understand what Baha'u'llah writes on how we should treat each other, EVEN IF YOU YOURSELF FEELS WRONGED? Granted, I am just now breaking that tenet myself, but I accept this, and I know I will pay whatever consequence it brings. You didn't seem to have an argument to the quotes from the Writings - then why don't you try to follow them? They are the ideal, aren't they? But no, you bring the discussion down to a mud-slinging brawl.

Turn that finger you have pointing at everyone who doesn't (or whoever you perceive doesn't) support your comments as a whole back to yourself. You honestly sound more fanatical (to the Nth degree so) in your rantings than anybody else in this whole silly discussion has to date.

Although, I'm sure this will also probably fall on completely deaf ears, and I'll be branded fanatic, lunatic, hypocrite (but at times aren't we all to some degree as creatures capable of sin), yada yada yada. As I don't particularly care for your slandering tactics, I am also sending this from an account that has to relevance to me nor can be responded to. If you still wish to respond, then you may do so in public manner, and I will read it ANONYMOUSLY. This is to protect myself, as one of your dirty tactics seem to be to use personalized e-mail against people to suit your own goals.

And you are a Baha'i??? Shame on you!!! Shame!!!!

FG
ROCHESTER HILLS, MICHIGAN USA

--

Posted using Reference.COM <https://www.reference.com>
Browse, Search and Post Usenet and Mailing list Archive and Catalog.

InReference, Inc. accepts no responsibility for the content of this posting.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: Threatening Bahai email
Date: Thursday, May 28, 1998 6:26 AM

Robert A. Little wrote in message <6kiuqp$7p$1@nnrp3.snfc21.pbi.net>...
>Mr. Glaysher:
>
>In my posting ot two days ago, I requested that you display the >"threatening" post.

I posted it yesterday but here it is again....

-----Original Message-----

From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc
Date: Wednesday, May 27, 1998 7:09 AM
Subject: Re: Threatening Bahai email (was Re: Tips for newbies)

>Robert A. Little wrote in message <6kfrsp$hno$1@nnrp4.snfc21.pbi.net>...
>>Dear Frederick:
>>
>>This "threatening email" you speak of ought to be shared. Leave out >>information of a personal nature of course. In this way we all may >determine >>whether and how it is threatening.

>
>
>-----Original Message-----
>From: Bud Polk <cybrmage@dave-world.net>
>To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>
>Date: Tuesday, May 26, 1998 4:51 PM
>Subject: Would this be you?

>
>
>Glaysher, Frederick J, [address], [city], [state] [zip] Phone:
>[deleted] - right outside the [deleted] Metro area?
>
>Bud
>
>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

> From: Nancy S Damren <ladyvadr@juno.com>
> To: FG@hotmail.com
> Subject:
> Date: Monday, September 29, 1997 2:35 PM
>
> Dear Mr. Glaysheer,
>
> I have had the dubious privilege of receiving four email messages from > you in the same retrieval, that of Monday afternoon, September 29, 1997.
>
> I have already reacted in earlier postings to your intemperate and > inflammatory language. That reaction was negative. Now you send word > that your impertinence has been inflicted on the Universal House of > Justice, an institution of God that you have no business addressing in > such a fashion.
>
> Your emphasis on your own selfish desire to do as you please, regardless > of the consequences, rather than acting for the good of the Faith has > cost you all respect in my eyes and, no doubt, in those of many others.
>
> You have nothing to say to me that I want to hear. Accordingly, I must > request you to omit my email address from all of your postings in the > future. Further bombardment - for I can call it nothing less - will > result in notification of both my email service and yours of your email > abuse. If that doesn't work, then perhaps prosecution will.
>
> You saw a threat in a perfectly innocent and concerned letter from an > Auxiliary Board member where there was none. Fine the threat here. This > threat is real.
>
> Nancy Damren

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: James <bookstor@pandore.qc.ca>
To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Are you or are you not?
Date: Thursday, January 29, 1998 4:44 AM

Hello Frederick:

Well, are you or are you not a Baha'i?

James

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

>-----Original Message-----

>From: Bruce D Limber <bruce.limber@juno.com>

>To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>

>Date: Friday, January 23, 1998 8:53 AM

>Subject: Re: U.S. Baha'is to Iran's Pres. Khatami re Baha'is in Iran (a letter)

>

>

>>

>>>In my opinion, complete and unmitigated hypocrisy....

>>

>>A fact is not hypocrisy. It is a fact.

>>

>>It's truly a pity that you still haven't learned the well-known >>concept that if you have nothing good to say, you should >>SAY NOTHING.

>>

>>It's really very simple.

>>

>>I refer you to the "I will not dwell on the unpleasant things >>of life" prayer for details.

>>

>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

-----Original Message-----

>From: Bruce D Limber <bruce.limber@juno.com>

>To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>

>Date: Tuesday, January 27, 1998 7:30 PM

>Subject: Re: U.S. Baha'is to Iran's Pres. Khatami re Baha'is in Iran (a letter)

>

>

>>

>>>Please do not email me directly.

>>

>>When you cease trying to engender division and negativity, I will cease replying.

>>

>>Until then, I reserve the right to object to bigotry and hate-mongering.

>>

>>And I stand by the statements in my previous post.

>>

>>

>>_____
>>You don't need to buy Internet access to use free Internet e-mail.

>>Get completely free e-mail from Juno at <https://www.juno.com>

>>Or call Juno at (800) 654-JUNO [654-5866]

>>

>>

>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

-----Original Message-----

From: George Demas <gjdemas@ap.net>

To: FG <FG@hotmail.com>

Date: Wednesday, January 28, 1998 7:46 PM

Subject: Re: talk.religion.bahai

>Get a life.

>

>Nobody is obligated to be a Baha'i. If you want to be one, you must live by the rules set down by God.

>

>-----Original Message-----

>From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>

>Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,news.groups

>Date: Thursday, January 22, 1998 4:28 AM

>Subject: Re: talk.religion.bahai

>

>

>>Thanks, Emma. As background information, I'll >>quote a few things that seem relevant to the discussion >>for talk.religion.bahai and might help set it in a fuller >>historical context here on news.groups....

>>

>>FG

>>UseNet: alt.religion.bahai

>>The RFD for talk.religion.bahai can be found on news.groups, >>news.announce.newgroups, or at <<https://www.baha.demon.co.uk/rfd.htm>>

>>

>>-----

>>Quoted material begins from <https://www.religioustolerance.org/bahai.htm>

>>

>>

>>Freedom of Expression within the Baha'i Faith

>>

>>Although Baha'is have been very active in the promotion of freedom of >>expression around the world, there are significant restrictions on >>freedoms of individual members. These are enforced through >>shunning or expelling non-conforming adherents. Some examples are:

>>

>>[clip]

>>

>>The Baha'i authorities impose prepublication censorship on all material >>written by members about the Faith. All such material must first be >>scanned by a review committee of the Baha'i National Spiritual >>Assembly of the country in which the text is to be published. This was >>a temporary policy introduced many decades ago, which is still in force.

>>

>>The authorities closed down the "Talisman" mailing list. This was >>created by a professor at Indiana University, John Walbridge, in >>1994-OCT. The list had 175 subscribers. In early 1996, the Baha'i >>World Center in Haifa, Israel ordered the first of a series of >>investigations.

>>One sensitive topic debated on "Talisman" was the exclusion of women >>from the Universal House of Justice which some subscribers felt was i >>ncompatible with the importance given to the equality of the sexes >>within the Baha'i Faith. Some postings argued that the body be opened >>up to women; they based their beliefs on their interpretation of >>Baha'u'llah's writings. "Talisman" was closed on 1996-MAY. Juan Cole, >>now an ex-Baha'i, opened a new Talisman list the following month. Its >>e-mail address is talisman@umich.edu.

```
>>
>>[clip]
>>
>>Michael McKenny, a fantasy writer from Canada was expelled because >>of his views expressed in Emails.
>>
>>-----
>-
>-
>>----
>>Internet References and Mailing Lists
>>
>>Jonah Winters' Baha'i Academics Resource Area is at:
>>https://www.interlog.com/~winters/
>>
>>[clip]
>>
>>Material on freedom of expression within the Baha'i Faith is available at:
>>https://www.interlog.com/~winters/newspapers/gnosis.talisman.html and at >>https://www.interlog.com/~winters/newspapers/chafe.html
>>
>>An official response from the US National Spiritual Assembly to the latter >>item is available at: https://www.interlog.com/~winters/uhj/attacks.html
>>
>>Paul Johnson authored an article on the Talisman discussion group in >>1997-Winter edition of Gnosis Magazine.
>>
>>-----
>>Emma Pease wrote in message ...
>>
>>>Emma
>>>
>>>Possible interesting website written from a somewhat neutral point of >>>view
>>>
>>>https://www.religioustolerance.org/bahai.htm
>>>
>>>ps. Some of the Baha'i sites are extremely difficult to navigate with >>>lynx (or for that matter monochrome netscape) and don't seem to be >>>coded right. https://www.bahai.org/ is a case in point.
>>>--
>>>\----
>>>| * | Emma Pease Net Spinster
>>>| _\ / emma@csl.stanford.edu Die Luft der Freiheit weht
>>
>>
>
```

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: "FG" <f_glaysher@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: bahais on BeliefNet.com - slander tactics
Date: Friday, March 16, 2001 7:47 PM

FYI

www.Beliefnet.com Rules of Conduct:
"posts that malign, vilify, defame, abuse, harass, or threaten others"

The person below continues to malign the integrity of my belief in the bahai faith by referring to me as a "covenant breaker," a kind of heretic, if you will, and falsely stating I am not a member of the bahai faith.

My bahai membership card may be found on my bahai website.

I warned him more than a week ago that I would not tolerant such vilification and harassment.

I would appreciate it if you ask him to cease abusing me.

FG
www.FG.com
The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://fglaysher.com/index.htm>

bruce-l
3/10/01 6:11 PM 2 out of 9

NOTICE!

All individuals reading here should be warned that Glaysher and Cole are not Baha'is, and have essentially made a profession of attacking the Baha'i
Faith generally and its elected institutions in particular.

I will not go into the apparent reasons for these tirades because I don't want to be guilty of backbiting, but I do have statements from both the Baha'i Universal House of Justice and a knowledgeable Baha'i where the activities of these individuals have been addressed in more detail. Those readers wanting to see these should contact me and give an email address.

And their terminology is also misleading: there is no such dichotomy as "liberal" or "fundamentalist" Baha'is: all Baha'is abide by the Covenant of Baha'u'llah, which expressly establishes our institutions and how they operate. So to the extent these individuals reject all this, they are not Baha'is, pure and simple. That's their right, but there seems to be a preference to allow readers to mistake them for Baha'i when they're not.

Bruce

"FG" <FG@hotmail.com> wrote in message news:98l3sl$2cs2l$1@ID-75545.news.dfncis.de...
> The original posts by Bruce may be found at > <https://www.beliefnet.com> discussion boards, > specifically the one titled Baha'i Faith Challenge & Critique.
>
> --
> FG
> www.FG.com
> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
> <https://fglaysher.com/index.htm>
>
>
> -----
> 3/10/01 7:00 PM 2 out of 2
>
>
> FG>I have been a member of the Bahai faith since 1976.
>
> Yeah, right!
>

> And what he's _not_ telling you is that he resigned years ago, and has been > attacking the Baha'i Covenant and the administration it established ever > since.
>
> Indeed, if i'm not mistaken, he left the Faith rather than obey its > Covenant.
>
> He is thus _not_ a Baha'i, and hasn't been one for many years--nor are the > others working with him against the Faith.
>
> alert people may wish to consider why he didn't tell you this.
>
> Bruce
>
>
>
> 3/10/01 6:11 PM 2 out of 2
>
>
> NOTICE!
>
> All individuals reading here should be warned that Glaysheer and Cole are not > Baha'is, and have essentially made a profession of attacking the Baha'i > Faith generally and its elected institutions in particular.
>
> I will not go into the apparent reasons for these tirades because I don't > want to be guilty of backbiting, but I do have statements from both the > Baha'i Universal House of Justice and a knowledgeable Baha'i where the > activities of these individuals have been addressed in more detail. Those > readers wanting to see these should contact me and give an email address.
>
> And their terminology is also misleading: there is no such dichotomy as > "liberal" or "fundamentalist" Baha'is: _all_ Baha'is abide by the Covenant > of Baha'u'llah, which expressly establishes our institutions and how they > operate. So to the extent these individuals reject all this, they are not > Baha'is, pure and simple. That's their right, but there seems to be a > preference to allow readers to mistake them for Baha'i when they're not.

>
> Bruce
>
>
>
>
>

From: "Ali1932" <ali1932@aol.com>
Subject: Public Notice:
Date: Friday, July 13, 2001 2:47 AM

Public Notice:

Uncle Ted's Father fired him from his position due to Uncle Ted's bad-mannered and careless behavior.

He noted that it is none of Uncle Ted's business to Develop a story out of nothing for the sake of his Amusement.

Uncle Ted was under the impression that he was a Catholic.

Uncle Ted is dead.
From: "Dave Fiorito" <bighappymonkey@yahoo.com>
Subject: something Fred posted on Beliefnet
Date: Friday, September 14, 2001 1:01 PM

Little Better Than the Terrorists

FG
9/14/01 7:51 AM 1 out of 2

Sad fact, sad fact.... Having betrayed the moderation articulated in the Writings....

FG

To: Fred

From: the white hot ball of anger in my gut.

In the past you were just a pain. I welcomed your voice as proof that the First Amendment works. I never did agree with you but that is the way of this world. I never wanted you to go away. You are the negative to the Baha'i positive.

Not now. Not after that comment above. You are a fucking asshole. You are a egomaniacal sociopathic shit head of the highest order. This is not character assassination because you have no character to assassinate. You are worthless.

How dare you compare people who are at this moment gathering their resources to help rescue their fellow world citizens from the twited wreckage left in the wake of that horrifically evil deed. Baha'is in NYC and in New Jersey have gone to Manhatten to volunteer. Others are gathering goods and money for the tough task of recovery. Baha'is are working to heal the wounds.

All you want to do is inflict more pain.

You are evil.

You are a fucking coward.

You make me sick.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From elley@intercoast.com.au Sun, 10 Feb 2002 23:13:54 -0800
Received: from [203.22.112.12] by hotmail.com (3.2) with ESMTTP id
MHotMailBE30BA1B006B400431D4CB16700C93600; Sun, 10 Feb 2002 23:13:33 -0800 Received: from Elderkin (pmq54.intercoast.com.au [203.32.99.54])
by cracker.intercoast.com.au (8.11.6/8.11.6) with SMTP id g1B7GBg02902 for <fredglaysher@hotmail.com>; Mon, 11 Feb 2002 18:16:12 +1100 Message-ID: <006301c1b2cb$c65eeea0$366320cb@Elderkin>
From: "Mark Elderkin" <elley@intercoast.com.au>
To: <fredglaysher@hotmail.com>
Subject: Need a house.....
Date: Mon, 11 Feb 2002 18:14:38 +1100
MIME-Version: 1.0
Content-Type: multipart/alternative; boundary="-----=_NextPart_000_0060_01C1B327.F7EA2BE0" X-Priority: 3
X-MSMail-Priority: Normal
X-Mailer: Microsoft Outlook Express 6.00.2600.0000 X-MimeOLE: Produced By Microsoft MimeOLE V6.00.2600.0000

----- Original Message -----

From: Mark Elderkin
To: fredglaysher@hotmail.com
Sent: Monday, February 11, 2002 2:14 AM
Subject: Need a house.....

What I really need is for you to quit spamming the NGs.
As long as you spam, I'll continue to find ways of letting others know how to keep in contact with you.
Say what you want and do it in a proper way and there is no problem..... keep spamming and cross-posting to people and using the name 'bahai faith' and I'll keep up with your antics. If enough people tell you to stop..... then maybe you will.
From: "Mark Elderkin" <elley@intercoast.com.au>
Subject: Re: Fundamentalist psychopath THREATENS me again.....
Date: Tuesday, February 12, 2002 3:24 AM

If I'm a psychopath(Fred the 'h' is silent but still should be there) for getting tired of continuous misuse of this NG, then maybe the shoe fits. It does not sit well with me to have someone like Fred use the name 'bahai faith' as his ID here. Fred hasn't been a Baha'i for many years and it seems to me that it is a clear misrepresentation of the facts. Now let's get on to the issue of 'threatening' : If putting a URL in my post is considered a threat then there are quite a few guilty of that including Fred in every spam. If selling real estate was Fred's big secret then why did he make the site public and why did associate a link to it on his website? This isn't rocket science here..... I've just placed the link into a reply where Fred created the list of available newsgroups. I didn't think them up..... he did. Is the real problem here that Fred is upset that some of the people he has pissed off with cross-posting might not buy a house from him now. There is a free gift being offered..... hate to miss it myself. Probably not available to psychopaths anyhow.

Fred this is about ownership and you would like to think that you have the ability to do anything you want and we as the weak Baha'i Fundies will just sit back and pray for you. Sorry.... can't do it. I have never threatened you with anything even resembling violence..... I have never attempted to abuse your email(I did send you a Christmas picture a year back or so). Maybe you don't understand something here Fred..... for every action there is a reaction. You work very hard at not being reachable so that you can continue with antics..... I'm just going to make you reachable. The posting of a directive to any public URL location is totally within the guidelines for this NG. You do it all the time. Cross-posting the URL directive to other NGs must also be OK..... you do it all the time. So the question remains..... What's really your problem here? Since your retirement, you have become quite undisciplined..... Take up a hobby..... maybe poetry. Real-Estate?

M

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: <nima_hazini@my-deja.com>
Subject: Re: Abuse of Robert Hayden by Bahais Date: Sunday, May 07, 2000 9:28 AM

rlittle95@my-deja.com wrote:

> Were Mr. Hayden alive today, who would he choose to edit his work? I > think he would choose an individual who shares his love for > Baha'u'llah, an individual who strives to be like 'Abdul-Baha', in > addition to the normal professional qualifications.

As much as Fred pisses me off at times, like recently, when he says that Hayden distanced himself from the current Baha'i organization, I believe him. Why? Because Fred knew and worked with this man and probably had access to a side of the man that you people who wish to claim (and misappropriate) him for your own sectarian motivated ends simply do not.
That makes a difference. Having read a little Hayden myself (yes, Fred,
I bought your book!) and detecting a liberal and open-minded spirit in him, I doubt very much he would have looked upon what is currently going on inside the Baha'i organization with anything but disdain. He would have been simply appalled, to say the least, as any other reasonable thinking human being with a conscience would. All you people wish to do with Hayden is to garner PR for yourselves. You care not one iota as to what the man truly represented. Shame on you for misappropriating the name of departed in such fashion!

cheers,
Nima

Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
Before you buy.From: <patrick_Henry@bigfoot.com>
To: <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Farewell!
Date: Monday, November 29, 1999 3:30 AM

(beginning of original message)

Subject: Farewell!
From: berekiah1@my-deja.com
Date: 1999/11/29
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai
Friends, Romans, former co-religionists!

It seems to me that my continued participation on this and other Baha'i related internet forums in general is serving no purpose and causing further grief to myself especially when facing the fact how a religion as noble as that of Baha'u'llah's should have come to what we behold before us today. But more so, to see the views being expressed by certain of His adherents. When I resigned from the Baha'i faith in late 1996, I promised myself I would never again have anything more do with the Baha'i Faith in any manner or form, and for the first year I stayed true to my initial pledge until I was officially slandered in November 1997 by the offices of the Secretary-General of the US NSA to the Australian NSA.

Seeing that the Baha'i organization will indefinitely remain how it is and that adherents will continue to defend the status quo without realizing that the dark side of their administrative world does in fact exist, I will cease my posting here. From time to time I might peek in and look, but no more posts for the time being. I apologize to one and all whom I have reprimanded, scolded or otherwise insulted over the past months and wish you well in your lives, pursuits, hopes, goals and dreams. May your paths be blessed and may the Almighty grant you some measure of insight day by day! Farewell!

Cheers,
Nima Hazini (aka Berekiah)

Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
Before you buy.

(end of original message)

Subject: Re: Schautian fallacies (Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights & Marshall Case)
Date: Friday, April 07, 2000 8:17 AM

Saman jan,

You said:

> Are we conflating habibi?!

How so, azizam?

> Baha'u'llah was not, as far as I see, predicting > the demise of the "Trustees of God amongst men".

Albeit he predicted the demise of ecclesiastical orders en toto.

> If memory serves, Juan (could have been Linda Walbridge) argued on > Talisman
>
> some years ago that the Universal House of Justice was in a way a > marja'i taqlid/source of imitation - akin to the Shi'i practice.

And if you recall, myself, Juan and someone else (could've been Steve Scholl) took exception to it and argued against it.

> What does the first paragraph of the Aqdas mean?

I wasn't aware the ao was the Manifestation, if that's what you're implying.

> "Liberty must, in the end, lead to sedition, whose flames none can > quench. . .

Do you know what the word Baha'u'llah uses for 'liberty' is in the original Arabic, Saman? 'Hurriya'. Why don't you look up Lane or Wehr to see the full definition and lexicographical meaning of what 'Hurriyya'
is. The full implication of the word entails moral license or licentiousness, not liberty from political tyranny and the authoritarian dictates of ecclesiastical bodies. Quite the contrary. In fact Baha'u'llah bestows liberty from both of those within the same text
(i.e. the Aqdas) and the Iqan. This is why imo Juan's research into the social and political language of Baha'u'llah is so valuably important, and why the Baha'i powers-that-be see it as so dangerous.

> "We approve of liberty in certain circumstances, and refuse to sanction

> it in others. . .

>

> These are the words of Baha'u'llah.

See my comments above.

> Does the government of Iran allow its citizens to consult with their > local leaders regularly?

Believe it or not, yes it does, so long as you agree with the system.

Yet it still remains a totalitarian theocracy.

> Does the IRI have fair and free elections?

No, but it stands to reason neither does the current Baha'i organization.

> If the Baha'is have not matured that does not mean that there are > fundamental flaws in the system.

There aren't fundamental flaws in the system as conceived

"theoretically," yet it is demonstrable that there are serious flaws in its current application.

> There are two issues that get talked about and which some want to > extrapolate to discredit the Baha'i system; the fact that women > can not serve on the Universal House of Justice and the fact that > the Baha'i Faith does not allow same-sex marriage - is there > anything else?

To tell you the truth, I couldn't give a hoot about the 'homosexuals' and same sex marriage issue and the Baha'i community. It never was an issue for me then, and it's definitely not an issue for me now. Probably has to do with the fact than I'm not a homosexual but a very straight man. However, the fact that there are no theoretical justifications in the writings of either Baha'u'llah and `Abdul-Baha for excluding women from the UHJ bothers me. The Panopticon phenomenon, authoritarianism of the ao, the anti-intellectualism, anti-democratic sentiments and unthinking pro-theocratic mindset, the continual institutional abuse, ad nauseum, bothered me then, as it continues to bother me now. And what bothers me even more, is that after 150 years of persecution, death and destruction, marg or mir, under the hands of obscurantist and opportunistic Shi'ite clerics, this is what the Baha'i religion has come to. It has fully embraced the Dark Side of the Force and become a mirror image of Shi'ite ecclesiastical fascism. And to think, how much my ancestors, family, relatives and myself gave of their lives, livelihood, happiness and existence to and for this thing and the utopian hope of the "jAme'-ye jami'-e kamAlAt-e insAni" - and all for nothing!!!! Nuff to drive any sane person insane.

> What does the first paragraph of the Aqdas mean?

Definitely not that the UHJ is God or the Qotb of the universe as Kavian Milani's idolatrous position is suggesting these days.

> Once in Qazvin, the Health Corps was trying to explain the benefits of > hygiene. The teacher gave the example of the cat who licks himself clean.

> One

> Qazvini from the back of the room said:

> "AqA, aqle mA miresad, zabAne mA nemiresad!"

Actually, the version I heard went something like this:

<bA lahjeyeh

shirin-e Qazvini>, AqA, aqlemAn miresad, faqat

zabAnemAn be kAnemAn

nemiresad! ;)

> I'm afraid that your testing 'Aql -

Then maybe you should expand the horizons of your `Aql instead of taking your ethnic-religious identity and its weltanschauung unthinkingly for granted, as I did for so many years.

> maybe we just have to agree to > disagree.

Indeed. Look, Saman jan, you and I have met and connected. I once even considered you a friend and kindred spirit - as I'm sure you did with me. Of course, these days I am considered "heretic" and "public enemy number 1" by your leaders and peers, so it doesn't surprise nor shock me that you consider me such as well. ce la vie! I can live with it. But think about it, my old friend, think of what this thing has become...Put aside your conservative Iranian Baha'i upbringing, and all the loyalties wrapped around that, and look at the naked truth. This religion, or rather organization, is hundreds of light years separated from what Baha'u'llah envisioned and there is nothing anyone can say that will make it such. But don't turn the discussion into some mubaahaleh with me, because at bottom, I still believe in the same asl as you. It is the far' which leaves much to be desired, or rather has nothing anymore to do with the asl AFAIC.
Hope you are doing well....

cheers,
Nima

p.s. Btw, zan gerefti hanuz ya na? :-)

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Defamation in Baha'i Publication
Date: Sunday, December 10, 2000 6:33 AM

To whom it may concern:

I note that in the recent December 2nd issue of the Australian Baha'i Bulletin a seriously libellous and defamatory statement has been published about me in a journal supervised by your body explicitly casting me as an enemy of the Baha'i Faith and overtly calling for my being shunned, this time publicly. Since this matter is overtly defamatory and libellous, therefore injurious to my honour, integrity and reputation, it is a very serious matter, especially given that the Australian Baha'i Bulletin is circulated widely. I ask 1) that you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation who exactly those Baha'is are who have expressed concern about my status as a non-Baha'i, and 2) why, for what reason and end should this clarification be printed in the Australian Baha'i Bulletin, and under what pretext, four years to the date after my withdrawal in the United States and after I have disassociated myself from the Baha'i community and its functions altogether. I ask that 3) you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation exactly what is meant by the phrase "engaged in attacking the integrity of the Cause," since I have at no time attacked the Central Baha'i Figures. I ask that 4) you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation exactly why this was printed and highlighted on the second page of the Australian Baha'i Bulletin directly below a statement by the Universal House of Justice when such status clarifications are usually printed in the back pages of said journal. I ask that 5) you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation exactly who was responsible for the decision to print this statement and specifically whether it was an NSA decision (by majority, quorum or otherwise), or whether by another party, and whom exactly. Furthermore, what business is it of the Australian Baha'i Bulletin to publically clarify the status of a non-Baha'i or of their statements to begin with? Given the timing of the publication of this statement in the Australian Baha'i Bulletin leaves room for seriously grave suspicions as to its origin and possible motives - even collusion by third parties not on the NSA and hence cronyism cannot be ruled out at this stage - which would indeed then tend to raise serious questions about the overall integrity of the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Australia and individual members thereof. It is indeed curious that this statement should come in the wake of a violent physical assault against my person three months ago by a member of the LSA of the Gold Coast - a member who is a wealthy donor to the AO, and seemingly based on his own statements has claimed he has the ear of one or two UHJ members and a member of your own NSA. I believe that the publication of this statement is nothing more than yet another carefully crafted attempt by the AO at a cover-up of corruption and abuses by its close patrons.

As such, should this matter not be addressed by your body and a written apology and retraction not be forthcoming immediately in the next (January 2001) edition of the said journal forthwith, the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Australia will leave me no choice but to proceed with initiating formal litigation proceedings against it for its continued defamation against my person and its continued injury of my right to privacy and freedom of association. Make no mistakes, all legal avenues at my disposal will be pursued and exhausted to the fullest extent of the law, and since a public call for my shunning has been made, and such calls are illegal under Australian law, this matter will be pursued. Moreover, this will be followed by full disclosures of all pertinent facts and circumstances to the Australian national press as well as the International press, including but not limited to United Press International, Reuters, the Associated Press, 60 Minutes, A Current Affair,

Frontline, Radio Free Europe and The Voice of America. Full disclosures of violations of the human and civil rights of former members, including myself, will also be fully disclosed and exposed to various civil liberties and human rights organizations such as the Australian Civil Liberties Union, Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and various Cult Watch groups and organizations both in Australia and abroad. Moreover, Australian Federal MPs as well as members of the United States Congress, the British and European Parliaments and the United Nations favourably inclined to the Baha'is will also be contacted and a full disclosure given about the continual pattern of abuses against myself and others by Baha'i authorities. Academics and various professional Academic forums and associations in Australia, North America and Europe will also be contacted and full disclosures made, detailing this pattern of abuse. Surely, the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and the Baha'i community does not wish to tarnish irreparably its good reputation in the world at large and be relegated to the same playing field and compared publicly in the press and public mind to cults such as Scientology and the Reverend Sung Yung Moon's Unification Church in its treatment, harassment and public defamation of former members for alleged thought-crimes.

I therefore ask you attend to this matter immediately and without delay. I will be awaiting your reply. This message will be included (and possibly expanded) in a longer missive to be sent by me to the NSA of Australia in several days.

Sincerely yours,
Nima Hazini

--

Australian Baha'i Bulletin, Dec, Page 2.

"Status Clarification

A number of Baha'is have expressed concern about statements being made by Mr Nima Hazini, who is presently resident in Queensland. Their concern arose from their belief that he is a member of the Baha'i community. In fact, Mr Hazini wrote the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States on November 25, 1996, during the period he was residing in that country, withdrawing from the Baha'i community. Unfortunately, Mr Hazini has for some time been engaged in attacking the integrity of the Cause. The friends are therefore advised to leave him to himself."

--

Queensland Consolidated Acts

Defamation Act 1889 - SECT 4

Definition of "defamatory matter"

4.(1) Any imputation concerning any person, or any member of the person's family, whether living or dead, by which the reputation of that person is likely to be injured, or by which the person is likely to be injured in the person's profession or trade, or by which other persons are likely to be induced to shun or avoid or ridicule or despise the person, is called "defamatory", and the matter of the imputation is called "defamatory matter."

(2) An imputation may be expressed either directly or by insinuation or irony.

SECT 5

5.(1) Any person who, by spoken words or audible sounds, or by words intended to be read either by sight or touch or by signs, signals, gestures, or visible representations, publishes any defamatory imputation concerning any person is said to defame that person.

Affidavit (modified, some names etc, have been taken out)

On the evening of September 4th, 2000, approximately 7:00pm, at the repeated insistence of 9999999999999999, I went to their house for dinner at XXXXXXXXXXXXX. Attending were misters W, X, Y, Z and ladies A, B, C and the two year old son of Z and B, R. The attendees were already half way through dinner when I arrived. I sat down to the meal and ate until around 7:15/7:25.

After dinner, approximately 7:30pm, a heated conversation ensued resulting in an altercation between Mr. W, X and myself, as a result of which I was attacked and assaulted by misters X, W, Z and Y. The events are the following:

After the meal, around the dinner table, small talk conversation ensued mainly around the subject of what Y was doing with his life these days in the United States. Y spoke about his life as a medical student, how he was planning to be a pediatrician, and also revealed that he was an expert in the martial arts of Brazilian Jujitsu and that he had even been California state champion. The conversation next shifted to being single, and B complimented Mr. Y stating how she thought he was "the perfect guy" but asking why he was still single. Mr. W then interjected and the pejorative term "Loser" was used about those who were single. Next Mr. W began arrogantly boasting about his major accomplishments and how he had made enormous contributions to society and the like. I then questioned the premise of the claim presented by Mr. W, and as a matter of principle, stated that I did not believe that building opulent, decadent and snobbish projects such as the  Hotel and such constituted true service to society by any stretch of the imagination, since true service to society is by definition selfless, sincere, pure, unglamorous and seeking of wide ranging positive results for the benefit of many, like Mother Teresa, unlike the decadent opulence of such grandiose hotel resort projects open only to the rich, wealthy and famous such as the *****.

Next, after I had bluntly stated my opinion, X angrily interjected and began to loudly swear at me, exclaiming, "Fuck you, Fuck you, Fuck you, you piece of shit, you fucking covenant breaker!" repeating this several times. Clearly unnerved by Mr. X imprecations, I replied to the insult, replying with "No Fuck you, Fuck you!!"

As I was being insulted like this for merely stating a frank opinion, and unnerved beyond belief by such self-righteous arrogance as Mr. X was now displaying, I got up from my chair to leave, and X also got up. Next Mr. Y jumped from his chair, tackled and pinned me in a body/headlock at which point misters W and X began hitting me from both directions - right and left. At no time did Y make an attempt to stop the assaults by W and X. Pinned in a tight bodylock by Y, Mr. Z next got up, and I told him to stay out of it, while being manhandled in a body/headlock by mister Y and being dragged around the dinner table. Next I was slammed into the wall and pinned to it, and Mr. X and Y both repeatedly punched me in my shoulder, and Z slapped me in the back of the head. Mr. X then slapped me in the face. While pinned by Y to the wall, I brought my hands up as close to my face as physically permissible at this point in order to protect it from punches being thrown from all sides in my direction (a technique I learned in boxing). Next both W and X hit me in turn in the side of the head, and then Mr. Z slapped the side of my head again and said "you are jealous of X, loser, you bloody covenant breaker!" Mr. Y proceeded to drag me through the room and into the lounge, W and X and Z following behind them. The women, baby and my grandfather were all screaming hysterically to stop and telling me to leave. I told Mr. Z to let me go so that I could take my things (i.e. hat, mobile phone and car keys) and leave, but he would not let me go. I repeated my request once again, still Mr. Z would not let go. Before reaching the lounge corridor leading to the front door of the unit, Mr. Z body and headlocked me in a strangle-hold, also locking his legs tightly around mine, throwing himself and myself down upon the floor, breaking a porcelain vase in the process. When we hit the ground, I began feeling slight suffocation, and I almost passed out. At this point when I was thrown onto the ground, my left elbow was cut, due to having just been smashed into the vase, and I began to bleed from the left arm. While on the ground Mr. W and X each in turn kicked me in the head, when we got up Mr. X hit me in the side of the arm. All this time I was being held tightly on the ground unable to move. Then Mr. Z dragged up himself and I. Mr. X swung to hit me in the head, but missed and his punch grazed my neck and shoulder on the left hand side instead. The altercation resumed, and I kept asking for my possessions so that I could leave. During this back and forth altercation, Mr. X exclaimed, "You don't know who I am in this city, you motherfucker, covenant breaker. You don't know who I know and what power I have, I am going to destroy you and your father, I am going to destroy you, you covenant breaker! I am the most powerful man in this city. You fucking covenant breakers!" This was repeated twice. Then B ran up and made the following slanderously libellous claim,

Finally, Mr. Y dragged me out of the unit and to the elevator, still in headlock, followed in step by Mr. Z . I kept asking for my hat, mobile and car keys, but they were not provided.

In the elevator, Mr. Y continued to hold me in a lock all the way down to the ground floor and into the lobby. When we got to the ground floor, Ms. B, Mr. W and Mr. X arrived on in the following elevator. The altercation resumed, Mr. Y again held me in a body-lock/head lock. Once again, Mr. W stated, "You don't know who I am; I will destroy you!" Next Ms. B stepped in and again reiterated the same libellous defamatory remark about my father, stating

She repeated this three times emphasizing,

<libel snipped>

Next, still being held by Y, X stated "you are a piece of shit, you are nothing, you're a loser, you motherfucking covenant breaker!" W then told Y and Z to bring me outside and then went outside of the lobby of Westwater apartments. He said, "you are nothing but a piece of shit, and even your parents know it, covenant breaker." Z attempted to pull me and Rafat outside, but Y did not move. As the manager of the complex came out to see what the disturbance was all about, W then said to X and Z "just call the Police and charge him with assault." W then went and drove his Mercedes to the front, made the following threat, stating, "as of tomorrow watch your back!" He drove off. Then X repeated the same threat,

"watch your back from tomorrow."

At this point, it should be noted that Mr. W has boasted numerous times in my presence about the power and influence he wields on the Gold Coast more than any other person in the city. He has claimed that he controls various local city council members and politicians, the city mayor, judges, solicitors, the police, several state politicians and lawmakers, the local media, and federal MPs, suggesting that he has ties to organised crime and that on the Gold Coast he is completely untouchable and that anyone who crosses him will be physically and financially destroyed.

Altercations resumed, Y finally took me outside, still in bodylock, with Z following, then X went inside the lobby. I told Z I wanted my things now, and he said he'd already gotten it for me. I told him I had not received them, besides how could I since I was being held in a lock by Y. He went back up to the 13th floor to retrieve them. Z came back with my things, a sharp exchange of words and mutual swearing in Persian ensued, and Z let me go.

Y left and went back up. Traumatized, I got in my car and left.

I went straight to the XXXXX Police station and filed a complaint with Constable VVVVV (AAAAA). He took my complaint and I emphasized the gravity of the matter, since I had just been given a death threat, and he saw how my left arm was bruised and my elbow was bleeding all over the counter. While the complaint was being taken my mother phoned twice on my mobile phone. I told her I'd come straight over after I'd finished in the XXXXX Police station.

After I finished at the XXXXXX Police Station, I drove straight to my parents house at XXXXXX. I told my mother and sister what had happened, and they were shocked, so my mother called my grandparent's house right away. Mr. Z picked up the phone, my mother was shaken and angry, and demanded to speak to one of her parents at once. Mr. Z refused and stated that it was all mutual, and that neither of my grandparents could come to the phone at this time. The conversation ended.

My mother and I next went to the YYYYYYY Paradise Police station and there spoke to Constable OOOOO (OOOOO) and told him that I wished to file a restraining order. He told me that, although he could not currently locate the original complaint on his computer file, the original complaint filed in XXXXX would suffice, and that in any case no such thing as a restraining order exists in Queensland. I told him that I feared for my life, since Mr. W and X had both made a direct death threat, and W at least has suggested he has connections to organised crime and in any case he would have the means (financial and otherwise) to carry out his threat. Constable OOOOO said that what he could do for now was to "flag my address and telephone number" so that if any emergency or situation should occur, and I where to call 000, the process of obtaining Police help could more speedily be expedited. My mother and I left and drove back home.

We arrived back home, and my father and my sister were there. I stayed for half an hour and then drove back to my apartment to get some rest.

That whole night I could not sleep, given the trauma and assault I had just experienced and the death threat issued by W and reiterated by X. My left elbow bled and hurt the whole night through, I felt

pain and discomfort in my neck, head and shoulders.

The next morning (5th) I went and saw Dr. HHHHHH at
, and he examined me. I showed my bruised left arm and the scar on my left elbow which had continued to bleed until the morning. My neck and shoulders still ached painfully, especially on the right hand side. After examination, the nurse treated my bleeding elbow, bandaged it and told me to come back in three days, but if bleeding or any other problem continues to come back immediately. The rest of the day I had trouble concentrating, and the night of the 5th, I again had trouble sleeping and the stress level was the highest I have ever experienced. I then went to the Southport magistrates court registry and obtained and then filed a Peace and Good Behavior (Act 1982 [s.4]) against both misters W and X. The copies of the forms were given to the OOOOOO Police station to serve.

--

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
OF THE BAHAI'S OF AUSTRALIA INCORPORATED
A.R.B.N. 009 727 128 (Incorporated in the A.C.T.) (Liability of members limited)

SECRETARIAT

Phone: (02) 99113 2771
Fax: (02) 9970 7275
Email: ausnsa@bahai.org.au

4 November 1997

The Local Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the Gold Coast
PO Box 833
Southport 4215

Dear Baha'i Friends,

RE: MR. NIMA HAZINI

The National Spiritual Assembly of Australia has been informed by the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States that Mr. Nima Hazini occasionally spends time in Australia visiting parents and often associates with the Baha'i youth here. As Mr. Hazini's parents are members of your community we are sharing the following information (which has been provided by the National Assembly of the United States) with your Assembly:

".It is important for you to know that Mr. Hazini withdrew his Baha'i membership in December 1996 after expressing his strong dissatisfaction with the Baha'i community and our National Spiritual Assembly. Shortly after his withdrawal was accepted, Mr. Hazini wrote to the National Spiritual Assembly stating that he had not withdrawn from the Baha'i Faith but had withdrawn only from the Baha'i community. He provided a copy of his letter to the Universal House of Justice. When Mr. Hazini received a copy of the Universal House of Justice's letter, he chose not to pursue reinstatement of his Baha'i membership. The last information that we had about him was that he had decided to become a follower of Sufism."

At one stage Mr. Hazini was transferred to the United States as a Baha'i in good standing. However, in light of the information given by the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States we have made the necessary changes in our records about his status.

Your Spiritual Assembly is advised to be alert to Mr. Nima Hazini's activities in your area, when he comes to Australia to visit his parents, especially his association with the Baha'i youth..

Thanking you for your cooperation and with loving Baha'i greetings.

Gul Williams
for the Secretariat

Reg. Office:
Baha'i National Centre
173 Mona Vale Road, Ingleside, NSW

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Re: My memories of the Albuquerque Baha'i community
Date: Friday, May 04, 2001 7:33 AM

I have news for you. You are wasting your time would ye but know it. There is at this time no better system(s) in existence other than Western liberal democracies and to think there is one is to be either a hopeless utopian dreamer entangled in paradigms of pure fantasy or to delude oneself just as generations of naive idealistic Marxists did with their impractical agendas of radical social transformation and revolution and movements towards classless societies via dictatorships of the proletariat as represented by vanguard parties. People who aren't good students of modern history don't seem to realize that everytime anti-discourses against Western liberal democracies are adopted the consequences are the roads which lead straight to the gulags, concentration camps and totalitarianism in one form or another. Religion in the private arena by definition is totalitarian because it makes totalistic demands and "leaps of blind faith" how much more so if it is in control of the public realm. This is why when the last two theocracies in the world, Iran and Afghanistan, finally collapse in the near future, theocracy as a model will be relegated to the dustbin of history.

Liberal democracies aren't perfect, and they're not supposed to be. Just as life itself on all levels is a project forever in progress, so is the Western liberal democratic principle and model. Get used it. It and its principles and modifications thereof will be with us into the foreseeable future. Your grandchildren and their progeny will never live under a Baha'i superstate, commonwealth or similar. But they will live under liberal democracies of one form or another.

cheers,
Nima

"Rick Schaut" <rsschaut@home.NOSPAMcom> wrote in message news:9ctvm911cth@news2.newsguy.com...

We aren't going to solve them, however, by turning the Baha'i Faith into the mirror image of modern western democracies. All of us have to begin striving for something better than that, or we're just wasting our time.

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Re: WARNING - Fundamentalist Deception
Date: Friday, August 31, 2001 6:27 PM

"Jon" <twosofthands@hotmail.com> wrote in message news:da2a2e05.0108311201.37457380@posting.google.com...
"BIGS - Bahai In Perfectly Good Standing" <patrick_henry@liberty.com> wrote in message news:<9mjurq$2njc4$1@ID-75545.news.dfncis.de>...
>Your website is filled with lies. Prof. Cole is not a very good >translator of Baha'i text. His translations are filled with >intentional mistakes to further his own personal views.

Oh, really? And how would you know??? You have expertise in 19th century Persian and Arabic texts??? You Baha'is and your 'institutions' are so full of it. I wish you could step back and take a good hard look at how pathetic you people have become when you make ridiculous statements like that, all of which is based out of FEAR. Your whole religion is one of FEAR and you people FEAR Juan Cole and thus you must make these rumours up about him.

cheers,
Nima

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Re: bahai - Why I Don't Respond to Fundamentalists
Date: Monday, September 03, 2001 7:53 PM

They did it to mine. Not between my immediate family and I, thankfully. But my mothers family - who are among the most disturbed, sleazy biggoted looney bahai fundamentalist hypocrite bastards this side of the equator whom I have had the unfortunate misfortune of being related to - are cronies and close personal friends of Peter Khan. Because my parents have absolutely refused to disown me - as the Baha'i administration wished them to (which was the reason for the defamation published against me in the Australian Baha'i Bulletin in the first place) - they have been targetted by the Baha'i administration (particularly through Peter Khan and his networks), through my mothers family, and are now being systematically shunned. At one point recently these people even attempted to split apart my parents' marriage - this is the kind of people they are. The Baha'i administration has pitted daughter against parents, parents against daughter, grandparents against grandchildren, grandchildren against grandparents, aunt against nephew, nephew against aunt, cousin against cousin, all because of "ideology." People, family members, have totally thrown out the window lifetime kinships and relationships all because of this fucked up bahai fundamentalist ideology run by these even more fucked up cultist baha'i adminoloters and their looney lapdogs. Which is why I say the baha'i fath is a cult - pure and simple. Jim Jones, Branch Dravidians, Scientology, Jehovah's Witnesses, even the Mormons have nothing on the baha'is.

cheers,
Nima

"BIGS - Bahai In Perfectly Good Standing" <patrick_henry@liberty.com> wrote in message news:9n05rv$4grib$1@ID-75545.news.dfncis.de...
Nima,

Please detail, if you would, a few examples of the uhj "creating divisions in families on ideological grounds."

Thank you.

--

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://www.angelfire.com/mi3/bahai/>

"Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au> wrote in message news:9muaib$m0n$1@gnamma.connect.com.au...

>

> "NightShadow" <seals_jay@hotmail.com> wrote in message

> news:3b9043e3.232977305@news...

> There was someone named "ilami" <ilami@hereorthere0.com> who once > said...:

>

> >A "true religion of God" is meant to heal the hearts of human beings,

> >not tear them apart.

>

> Someone ought to inform the uhj and its lackies of that because that is what > they do: tear people (esp. families) apart. Because they, the Baha'i

> administration, engage in such divisive acts as creating divisions in > families on ideological grounds the Baha'i faith can no longer be considered

> a religion of love meant to heal hearts, but rather it is a dangerous,

> abusive and dishonest cult no different than Scientology, Jim Jones, the

> Jehovah's Witnesses, etc.

>

> cheers,

> Nima

>

>

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>

Subject: Open Letter to Moojan Momen (Alison Marshall is not Al Marbig)

Date: Tuesday, January 02, 2001 11:01 PM

Dear Moojan Momen,

I understand that Alison Marshall has recently been accused by yourself of being Al Marbig, the maintainer of the Brave New World site. Having been accused myself of being Al Marbig a little less than a month ago, I would like to take exception to these unfounded rumours and accusations that seem to be regularly hurled about with total impunity by certain Baha'is towards innocent people. Although the person in question has asked that their identity remain anonymous, Al Marbig is actually a member of your own British Baha'i community (and as far as I understand, a Baha'i in Good Standing). Moreover, and for the record, neither Alison Marshall or myself are Al Marbig and furthermore, neither Alison nor myself are or have ever been directly involved with this e-production, a fact you may kindly convey to your superiors. As I understand it, and as stated on trb/arb and my Zuhur19 list, Al Marbig was temporarily incommunicado which is why one edition of BNW happened to be hosted on Steve Marshall's website. These are the facts which seems to have eluded those who are making unfounded accusations right and left. Now, given these facts, I believe you owe Alison Marshall a big apology.

Best regards,
Nima Hazini

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: More Censorship By SRB Moderators
Date: Tuesday, January 16, 2001 11:22 PM

--
Greetings Nima,

The reason I rejected your message is not because of the quoted material, but because of the repeated information otherwise known as signal to noise ratio. Mr. Mahdi is not going to answer your questions regardless of how many times you post the same material. Personally I don't know why you bother trying to engage him or his rhetoric, but I digress.

Let me address a few of your concerns. First, Rick B. is right here. All the mods get the messages each week and if there is any concern we all speak up. I can guarantee you that you have no special favor or dislike from any of the mods. Second, there is no directive from any Administrative body or individuals putting you in any special condition with the mods. Your posts are measured by the charter and will continue to be. Lastly, we do not post who gets rejected, but it would be safe to say Mr. Mahdi has had a great deal more rejected than ever posted at SRB.

I now give you the same advise I give everyone. Stick to the charter. It is not what you say, but how you say it. My personal bias as an academic is not to post anything without a reference and now that I know it is unpublished it surely will NOT get posted. You can put the same information in your own words in another post if you feel it is important. This is not an academic discussion group. There are plenty of those around.

best regards,

Pete Hellmann
SRB Mod Staff

On Wed, 17 Jan 2001, Nima Hazini wrote:

> Dear Pete,
>
> > You quote "an upcoming article" in your message without giving a > > reference.
>
> > Because it's not published yet and needs more work to be done on it before > > being so.
>
> > I really need a reference to make this valid.
>
> > Make me the reference.
>
> > More importantly, your quotation (132 lines) is longer than your message > > (43 lines).
>
> Excuse me, but Baha'is do this all the time on SRB quoting from Baha'i > scripture. Is this an excuse not to post my message? Where is Rick > Boatright??

>
> >Secondly, most of the the information below has already been posted
> >to SRB.
>
> Most but not all. I was reiterating the same point because the poster was > raising the same hubris as before. Did the SRB moderators notice that about > MrMahdi's message?? My message is pertinent to the attack that was being > made by MrMahdi. And why is it that whereas posts from one of the most > notorious Muslim fundamentalist anti-Baha'i polemicists online is allowed on > SRB without a sweat, I constantly have to fight you SRB moderators for every > single one of my messages to be posted? Is there a directive to censor all > my messages from on high or something???
>
> regards,
> Nima
>
>
>

--

Greetings Nima,

You quote "an upcoming article" in your message without giving a reference. I really need a reference to make this valid. More importantly,
your quotation (132 lines) is longer than your message (43 lines). I would rather see individuals express their own ideas in discussion rather than throwing huge quotes at each other.

Secondly, most of the the information below has already been posted
to SRB.

best regards,

Pete Hellmann
SRB Mod Staff

On Tue, 16 Jan 2001, Nima Hazini wrote:

- > MrMahdi obviously did not read my long reply which quoted from the
- > literature of the social sciences on the subject of fundamentalism, and
- > still hubristically insists the word is politically loaded without
- > addressing any of the points outlined in my reply to him or the typologies
- > which characterize what "fundamentalism" is. MrMahdi also poses a straw
- man
- > and non sequitor by casting 'secular' extremists on the Left as possible
- > fundamentalists whereas the very definition of the word characterizes a
- > phenomenon in 'religion' (not secular groups) in modernity. So, again, for
- > the benefit of the readership of this NG, let me put forth the 9 basic
- > descriptives of "fundamentalism" outlined by Marty and Appleby in volume 1
- > of the FUNDAMENTALISM PROJECT: Fundamentalisms Observed_ (Chicago: 1991):
- >
- > 1) Fundamentalism mounts a protest against the marginalization of religion
- > in
- > secularizing societies.
- >
- > 2) Fundamentalism selectively reshapes the religious tradition (i.e. it
- may
- > represent
- > itself as a restatement of the essence of the religion, but in fact it
- picks
- > and chooses from the tradition) and it accepts some aspects of modernity
- > while rejecting others.
- >
- > 3) Fundamentalism sees the moral world as divided sharply into good and
- > evil.
- >
- > 4) Fundamentalism emphasizes the absolutism and inerrancy of its
- scriptures
- > (and thus
- > rejects Western critical academic scholarship on that corpus).
- >

- > 5) Fundamentalism has a millennialist emphasis.
- >
- > 6) Fundamentalism has an elect, chosen membership.
- >
- > 7) Fundamentalism draws sharp boundaries between the saved and the sinful.
- >
- > 8) Fundamentalism maintains an authoritarian, charismatic leadership
- > structure.
- >
- > 9) Fundamentalism has strict behavioral requirements for its people.
- >
- >
- > To quote from an upcoming article on the phenomenon of Baha'i
- > fundamentalism:
- >
- >
- > "The first major ideological characteristic of fundamentalism, is a reaction
- > against the marginalization of religion in secular societies.
- Among
- Baha'i
- > fundamentalists, this reaction takes the form of a belief in a future
- > theocracy, in which they expect Baha'i ecclesiastical institutions to take
- > over the civil state, and which differentiates them from Baha'i liberals
- and
- > moderates. The belief appears to be rooted primarily in oral traditions
- > attributed to Shoghi Effendi and letters written on his behalf by
- > secretaries, since although he does speak of a future Baha'i
- > commonwealth in his published works, its character remains vague. Hand of
- > the Cause John Robarts reported his version of a long conversation with
- > Shoghi Effendi expatiating on this idea (Robarts 1993).
- Some Baha'is
- > believed that he held that a melding of religion and state would not occur
- > during the thousand-year dispensation of Baha'u'llah himself, but only
- > toward the end of the Baha'i "cycle," of some 500,000 years (Hofman 1953).
- > There are two problems for Baha'i fundamentalists. The first is that
- > Baha'u'llah's own writings, and those of `Abdul-Baha are frankly
- > anti-theocratic. The second is that in Baha'i law, oral traditions are > supposed to be discounted in favor of written texts.

 Fundamentalists thus > tend to hew to generalities when explaining their belief, lacking scriptural > support."
 >
 > "The second feature of fundamentalism is selectivity.
 Fundamentalists
 > select and reshape aspects of the tradition, all the while asserting that > they have recaptured its pristine essence. They are also selective in > their responses to modernity. They embrace some aspects of it (such as > certain types of technology), while vehemently rejecting others. Baha'i > fundamentalists engage in all three types of selectivity as well. They > frequently make a claim to be engaging in traditional practices that are in > fact innovations, and can do so with some success because the history and > texts of the Baha'i faith are relatively little studied and authorities > have often actively suppressed historical sources. We have already > mentioned the problem that theocratic beliefs are unscriptural. That is,
 the > scriptural tradition in the Baha'i faith strove for a separation
 of religion
 > and state as a way of making room for liberty of conscience
 for Baha'is in > Shi'ite Iran (McGlinn 1999, Cole 1998c:17-47). In his Treatise on Leadership > of the early 1890s `Abdul-Baha said that religious institutions, including > Baha'i ones, are never to intervene in affairs of state or political matters
 > unbidden, and that whenever in > history they have done so it has resulted in a huge disaster.
 (`Abdul-Baha
 > in Cole 1998a). He clearly envisaged the state and religious institutions
 > as complementary, "like milk and honey."
 >
 > "Baha'is, including Baha'i fundamentalists, have for the most part embraced > modernity. They have a vision of building a peaceful global society and

for

- > the most part have a positive view of technological advances. Still,
- > the selectivity of Baha'i fundamentalists toward modernity can be witnessed
- > in the severe misgivings that some of them have expressed about the
- > Internet" or such issues as democracy and the separation of religion and
- > politics."
- >
- > "Fundamentalist Baha'is put special emphasis on moral Manichaeism. They
- > see the world as comprised of a small cadre of those "firm in the Covenant."
- > They....admit a larger number of Baha'is who are "infirm" but
- > perhaps not dangerously so. They worry about smaller numbers of "liberal"
- > or "dissident" Baha'is who [they believe] attempt to "undermine" the
- > Covenant."
- >
- > "Baha'i fundamentalism puts great emphasis on the absolutism and inerrancy
- > of scripture. This belief is quite widespread but not universal. It is
- > tested most fiercely with regard to issues such as evolution.
- `Abdul-Baha
- > maintained, in Sufi and Neoplatonic fashion, that human beings have always
- > been a distinct species and that human beings are not animals, insofar as
- > they are endowed with a soul. He also argued that the morphological
- > similarities between humans and apes might be merely functional (e.g,
- sharks
- > and porpoises resemble one another but are not immediately related), and
- > maintained that "the missing link" would never be found. These
- > assertions have foundered against the DNA revolution, which has found that
- > humans, chimpanzees and bonobos share 98 percent of the same genes and are
- > clearly closely related. During a discussion of his statements on
- > evolution, a typical poster to SRB wrote, "Dear all, On the topic of
- > evolution: Clearly we should understand as clearly as possible what
- > 'Abdul-Baha says on this subject. Because we believe His statements on > matters pertaining to the Revelation of Baha'u'llah and all of creation are > infallible, we must be clear about what it is we believe, or are accepting" > (SRB 6 July 1997)."

 >
 > "Baha'i fundamentalists emphasize belief in an imminent catastrophe they > refer to as "the Calamity" (Smith 1982). One contributor to a Baha'i-only > list wrote, "I would like to open a discussion on a subject which many of us > are somewhat unwilling to address - namely, the impending (year 2,000) > calamity which is supposed to create grave upheaval (literally) not only > here in California, but also on the East Coast, and other parts of the > world . . ." (Pers. Comm, March 14, 1994)."
 >
 > "Fundamentalist Baha'is have an authoritarian view of how the Baha'i > "administrative order" should function. There is a great emphasis on > obedience. The typical logic of Baha'i fundamentalists roots obedience in > the legitimacy of authority, disallowing a rational examination of the > substance of a command or an inquiry into whether the body giving the > command has the "constitutional" prerogative to give it. In this way, > arbitrary commands by Baha'i bodies are made to be an either-or proposition.
 > If one accepts Baha'u'llah, one accepts his administrative order, and must > obey whatever it orders one to do, whether one agrees in conscience or no. Rejection of the command, ipso facto, represents a > rejection of Baha'u'llah (Semple 1991). Thus, fundamentalist Baha'is > secretly consider liberals and some moderates "not Baha'is" at all because > they do not demonstrate sufficient willingness to immerse their wills in the > authority of the Baha'i administration."
 >
 > "Fundamentalist Baha'is believe that Baha'i institutions such as the local > assembly or the NSA can be divinely guided, and that the Universal House of > Justice is infallible. The technical terminology in Persian is not > unambiguous, and Baha'i texts make distinctions that this approach > disregards. Contemporary Baha'i fundamentalists avoid thinking > constitutionally about such issues, asserting the infallibility of the House of > Justice in an undifferentiated manner. [One] American Baha'i and mystery

 > writer...wrote, "The Guidance and infallibility of the Universal House of > Justice are assured and promised. We are specifically directed, as an act
 > of faith, to offer instant, exact, and complete obedience to Baha'u'llah's > House of Justice. We are warned of the dire > spiritual dangers inherent in ignoring this directive, and we are admonished > to be vigilant, firm, and uncompromising in our loyalty, support, obedience
 > and love for the this Divinely Ordained Institution."
 > (Talisman9 Archives, 23 May 2000).
 >
 > Fundamentalist Baha'is view "the member's time, space and activity" as "a > group resource, not an individual one" (Almond et al. 408). In some > communities enormous pressure is put on individuals by fundamentalists to > "teach the faith" or proselytize others. Some more liberal (or just shy) > Baha'is report being extremely uncomfortable with this pressure and cite
 it > as a reason they became inactive or withdrew from membership. Constant > appeals are also made for Baha'is to donate money, to "give till it hurts,"
 > and most of these donations appear to go to monumental building projects
 at > the Baha'i world center in Haifa or to bureaucratic purposes at the National
 > Baha'i Center in Wilmette. The Baha'i administration appears to do almost > no charity work (measured as a percentage of their budget), especially for > non-Baha'is. Although Baha'is do not have a distinctive form of dress, they > do have special ritual forms of prayer, and they fast in the Muslim way.

 > They are under surveillance for behavior that might contravene Baha'i law."
 >
 >
 >
 >
 >
 > Mr Mahdi <mrmahdi@aol.com> wrote in message
 > news:93vk57$e2u$1@murdoch.acc.Virginia.EDU...
 > I would like to respond in general to some of those commented on my essay.
 > When I say that creed of the Bahai Faith is static, what I meant was that > according to the Bahai Faith, the only one who has the authority to "change"
 > or > overhaul a belief within the Bahai Faith is someone who is given "waHy" > (revelation). Bahais believe that God continues to send messengers and > prophets (aka as "Manifestations" in Bahai terminology), so when there is a > belief that is eventually abrogated (in a religion) occurs, according to > what > Bahais believe, a "Manifestation" of God is given this authority to execute
 > the > abrogation of a certain belief or practice. So it goes back to what Bahais > believe is the source of beliefs; God not man or any of his "interest > groups."
 >
 >
 > There has never been an accurate and definite definition of "fundamentalism"
 > by > Bahai liberals. Because the beliefs of those accused by Bahai liberals as > being "fundamentalist" varies (e.g., some would have varying viewpoints on > certain issues within the Bahai Faith; some would be seen as having a

- > "liberal"
- > belief while others a more "conservative" inclination) and the use of
- > "fundamentalism" as a label for these people as politically-motivated
- > tactic,
- > it has not helped people in understanding what exactly makes a Bahai a
- > "Bahai
- > fundamentalist." There is no set or consistent criteria Bahai liberals have
- > where one can label a person a "Bahai fundamentalist" in a way that is
- > accurate
- > and justified.
- >
- > I would like for someone to show us what makes a Bahai a "Bahai
- > fundamentalist"
- > and if this criteria to label people is accurate, consistent, and justly
- > applied without the obvious politically-motivated intentions behind its use.
- >
- > If you study the origin of the word fundamentalism, it was meant to describe
- > Christians who followed a "literal interpretation" of the Bible. In other
- > words, fundamentalism was a basically a literal approach made by Christians to
- > the Bible. It had nothing to do with extremism or militancy.
- >
- > What the word fundamentalism brought out was a negative feeling amongst
- > people
- > who didn't agree with people who took everything literally. So later on,
- > esp.
- > during the Islamic awakening happening around the world, anybody who did
- > anything "for the cause of religion," (esp. things that were considered
- > "bad')
- > was labeled a fundamentalist, even though he could be violating the very
- > fundamentals of his religion or belief. At the meantime, the atheistic
- > secular
- > Communists were never labeled "fundamentalists," because many people who
- > used
- > fundamentalism to attack religion were of course secularists themselves,

and
> to > call a fellow secularist a fundamentalist would not look good
for > secularism.
>
> So when a secularist like an extremist Communist does something extreme, he
> is > not called a "fundamentalist" but when a person who is not secularist does > something extreme, he is called a fundamentalist. That is why the term is > not > only loaded but politically-motivated.
>
> Mahdi
>
> --
> ----- Original Message -----
> From: Nima Hazini <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
> Newsgroups: soc.religion.bahai
> Sent: Saturday, January 13, 2001 10:51 AM
> Subject: Re: The Politically-Motivated Use of "Fundamentalism" by Bahai
> "Liberals"
>
>
>
> Mr Mahdi <mrmahdi@aol.com> wrote in message
> news:sd276.5045$%b.30296@e420r-sjo2.usenetserver.com...
>
> > Often used to label a group or person as intolerant, bigoted,
> >superstitious, fanatical, and just plain crazy,
"fundamentalism" creates
a > >notion that those who believe in adhering and interpreting religious > beliefs in
> > "literal way" are intolerant, bigoted, superstitious, fanatical and just > >plain crazy.
>
> While certain fundamentalists of the Hindu, Jewish, Christian and > especially Islamic cloth have demonstrated violence, rampant intolerance, > bigotry, superstition, fanaticism and just plain craziness in the past,
that > does not mean that all fundamentalists are necessarily that way, since these

- > things are an effect not the cause or description of fundamentalism.
- > Fundamentalism, at its basis, is about a set of beliefs, ideological
- > priorities, assumptions and a certain attitude about religion in the modern
- > world. Many have analysed its presence in the global village among us, but
- > none as poignantly and in analytical and typological detail as the team of
- > scholars and specialists assembled by Martin E. Marty (University of - > Chicago) and R. Scott Appleby (University of Notre Dame) for what has come
- > to be christened as the FUNDAMENTALISM PROJECT. The FUNDAMENTALISM PROJECT
- > has already produced 8 fat, thick volumes of detailed articles and
- > monographs on the phenomena of religious fundamentalism worldwide spanning
- > traditions from Christianity to Islam and Judaism to fundamentalist
- > responses in the South Asian and Far Eastern traditions. In the 1st volume
- > of the Fundamentalism Project: FUNDAMENTALISMS OBSERVED (Chicago: 1991),
- > the editors have identified 9 common typologies of fundamentalism. To wit,
- >
- > 1) It mounts a protest against the marginalization of religion in
- > secularizing societies.
- >
- > 2) It selectively reshapes the religious tradition (i.e. it may represent
- > itself as a restatement of the essence of the religion, but in fact it
- > picks
- > and chooses from the tradition) and it accepts some aspects of modernity
- > while rejecting others.
- >
- > 3) It sees the moral world as divided sharply into good and evil.
- >
- > 4) It emphasizes the absolutism and inerrancy of its scriptures (and thus
- > rejects Western critical academic scholarship on that corpus).
- >
- > 5) It has a millennialist emphasis.
- >
- > 6) It has an elect, chosen membership.
- >
- > 7) It draws sharp boundaries between the saved and the sinful.

>

> 8) It maintains an authoritarian, charismatic leadership structure.

>

> 9) It has strict behavioral requirements for its people.

>

>

> In another important work on the fundamentalist phenomena in

> Christianity, Judaism and Islam, i.e. _The Defenders of God: The

> Fundamentalist Revolt Against the Modern Age_ (Columbia SC: 1995), > Professor Bruce B. Lawrence of Duke University (Religious Studies) points > out that,

>

> Fundamentalism is the affirmation of religious authority as holistic and > absolute, admitting of neither criticism nor reduction; it is expressed > through the collective demand that specific creedal and ethical dictates > derived from scripture be publicly recognized and legally enforced (p.

27).

>

> Earlier he pointed out,

>

> Fundamentalism is shaped both by its interaction with modernity and its > reaction against modernism. It is a two-way, not a one-way, exchange. It > affects "secular humanists" as well as their fundamentalist opponents. And > it is an exchange that has taken place, and continues to take place, on a > global scale, drawing into its orbit all religious traditions not just

Islam

> [Judaism or Christianity] (p xiv).

>

> Later on he notes,

>

> ...Fundamentalist challenges have arisen in several traditions. One could > locate cadres that are Sikh or Buddhist, _Baha'i_ [he references Denis

> Maceoin's "Baha'i Fundamentalism and the Western Academic Study of the

Babi

> Movement"] or Hindu (p. 6).

>

> On pp. 100-101 Lawrence delineates the common "traits" of fundamentalists:

- >
- > 1. Fundamentalists are advocates of a pure minority viewpoint against a
 - > sullied majority or dominant group. They are the righteous remanant turned
 - > vanguard, and even when the remanant/vanguard seizes political power and
 - > seems to become a majority, as happened in Iran in 1979, they continue to
 - > perceive and project themselves as a minority.
- >
- > 2. Fundamentalists are oppositional. They do not merely disagree with their
 - > enemies, they confront them. While the evil Other is an abstract sense of
 - > anomie or uprootedness, it is located in particular groups who perpetuate
 - > the prevailing "secular" ethos. Fundamentalists confront those secular
 - > people who exercise political or judicial power. Often they also confront
 - > "wayward" religious professionals [or percieved "wayward" scholars or
 - > intellectuals].
- >
- > 3. Fundamentalists are secondary-level male elites. They claim to derive
 - > authority from a direct, unmediated appeal to scripture, yet because
 - > interpretive principles are often vague, they must be carried by charismatic
 - > leaders who are invariably male. Notions of a just social order in Iran,
 - or
 - > a halakhic polity in Israel, or a Christian civilization in America require
 - > continuous, repeated reinterpretation. In each instance what seems to an
 - > outsider to be arbitrary retrieval of only some elements from a common past
 - > is to fundamentalists the necessary restoration of an eternally valid divine
 - > mandate. And it is a mandate mediated through exclusively male interpreters.
- >
- > 4. Fundamentalists generate their own technical vocabulary. Reflecting the
 - > polysemy of language, they use special terms that bind insiders to each
 - > other, just as they preempt interference from outsiders.

Halakha for Jews, > shari'a for Muslims, [the "covenant" or "infallibility" for Baha'is], and > "creation" for Christians represent...[four]...terms, each of which would be > open to several interpretations but which fundamentalists invest with > particular meaning that exceptionalizes, even as it appears to validate, > their ideological stance.
 >
 > 5. Fundamentalism has historical antecedents, but no ideological precursors.
 > As Marc Bloch warned, one should never confuse ancestry with explanation.
 > Though the antecedents of fundamentalism are varied and distant -
 Maccabean
 > revolt for Jews, the Protestant Reformation for Christians, the Wahhabi > revolt for Sunnis Muslims, the martyrdom of Husayn for Shi'is - > fundamentalism as a religious ideology is very recent. It did not emerge in > Protestant America until the end of the last century. It has only become > apparent in Judaism during the last fifty years, and since it represents a > delayed reaction to the psychological hegemony of European colonial rule, it > could only occur in majoritarian Muslim countries after they had become > independent nation-states, that is, in most instances, after World War II.

>
 > So given all this, it is a rather big non sequitor (i.e. fallacy of > reasoning) to assert that fundamentalism is merely a Western boggyman ploy
 > or that Armstrong and others who are studying the phenomena are conflating > or misconstruing nationalism and religious identity assertion and lumping > them all under a tenuously common rubric. For the reasons stated above,
 the > global phenomenon of fundamentalism is a very real one and one only need > look at the the IRI or the Taliban regime as two sore thump examples of its

- > presence and existence.
- >
- >
- > >"Liberalism" is a dynamic belief system which often is manifested in a
- > >movement.
- >
- > The discourse of Liberalism makes the following set of assumptions,
- >
- > 1. Discursive dynamicity (i.e. liberal discourse) is the product of a
- > continuous process of rational discourse.
- >
- > 2. Rational discourse is possible even among those who do not share the same
- > culture, religion, belief system nor even the same ideological
- > consciousness.
- >
- > 3.Rational discourse can produce mutual understanding and
- > cultural/philosophical consensus, as well as sometimes agreement on
- > particulars.
- >
- > 4. Consensus permits of stable social arrangements, and is the rational
- > basis of the choice of coherent strategies.
- >
- > 5. Rational strategic choice is the basis of improving the human condition
- > possibly through collective action.
- >
- > 6. Liberalism as such can exist only where and when its social and
- > intellectual prerequisites exist.
- >
- >
- > <snip>
- >
- > Given that the Baha'i teachings uphold such principles as 'An ever
- advancing
- > civilization' and the progressive unfoldment of religious truth in
- history,
- > liberalism by definition is not incompatible with the Baha'i faith.
- > Fanatism, rigid ideological dogmatism and especially that which advocates
- > violence to achieve certain political ends, which certain religious
- > fundamentalists such as the Taliban and Khomeinists continually advocate,
- > are however incontrovertibly incompatible with the Baha'i faith and its > teachings.

>
> As far as the issue of same-sex marriages or homosexuality and the Baha'i > faith, this is casting hubris on an issue not all liberals agree on, and > which does not define liberalism as such. Liberalism at base is about a set
> of philosophical assumptions made about the world.
Furthermore, liberal > believers can be found in all the major world traditions.
There are Islamic > liberals, Christian liberals, Jewish liberals, so on and so forth. By > virtue of subscribing to the priorities of the Open Society and hence > liberalism does not automatically exclude a believer from being a believer.
> Such hubristic arguments, regularly trounced by bona fide religious > fundamentalists (especially of the Islamic stripe) are pure red herrings.
>
> regards,
> Nima
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>
>

From: <nima_hazini@my-deja.com>
Subject: Censorship foiled?
Date: Saturday, January 20, 2001 2:52 AM

Just an update to let everyone know that the SRB moderators finally posted a version of my original message. However, while they were most reluctant to post my message originally, they were quite eager to post the detractions of said article almost immediately after the article appeared. This goes to show that for whatever excuses the moderators of SRB might make about this or that reason for not posting an article, the bottom line is that there's a HUGE double standard followed by the SRB moderators.

cheers,
Nima

In article <9436gp$kcus1@gnamma.connect.com.au>, "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au> wrote:

**> --
> Greetings Nima,
>
> The reason I rejected your message is not because of the quoted material, > but because of the repeated information otherwise known as signal to noise > ratio. Mr. Mahdi is not going to answer your questions regardless of how > many times you post the same material. Personally I don't know why you > bother trying to engage him or his rhetoric, but I digress.
>
> Let me address a few of your concerns. First, Rick B. is right here.
All
> the mods get the messages each week and if there is any concern we all > speak up. I can guarantee you that you have no special favor or dislike > from any of the mods. Second, there is no directive from any > Administrative body or individuals putting you in any special condition > with the mods. Your posts are measured by the charter and will continue to > be. Lastly, we do not post who gets rejected, but it would be safe to say
> Mr. Mahdi has had a great deal more rejected than ever posted at SRB.
>
> I now give you the same advise I give everyone. Stick to the charter.
It is > not what you say, but how you say it. My personal > bias as an academic is not to post anything without a reference and now > that I know it is unpublished it surely will NOT get posted.
You can put > the same information in your own words in another post if you feel it is > important. This is not an academic discussion group. There are plenty

of > those around.
>
> best regards,
>
> Pete Hellmann
> SRB Mod Staff
>
> On Wed, 17 Jan 2001, Nima Hazini wrote:
>
> > Dear Pete,
> >
> > > You quote "an upcoming article" in your message without giving a > > > reference.
> >
> > Because it's not published yet and needs more work to be done on it before > > being so.
> >
> > > I really need a reference to make this valid.
> >
> > Make me the reference.
> >
> > > More importantly, your quotation (132 lines) is longer than your message
> > (43 lines).
> >
> > Excuse me, but Baha'is do this all the time on SRB quoting from
Baha'i
> > scripture. Is this an excuse not to post my message?
Where is Rick > > Boatright??
> >
> > > Secondly, most of the the information below has already been posted
> > > to SRB.
> >
> > Most but not all. I was reiterating the same point because
the poster was > > raising the same hubris as before. Did the SRB moderators notice
that > about > > MrMahdi's message?? My message is pertinent to the attack that was being > > made by MrMahdi. And why is it that whereas posts from one of the most > > notorious Muslim fundamentalist anti-Baha'i polemicists online is allowed > on > > SRB without a sweat, I constantly have to fight you SRB

moderators
for > every > > single one of my messages to be posted? Is there a directive to censor all > > my messages from on high or something???

> >
> > regards,
> > Nima
> >
> >
> >
> >
>
> --
>
> Greetings Nima,
>
> You quote "an upcoming article" in your message without giving a > reference. I really need a reference to make this valid. More importantly,
> your quotation (132 lines) is longer than your message (43 lines). I would > rather see individuals express their own ideas in discussion rather than > throwing huge quotes at each other.
>
> Secondly, most of the the information below has already been posted
> to SRB.
>
> best regards,
>
> Pete Hellmann
> SRB Mod Staff
>
> On Tue, 16 Jan 2001, Nima Hazini wrote:
>
> > MrMahdi obviously did not read my long reply which quoted from the > > literature of the social sciences on the subject of fundamentalism,
and > > still hubristically insists the word is politically loaded without > > addressing any of the points outlined in my reply to him or

the typologies

> > which characterize what "fundamentalism" is. MrMahdi also poses a straw

> man

> > and non sequitor by casting 'secular' extremists on the Left as possible

> > fundamentalists whereas the very definition of the word characterizes a > > phenomenon in 'religion' (not secular groups) in modernity. So, again, for > > the benefit of the readership of this NG, let me put forth

the 9 basic > > descriptives of "fundamentalism" outlined by Marty and Appleby in volume 1

> > of the FUNDAMENTALISM PROJECT: Fundamentalisms Observed_ (Chicago: 1991):

> >

> > 1) Fundamentalism mounts a protest against the marginalization of religion

> > in > > secularizing societies.

> >

> > 2) Fundamentalism selectively reshapes the religious tradition
(i.e. it > may > > represent

> > itself as a restatement of the essence of the religion, but in fact

it

> picks

> > and chooses from the tradition) and it accepts some aspects of modernity

> > while rejecting others.

> >

> > 3) Fundamentalism sees the moral world as divided sharply into good
and > > evil.

> >

> > 4) Fundamentalism emphasizes the absolutism and inerrancy of its > scriptures

> > (and thus > > rejects Western critical academic scholarship on that corpus).

> >

> > 5) Fundamentalism has a millennialist emphasis.
 > >
 > > 6) Fundamentalism has an elect, chosen membership.
 > >
 > > 7) Fundamentalism draws sharp boundaries between the saved and the sinful.
 > >
 > > 8) Fundamentalism maintains an authoritarian, charismatic leadership structure.
 > >
 > > 9) Fundamentalism has strict behavioral requirements for its people.
 > >
 > >
 > > To quote from an upcoming article on the phenomenon of Baha'i fundamentalism:
 > >
 > >
 > > "The first major ideological characteristic of fundamentalism, is a reaction > > against the marginalization of religion in secular societies. Among Baha'i fundamentalists, this reaction takes the form of a belief in a future > > theocracy, in which they expect Baha'i ecclesiastical institutions to take > > over the civil state, and which differentiates them from Baha'i liberals > > and moderates. The belief appears to be rooted primarily in oral traditions > > attributed to Shoghi Effendi and letters written on his behalf by > > secretaries, since although he does speak of a future Baha'i > > commonwealth in his published works, its character remains vague.
 Hand of > > the Cause John Robarts reported his version of a long conversation with > > Shoghi Effendi expatiating on this idea (Robarts 1993).
 Some Baha'is
 > > believed that he held that a melding of religion and state would not occur

> > during the thousand-year dispensation of Baha'u'llah himself, but only

> > toward the end of the Baha'i "cycle," of some 500,000 years (Hofman 1953).

> > There are two problems for Baha'i fundamentalists. The first is

that

> > Baha'u'llah's own writings, and those of `Abdul-Baha are frankly > > anti-theocratic. The second is that in Baha'i law, oral traditions

are > > supposed to be discounted in favor of written texts.

Fundamentalists thus > > tend to hew to generalities when explaining their belief, lacking

> scriptural > > support."

> >

> > "The second feature of fundamentalism is selectivity.

Fundamentalists

> > select and reshape aspects of the tradition, all the while asserting that > > they have recaptured its pristine essence. They are also selective

in > > their responses to modernity. They embrace some aspects of it

(such as > > certain types of technology), while vehemently rejecting others.

Baha'i

> > fundamentalists engage in all three types of selectivity as well.

They

> > frequently make a claim to be engaging in traditional practices that are

> in > > fact innovations, and can do so with some success because the history and > > texts of the Baha'i faith are relatively little studied and authorities > > have often actively suppressed historical sources. We have already > > mentioned the problem that theocratic beliefs are unscriptural.

That is,

> the > > scriptural tradition in the Baha'i faith strove for a separation of > religion

> > and state as a way of making room for liberty of conscience for Baha'is in > > Shi`ite Iran (McGlinn 1999, Cole 1998c:17-47). In his Treatise on > Leadership > > of the early 1890s `Abdul-Baha said that religious institutions,
 > including > > Baha'i ones, are never to intervene in affairs of state or political > matters
 > > unbidden, and that whenever in > > history they have done so it has resulted in a huge disaster.
 > (`Abdul-Baha
 > > in Cole 1998a). He clearly envisaged the state and religious institutions
 > > as complementary, "like milk and honey."
 > >
 > > "Baha'is, including Baha'i fundamentalists, have for the most part > embraced > > modernity. They have a vision of building a peaceful global society and
 > for > > the most part have a positive view of technological advances.
 Still,
 > > the selectivity of Baha'i fundamentalists toward modernity can be > witnessed > > in the severe misgivings that some of them have expressed about the > > Internet" or such issues as democracy and the separation
 of religion and > > politics."
 > >
 > > "Fundamentalist Baha'is put special emphasis on moral Manichaeism. They > > see the world as comprised of a small cadre of those "firm in the > Covenant."
 > > They....admit a larger number of Baha'is who are "infirm"
 but > > perhaps not dangerously so. They worry about smaller numbers of "liberal"
 > > or "dissident" Baha'is who [they believe] attempt to
 "undermine" the > > Covenant."
 > >
 > > "Baha'i fundamentalism puts great emphasis on the absolutism and inerrancy

> > of scripture. This belief is quite widespread but not universal.

It is

> > tested most fiercely with regard to issues such as evolution.

> `Abdul-Baha

> > maintained, in Sufi and Neoplatonic fashion, that human beings have always > > been a distinct species and that human beings are not animals, insofar as > > they are endowed with a soul. He also argued that the morphological > > similarities between humans and apes might be merely functional

(e.g, > sharks

> > and porpoises resemble one another but are not immediately related), and > > maintained that "the missing link" would never be found.

These

> > assertions have foundered against the DNA revolution, which has found that > > humans, chimpanzees and bonobos share 98 percent of the same genes and are > > clearly closely related. During a discussion of his statements on

> > evolution, a typical poster to SRB wrote, "Dear all, On the topic
of

> > evolution: Clearly we should understand as clearly as possible what

> > 'Abdul-Baha says on this subject. Because we believe His statements on > > matters pertaining to the Revelation of Baha'u'llah and all

of creation

> are

> > infallible, we must be clear about what it is we believe, or are > accepting"

> > (SRB 6 July 1997)."

> >

> > "Baha'i fundamentalists emphasize belief in an imminent catastrophe

they

> > refer to as "the Calamity" (Smith 1982). One contributor to a

> Baha'i-only

> > list wrote, "I would like to open a discussion on a subject which many of > us > > are somewhat unwilling to address - namely, the impending (year 2,000)

> > calamity which is supposed to create grave upheaval (literally) not only > > here in California, but also on the East Coast, and other parts of
the > > world . . ." (Pers. Comm, March 14, 1994)."
> >
> > "Fundamentalist Baha'is have an authoritarian view of how the Baha'i
> > "administrative order" should function. There is a great emphasis on > > obedience. The typical logic of Baha'i fundamentalists roots obedience in > > the legitimacy of authority, disallowing a rational examination of
the > > substance of a command or an inquiry into whether the body giving
the > > command has the "constitutional" prerogative to give it.
In this way,
> > arbitrary commands by Baha'i bodies are made to be an either-or > proposition.
> > If one accepts Baha'u'llah, one accepts his administrative order, and must > > obey whatever it orders one to do, whether one agrees in > > conscience or no. Rejection of the command, ipso facto, represents
a > > rejection of Baha'u'llah (Semple 1991). Thus, fundamentalist Baha'is > > secretly consider liberals and some moderates "not Baha'is" at all because > > they do not demonstrate sufficient willingness to immerse their wills in
> the > > authority of the Baha'i administration."
> >
> > "Fundamentalist Baha'is believe that Baha'i institutions such as the local > > assembly or the NSA can be divinely guided, and that the Universal

House

> of > > Justice is infallible. The technical terminology in Persian is not > > unambiguous, and Baha'i texts make distinctions that this approach

> > disregards. Contemporary Baha'i fundamentalists avoid thinking > > constitutionally about such issues, asserting the infallibility of the > House

> > of Justice in an undifferentiated manner. [One] American Baha'i and > mystery

> > writer...wrote, "The Guidance and infallibility of the Universal House of

House of > > Justice are assured and promised. We are specifically directed,

as an > act

> > of faith, to offer instant, exact, and complete obedience to Baha'u'llah's

> > House of Justice. We are warned of the dire

> > spiritual dangers inherent in ignoring this directive, and we are > admonished

> > to be vigilant, firm, and uncompromising in our loyalty, support,

> obedience

> > and love for the this Divinely Ordained Institution."

> > (Talisman9 Archives, 23 May 2000).

> >

> > Fundamentalist Baha'is view "the member's time, space and activity" as "a > > group resource, not an individual one" (Almond et al. 408). In some > > communities enormous pressure is put on individuals by fundamentalists to

> > "teach the faith" or proselytize others. Some more liberal (or just shy)

> > Baha'is report being extremely uncomfortable with this pressure and cite

> it

> > as a reason they became inactive or withdrew from membership.

Constant

> > appeals are also made for Baha'is to donate money, to "give till it > hurts,"

> > and most of these donations appear to go to monumental building projects
> at > > the Baha'i world center in Haifa or to bureaucratic purposes at the > National
> > Baha'i Center in Wilmette. The Baha'i administration appears to do almost > > no charity work (measured as a percentage of their budget), especially for > > non-Baha'is. Although Baha'is do not have a distinctive form of dress, > they > > do have special ritual forms of prayer, and they fast in the Muslim way.
> > They are under surveillance for behavior that might contravene Baha'i > law."
> >
> >
> >
> >
> >
> >
> > Mr Mahdi <mrmahdi@aol.com> wrote in message
> > news:93vk57$e2u$1@murdoch.acc.Virginia.EDU...
> > I would like to respond in general to some of those commented on my essay.
> > When I say that creed of the Bahai Faith is static, what I meant was that > > according to the Bahai Faith, the only one who has the authority to > "change"
> > or
> > overhaul a belief within the Bahai Faith is someone who is given "waHy" > > (revelation). Bahais believe that God continues to send messengers and > > prophets (aka as "Manifestations" in Bahai terminology), so when there is > a > > belief that is eventually abrogated (in a religion) occurs, according to > > what > > Bahais believe, a "Manifestation" of God is given this authority to > execute

> > the > > abrogation of a certain belief or practice. So it goes back to what > Bahais
 > > believe is the source of beliefs; God not man or any of his "interest > > groups."
 > >
 > >
 > > There has never been an accurate and definite definition
 of > "fundamentalism"
 > > by > > Bahai liberals. Because the beliefs of those accused by Bahai liberals as > > being "fundamentalist" varies (e.g., some would have varying viewpoints on > > certain issues within the Bahai Faith; some would be seen as having a > > "liberal"
 > > belief while others a more "conservative" inclination) and the use
 of
 > > "fundamentalism" as a label for these people as politically-motivated > > tactic,
 > > it has not helped people in understanding what exactly makes a Bahai a
 > > "Bahai
 > > fundamentalist." There is no set or consistent criteria
 Bahai
 liberals > have > > where one can label a person a "Bahai fundamentalist" in a way that is > > accurate
 > > and justified.
 > >
 > > I would like for someone to show us what makes a Bahai
 a "Bahai
 > > fundamentalist"
 > > and if this criteria to label people is accurate, consistent,
 and justly > > applied without the obvious politically-motivated intentions behind its > use.
 > >
 > > If you study the origin of the word fundamentalism, it was meant to > describe

> > Christians who followed a "literal interpretation" of the Bible.
In other > > words, fundamentalism was a basically a literal approach made by Christians
> to > > the Bible. It had nothing to do with extremism or militancy.
> >
> > What the word fundamentalism brought out was a negative feeling amongst > > people > > who didn't agree with people who took everything literally. So later on,
> > esp.
> > during the Islamic awakening happening around the world, anybody who did > > anything "for the cause of religion," (esp. things that were considered
> > "bad")
> > was labeled a fundamentalist, even though he could be violating the very > > fundamentals of his religion or belief. At the meantime, the atheistic
> > secular
> > Communists were never labeled "fundamentalists," because many people who > > used > > fundamentalism to attack religion were of course secularists themselves,
> and
> > to > > call a fellow secularist a fundamentalist would not look good for > > secularism.
> >
> > So when a secularist like an extremist Communist does something extreme,
> he
> > is > > not called a "fundamentalist" but when a person who is not secularist does > > something extreme, he is called a fundamentalist. That is why the term is > > not > > only loaded but politically-motivated.

> >

> > Mahdi

> >

> > --

> > ----- Original Message -----

> > From: Nima Hazini <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>

> > Newsgroups: soc.religion.bahai

> > Sent: Saturday, January 13, 2001 10:51 AM

> > Subject: Re: The Politically-Motivated Use of "Fundamentalism" by

Bahai

> > "Liberals"

> >

> >

> > Mr Mahdi <mrmahdi@aol.com> wrote in message

> > news:sd276.5045$%b.30296@e420r-sjo2.usenetserver.com...

> >

> > > Often used to label a group or person as intolerant,
bigoted,

> > >superstitious, fanatical, and just plain crazy,
"fundamentalism"

creates

> a > > >notion that those who believe in adhering and interpreting religious

> > beliefs in

> > > "literal way" are intolerant, bigoted, superstitious, fanatical and just > > >plain crazy.

> >

> > While certain fundamentalists of the Hindu, Jewish, Chrisitian and > > especially Islamic cloth have demonstrated violence, rampant intolerance,

> > bigotry, superstition, fanaticism and just plain craziness in
the past,

> that > > does not mean that all fundamentalists are necessarily that way,

since

> these > > things are an effect not the cause or description of fundamentalism.

> > Fundamentalism, at its basis, is about a set of beliefs, ideological

> > priorities, assumptions and a certain attitude about religion in the > modern > > world. Many have analysed its presence in the global village among us, but > > none as poignantly and in analytical and typological detail as the team of > > scholars and specialists assembled by Martin E. Marty (University of Chicago) and R. Scott Appleby (University of Notre Dame) for what has come > > to be christened as the FUNDAMENTALISM PROJECT. The FUNDAMENTALISM PROJECT > > has already produced 8 fat, thick volumes of detailed articles and > > monographs on the phenomena of religious fundamentalism worldwide spanning > > traditions from Christianity to Islam and Judaism to fundamentalist > > responses in the South Asian and Far Eastern traditions. In the 1st volume > > of the Fundamentalism Project: FUNDAMENTALISMS OBSERVED (Chicago: 1991), > > the editors have identified 9 common typologies of fundamentalism. To wit,

 > >
 > > 1) It mounts a protest against the marginalization of religion in > > secularizing societies.
 > >
 > > 2) It selectively reshapes the religious tradition (i.e. it may represent > > itself as a restatement of the essence of the religion, but in fact it > > picks
 > > and chooses from the tradition) and it accepts some aspects of modernity > > while rejecting others.
 > >
 > > 3) It sees the moral world as divided sharply into good and evil.
 > >
 > > 4) It emphasizes the absolutism and inerrancy of its scriptures (and thus > > rejects Western critical academic scholarship on that corpus).

> >
 > > 5) It has a millennialist emphasis.
 > >
 > > 6) It has an elect, chosen membership.
 > >
 > > 7) It draws sharp boundaries between the saved and the sinful.
 > >
 > > 8) It maintains an authoritarian, charismatic leadership structure.
 > >
 > > 9) It has strict behavioral requirements for its people.
 > >
 > >
 > > In another important work on the fundamentalist phenomena in > > Christianity, Judaism and Islam, i.e. _The Defenders of God: The > > Fundamentalist Revolt Against the Modern Age_ (Columbia SC: 1995), > > Professor Bruce B. Lawrence of Duke University (Religious Studies) points > > out that,
 > >
 > > Fundamentalism is the affirmation of religious authority as holistic and > > absolute, admitting of neither criticism nor reduction; it is expressed > > through the collective demand that specific creedal and ethical dictates > > derived from scripture be publicly recognized and legally enforced (p.
 > 27).
 > >
 > > Earlier he pointed out,
 > >
 > > Fundamentalism is shaped both by its interaction with modernity and its > > reaction against modernism. It is a two-way, not a one-way, exchange. It > > affects "secular humanists" as well as their fundamentalist opponents. And > > it is an exchange that has taken place, and continues to take place, on a > > global scale, drawing into its orbit all religious traditions not just > Islam

> > [Judaism or Christianity] (p xiv).
 > >
 > > Later on he notes,
 > >
 > > ...Fundamentalist challenges have arisen in several traditions. One could > > locate cadres that are Sikh or Buddhist, _Baha'i_ [he references Denis > > Maceoin's "Baha'i Fundamentalism and the Western Academic Study of the > > Babi
 > > Movement"] or Hindu (p. 6).
 > >
 > > On pp. 100-101 Lawrence delineates the common "traits" of > > fundamentalists:
 > >
 > > 1. Fundamentalists are advocates of a pure minority viewpoint > > against a > > sullied majority or dominant group. They are the righteous remnant > > turned > > vanguard, and even when the remnant/vanguard seizes political > > power and > > seems to become a majority, as happened in Iran in 1979, they > > continue to > > perceive and project themselves as a minority.
 > >
 > > 2. Fundamentalists are oppositional. They do not merely disagree > > with > > their > > enemies, they confront them. While the evil Other is an abstract > > sense of > > anomie or uprootedness, it is located in particular groups who > > perpetuate > > the prevailing "secular" ethos. Fundamentalists confront those > > secular > > people who exercise political or judicial power. Often they also > > confront
 > > "wayward" religious professionals [or perceived > > "wayward" scholars
 > > or > > intellectuals].
 > >
 > > 3. Fundamentalists are secondary-level male elites. They claim to derive > > authority from a direct, unmediated appeal to scripture, yet because > > interpretive principles are often vague, they must be carried by > charismatic > > leaders who are invariably male. Notions of a just social order in Iran,

 > or > > a halakhic polity in Israel, or a Christian civilization in America > require > > continuous, repeated reinterpretation. In each instance what seems to an > > outsider to be arbitrary retrieval of only some elements from a common > past > > is to fundamentalists the necessary restoration of an eternally valid > divine > > mandate. And it is a mandate mediated through exclusively male > interpreters.
 > >
 > > 4. Fundamentalists generate their own technical vocabulary.
 Reflecting the > > polysemy of language, they use special terms that bind insiders to each > > other, just as they preempt interference from outsiders.
 Halakha for Jews, > > shari'a for Muslims, [the "covenant" or "infallibility" for Baha'is], and
 > > "creation" for Christians represent...[four]...terms, each of which would > be > > open to several interpretations but which fundamentalists invest with > > particular meaning that exceptionalizes, even as it appears to validate,
 > > their ideological stance.
 > >
 > > 5. Fundamentalism has historical antecedents, but no ideological > precursors.
 > > As Marc Bloch warned, one should never confuse ancestry

with explanation.

> > Though the antecedents of fundamentalism are varied and distant -

> Maccabean

> > revolt for Jews, the Protestant Reformation for Christians, the Wahhabi

> > revolt for Sunnis Muslims, the martyrdom of Husayn for Shi'is - > > fundamentalism as a religious ideology is very recent. It did not emerge

> in

> > Protestant America until the end of the last century. It has only become > > apparent in Judaism during the last fifty years, and since it represents a > > delayed reaction to the psychological hegemony of European colonial rule,

> it

> > could only occur in majoritarian Muslim countries after they had become > > independent nation-states, that is, in most instances, after World War II.

>

> >

> > So given all this, it is a rather big non sequitor (i.e. fallacy of > > reasoning) to assert that fundamentalism is merely a Western boggeyman

> ploy

> > or that Armstrong and others who are studying the phenomena are conflating

> > or misconstruing nationalism and religious identity assertion and lumping

> > them all under a tenuously common rubric. For the reasons stated above,

> the > > global phenomenon of fundamentalism is a very real one and one only need

> > look at the the IRI or the Taliban regime as two sore thump examples of > its > > presence and existence.

> >
> >
> > > "Liberalism" is a dynamic belief system which often is manifested in a > > > movement.
> >
> > The discourse of Liberalism makes the following set of assumptions,
> >
> > 1. Discursive dynamicity (i.e. liberal discourse) is the product of a > > continuous process of rational discourse.
> >
> > 2. Rational discourse is possible even among those who do not share the > > same > > culture, religion, belief system nor even the same ideological > > consciousness.
> >
> > 3. Rational discourse can produce mutual understanding and > > cultural/philosophical consensus, as well as sometimes agreement on > > particulars.
> >
> > 4. Consensus permits of stable social arrangements, and is the rational > > basis of the choice of coherent strategies.
> >
> > 5. Rational strategic choice is the basis of improving the human condition > > possibly through collective action.
> >
> > 6. Liberalism as such can exist only where and when its social and > > intellectual prerequisites exist.
> >
> >
> > <snip>
> >
> > Given that the Baha'i teachings uphold such principles as 'An ever > > advancing > > civilization' and the progressive unfoldment of religious truth in > > history,
> > liberalism by definition is not incompatible with the Baha'i faith.
> > Fanatism, rigid ideological dogmatism and especially that which advocates

> > violence to achieve certain political ends, which certain religious > > fundamentalists such as the Taliban and Khomeinists continually advocate, > > are however incontrovertibly incompatible with the Baha'i faith and its > > teachings.

> >

> > As far as the issue of same-sex marriages or homosexuality and the

Baha'i

> > faith, this is casting hubris on an issue not all liberals agree

on, and > > which does not define liberalism as such. Liberalism at base is about a > set

> > of philosophical assumptions made about the world.

Furthermore,

liberal

> > believers can be found in all the major world traditions.

There are

> Islamic

> > liberals, Christian liberals, Jewish liberals, so on and so forth.

By > > virtue of subscribing to the priorities of the Open Society and hence > > liberalism does not automatically exclude a believer from being a > believer.

> > Such hubristic arguments, regularly trounced by bona fide religious > > fundamentalists (especially of the Islamic stripe) are pure red herrings.

> >

> > regards,

> > Nima

> >

> >

> >

> >

> >

> >

> >

> >

> >

>

>

Sent via Deja.com

<https://www.deja.com/>From: <nima_hazini@my-deja.com>

Subject: Re: Censorship foiled?

Date: Sunday, January 21, 2001 10:48 PM

Our resident American midwestern rightwing Baha'i militia man, Mark Elderkin, currently living in the sticks of New South Wales ranted:

> The real question here is: Why would the SRB moderators, on a Baha'i >NG, post anything at all from you?

So you are indeed advocating censorship, eh?? Amazing! Thanks for your honesty, Mark.

I often wonder why people like you are even Baha'is? Wouldn't it make more sense to join the Moonies or even the Scientologists or even a charismatic fundamentalist Baptist church than the Baha'i faith seeing how your views more closely accord with those than anything expounded by Baha'u'llah and `Abdul-Baha?

> If the above were really true then the moderators would not have >ignored the > guidance already presented to them in a Baha'i publication.

Guidance, more like slander! But tell me, Mark, why were you calling me and leaving Christmas greetings on my answering machine a few weeks ago when you believe I should be shunned??

cheers,
Nima

Sent via Deja.com

<https://www.deja.com/>From: "Nima Hazini"

<lotusapt@wxc.com.au>

Subject: Defamation in Baha'i Publication (cult retaliation to ex-member)

Date: Monday, December 11, 2000 5:48 PM

Contents

- 1. Defamatory Publication about me in recent Australian Baha'i Bulletin
- 2. My response to the NSA of Australia

3. Queensland Consolidated Acts 1889 Sections 4 & 5
4. Affidavit on violent physical assault by local Baha'is on the Gold Coast.
5. Text of libellous and defamatory letter written on behalf of the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia about me dated Nov. 1997
6. Links to cites where a pattern of abuses by Baha'i authorities towards former members is documented.

Australian Baha'i Bulletin, Dec, Page 2.

"Status Clarification

A number of Baha'is have expressed concern about statements being made by Mr Nima Hazini, who is presently resident in Queensland. Their concern arose from their belief that he is a member of the Baha'i community. In fact, Mr Hazini wrote the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States on November 25, 1996, during the period he was residing in that country, withdrawing from the Baha'i community. Unfortunately, Mr Hazini has for some time been engaged in attacking the integrity of the Cause. The friends are therefore advised to leave him to himself."

--

To whom it may concern:

I note that in the recent December 2nd issue of the Australian Baha'i Bulletin a seriously libellous and defamatory statement has been published about me in a journal supervised by your body explicitly casting me as an enemy of the Baha'i Faith and overtly calling for my being shunned, this time publicly. Since this matter is overtly defamatory and libellous, therefore injurious to my honour, integrity and reputation, it is a very serious matter, especially given that the Australian Baha'i Bulletin is circulated widely. I ask 1) that you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation who exactly those Baha'is are who have expressed concern about my status as a non-Baha'i, and 2) why, for what reason and end should this clarification be printed in the Australian Baha'i Bulletin, and under what pretext, four years to the date after my withdrawal in the United States and after I have disassociated myself from the Baha'i community and its functions altogether. I ask that 3) you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation exactly what is meant by the phrase "engaged in attacking the integrity of the Cause," since I have at no time attacked the Central Baha'i Figures. I ask that 4) you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation exactly why this was printed and highlighted on the second page of the Australian Baha'i Bulletin directly below a statement by the Universal House of Justice when such status clarifications are usually printed in the back pages of said journal. I ask that 5) you clarify forthwith, immediately and in writing with a detailed explanation exactly who was responsible for the decision to print this statement and specifically whether it was an NSA decision (by majority, quorum or otherwise), or whether by another party, and whom exactly. Furthermore, what business is it of the Australian Baha'i Bulletin to publically clarify the status of a non-Baha'i or of their statements to begin with? Given the timing of the publication of this statement in the Australian Baha'i Bulletin leaves room for seriously grave suspicions as to its origin and possible motives - even collusion by third parties not on the NSA and hence cronyism cannot be ruled out at this stage - which would indeed then tend to raise serious questions about the overall integrity of the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Australia and individual members thereof. It is indeed curious that this statement should come in the wake of a violent physical assault against my person three months ago by a member of the LSA of the Gold Coast - a member who is a wealthy donor to the AO, and seemingly based on his own statements has claimed he has the ear of one or two UHJ members and a member of your own NSA. I believe that the publication of this statement is nothing more than yet another carefully crafted attempt by the AO at a cover-up of corruption and abuses by its close patrons.

As such, should this matter not be addressed by your body and a written apology and retraction not be forthcoming immediately in the next (January 2001) edition of the said journal forthwith, the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Australia will leave me no choice but to proceed with initiating formal litigation proceedings against it for its continued defamation against my person and its continued injury of my right to privacy and freedom of association. Make no mistakes, all legal avenues at my disposal will be persued and exhausted to the fullest extent of the law, and since a public call for my shunning has been made, and such calls are illegal under Australian law, this matter will be persued. Moreover, this will be followed by full disclosures of all pertinent facts and circumstances to the Australian national press as well as the International press, including but not limited to United Press International, Reuters, the Associated Press, 60 Minutes, A Current Affair, Frontline, Radio Free Europe and The Voice of America. Full disclosures of violations of the human and civil rights of former members, including myself, will also be fully disclosed and exposed to various civil liberties and human rights organizations such as the Australian Civil Liberties Union, Amnesty International, Human Rights Watch and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and various Cult Watch groups and organizations both in Australia and abroad. Moreover, Australian Federal MPs as well as members of the United States Congress, the British and European Parliaments and the United Nations favourably inclined to the Baha'is will also be contacted and a full disclosure given about the continual pattern of abuses against myself and others by Baha'i authorities. Academics and various professional Academic forums and associations in Australia, North America and Europe will also be contacted and full disclosures made, detailing this pattern of abuse. Surely, the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and the Baha'i community does not wish to tarnish irreparably its good reputation in the world at large and be relegated to the same playing field and compared publicly in the press and public mind to cults such as Scientology and the Reverend Sung Yung Moon's

Unification Church in its treatment, harassment and public defamation of former members for alleged thought-crimes.

I therefore ask you attend to this matter immediately and without delay. I will be awaiting your reply. This message will be included (and possibly expanded) in a longer missive to be sent by me to the NSA of Australia in several days.

Sincerely yours,
Nima Hazini

--

Queensland Consolidated Acts

Defamation Act 1889 - SECT 4

Definition of "defamatory matter"

4.(1) Any imputation concerning any person, or any member of the person's family, whether living or dead, by which the reputation of that person is likely to be injured, or by which the person is likely to be injured in the person's profession or trade, or by which other persons are likely to be induced to shun or avoid or ridicule or despise the person, is called
"defamatory", and the matter of the imputation is called "defamatory matter."

(2) An imputation may be expressed either directly or by insinuation or irony.

SECT 5

5.(1) Any person who, by spoken words or audible sounds, or by words intended to be read either by sight or touch or by signs, signals, gestures, or visible representations, publishes any defamatory imputation concerning any person is said to defame that person.

Affidavit (modified, some names etc, have been taken out)

On the evening of September 4th, 2000, approximately 7:00pm, at the repeated insistence of 9999999999999999, I went to their house for dinner at XXXXXXXXXXXX. Attending were misters W, X, Y, Z and ladies A, B, C and the two year old son of Z and B, R. The attendees were already half way through dinner when I arrived. I sat down to the meal and ate until around 7:15/7:25.

After dinner, approximately 7:30pm, a heated conversation ensued resulting in an altercation between Mr. W, X and myself, as a result of which I was attacked and assaulted by misters X, W, Z and Y. The events are the following:

After the meal, around the dinner table, small talk conversation ensued mainly around the subject of what Y was doing with his life these days in the United States. Y spoke about his life as a medical student, how he was planning to be a pediatrician, and also revealed that he was an expert in the martial arts of Brazilian Jujitsu and that he had even been California state champion. The conversation next shifted to being single, and B complimented Mr. Y stating how she thought he was "the perfect guy" but asking why he was still single. Mr. W then interjected and the pejorative term "Loser" was used about those who were single. Next Mr. W began arrogantly boasting about his major accomplishments and how he had made enormous contributions to society and the like. I then questioned the premise of the claim presented by Mr. W, and as a matter of principle, stated that I did not believe that building opulent, decadent and snobbish projects such as the  Hotel and such constituted true service to society by any stretch of the imagination, since true service to society is by definition selfless, sincere, pure, unglamorous and seeking of wide ranging positive results for the benefit of many, like Mother Teresa, unlike the decadent opulence of such grandiose hotel resort projects open only to the rich, wealthy and famous such as the *****.

Next, after I had bluntly stated my opinion, X angrily interjected and began to loudly swear at me, exclaiming, "Fuck you, Fuck you, Fuck you, you piece of shit, you fucking covenant breaker!" repeating this several times. Clearly unnerved by Mr. X imprecations, I replied to the insult, replying with "No Fuck you, Fuck you!!"

As I was being insulted like this for merely stating a frank opinion, and unnerved beyond belief by such self-righteous arrogance as Mr. X was now displaying, I got up from my chair to leave, and X also got up. Next Mr. Y jumped from his chair, tackled and pinned me in a body/headlock at which point misters W and X began hitting me from both directions - right and left. At no time did Y make an attempt to stop the assaults by W and X. Pinned in a tight bodylock by Y, Mr. Z next got up, and I told him to stay out of it, while being manhandled in a body/headlock by mister Y and being dragged around the dinner table. Next I was slammed into the wall and pinned to it, and Mr. X and Y both repeatedly punched me in my shoulder, and Z slapped me in the back of the head. Mr. X then slapped me in the face. While pinned by Y to the wall, I brought my hands up as close to my face as physically permissible at this point in order to protect it from punches being thrown from all sides in my direction (a technique I learned in boxing). Next both W and X hit me in turn in the side of the head, and then Mr. Z slapped the side of my head again and said "you are jealous of X, loser, you bloody covenant breaker!" Mr. Y proceeded to drag me through the room and into the lounge, W and X and Z following behind them. The women, baby and my grandfather were all screaming hysterically to stop and telling me to leave. I told Mr. Z to let me go so that I could take my things (i.e. hat, mobile phone and car keys) and leave, but he would not let me go. I repeated my request once again, still Mr. Z would not let go. Before reaching the lounge corridor leading to the front door of the unit, Mr. Z body and headlocked me in a strangle-hold, also locking his legs tightly around mine, throwing himself and myself down upon the floor, breaking a porcelain vase in the process. When we hit the ground, I began feeling slight suffocation, and I almost passed out. At this point when I was thrown onto the ground, my left elbow was cut, due to having just been smashed into the vase, and I began to bleed from the left arm. While on the ground Mr. W and X each in turn kicked me in the head, when we got up Mr. X hit me in the side of the arm. All this time I was being held tightly on the ground unable to move. Then Mr. Z dragged up himself and I. Mr. X swung to hit me in the head, but missed and his punch grazed my neck and shoulder on the left hand side instead. The altercation resumed, and I kept asking for my possessions so that I could leave. During this back and forth altercation, Mr. X exclaimed, "You don't know who I am in this city, you motherfucker, covenant breaker. You don't know who I know and what power I have, I am going to destroy you and your father, I am going to destroy you, you covenant breaker! I am the most powerful man in this city. You fucking covenant breakers!" This was repeated twice. Then B ran up and made the following slanderously libellous claim,

Finally, Mr. Y dragged me out of the unit and to the elevator, still in headlock, followed in step by Mr. Z . I kept asking for my hat, mobile and car keys, but they were not provided.

In the elevator, Mr. Y continued to hold me in a lock all the way down to the ground floor and into the lobby. When we got to the ground floor, Ms. B, Mr. W and Mr. X arrived on in the following elevator. The altercation resumed, Mr. Y again held me in a body-lock/head lock. Once again, Mr. W stated, "You don't know who I am; I will destroy you!" Next Ms. B stepped in and again reiterated the same libellous defamatory remark about my father, stating

She repeated this three times emphasizing,

<libel snipped>

Next, still being held by Y, X stated "you are a piece of shit, you are nothing, you're a loser, you motherfucking covenant breaker!" W then told Y and Z to bring me outside and then went outside of the lobby of Westwater apartments. He said, "you are nothing but a piece of shit, and even your parents know it, covenant breaker." Z attempted to pull me and Rafat outside, but Y did not move. As the manager of the complex came out to see what the disturbance was all about, W then said to X and Z "just call the Police and charge him with assault." W then went and drove his Mercedes to the front, made the following threat, stating, "as of tomorrow watch your back!" He drove off. Then X repeated the same threat, "watch your back from tomorrow."

At this point, it should be noted that Mr. W has boasted numerous times in my presence about the power and influence he wields on the Gold Coast more than any other person in the city. He has claimed that he controls various local city council members and politicians, the city mayor, judges, solicitors, the police, several state politicians and lawmakers, the local media, and federal MPs, suggesting that he has ties to organised crime and that on the Gold Coast he is completely untouchable and that anyone who crosses him will be physically and financially destroyed.

Altercations resumed, Y finally took me outside, still in bodylock, with Z following, then X went inside the lobby. I told Z I wanted my things now, and he said he'd already gotten it for me. I told him I had not received them, besides how could I since I was being held in a lock by Y. He went back up to the 13th floor to retrieve them. Z came back with my things, a sharp exchange of words and mutual swearing in Persian ensued, and Z let me go.

Y left and went back up. Traumatized, I got in my car and left.

I went straight to the XXXXX Police station and filed a complaint with Constable VVVVV (AAAAA). He took my complaint and I emphasized the gravity of the matter, since I had just been given a death threat, and he saw how my left arm was bruised and my elbow was bleeding all over the counter. While the complaint was being taken my mother phoned twice on my mobile phone. I told her I'd come straight over after I'd finished in the XXXXX Police station.

After I finished at the XXXXXX Police Station, I drove straight to my parents house at XXXXXX. I told my mother and sister what had happened, and they were shocked, so my mother called my grandparent's house right away. Mr. Z picked up the phone, my mother was shaken and angry, and demanded to speak to one of her parents at once. Mr. Z refused and stated that it was all mutual, and that neither of my grandparents could come to the phone at this time. The conversation ended.

My mother and I next went to the YYYYYYY Paradise Police station and there spoke to Constable OOOOO (OOOOO) and told him that I wished to file a restraining order. He told me that, although he could not currently locate the original complaint on his computer file, the original complaint filed in XXXXX would suffice, and that in any case no such thing as a restraining order exists in Queensland. I told him that I feared for my life, since Mr.

W and X had both made a direct death threat, and W at least has suggested he has connections to organised crime and in any case he would have the means (financial and otherwise) to carry out his threat. Constable OOOOO said that what he could do for now was to "flag my address and telephone number" so that if any emergency or situation should occur, and I where to call 000, the process of obtaining Police help could more speedily be expedited. My mother and I left and drove back home.

We arrived back home, and my father and my sister were there. I stayed for half an hour and then drove back to my apartment to get some rest.

That whole night I could not sleep, given the trauma and assault I had just experienced and the death threat issued by W and reiterated by X. My left elbow bled and hurt the whole night through, I felt pain and discomfort in my neck, head and shoulders.

The next morning (5th) I went and saw Dr. HHHHHH at , and he examined me. I showed my bruised left arm and the scar on my left elbow which had continued to bleed until the morning. My neck and shoulders still ached painfully, especially on the right hand side. After examination, the nurse treated my bleeding elbow, bandaged it and told me to come back in three days, but if bleeding or any other problem continues to come back immediately. The rest of the day I had trouble concentrating, and the night of the 5th, I again had trouble sleeping and the stress level was the highest I have ever experienced. I then went to the Southport magistrates court registry and obtained and then filed a Peace and Good Behavior (Act 1982 [s.4]) against both misters W and X. The copies of the forms were given to the OOOOOO Police station to serve.

--

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

OF THE BAHAI'S OF AUSTRALIA INCORPORATED
A.R.B.N. 009 727 128 (Incorporated in the A.C.T.) (Liability of members limited)

SECRETARIAT

Phone: (02) 99113 2771
Fax: (02) 9970 7275
Email: ausnsa@bahai.org.au

4 November 1997

The Local Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the Gold Coast
PO Box 833
Southport 4215

Dear Baha'i Friends,

RE: MR. NIMA HAZINI

The National Spiritual Assembly of Australia has been informed by the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States that Mr. Nima Hazini
occasionally spends time in Australia visiting parents and often associates with the Baha'i youth here. As Mr. Hazini's parents are members of your community we are sharing the following information (which has been provided by the National Assembly of the United States) with your Assembly:

".It is important for you to know that Mr. Hazini withdrew his Baha'i
membership in December 1996 after expressing his strong dissatisfaction with the Baha'i community and our National Spiritual Assembly.
Shortly after his withdrawal was accepted, Mr. Hazini wrote to the National Spiritual Assembly stating that he had not withdrawn from the Baha'i Faith but had withdrawn only from the Baha'i community. He provided a copy of his letter to the Universal House of Justice. When Mr. Hazini received a copy of the Universal
House of Justice's letter, he chose not to pursue reinstatement of his Baha'
i membership. The last information that we had about him was that he had decided to become a follower of Sufism."

At one stage Mr. Hazini was transferred to the United States as a Baha'i in good standing. However, in light of the information given by the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States we have made the necessary changes in our records about his status.

Your Spiritual Assembly is advised to be alert to Mr. Nima Hazini's activities in your area, when he comes to Australia to visit his parents, especially his association with the Baha'i youth..

Thanking you for your cooperation and with loving Baha'i greetings.

Gul Williams
for the Secretariat

--

<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bhdoc.htm>

(see middle to bottom of page)

See especially the following article by Juan Cole:

<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/1999/jssr/bhjssr.htm>

<https://home.clear.net.nz/pages/alisonz/>

(page of Baha'i woman in New Zealand summarily disenrolled - excommunicated - by the Baha'i organization for thought-cimes, i.e. internet postings)

see also

<https://members.nbc.com/FG/index.htm>

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Re: Defamation in Baha'i Publication
Date: Wednesday, December 20, 2000 9:51 PM

Dear Linda:

I would urge you to read through the following sites. Particularly the following article published in the Summer 1998 edition of the Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion by Juan R.I. Cole entitled "The Baha'i Faith in America as Panopticon":

<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/1999/jssr/bhjssr.htm>

see also K. Paul Johnson's spirited article on the talisman@indian.edu fiasco in the Fall 1997 edition of Gnosis magazine entitled "Baha'i Leaders Vexed by On-Line Critics":

<https://members.nbc.com/FG/Gnosis.htm>

see also relevant documents on this page:

<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bhdoc.htm>

(especially middle to bottom of page)

see also,

<https://home.clear.net.nz/pages/alisonz/>

(page of Baha'i woman in New Zealand summarily disenrolled - excommunicated - by the Baha'i organization for thought-crimes, i.e. internet postings critical of certain policies of the Baha'i administration)

see also

<https://members.nbc.com/FG/index.htm>

All of these documents and testimony of many ex-members, including myself, most definitely would classify the Baha'i organization as a bona fide, yet benign, religious cult. The problem is not so much with the teachings of the Baha'i faith per se which promote tolerance, peace and the Independent Investigation of the Truth. But rather the fundamentalization of the Baha'i faith by Western and Iranian Baha'i fundamentalists which has occurred just in the past twenty some years which has transformed the Baha'i religion into a cult by kicking aside many of the essential teachings of the Founders and Central Figures of the Baha'i faith. Today, such notions as unquestioned obedience to the dictates of the Baha'i administration far outweighs much of what is publicly touted as Baha'i doctrine and teachings. For example, no dissent is allowed within the Baha'i organization and any dissent is made tantamount to sedition and outright heresy. While to the outside world a tolerant, universalist and liberal face is projected, internally it is far from being the case. Read the material and judge for yourself.

It is a sad
state of affairs indeed.

cheers,
Nima

Linda Martin <lindajmartin@justice.com> wrote in message news:91og94020nf@enews2.newsguy.com...
This is the first time I've ever seen Baha'i referred to as a cult. I've read a lot of anti-cult literature (books) and at one time had even looked for mention of Baha'i and it wasn't there. It seemed to me that it doesn't meet the definition of so-called "dangerous" or "mind control" cults. It has become a rather mainstream religion. There is not even one head honcho people are following after. Money donations are expected but also very private, no plate passing, and the amount is totally voluntary.
There were a few other differences. Mainly the mind control aspect was gone because Baha'is are encouraged to read other religious literature and to think for themselves.

Just my opinion,
Linda

From: "Nima Hazini" <lotusapt@wxc.com.au>
Subject: Baha'i Fundamentalism defined
Date: Wednesday, January 17, 2001 9:23 AM

The first major ideological characteristic of fundamentalism, is a reaction against the marginalization of religion in secular societies.
Among Baha'i fundamentalists, this reaction takes the form of a belief in a future

theocracy, in which they expect Baha'i ecclesiastical institutions to take over the civil state, and which differentiates them from Baha'i liberals and moderates. The belief appears to be rooted primarily in oral traditions attributed to Shoghi Effendi and letters written on his behalf by secretaries, since although he does speak of a future Baha'i commonwealth in his published works, its character remains vague. Hand of the Cause John Robarts reported his version of a long conversation with Shoghi Effendi expatiating on this idea (Robarts 1993). Some Baha'is believed that he held that a melding of religion and state would not occur during the thousand-year dispensation of Baha'u'llah himself, but only toward the end of the Baha'i "cycle," of some 500,000 years (Hofman 1953). There are two problems for Baha'i fundamentalists. The first is that Baha'u'llah's own writings, and those of `Abdul-Baha are frankly anti-theocratic. The second is that in Baha'i law, oral traditions are supposed to be discounted in favor of written texts. Fundamentalists thus tend to hew to generalities when explaining their belief, lacking scriptural support.

The second feature of fundamentalism is selectivity. Fundamentalists select and reshape aspects of the tradition, all the while asserting that they have recaptured its pristine essence. They are also selective in their responses to modernity. They embrace some aspects of it (such as certain types of technology), while vehemently rejecting others. Baha'i fundamentalists engage in all three types of selectivity as well. They frequently make a claim to be engaging in traditional practices that are in fact innovations, and can do so with some success because the history and texts of the Baha'i faith are relatively little studied and authorities have often actively suppressed historical sources. We have already mentioned the problem that theocratic beliefs are unscriptural. That is, the scriptural tradition in the Baha'i faith strove for a separation of religion

and state as a way of making room for liberty of conscience
for Baha'is in Shi'ite Iran (McGlinn 1999, Cole 1998c:17-47). In his Treatise on Leadership of the early 1890s `Abdul-Baha said that religious institutions, including Baha'i ones, are never to intervene in affairs of state or political matters unbidden, and that whenever in history they have done so it has resulted in a huge disaster. (`Abdul-Bahain Cole 1998a). He clearly envisaged the state and religious institutions as complementary, "like milk and honey."

Baha'is, including Baha'i fundamentalists, have for the most part embraced modernity. They have a vision of building a peaceful global society and for the most part have a positive view of technological advances.
Still,
the selectivity of Baha'i fundamentalists toward modernity can be witnessed in the severe misgivings that some of them have expressed about the Internet" or such issues as democracy and the separation of religion and politics.

Fundamentalist Baha'is put special emphasis on moral Manichaeism. They see the world as comprised of a small cadre of those "firm in the Covenant."
They....admit a larger number of Baha'is who are "infirm" but perhaps not dangerously so. They worry about smaller numbers of "liberal"
or "dissident" Baha'is who [they believe] attempt to "undermine" the Covenant.

Baha'i fundamentalism puts great emphasis on the absolutism and inerrancy of scripture. This belief is quite widespread but not universal.
It is
tested most fiercely with regard to issues such as evolution.
`Abdul-Baha
maintained, in Sufi and Neoplatonic fashion, that human beings have always been a distinct species and that human beings are not animals, insofar as they are endowed with a soul. He also argued that the morphological
similarities between humans and apes might be merely functional (e.g, sharks and porpoises resemble one another but are not immediately related), and maintained that "the missing link" would never be found. These assertions have foundered against the DNA revolution, which has found that humans, chimpanzees and bonobos share 98 percent of the same genes and are clearly closely related. During a discussion of his statements on evolution, a typical poster to SRB wrote, "Dear all, On the topic of evolution: Clearly we should understand as clearly as possible what 'Abdul-Baha says on this subject. Because we believe His statements on matters pertaining to the Revelation of Baha'u'llah and all of creation are infallible, we must be clear about what it is we believe, or are accepting" (SRB 6 July 1997).

Baha'i fundamentalists emphasize belief in an imminent catastrophe they refer to as "the Calamity" (Smith 1982). One contributor to a Baha'i-only list wrote, "I would like to open a discussion on a subject which many of us are somewhat unwilling to address - namely, the impending (year 2,000) calamity which is supposed to create grave upheaval (literally) not only here in California, but also on the East Coast, and other parts of the world . . ." (Pers. Comm, March 14, 1994).

Fundamentalist Baha'is have an authoritarian view of how the Baha'i "administrative order" should function. There is a great emphasis on obedience. The typical logic of Baha'i fundamentalists roots obedience in the legitimacy of authority, disallowing a rational examination of the substance of a command or an inquiry into whether the body giving the command has the "constitutional" prerogative to give it. In this way, arbitrary commands by Baha'i bodies are made to be an either-or proposition. If one accepts Baha'u'llah, one accepts his administrative order, and must obey whatever it orders one to do, whether one agrees in conscience or no. Rejection of the command, ipso facto, represents a rejection of Baha'u'llah (Semple 1991). Thus, fundamentalist

Baha'is secretly consider liberals and some moderates "not Baha'is" at all because they do not demonstrate sufficient willingness to immerse their wills in the authority of the Baha'i administration.

Fundamentalist Baha'is believe that Baha'i institutions such as the local assembly or the NSA can be divinely guided, and that the Universal House of Justice is infallible. The technical terminology in Persian is not unambiguous, and Baha'i texts make distinctions that this approach disregards. Contemporary Baha'i fundamentalists avoid thinking constitutionally about such issues, asserting the infallibility of the House of Justice in an undifferentiated manner. [One] American Baha'i and mystery writer...wrote, "The Guidance and infallibility of the Universal House of Justice are assured and promised. We are specifically directed, as an act of faith, to offer instant, exact, and complete obedience to Baha'u'llah's House of Justice. We are warned of the dire spiritual dangers inherent in ignoring this directive, and we are admonished to be vigilant, firm, and uncompromising in our loyalty, support, obedience and love for the this Divinely Ordained Institution." (Talisman9 Archives, 23 May 2000).

Fundamentalist Baha'is view "the member's time, space and activity" as "a group resource, not an individual one" (Almond et al. 408). In some communities enormous pressure is put on individuals by fundamentalists to "teach the faith" or proselytize others. Some more liberal (or just shy) Baha'is report being extremely uncomfortable with this pressure and cite it as a reason they became inactive or withdrew from membership. Constant appeals are also made for Baha'is to donate money, to "give till it hurts," and most of these donations appear to go to monumental building projects at the Baha'i world center in Haifa or to bureaucratic purposes at the National Baha'i Center in Wilmette. The Baha'i administration appears to do almost no charity work (measured as a percentage of their budget), especially for non-Baha'is. Although Baha'is do not have a distinctive form of dress, they do have special ritual forms of prayer, and they fast in the Muslim way. They are under surveillance for behavior that might contravene Baha'i law.

These are some of the typologies and descriptives of Baha'i fundamentalism.

best regards,

Nima

From: "Freethought110" <freethought110@bohemian.org>

Subject: Moving on.....

Date: Saturday, November 24, 2001 11:05 PM

Clearly for me continuing to engage in Baha'i related issues is increasingly becoming a total waste of time. BIGS will be BIGS. The ao will never mend its ways, and besides it is the fate of all religious movements and their adherents without exception to ultimately fall down into the abyss of authoritarianism, intolerance, exclusivism, triumphalism, fanaticism and terminal stupidity. The abject and manifest failure of the Baha'i religion is testimony to the truth that all religious efforts are fundamentally rigid and utopianic in scope and so therefore ultimately hubristic when confronted with the hard fact realities of the world and the complexities of human life, and thus doomed to failure regardless as to how human beings will always strive to grasp at imaginary straws searching for that utopia. As such neither founding a religion that offers an alternative paradigm to previously failed religious endeavours, nor reforming that religion when its motivating impulses are clearly sacrificed on the alters of power, money and expediency when it becomes a runaway train, will truly provide the desired outcome. Rather that failure, more than anything else, is an incontrovertibly assured fact that history has proven (and will prove once more) again and again and again.

I have reached a stage in my life that I am ready to leave ALL connections with the Baha'i religion and its dirty politics in the past and move on to bigger and better things. A new business I am about to start, the future of Iran without the mullahs, the fact that I'll be turning 30 in three weeks and above all a relationship I would like to nurture even further are more important things to me now than the misdeeds of the uhj/ao; that they're a terminally pathetic bunch of religious lunatics; or that they think they're infallible; or, especially, how far BIGS will continue to bury their heads in quicksand despite the sore thumb that constantly sticks right in their collective faces about the realities they refuse to face. In other words, the Baha'i wars are no longer my problem, and I couldn't care less anymore one way or the other.

I will continue to post (occasionally) to Zuhur and talisman9 as well as continue to moderate H-Bahai, not to mention keep in touch with all my close friends. But the difference now is that my full energies will definitely be expended elsewhere and for different things.

Adieu and farewell, and if anyone wants to contact me, you know the address.

cheers

--

Freethought110

From: "Freethought110" <freethought110@bohemian.org>
Subject: Re: Baha'u'llah is the Prophet of God for mankind in this day
Date: Thursday, December 20, 2001 2:22 PM

"Dave Fiorito" <bighappymonkey@yahoo.com> wrote in message news:f0853486.0112200756.78062b9f@posting.google.com...

> And millions and millions of Americans say the pledge of allegiance.

Apples and oranges comparison. Not the same thing.

> So what. I am arguing that simply because a large number of people > have a common understanding of a thing does not make it dangerous.

The way you fundamentalist Baha'is do, it does.

> Billions of people in this world have a common understanding of Futbol > does that make them part of a dangerous cult? Hardly (well except for > Liverpool supporters :-)

Apples and oranges once again.

> > Are you arguing that because they shared a common understanding of National
> > Socialism that this ipso facto absolves them of the vice of being > > brainwashed??? Other examples will also suffice. But hopefully you get
the > > picture -- or maybe not.
>
> No, you misunderstand. I am saying that a common understanding of a > thing does not automatically equate with cultism.

However the Baha'i faith as practiced by you and a majority of your adherents fits every category of a cult.

> > In any case, what a simply dangerous as well as > > boring religion/cult to belong to where everyone agrees.
>
> So every religion is, therefore, dangerous in your book, as they are > all based on a common understanding of their faiths theology and > practice.

Every* bona fide religion has many different schools of thought and in the modern world even tolerates various opinions in the religion itself. Baha'is don't. You have a central authority which wishes to impose dogma, stifle dissent and throw people out. You have no real spirit in your religion. It is lifeless. You think worshipping a beurocracy is the acme of spirituality. Your religion is dysfunctional and its leaders abusive, close-minded and corrupt assholes. "Ye shall know them by their fruits," and if that is a motto to go by, then demonstrably Baha'is fail every time.

Therefore, AFAIC, it is a cult.

> > > That would be like saying > > > that Catholics are brainwashed because they all know when to sit, > > > kneel, and stand during mass.
> >
> > LOL :)) Typical display of terminal Baha'i naivete.
>
> Show me that I am wrong rather than simply insist that I am.
> Substance my friend - not bluster.

I've done that for over 2 years. You haven't been listening, and I couldn't care less about rehearsing the shame arguments to you over and over and over again, hope against hope, that you'll finally take your head out of your behind and see the truth. Now, please, take your conversation back to TRB and leave SCI alone otherwise I will be forced to crosspost all kinds of irrelevant threads on your NG.

> Hey, I thought _you_ were leaving?

I have. WTF are you guys doing here on SCI??

--
Freethought110

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Essentially, Haifan Baha'is believe lying and deception are acceptable practices in order to "protect the faith."

Wisdom and Dissimulation: The Use and Meaning of Hikmat in the Baha'i Writings and History

Susan Stiles Maneck

The purpose of this paper is to examine a particular technical meaning of the term wisdom' or hikmat, as that term appears both in Bahá'í Writings and historical accounts. In many cases hikmat calls for the apparent suspension of a Bahá'í principle in order to ensure the protection of the Faith. This by no means exhausts the ways in which the term hikmat appears in these there. When Greek philosophical texts were translated into Arabic, sophia or metaphysical truth and phronesis or prudence were both translated using the same term hikmat for what were two distinct Aristotelian concepts. For Aristotle sophia was the knowledge of eternal and principles while phronesis referred to the realm of moral and political action. Bahá'u'lláh's usage of the term hikmat often reflects both these meaning. This paper however, will largely confine itself to those instances where the term seem to have reflected the meaning of phronesis.¹ Bahá'u'lláh regarded the application of any of his laws as contained in the Kitab-I-Aqdas as conditional upon the exercise of wisdom.² Likewise the dissemination of Bahá'í writings was limited for the same reason.³ Shoghi Effendi, while affirming "that at the very root of the Cause lies the principle of the undoubted right of the individual to self-expression," found it necessary to insist that Bahá'ís temporarily submit their work to censors before publication as a provisional measure "designed to guard and protect the Cause in its present state of infancy and growth until the day when this tender and precious plant shall have sufficiently grown to be able to withstand the unwisdom of its friends and the attacks of its enemies."⁴ Adib Taherzadeh, who has written most extensively on Bahá'u'lláh's writings, defines the Bahá'í use of wisdom in these terms: By wisdom is meant taking any praiseworthy action through which the Cause of God may be promoted. Lack of wisdom is to take actions which owing to circumstances result in harming the Faith, even though they may be carried out with the best possible motive.⁵

This definition, though by no means inaccurate, too vaguely conveys the pragmatic usage to which this term was applied and why and how the term "wisdom" or hikmat came to acquire such a meaning. Observing wisdom' in practice often involved acts which would not ordinarily be regarded as praiseworthy.' These included: denying or misleading people regarding one's Bahá'í identity, concealing inconvenient aspects of the Bahá'í teachings, and compromising certain Bahá'í principles. It is my thesis that the term "wisdom," where it refers to behavior enjoined for protection of the Faith, has its roots deep within Iranian theology, culture and history. Its usage is not dissimilar from the inscrutable Wisdom of God as depicted in Persian religion as far back as Zoroastrianism. It ties in as well to Iranian conventions of etiquette (ta'aruf). Further, hikmat serves a function not dissimilar to the role played by taqiyyih or dissimulation in Shi'ite Islam.

Wisdom and Persian Cultural Norms

Persian etiquette, or ta'aruf, involves the concealment and control of one's personal feelings or opinions in service of smooth public interactions. At times this may amount to no more than refusing refreshments when initially offered no matter how hungry the person may be; at other times it involves much more complex social interactions where relative status is determined. Iranians often tend to reserve access to their inner self to a small circle of intimates. Among these persons, interactions ought to be pure and constant, maintaining a spiritual integrity. With those outside that circle one behaves with reserve and formality, concealing one's true intentions. Westerners often interpret this behavior as hypocritical. When ta'aruf is combined with a market place shrewdness, zerangi, which is often marked by a lack of social responsibility, this negative impression is further reinforced.⁶ Iranians deem such behavior as courteous, prudent, and necessary when dealing with an uncertain and treacherous world. Far from being cynical and insincere, they see themselves as simply conducting themselves with wisdom. As was mentioned earlier, hikmat served a function within the early Iranian Bahá'í community very similar to the role of taqiyyih or dissimulation in Shi'ite Islam. Taqiyyih refers to the practice concealing one's belief in order to avoid persecution. Such behavior is condoned, and even required of Shi'ites who frequently lived among a hostile Sunni majority. The Qur'anic verse condemning apostasy but which adds the words "except for those who are compelled while their hearts are firm in faith" is used to justify this practice.⁷ As in ta'aruf, a distinction is made between outward behavior and inner conviction. Taqiyyih might involve nothing more than assuming prayer positions of Sunni Muslims while performing obligatory prayers publicly or it might entail an actual denial of one's faith. During the medieval period of Islamic history taqiyyih came to be practiced by philosophers and mystics as well as Shi'ites in order to protect themselves against persecution on the part of the more bigoted ulama. Such an approach was encouraged by even the great Sunni theologian al-Ghazali, who argued for what the renowned historian of Islam, Marshall Hodgson, has described as a "pattern of gradation and concealment of knowledge."⁸ Ordinary believers were not to be given access to certain types of religious knowledge lest they misunderstand it and stumble as a result. Likewise Avicenna, the greatest of Islamic Aristotileans, would in his capacity as a qadi, or Islamic judge, condemn those who too freely popularized the teachings of Aristotle. Sufis likewise critized al-Hallaj, the famous mystic who was crucified for asserting "I am the truth," not because the sentiment was heretical in itself but because al-Hallaj was revealing secrets' which might incline the common people towards blasphemy. Knowledge in the Islamic world came to be divided into exoteric and esoteric categories. The exoteric knowledge was accessible to all Muslims and tended to be conceived in unambiguous black and white terms. Esoteric knowledge required initiation and works containing such knowledge tended to be worded in such a way as to be unintelligible to those not already familiar with its mysteries. As Marshall Hodgson points out: When all dissenting statements were cast in esoteric form, explicitly acknowledging the correctness of the received exoteric doctrines . . . it became easy to find excuses for doubt about a dissenter. No one denied the official positions; the question was simply whether what else a person said did in fact contradict those positions. But if writing was done with sufficient obscurity, guilt could never be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.⁹

While this approach allowed for much more intellectual diversity to exist within the Islamic World than was possible in Christendom at the time, there was a price to be paid for dissimulation. The Muslim intelligentsia, in making themselves incomprehensible to the common people, sacrificed any hope of changing the direction of the community as a whole.

Wisdom in the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh

While dissimulation was condemned in Bahá'u'lláh's writings, many aspects of the practice persisted under the name of hikmat. Bahá'u'lláh wrote: In this Day, We can neither approve the conduct of the fearful that seeketh to dissemble his faith, nor sanction the behaviour of the avowed believer that clamourously asserteth his allegiance to this Cause. Both should observe the dictates of wisdom, and strive diligently to serve the best interests of the Faith.¹⁰

In the Tablet of Medicine as well as the Tablet of the Proof Bahá'u'lláh pairs wisdom with eloquence or explication (hikmat va bayan), implying that one should proclaim the Cause discretely. In the case of the Tablet of the Proof Bahá'u'lláh insisted that the believers exercise wisdom by not protesting their mistreatment at the hands of the authorities: To none is given the right to protest against anyone concerning that which hath befallen the Cause of God. It behoveth whosoever hath set his face towards the Most Sublime Horizon to cleave tenaciously unto the cord of patience, to put his reliance in God, the Help in Peril, the Unconstrained. O ye loved ones of God! Drink your fill from the wellspring of wisdom, and walk ye in the garden of wisdom, and speak forth with wisdom and eloquence. Thus biddeth you your Lord, the Almighty, the All-knowing.¹¹

The injunction to observe wisdom' was due to the dangerous situation in which Bahá'ís in Iran found themselves. In the Tablet of Medicine, Bahá'u'lláh states that the purpose of hikmat is the protection of the friends in order that they may remain within the world to make mention of the Lord of all worlds.¹² Most commonly hikmat involved presenting the Faith to non-believers in ways which avoided controversy and insured a positive reception. In Bahá'u'lláh's words, Fix your gaze upon wisdom in all things, for it is an unfailing antidote. How often hath it turned a disbeliever into a believer or a foe into a friend? It observance is highly essential, inasmuch as this hath been set forth in numerous Tablets revealed from the empyrean of the Will of Him Who is the Manifestation of the light of divine unity. Well is it with them that act accordingly.¹³

At times even the Lawh-I-Hikmat, in which text hikmat usually refers to Greek philosophy, Bahá'u'lláh has this meaning in mind, Say: Human utterance is an essence which aspireth to exert its influence and needeth moderation. . . . As to its moderation, this has to be combined with tact and wisdom as prescribed in the Holy Scriptures and Tablets.¹⁴

An instance where Bahá'u'lláh Himself exercises this kind of wisdom can be seen in a Tablet addressed to Mirza Abu'l-Fadl in answer to some questions raised by by Manakji, a Parsi for whom Abu'l-Fadl worked. Manakji had asked how it could be, if all religions came from God, that they all had different laws and ordinances such that one forbade pork, while another prohibited beef. Bahá'u'lláh tells him that since the answer to this question goes against Islamic teachings, it would be contrary to wisdom to give him a direct answer, especially since Manakji had in his employ people of various religions who might chance upon this letter.¹⁵ Instead Bahá'u'lláh alludes to the Tablet of the Divine Physician where He has said that every age has different needs and that one should examine the Bahá'í teachings as to whether they are the remedy for today's ills.¹⁶ This perspective would have offended Muslims since they believed that each religion began with the same teachings which only subsequently became corrupted to be finally restored with Islam. In order to avoid charges of heresy, Bahá'u'lláh tries to be as discreet as possible in suggesting that the various religions have had different laws and ordinances from the start. He alludes to the necessity of feeding infants milk and not meat lest they perish. To do otherwise would be wrong and and far from wisdom. Only the Manifestation of God can determine such matters.¹⁷ While at times hikmat involved concealing one's genuine views in situations of insecurity and possible persecution, Bahá'u'lláh at other times spoke of it in broader terms as that sagacity of spirit which ought to typify all of our human interactions at all times. This seems to be the sense in which He uses it in the following Hidden Word: O SON OF DUST! The wise are they that speak not unless they obtain a hearing, even as the cup-bearer, who proffereth not his cup till he findeth a seeker, and the lover who crieth not from the depths of his heart until he gazeth upon the beauty of his beloved. Wherefore sow the seeds of wisdom and knowledge in the pure soil of the heart, and keep them hidden, till the hyacinths of divine wisdom spring from the heart and not from mire and clay.¹⁸

Wisdom within the Bahá'í Community

While Bahá'u'lláh made a clear distinction between hikmat and taqiyyih for many of the early believers, the difference appears to have been slight. Muhammad Tahir Malmari, in his account of Bahá'í martyrdoms in Yazd, frequently describes instances where believers accused of being Bahá'ís explicitly denied that this was so. Yet when told to prove their disbelief by cursing or condemning the religion they silently went to their deaths, "firm and steadfast," according to Malmari.¹⁹ Cursing for a nineteenth century Iranian was conceived of as having very real and concrete effects. This no doubt partly accounts for the Bahá'ís' insistence at drawing a line at this point. But it seems also that early Bahá'ís made a distinction between denying their own identity as Bahá'ís, an act which under duress they were willing to commit, and denying the validity of the Faith itself, for which they were prepared to die before doing. Responses to interrogation varied from individual. Malmari's accounts include the case of a Bahá'í who when asked if he was a Bábí courageously responded, No, he was a Bahá'í and proceeded to describe the difference.²⁰ This behavior was more the exception than the rule, though. The distinction Bahá'ís made between denying their identity as Bahá'ís and denying the validity of the Bahá'í revelation is borne out by the behavior of Jewish Bahá'ís in Hamadan during this period. Ruhu'u'llah Mihrabkhani reports that the Jewish Bahá'ís of Hamadan in the nineteenth century, "in order to observe hikmat" went to the Presbyterian missionaries and feigned conversion to Christianity. They continued to associate themselves with the missionaries until Mirza Abu'l-Fadl visited Hamadan and, in the course of his discussions with the missionaries, made it clear that the Jews had come to recognize Jesus as the Messiah only by virtue of having accepted the message of Bahá'u'lláh.²¹ Following this and similar incidents one missionary urged others to insist that any candidate for church membership be required to specifically deny that Bahá'u'lláh was the "return" of the preceding prophet in a manner analogous to the way in which Christians understood John the Baptist to be the "return" of Elijah. The "confession" of faith recommended for baptismal candidates went as follows, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; that He really died on the cross for our salvation; that He really and truly rose from the dead, leaving behind an empty tomb; that He alone is the Savior of the World. I deny the doctrine of rij'at (return), by which I am to believe that Jesus was Moses returned, and that Mohammad, the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh were returns' of Jesus, and I declare it to be false teaching. Accepting Jesus as my Lord and Savior I declare Mohammad, the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh to have been false prophets and false guides, leading men away from the truth.²²

While this declaration involved no actual cursing of the Báb or Bahá'u'lláh, missionaries felt confident that no Bahá'í would make such a confession and they were quite correct. Denying one's identity as a Bahá'í was the most extreme form of hikmat practiced within the community and such behavior ceased to be sanctioned during the ministry of Shoghi Effendi.²³ Given the extreme dangers and persecutions which Bahá'ís have faced throughout their history, that compromise and concealment would be condoned is quite understandable. The issue remains, though, as to why such acts were termed "wisdom?"

Divine Wisdom and Foresight

Wisdom in the Iranian context is often identified with foresight. In Shoghi Effendi's writings in English, the word wisdom can often be replaced with foresight without any loss of meaning. Unwisdom is sometimes directly paired with shortsightedness. In a letter dated November 28, 1931, for instance, he in large part blames the Depression on the "unwisdom and shortsightedness" of the framers of the Versailles Peace Treaty.²⁴ The notion of wisdom as foresight goes back as far as Zoroastrianism, Iran's oldest prophetic religion, where it is regarded as the chief attribute which distinguishes God from the Evil One and insures His ultimate victory. In Zoroastrianism, God is addressed as Ahura Mazda, meaning Wise Lord. During the Sassanian period when Zoroastrian thought became crystallized, Ahura Mazda was not considered omnipotent, for His power was limited by the independent existence of Ahriman, the Evil One. His sole advantage over Ahriman rests in His possession of wisdom as foresight, which Ahriman utterly lacks. When, in the Pre-existence Ahriman insisted on making war on Ahura Mazda and rejected Ahura Mazda's overtures of peace, Ahura Mazda tricked Ahriman into setting a time limit on the battle, thus inventing lineal time. Ahura Mazda with His wisdom could foresee that once a limit was set on time, evil itself would be limited and contained, and the victory of the forces of good would be assured. Ahriman, unable to foresee this outcome, agreed to the terms. Ahura Mazda then revealed to Ahriman the eventual outcome of his folly, and Ahriman fell unconscious and remained so for the next three thousand years, during which period Ahura Mazda created the material world which would aid in Ahriman's eventual destruction. Frequently Bahá'í writings refer to divine wisdom as an act of selective concealment in order to obtain long-range benefits. Such wisdom is embedded in the very notion of Progressive Revelation, wherein God has revealed Himself not in accordance with His own Being but in accordance with the capacity of humanity to receive knowledge of Him. In The Seven Valleys Bahá'u'lláh asserts that one who has obtained true knowledge will apprehend "the divine wisdom in the endless Manifestations of God" and will not be misled by the seemingly contradictory nature of God's activity in the world.²⁵ An instance of such seemingly contradictory events was the discontinuance of the institution of a living Guardian at the death of Shoghi Effendi. According to the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the Guardian of the Cause of God had the responsibility "to appoint in his own lifetime him that shall become his successor, that differences may not arise after his passing . . ."²⁶ Yet Shoghi Effendi passed away without providing for a successor or writing a will. But as the Universal House of Justice pointed out, at Shoghi Effendi's death there were no potential candidates for this position, the Guardian having been childless and his family members having died or been expelled from the community. Consequently the House of Justice insisted: The fact that Shoghi Effendi did not leave a will cannot be adduced as evidence of his failure to obey Bahá'u'lláh--rather should we acknowledge that in his very silence there is a wisdom and a sign of his infallible guidance.²⁷

On the issue of women's rights, divine wisdom, in the sense we have just discussed it, and the injunction upon Bahá'ís to observe "wisdom" in their action directly converge. While Bahá'u'lláh unequivocally proclaimed the equality of men and women,²⁸ 'Abdu'l-Bahá, in answer to a question regarding the exclusion of women from the Chicago House of Justice, replied that the House of Justice, "according to the explicit text of the Law of God, is confined to men, this for a wisdom of the Lord God's, which will ere long be made manifest as clearly as the sun at high noon."²⁹ Seven years later 'Abdu'l-Bahá ruled that this exclusion applied only to the as yet unformed Universal House of Justice and allowed women in America to serve on local bodies.³⁰ When women in Iran, however, attempted to imitate the American Bahá'í women by discarding the veil and demanding a greater role in Bahá'í administration, 'Abdu'l-Bahá insisted that "nothing should be done contrary to wisdom." He further admonished them, Ye need to be calm and composed, so that the work will proceed with wisdom, otherwise there will be such chaos that ye will leave everything and run away. "This newly born babe is traversing in one night the path that needeth a hundred years to tread." [A Persian proverb]. In brief, ye should now engage in matters of pure spirituality and not contend with men. 'Abdu'l-Bahá will tactfully take appropriate steps. Be assured. In the end thou wilt thyself exclaim, "This was indeed supreme wisdom!"³¹

'Abdu'l-Bahá's anxiety over the agitation of Iranian Bahá'í women was quite understandable. Nothing would have aroused greater antipathy from Muslims than to see Bahá'í women uncovered and moving freely and equally among men. A woman could not consult privately on a council with men and expect to maintain her reputation. Bahá'u'lláh Himself provided for the progressive application of Bahá'í law for reasons of wisdom. He stated, Indeed, the laws of God are like unto the ocean and the children of men as fish, did they but know it. However, in observing them one must exercise tact and wisdom... Since most people are feeble and far removed from the purpose of God, therefore one must observe tact and prudence under all conditions, so that nothing might happen that could cause disturbance and dissension or raise clamor among the headless.³²

This principle has been applied by 'Abdu'l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi in the case of Bahá'í teachings on monogamy. The Kitab-i Aqdas appears to allow bigamy when it states: "Beware that ye take not unto yourselves more wives than two."³³ In an untranslated letter 'Abdu'l-Bahá gave a believer permission to take a second wife. He also indicated that the law concerning taking no more than two wives cannot be abrogated. He also noted that this law was conditional upon justice which was a condition virtually impossible to fulfill, but that 'Abdu'l-Bahá would not prevent believers from marrying a second wife if they were certain they would act with justice.³⁴ Both during the ministry of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá bigamy was practiced in Bahá'í communities within the Middle East. Yet in another Tablet 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated: Know thou that polygamy is not permitted under the law of God, for contentment with one wife hath been clearly stipulated. Taking a second wife is made dependent upon equity and justice being upheld between the two wives, under all conditions. However, observance of justice and equity towards two wives is utterly impossible. The fact that bigamy has been made dependent upon an impossible condition is clear proof of its absolute prohibition. Therefore it is not permissible for a man to have more than one wife.³⁵

Shoghi Effendi later determined that this statement of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's would be considered normative within the Bahá'í community.³⁶ A letter from the Research Department of the World Centre on this topic suggests that 'Abdu'l-Bahá "introduced the question of monogamy gradually in accordance with the principles of wisdom and the progressive unfoldment of His purpose."³⁷ As we have seen, the term wisdom in Bahá'í writings whether it refers to inscrutable divine wisdom or the caution and tact with which Bahá'ís are urged to conduct themselves for the protection of the Faith usually carries with it the connotation of foresight. In practice, the word could be used within the community to refer to acts which seemingly contradicted some of the basic principles of the Faith but which in the long term were seen as serving its best interest. Especially included among such acts have been the willingness on the part of believers to deny their Bahá'í identity under persecution, the temporary exercise of censorship, and compromises made in regards to gender issues.

Wisdom and Scholarship

The concept of hikmat as we have just discussed it sometimes finds itself on a collision course with another principle held dear to Bahá'ís, the independent investigation of truth. If, in the name of hikmat it is possible to obscure, conceal, or compromise the Bahá'í teachings in any way, how can anyone, Bahá'í or non-Bahá'í conduct an adequate investigation of its validity. How can anyone be expected "to see with their own eyes and not through the eyes of others" if others determine what they will be allowed to examine? In recent years this issue has acquired a certain urgency especially among Western believers, most of whom are converts who would never have left the religion of their fathers to become Bahá'ís had they not already been committed in their hearts to this principle. This issue looms especially large for Bahá'í academicians and scholars. While the Bahá'í community in general, and the Persian believers in particular, might wish for the Bahá'í academic scholar to confine himself to topics which edify the community and further the expansion of the Cause, the individual scholar often feels that his research should only be guided by the principle "He must so cleanse his heart that no remnant of either love or hate may linger therein, lest that love blindly incline him to error, or that hate repel him away from the truth."³⁸ In this connection the scholar, often much to the dismay of some Bahá'ís, sometimes finds it most productive to shine his light in the darkened corners. In connection with this issue, it should be recognized that Bahá'u'lláh laid a special burden upon the learned in connection with the exercise of wisdom. In the Lawh-I-Maqsud, Bahá'u'lláh discusses the way in which the learned should "impart guidance unto the people."³⁹ "No man of wisdom," He asserts, "can demonstrate his knowledge save by means of words." "Moreover," He continues, "words and utterances should be both impressive and penetrating. However, no word will be infused with these two qualities unless it be uttered wholly for the sake of God and with due regard unto the exigencies of the occasion and the people." Bahá'u'lláh goes on to say, Every word is endowed with a spirit, therefore the speaker or expounder should deliver his words at the appropriate time and place, for the impression which each word maketh is clearly evident and perceptible. . . . One word may be likened unto fire, another unto light, and the influence of both is manifest in the world. Therefore, an enlightened man of wisdom should primarily speak with words as mild as milk, that the children of men may be nurtured and edified thereby and may attain the ultimate goal of human existence . . . It behoveth the prudent man of wisdom to speak with utmost leniency and forbearance so that the sweetness of his words may induce everyone to attain that which befitteth man's station.⁴⁰

Elsewhere in the same Tablet Bahá'u'lláh reiterates the connection of wisdom with tolerance. He says, "The heaven of divine wisdom is illumined with the two luminaries of consultation and compassion"⁴¹ and elsewhere, "The heaven of true understanding shineth resplendent with the light of two luminaries: tolerance and righteousness."⁴² This Tablet suggests that a number of factors should be considered when judging the "wisdom" of our work. First and foremost is our purpose; is our work done for the sake of God or are other motives in operation? Secondly, we must consider our audience. To whom do we address our work and under what circumstances? Finally we must consider our tone, is it reflective of the forbearance, tolerance, and compassion which Bahá'u'lláh urges us to exhibit? Is it conveyed in such a spirit as to be conducive of further discourse and consultation? I propose no easy answers to the dilemma imposed upon the scholar who strives to adhere both to the standards of wisdom and truth. Observing wisdom' and the independent investigation of truth' are both principles enjoined by Bahá'u'lláh. But two things must be kept in mind in connection with this issue. First wisdom, when it involves a temporary suspension of a Bahá'í principle, must be always regarded as an emergency measure which should cease once the circumstances which created it no longer operate. Secondly, wisdom, as I have established, carries with it the connotation of farsightedness. Acts accord with wisdom, not to the extent to which they make the friends feel comfortable, but to the extent to which they further the Cause of God in the long term. In this respect, it must be recognized that many actions Bahá'ís have taken in the name of hikmat proved to be short-sighted indeed. Consider again the case of the Jewish Bahá'ís of Hamadan who in the name of hikmat pretended to become Presbyterians. This action aroused the antagonism of Dr. Sa'id Khan, a Kurdish convert to Christianity. Convinced by the duplicity of those Bahá'ís that the Bahá'í Faith was a religion based on deception, he went on to collect as much dirt' on the Cause as he could. The material he collected was eventually turned over to Rev. William McElwee Miller and became the basis of his two books attacking the Faith.⁴³ Even those missionaries who, unlike Miller, had no investment in converting others came to see the Bahá'ís as a people without integrity. Some of these, such as T. Cuyler Young, when on to become eminent scholars in America and their attitudes have spread to academicians throughout the country. I could name several other cases, much more recent than the one cited, where prominent persons have rejected the Cause as a result of actions taken and policies made in the name of hikmat. Bahá'ís must exercise constant vigilance to insure that hikmat not be used to obtain short-term gains or avoid immediate conflicts without considering its long-term consequences. Such actions are, in fact, contrary to wisdom.

Notes

1. My thanks to Dr. Nader Saiedi for bringing this distinction between sophia and phronesis to my attention. For Aristotle's treatment see The Nicomachean Ethics 1140a24-1142b12.
2. Unpublished compilation, National Archives Committee, no. 28, p.179. Cited in Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh vol. 4, p. 321.
3. Ibid. no. 15, pp. 423-24.
4. Shoghi Effendi, Bahá'í Administration, (Wilmette: 1974), p. 63. That censorship is contrary to Bahá'í principles is underscored by Bahá'u'lláh's prohibition against the destruction or burning of books in the Kitab-I Aqdas, (Haifa: Universal House of Justice, 1992), p. 48.

5. Adib Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh, Vol. 4, p. 320.
6. Early studies on the Iranian "character" have been reviewed and critiqued in Ali Banuazizi, "Iranian 'National Character': A Critique of Some Western Perspectives," in Psychological Dimensions of Near Eastern Studies, eds. L. Carl Brown and Norman Itzkowitz (Princeton: Darwin Press, 1977), pp. 210-39. Later studies stress the flexibility of Iranian social interactions. See William O. Beeman, "Status, Style and Strategy in Iranian interactions," Anthropological Linguistics, 18 (1976), 305-22.
7. Qur'an 16:106.
8. Marshall G. S. Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, Vol. 2, p. 194.
9. Ibid., pp. 199-200.
10. Bahá'u'lláh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh, p. 343.
11. Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh, pp. 212-3.
12. Majmu'a-yi Alwah-I Mubaraká (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1981) p. 226.
13. Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh, p. 256.
14. Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh, p. 143.
15. Ma'idih-I Asmani vol. 7, p. 171. My thanks to Dr. Juan Cole and Dr. Ahang Rabbani for bringing this Tablet to my attention and assisting me in gaining access to it.
16. Ibid.
17. Ibid. p. 172.
18. Hidden Words (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1990) pp. 34-35.
19. Muhammad Tahir Malmari, Tarikh-I-Shuhaday-I-Yazd, p. 30-34.
20. Malmari, p. 59.
21. Ruh-u'llah Mihrabkhani, Sharhi Ahval-I Jinab-I Abu'l-Fadl-I Gulpaygani (Teheran, 1976), pp. 129-30.
22. J. R. Richards, The Religion of the Bahá'ís, (New York: Macmillan, 1932) pp. 235-6.
23. In Iran today persons wishing to leave the country by plane must sign a form stating that they are not Bahá'ís. Bahá'í institutions, therefore, have regarded Bahá'ís who left Iran by the Tehran airport as apostates.
24. Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh, (Wilmette: 1969), p. 35. This is one of the few instances where Shoghi Effendi applies the term "unwisdom" to non-Bahá'ís. He also applies it to Kaiser Wilhelm II for his dismissal of Bismarck. The Promised Day is Come, pp. 57-58.
25. Bahá'u'lláh, The Seven Valleys and the Four Valleys, (Wilmette: 1976), p. 12.
26. 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Will and Testament, p. 11.

27. Wellspring of Guidance, Messages, 1963-1968, Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1969, p. 82.
28. "Exalted, immensely exalted is He Who hath removed differences and established harmony. Glorified, infinitely glorified is He who hath caused discord to cease, and decreed solidarity and unity. Praised be God, the Pen of the Most High hath lifted distinctions from between His servants and handmaidens and, through His consummate favours and all-encompassing mercy, hath conferred upon all a station and rank on the same plane. He hath broken the back of vain imaginings with the sword of utterance and hath obliterated the perils of idle fancies through the pervasive power of His might." Bahá'u'lláh from Women, compiled by the Research Department of the Universal House of Justice, (Oakham: 1986) p. 1.
29. Selections from the Writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, (Haifa: 1976), p. 80.
30. Cited in the May 31, 1988 letter of the Universal House of Justice to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of New Zealand.
31. Women, p. 5. Iranian women finally received the right to hold office in 1954.
32. Cited in Introduction to The Kitab-i-Aqdas: The Most Holy Book, p. 6.
33. Ibid., [paragraph] 63.
34. Mazandarani, Fadil, Amr va Khalq, vol. 4, (Tihiran: 1974/5-131 B.E.), pp. 175-76.
35. Kitab-i-Aqdas, p. 206.
36. The Guardian's secretary wrote on his behalf: "Regarding Bahá'í marriage: in the light of the Master's Tablet interpreting the provision in the "Aqdas" on the subject of the plurality of wives, it becomes evident that monogamy alone is permissible, and monogamy alone should be practiced." Cited in The Synopsis and Codification of the Kitab-i-Aqdas, (Haifa: Bahá'í World Centre, 1973), Note 17, p. 59.
37. Memorandum from the Research Department to the Universal House of Justice 27 June 1996. My thanks to Milissa Boyer for providing me with a copy of this document. Most of my discussion of the issue of bigamy is based on it.
38. Kitab-I-Iqan, p. 192.
39. Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh, p. 172.
40. Ibid., pp. 172-72.
41. Ibid., p. 168.
42. Ibid., pp. 169-70.
43. William McElwee Miller, Bahá'ísm. Its Origin, History, and Teachings (Fleming H. Revell Co. , 1931) William McElwee Miller, The Bahá'í Faith: Its History and Teachings (South Pasadena: William Carey Library, 1974). For biographical information on Dr. Sa'id Khan see Isaac Malek Yonan, The Beloved Physician of Teheran (Nashville: Cokesbury Press, 1934) and William McElwee Miller, Ten Muslims Meet Christ, pp. 33-48.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

I leave it up to the reader to judge the motives and veracity of Amir Butler, which may partly be those of a Muslim seeking to discredit Bahai. I present this post merely since it discusses taqiya, a seldom discussed concept in the bahai faith, and may perhaps offer some avenues for further study.

For anyone interested, the Wikipedia article on taqqiya (taqiyya or taqiya) cites an outstanding article by Ibrahim, Raymond. "How Taqiyya Alters Islam's Rules of War: Defeating Jihadist Terrorism". Middle East Forum. Winter 2010. Having read a number of articles on taqqiya over the years, I've highly recommend Raymon Ibrahim's piece. It is available online: <https://www.meforum.org/2538/taqiyya-islam-rules-of-war>

See hikmat & taqiyya MENU.

Subject: Re: Martyrdom of the Bab, 9 July 1850
From: ab@iws.net.au (Amir Butler)
Date: 1998/07/27
Message-ID: <"AM_TVD.A.xUG._ALv1"@bounty.bcca.org>
Newsgroups: soc.religion.bahai
[More Headers]
[Subscribe to soc.religion.bahai]
Date sent: Mon, 20 Jul 1998 22:14:22 +1000
Organization: Edge-Internet-Services

Bahais as is their wont make a lot of unsubstantiated claims, like 'the Bahai Faith is in perfect harmony with other Divine faiths like Islam, Judaism, Christianity, etc.', '....we have come to unite mankind on one platform without any bias and prejudice', '...we wish to establish unity, peace and equality among the people'. These and such other statements though apparently very noble are masked with deception. To make the Bahais as well as non-Bahais aware of this deception was felt necessary.

This article was written with this very objective in mind. Mentioned below are a series of incidents that will distinctly underline my claims. Hopefully at the end, this article will leave the reader more enlightened.

Bahais give credence to disguising their Faith from the common gullible populace, disclosing it, only once they convert to Bahaism. This practice is described as 'Dissimulation'. As per principles of 'Taqaiya', Bahais conceal their Faith (or are at least permitted to conceal their Faith), if it serves their interests. (This practice was actually followed in Indonesia quite successfully. But when they had got too widespread and the Government got wise they were driven out.)

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani, one of Bahaism's most renowned missionaries, has written a book 'Behjatus Sudoor' (in Persian) in 1914 A.H. His treatise is considered noteworthy among the Bahais. This book was written by him under explicit instructions from Abbas Affandi.. Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani is buried in Akka (the Bahai Mecca) near Bahaullah's tomb.

In his book (Bombay edition) he states that '...when Bahaullah sent me to Istanbul on Abdul Bahaa's recommendation for preaching Bahaism there he advised me "...you should meet the masses with tact and your meeting with me should be disclosed in a very nonchalant manner, so they are not alarmed. And at all times bear in mind never to disclose your wealth, your destination and your religion, and implement this till the last possibility"'

Further in his book Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani has mentioned many meetings with the populace where he has strictly abided by Bahaullah's edict i.e. concealing the faith. I have made an attempt below wherein such incidents are mentioned that will make evident to my readers the objective behind this dissimulation

Incident 1

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani narrates 'When I was condemned in Egypt and the people said about me "az deene Islam kharij shudeh ast wa deene aaeene jadeedee bid'at namudeh ast" "... this man has forsaken the religion of Islam and accepted a new religion", I wrote a letter to the police officer saying "with selfishness and the malice which they bore towards us have blamed us of following a new religion and a new book. But after a thorough scrutiny of facts, the falsehood of these accusations will be as evident for the king as the midday sun" (Pg. 107) But he himself later mentions on pg. 184 "...it was made apparent with clear proofs (to one person) about the culmination of Islam and the advent of a new religion'. The deceit in the two statements mentioned above is also as evident as the midday sun, wherein, on one hand Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani vociferously denies his (new) faith and on the other he makes apparent to others this very (new) faith.

Incident 2

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani narrates on pg. 86-88 of the same book that ... after I had been appointed as a missionary by Bahaullah for preaching the religion of Bahaism and I arrived in Egypt, the Iranians protested that "you have abandoned your belief on the Finality of Prophethood (Khatame Nabuwwat) and forsaken Islam and Muslims and you preach that Muhammad (PBUH) is not the last Prophet." Then I told them, "baraaye tabligh naya aamdeheem wa khud ra qaabile eenkeh nisbat mo'mineen een amr badheem namee daaneem ta cheh rasd bemuballageen" "....I have not come to preach Bahaism, let alone being a Bahai, I do not consider myself equal to even a simple Bahai'

Again, the doublespeak in Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani's words is unmistakable. He denies his Bahai inclination when he himself was appointed by Bahaullah on the counsel of Abbas Affandi as a missionary. (Pg. 83) Then why this contradiction ??? This hypocrisy is in stark contrast with the teachings of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) who said "Lie is the key to all evil". No where does one find a single instance of Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) or Prophet Jesus (PBUH) advising their disciples to lie about their faith to the gullible so as to spread the message of Islam or Christianity. In fact Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) used to say "Refrain from lying even if it to your benefit, and always speak the truth even if it to your detriment". But we find Bahaullah and his successor advocating the philosophy of 'dissimulation' that totally contradicts the philosophy of the divine 'abrogated' religions. An institution based on lies and deceit can hardly be expected to survive for long, even though it may seem beneficial in the short term. This is something the Bahais must realise. Simply, increasing one's numbers is a very short sighted approach.

The Bahais must focus more on resolving the glaring discrepancies inherent in their faith that I have mentioned in my earlier articles. They should not be too concerned about numbers. People will come to the Faith, provided the truth is with them.

Incident 3

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani, was once called to meet the Shah of Iran, Shujaudaulah. The latter had got wind of Bahai activism. Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani as was his wont, did not disclose his identity. However, unable to conceal his enthusiasm, in the course of his meeting, he extolled the virtues of Akka. Shujaudaulah, a very perceptive individual, remarked that "...unless a person is a Bahai, he will not speak such. You are a Bahai, however you are loathe to disclose it". But Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani keeping Bahaullah's admonition in mind tried to deceive the Shah by saying "agar faanee mo'min wa mo'kin ast baayad hazratash dar jameea jahaat etaa'at konam" "If I am a Bahai and have (truly) accepted the Faith, then I must observe all the commands of Hazrat Bahaullah" (Behjatoos Sudoor Pg. 196) However by concealing his true identity (from the Shah) he has indeed observed one of the basic tenets of dissimulation laid down by Bahaullah.

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani's words: "We have shattered the Muslims", coupled with the Bahai deceit and dissimulation with the Muslims (and others) bear ample testimony to his and Bahaullah's intentions. Bahai missionaries then as well today, propagate with this objective. These words of Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani should serve as a warning for people across all faiths especially the Muslims. Muslim Ulama (scholars) should take the initiative in this matter. They should study more about the Bahai faith and launch an awareness campaign amongst the common gullible Muslims. Protecting the faith (Imaan) of common Muslims in this era from attacks of Bahai missionaries (like Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani) is crucial.

Incident 4

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani recounts on pg. 206-7 of the same book '...I alongwith two other Bahais, Ghulam Hussain and Muhammad Sadiq had gathered at a place in Iran. In the morning, the Muslims had besieged the place. I handed over all the important documents regarding Bahaism to my companions and surrendered myself to the Muslims. They took me to a house outside the city and warned me that if I do not give them all the important documents to them they would cut me into pieces. Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani deceived them by saying that "...at midnight yesterday, a man representing Shah Shuja'udullah had come, and I surrendered everything to him." Consequently I was spared and my two companions meanwhile, also made good their escape with the documents.'

Incident 5

The Bahais to preach their Faith among the Muslims, even go to the extent of praying 'Namaaz' with Muslims.

This is in stark violation of the Bahai tenet which strictly forbids a Bahai from praying like the Muslims. Let alone 'Namaaz' they are not even permitted even to perform their ablutions (Wuzu) like the Muslims. This is quite evident, as Bahau'llah claims to have abrogated Islam. However, Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani states in 'Behjatus Sudoor' (Pg. 97) "faanee wa Mirza Hussain Shirazi wa Darvesh Hussain sab meeaad bakhaaneh concal fateem wa nazde u wa aakhareen ham dar zaahir aadaabe Islam laahifz me namud zilm wa lu yatee bekitaabe jadeed wa shorue jadeed ra ham bedaleel aafakeeh wa anfaseeh saabit me kard" 'One night I, Mirza Hussain Shirazi and Darvesh Hussain met at the residence of the council as planned. I used to prove the veracity of the new Book (Aqdas) and the new religion (Bahaism) with hidden as well as apparent proofs as the religion of Islam was abrogated. However we prayed 'Namaaz' at the residence of the council in a manner similar to the other Muslims. And we always did this in front of others (non-Muslims) as well'

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani and his fellow missionaries went to the extent of contravening the Bahai principle just to convert a few Muslims. They performed an unlawful act (as per their Faith) only to get close to the Muslims. Why did they resort to such deceitful ways to propagate ? Or did they believe that so long as the ends justify the means, then everything is permissible ?

This mode of propagation of Bahaism is indeed strange. Never did Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) advice the missionaries to pretend to pray along with the Jews (of his time), although the Jews were Islam's sworn enemies. He always used words of kindness and compassion with the people and attracted them towards Islam with his excellent morals. Quran says "We have created the Prophet as an excellent exemplar for you" To the extent that even the bloodthirsty infidels used to call Prophet Muhammad (PBUH) him 'Sadiq' (Truthful) and 'Amin' (Trustworthy). Now compare this, with Bahau'llah, his character, his morals and the means he has employed to propagate Bahaism. Can anyone ever call him 'Sadiq' (Truthful) and 'Amin' (Trustworthy)?

And to think Bahaism has come to abrogate Islam! Why are the Bahais so insidious in their approach ? If Bahaism is such a 'beautiful' religion then why use such means ? Why don't they attract the people with this so called beauty ? What is the need to resort to such guile ? Never in the history of the Divine religions (Islam, Judaism, Christianity) was such a mode of propagation permitted. On the contrary Prophet Muhammad (PBUH), and Prophet Jesus (PBUH) and Prophet Moses (PBUH), etc. always adopted sincerity in their approach and never cared to simply enhance the strength of their followers. In fact certain prophets had only a handful of followers, inspite of preaching for hundreds of years. Adam (PBUH) had preached for 930 years and managed to gather a negligible number of followers. As it is widely known even Prophet Noah (PBUH) at the time of the deluge had only eighty companions on his ark. Noah (PBUH) had preached for 950 years. Even Prophet Abraham (PBUH) after years of preaching could muster, but a few disciples. Even Prophet Jesus (PBUH) after all his exhortations and appeals had only twelve close disciples. Yet he never adopted deception to counter the Pharisees, who were thirsty for his blood. As a matter of fact a close study of past prophets will tell us that most, if not all, had only a paltry number of followers. However none of the Prophets took recourse to such populist measures even in the face of severe persecution.

Incident 6

Besides praying 'Namaaz' along with the Muslims, the Bahai missionaries also employed other means such as becoming disciples/followers of renowned Muslim sages.

Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani mentions on pg. 27 of the same book "az Yazd be Kaashshaan wa Tehran raft wa dar Tehran bejahat satr wa hifz wa ameed wa iqbaale izhaar iradat bejanaab ustad Ghulam Rezaae Shishe gar mar shud mashur muslim namud" 'During my journey to Iran, I traveled from Yazd to Kaashaan and from there to Tehran. In Tehran, I visited a prominent Muslim sage/soothsayer, Ghulam Reza Shishah, and entered his fold. By doing this I hoped on one hand, to conceal my identity and on the other, to convert that sage/soothsayer.' Mirza Haider Ali Isfahani was indeed a very intelligent missionary. He realised that if he was successful in converting a prominent Muslim sage, it would only be matter of time before all the other followers/disciples followed suit. Another example of Bahai guile. This is where the Muslim Ulamas (scholars) have to be careful. Because if even one Aalim (scholar) falls prey to such Bahai cunning, their students/companions are most likely to emulate them. More incidents of a similar nature can be found on pg. 50

Incident 7

Mulla Ali Akbar was among students of Mulla Muhammad Sadiq. He was the leader (Imam-e-Jam'aat) of the mosque in Shiraz. And from the pulpit he used to announce the claim of 'Mahdi' of Mirza Ali Muhammad Shirazi (Hazrat Aala). This was done with utmost discretion. Indeed what can be of greater danger to the Muslims that Bahaai propoganda is carried from their places of worship. The consummation of this dissimulation is very aptly described by Abbas Affandi in his book "Al Kaukabe Durriyah" (pg. 452) "peyusteh een taafeeh dar har dastgaahraah dashtand wa az kaar har keesi agaah budeh chandaan keh az harm saraae sultaanee har raaz nahaaee betawassit bahaaiyyaan keh dar pardeh een mastur daair medaad amur bedabd baraae ishaan makshuf meegasht"

"the result was that the Bahaais had spread their tentacles everywhere. And they were aware of everyone's activities. To the extent that the discreet affairs of the women in the king's harem were known to them through the Bahaais who were employed with in the palaces" This then was the extent of espionage among the Bahaais at that time. And it is shocking to say the least.

And what is even more shocking is that Abdul Bahaa himself is the one admitting it. And he does seem to confess it without any regret or remorse. As if he was proud of the Bahaai network functioning at that time.

Dissimulation in the Sayings of Abbas Affandi (Abdul Bahaa)

1) In Bahaism preaching discreetly has been emphasised to the extent that Abdul Bahaa has mentioned in his book 'Makaatab' vol. 3, pg. 327 'Hiding your faith has been made obligatory upon you'. Also the author of 'Nukhtatul Qaaf', Mirza Jaani writes on pg. 211 of the same book 'The father was concealing his faith from the son and the son from his father and the people of his house.'

2) Abbas Affandi writes in a letter to Shaykh Farjullah Zaki who was sent to Egypt for preaching 'Bahauallah has made haraam (forbidden) the preaching of Islam in Egypt. It is required that Bahai friends keep low for a while. And even if someone questions about the Faith, they should pretend to be unaware of it.' This letter was written on October 22, 1921

3) This decree on preaching in a concealed manner has been expressed further in no uncertain terms by Abdul Bahaa in his "Makaatab" vol. 3 pg. 496 to Shaikh Mohiddeen Kardi, "masaaile hakeemeh ra asaas tazkereh karaar dheed na aqaaed ra" '..while trying to incline the thoughts (towards Bahaism), priority must be given to skills, rather than fundamentals (of the Faith).'

What can be more unsettling than a decree like this one issued by none other than the successor of Bahauallah??? Again this fashion of propagation is alien to the divine faiths, where all the past prophets had emphasised strictly on fundamentals of the religion. At no point of time did the prophets ever make any concessions on the principles. They were prepared to sacrifice their lives but unprepared to comprise on the foundation of religion. Again we see that the Bahai philosophy is the exact antithesis of the Sunnah of the earlier prophets.

This, then, was the mode employed by the Bahais to spread the Faith. And it is very much in vogue till date in certain countries, like Indonesia. And that is very disturbing. It is a cause for concern for all Muslims. As it is said an hidden enemy is more dangerous than a thousand open enemies. The objective of this article was to make evident this hidden enemy, as it is also said 'forewarned is forearmed'.

In article <35AA54BB.392@pilot.msuNOSPAM.edu>, osborndo@pilot.msuNOSPAM.edu says...

> "When the smoke and dust cleared away after the [first] volley, Bab was > not to be seen, and the populace proclaimed that he had ascended to the > skies -- The balls had broken the ropes by which he was bound, but he > was dragged from the recess where after some search, he was discovered, > and shot."
> (From a correspondence F.O. 60/152 [in the Foreign Office] sent by Lt.
> Col. Sheil to Lord Palmerston, the British Foreign Secretary, on July > 22, 1850 as quoted in H.M. Balyuzi's, _THE BAB: THE HERALD OF THE DAY OF > DAYS_, [George Ronald, Oxford, 1973], p. 202)
>
> At midday on 9 July 1850, Siyyid Ali Muhammad, known as the Bab ("Gate > [of Faith]") was martyred by a firing squad in Tabriz, Iran. Aside from > its religious significance to Baha'is (who observed the anniversary of > the Martyrdom of the Bab last Thursday), this event has interesting > historical aspects, one of which is that it was actually the second > firing squad charged with His execution that accomplished the deed -- > the Bab having survived the first one.
>
> A brief account of the Bab's Martyrdom is given in Esselmont's > _BAHA'U'LLAH AND THE NEW ERA_ begins on p. 17 (scroll down or "Find" > martyr twice) at:
> <https://bounty.bcca.org/~cvoogt/NewEra/2.html>
>
> The account of the event in Shoghi Effendi's _GOD PASSES BY_ can be read > at (one may begin at the paragraph numbered 4):
> https://SunSITE.UNC.Edu/Bahai/Texts/English/GPB/GPB-5.html#Page_51
>
> The account in Nabil-i-Zarandi (aka Nabil-i-Azam)'s _THE DAWNBREAKERS_ > (including photographs of some of the key people and places in the > drama) is at:
> <https://bounty.bcca.org/~cvoogt/DAWN/chapters/23.html>
>
> Baha'is believe that the Bab, who announced on 23 May 1844 His mission > as the Herald of another Manifestation of God, Baha'u'llah, was Himself > also a Messenger of God. More information can be read at:
> <https://www.bahai.org/bworld/frame.cfm?token=8200&CL=1> > (or if this doesn't work, go to <https://www.bahai.org/> , "enter," and > then search "Bab").
>
> Hope this is of interest...
>
> DZO
>
> Don Osborn osborndo [at] @pilot.msu.edu
>
~~~~~
> "The rise and fall of images of the future precedes or accompanies > the rise and fall of cultures." Frederick Polak
>
> "A superficial culture, unsupported by a cultivated morality, is > as `a confused medley of dreams.'" `Abdul-Baha

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Hikmat & taqiyya, "wisdom," "dissimulation" and "deception," key Baha'i concepts

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hikmatMENU.htm>

If you're unfamiliar with hikmat and taqiyya in either a Muslim or Baha'i context, it's basically the "wisdom" of lying and dissimulating to protect yourself or the faith and deceive enemies. Outside observers should be especially careful and alert to Hikmat & Taqiyya when reading and evaluating all Baha'i sources and claims.

---

"Oh ye people of the world! The virtue of this Most Great Manifestation is that We have removed from the Book whatever was the cause of difference, corruption and discord, and recorded therein that which leads to unity, harmony and agreement. " Baha'u'llah

---

A SELECTION of 1997 messages on the H-Bahai forum regarding Hikmat & Taqiyya (taqqiya or taqiya, taqiyyih, taqia), "wisdom" and dissimulation, deception, key Baha'i concepts.

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/taqiyya\_taqiya\_taqiya\_taqiyyih\_hikmat.html

For anyone interested, the Wikipedia article on taqqiya cites an outstanding article by Raymond Ibrahim. "How Taqiyya Alters Islam's Rules of War: Defeating Jihadist Terrorism". Middle East Forum. Winter 2010. Having read a number of articles on taqiyya (taqqiya or taqiya, taqiyyih, taqia) over the years, I highly recommend Raymond Ibrahim's piece. It is available online:

<https://www.meforum.org/2538/taqiyya-islam-rules-of-war>

For insightful discussion of Baha'i hikmat, see William Garlington's 2005 book: The Bahai Faith in America. Praeger. 2005

The Practice of Taqiyyah (Dissimulation) in the Babi and Bahai Religions

<https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/notes/vol3/taqiya.htm>

An outside view of hikmat and taqiya or taqiyya

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hikmat2.htm>

"declining to purchase life by that mere lip-denial which, under the name of taqia (concealment) is recognized by the Shi'ites as a perfectly justifiable subterfuge in case of peril; (39)"; "From this time on the Babis were more careful than ever to conceal their faith, and were usually ready to deny it when their lives were in danger. This practice of dissimulation (taqia) was approved by their leaders, as it had been previously approved by the Shi'ites.(47)" Search > " taqia "

Baha'i scholar Susan Maneck has a particularly notorious reputation for practicing hikmat & tiqiyya

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck1.htm>

Wisdom and Dissimulation: The Use and Meaning of Hikmat in the Baha'i Writings and History

<https://bahai-library.org/articles/hikmat.html>

---

While different, compare taqiyya to the Jewish recitation or prayer known as the Kol Nidre or Kol Nidrei and its varigated story of interpretation.

---

The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

Compare Shunning > Menu
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Shunning.htm>

Juan Cole on Baha'i Takfir
https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Juan\_Cole\_On\_Bahai\_Takfir.htm

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Eric Hobsbawm and the Universal House of Justice - The Century of Light

---

The uhj's "Century of Light" is clearly aimed at the radical elements of the NGO community and intended to play to their assumptions. For instance, this currying of NGO favor is blatant in the repeated citing of Eric Hobsbawm, the uhj's "favorite" historian, so at odds with the bahai Writings, but most appropriate for its intended audience:

<https://bahai-library.org/published.uhj/century.light/>

In so far as the uhj has aligned itself with such cliches versus the teachings of Baha'u'llah, preferring Hobsbawm, in the Century of Light, race, gender, etc., I continue to maintain that only the freedom of conscience Abdul-Baha spoke of highly can provide an invigoratingly open arena capable of protecting the Baha'i Faith from repeating the appalling mistakes and crimes of the more totalitarian forms of leftist liberalism. As many know, open discussion is not permitted and tolerated today within the bahai faith.

Baha'u'llah's emphasis is on unity that embraces values beyond the cliches of the leftist liberalism of modernity, while respecting the moral responsibility and complexity of the individual.

One example FROM:

The Century of Light: [page 3]<https://bahai-library.org/published.uhj/century.light/>

"Throughout the planet, Western imperialism was pursuing among the populations of other lands what it regarded as its "civilizing mission". In the words of one historian, the century's opening decade appeared to be essentially a continuation of the "long nineteenth century", [3] an era whose boundless self-satisfaction was perhaps best epitomized by the celebration in 1897 of Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee, a parade that rolled for hours through the streets of London, with an imperial panoply and display of military power far surpassing anything attempted in past civilizations."

NOTE

[3] Eric Hobsbawm, Age of Extremes: The Short Twentieth Century, 1914-1991 (London: Abacus, 1995), p. 584.

---

For further evidence of baha'i involvement in politics, see extensive manipulation of the United Nations

Also NITV in LA broadcasting pro- return of the Shah propaganda into Iran

---

Articles on Hobsbawm (for those unfamiliar with his work)

What a swell party it was. . . for him (Filed: 22/09/2002)

Niall Ferguson reviews Interesting Times by Eric Hobsbawm

<https://www.arts.telegraph.co.uk/arts/main.jhtml?xml=/arts/2002/09/22/bohob22.xml&sSheet=/arts/2002/09/22/bomain.html>

Times Literary Supplement. Not Fading Away Yet:
How British Identity Survived the Declinist Intelligentsia.
June 7, 2002. Includes a couple of fine barbs for Eric Hobsbawm, the uhj's favorite UK radical, as mentioned, in the "Century of Light."

<https://www.firstthings.com/ftissues/ft9511/reviews/bacevich.html>

Voice of the Old Left

The Age of Extremes: A History of the World, 1914-1991. By Eric Hobsbawm.
Pantheon Books. 627 pp. $30.

Reviewed by A. J. Bacevich

Eric Hobsbawm ranks among the most prolific and most influential British historians of the entire postwar era. He is also a person who, throughout his long career, has without apology identified himself as a man of the left. So he remains today.

For Hobsbawm, history is the continuation of politics by other means. In exploring the past, the historian's true purpose is to shape the future. Thus, whether acknowledged or not, real history, serious history, is always deeply political. Neither predisposed to avoid controversy nor willing to confine himself to arid subjects of antiquarian interest, Hobsbawm makes no pretense of dispassionate objectivity. His is political history in the grand manner: he appropriates the largest canvas within reach and attacks it with bold, slashing interpretative strokes. And Hobsbawm appears to relish controversy. His overall aim is less to inform the ignorant or to enlighten the befuddled than to rally the like-minded and to antagonize the opposition.

Among Hobsbawm's best-known works is a trilogy on the "long nineteenth century," his term for the period from 1789 to 1914 during which European influence reached seemingly unassailable heights. The Age of Extremes forms a sequel to that trilogy, charting the course of what Hobsbawm has labeled the "short twentieth century" extending from the outbreak of World War I (and the ensuing demise of Europe) through the end of the Cold War—a history, not incidentally, of Hobsbawm's own time.

This is a deeply personal account. Although the narrator seldom intrudes directly into the story, Hobsbawm's version of the "short century" revolves to a large extent around the great controversies that animated the era's myriad progressives, social revolutionaries, and proponents of secular utopia—in short, the sundry groups that comprise the modern left with which Hobsbawm has aligned himself and that (with few exceptions) derived singular inspiration from the upheaval that in 1917 overturned the old order in Russia and gave birth to that beacon of social justice and humanitarian virtue, the Soviet Union. The Age of Extremes can best be understood as a testimonial to that left, Hobsbawm's effort to explain how such a worthy enterprise has now ended in abject and humiliating failure, its ideals discredited, its vast pretensions demolished. Above all, in recounting the "short twentieth century's" descent into barbarism, Hobsbawm seeks to absolve the left of any responsibility for the era's various horrors and to refute any suggestion that the Grand Cause itself might have been from the very outset misguided, if not inherently malignant.

It's a tough case to make, one requiring both bravado and guile. Hobsbawm offers plenty of both. He regales his reader with tales of his heroes: "the noble Ho Chi Minh," "the pacifically-minded Khrushchev," and, of course, "Fidel"—"strong and charismatic [and] determined to demonstrate personal bravery and to be a hero of whatever cause of freedom against tyranny." Hobsbawm acknowledges, but cannot quite bring himself to condemn, the crimes of Joseph Stalin. To do so would undermine his overall depiction of the Soviet Union as brave and admirable, unappreciated and willfully misunderstood. Thus, he advises, "the victory over Hitler's Germany was essentially won, and could only have been won, by the Red Army." (Emphasis added.) Having thus delivered the world from the scourge of fascism, communism next proceeded to save capitalism from itself "by providing it with the incentive, fear, to reform itself after the Second World War." Such fear on the part of the West was, of course, quite misplaced, since the Soviet Union at war's end yearned for nothing so much as to sustain "the framework of the all-embracing anti-fascist alliance, i.e., it looked forward to a long-term coexistence, or rather symbiosis, of capitalist and Communist systems."

Responsibility for the ensuing Cold War thus rests squarely upon the West (above all, upon the United States), which whipped itself into a frenzy over "the supposed Soviet threat." That such a threat never existed, according to Hobsbawm, is patently obvious. Stalin entertained no imperial aspirations. There was no Soviet monolith, merely "a consortium of Communist states, organized around the Soviet Union." (Did the residents of, say, Budapest in 1956 or Prague in 1968 somehow misconstrue the privileges accruing to them as members of this consortium? On this point, Hobsbawm is silent.) Wherever its political influence extended beyond its own borders, the USSR was "specifically committed to [building] mixed economies under multiparty parliamentary democracies."

Moreover, the economic and technological superiority of the West was from the outset so evident that for the capitalist bloc to feel challenged by communism was clearly absurd. The Cold War, "from the start, was a war of unequals." Thus, if we are to believe Hobsbawm, the Soviet Union was simultaneously so mighty that it alone possessed the strength to crush Nazi Germany and so benign and so weak that mindless hysteria alone could explain why anyone would suspect Stalin's peaceful intentions.

And so it goes: that "passionate reformer" Mikhail Gorbachev is commended for singlehandedly extricating the world from the jaws of the Cold War; Israel is stigmatized and then quickly dismissed as simply a "new anti-Arab state"; the Catholic Church is repeatedly denounced for siding with the forces of political reaction against the forces of enlightenment. Indeed, Hobsbawm's antipathy for virtually all religion forms a recurrent underlying theme.

Were The Age of Extremes merely an apology for the left, it would be of limited interest. To the author's credit, his book is much more than that. According to Hobsbawm, future generations contemplating the furious ideological rows that fixed the attention of elites in the decades after 1917 may well wonder what all the fuss was about—not that the arguments over fascism or communism were pointless, but that in the long run they will turn out to be of less consequence than the massive technological, social, and cultural changes that have so transformed global society during the short twentieth century. The result, Hobsbawm argues, is that the world in which democratic capitalism has triumphed is, in fact, a world on the brink of profound crisis.

That Hobsbawm all too predictably attributes that crisis entirely to the crimes and excesses of capitalism is a point that need not detain us. That the maladies to which he points do indeed constitute a crisis of historic proportions is an argument that merits thoughtful consideration. Many items in his bill of particulars—recurring episodes of unspeakable violence and savagery decades after civilized peoples proclaimed "never again," growing desperation throughout much of the so-called Third World, the malaise of affluent societies suffering from the increasing "privatization of life" and the growth of "consumer egoism," the inadequacy and corruption of politics even in mature democracies, the diminished capacity of established institutions to respond to the challenges that they face—transcend ideology. Hobsbawm is on to something: with regard to the problems confronting mankind today, there is something different, larger, and particularly frightening. To turn to Hobsbawm and his colleagues on the Old Left for a remedy to those problems, however, would be hazardous if not downright reckless. They have had their moment and the world is still tallying up the cost of the havoc they wreaked. Yet the collapse of the left's visions for a secular utopia—however welcome—does not detract from the validity of its critique. Rather, the very depth of that failure might remind us that the ultimate solution to our present crisis—if solution there be—is likely to be found not in the realm of politics but in the realm of the spirit.

A.J. Bacevich is Executive Director of the Foreign Policy Institute at the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies in Washington, D.C.

May 22, 2001

The New World Trade Order - The Decisive Importance Of The Non-traded sector
<https://www.indiaainfoline.com/nevi/thne.html>

Eric Hobsbawm has written a book recently on the "New Century" where he clearly establishes what kind of changes the new century will witness. Man has been sailing seas and crossing mountains ever since he has emerged upon this world as an intelligent species. We have had ancient voyages and mediaeval trade routes and at the turn of the modern era with Vasco da Gama and Columbus, momentous journeys in geographical discovery. We have had, all over the world, at least two centuries of colonialism, where the resources of the colonised nation continuously fed the industries and commerce of the master nation. All of these events since time immemorial have taken place on a global scale. Then, where is the singularity or uniqueness of the globalisation which we are experiencing now?

Eric Hobsbawm says that the present globalisation is unique because this time, it is neither trade nor conquest, but a reorganisation of production upon the rational calculations of global optima which purports to bring about an integration of the world as never before. Therefore, it is likely that the resources will flow across the globe to settle into countries where they can perform in the most competitive manner. In the days of Schumpeter, i.e. in the sixties, technological sophistication was directly related to competitiveness of manufactures. But in the present world of standardised technology as well as of freely available knowledge and very mobile skilled persons, the advantages due to technical competence no longer belongs specifically to nations. What belong specifically to nations are other things which cannot be separated or even be traded by nations. These, in terms of economics will be called as non-tradeables and include water and power supply, other civic amenities, political stability, compliance with the more standardised rules of the WTO and a general work ambience of the country. Such items and these items cannot be traded, nor can they be accounted for but they constitute very crucial conditions for competitiveness in the traded goods (manufacturing, agriculture and services) to take effect.

In the days of globalisation, it is really not important to know how much a nation trade and what it trades in, but how much of resources from all over the world it has been able to attract towards itself. This is because, the bulk of a nation's wealth would come from its production, and trade is important because it makes the nation concentrate upon what it produces the best. Presently, nations are likely to vie with each other in order to attract more and more resources towards themselves so that international capital, knowledge and skills flow within their boundaries generating income and wealth. In the post-capitalist phase, or the advanced capitalist phase, which started roughly around the mid-50's, was that it was no longer important as to who owned the capital as much as the fact who controlled it. Daniel Bell, a leading American sociologist said that production needs to be controlled by the educated, intelligent, informed and innovative persons and not by the ones who merely have the wealth to invest. Thus started a long phase of the importance of "control of capital", where managers became more important than the industrialists who owned business. Such a separation between control and ownership of capital came into existence due to the intensification of knowledge and skills into production.

In the days of globalisation, it is important to realise that knowledge and skills may become relatively easy to access and acquire. Most of our innovations are well-documented and technology and skills themselves have become traded commodities. What remains as the "cutting edge" or the differentiating factor is the non-traded sector - infrastructure. If infrastructure is supposed to create all the difference to the competitiveness of industries, then neither ownership, nor control, but the location of production sites will become important. Managers can be posted anywhere and skilled labour can migrate, but the stationary factor, infrastructure will become the most deciding factor for a country's wealth in the years to come. This means that every country will want to improve its chances of attracting investments and in order to do this they will try their level best to have the best of sanitations, best of environmental purity, the best of power supply and so on. Health and education, two most important factors in the employability of labour would also become engaging political considerations.

What impact will this have on the nations' production structures? It may be easily deduced that with such an importance on the infrastructure, the best of the nation's resources will shift towards the production of such non-tradeables, like road construction, schools, education, information technology, environmental control and so on. But the problem with these non-tradeables is that they are most of the times commercially unviable - the full user cost will be very difficult to recover from a country like India and many such developing economies. Then how will the government or the investor ever hope to get back the funds. The only way one can realise the investments into infrastructure projects is through the very long winded indirect effect where the investor hopes that with improved infrastructure, more investments will come into the country which will raise the income of the people and with which they will either buy the firm's utilities, in case the firm is in the private sector, or they will pay tax, if the investor is the government. This is why, in the economic policies of nations as well as the investments into infrastructure go hand in hand with the openness towards foreign capital. Investments into infrastructure cannot be profitable without a large inflow of investments. If this large inflow of investments take place out of indigenous resources, then it is fine. But if the domestic entrepreneurs do not come forth with their investments then, one must keep one's doors open to the foreign investments. In other words, foreign investments are intricately linked to the investments into infrastructure.

Therefore, the future of globalisation is likely to see an increase in the production of non-traded goods all over the world. This will be because the non-traded sector will serve as the condition of success for the traded sector. The non-traded sector requires a very large amount of surplus because its costs are not always directly recoverable. In the macro-scenario, such costs can only be recovered from increased sale of the traded goods. In other words, the traded sector must heavily cross-subsidise the non-traded sector. This will make more and more demands on the traded sector to become profitable and competitive, capture larger and larger market share and add more value to the customer. It is true that we may assign the increase in global competition to the harder pressures on the commodity sector in particular and the traded sector in general, but when seen wholistically, the need for competitiveness of the traded sector lies precisely in the fact that it must now subsidise the non-traded sector.

According to Andre Gunder Frank and Samir Amin, leading economists of the 60's and the 80's respectively, the world production was likely to get divided and specialised. One set of nations would continue to produce less value-added products, while the other countries would continue to produce the higher value-added products. The first set would be the developing countries, while the latter would be the developed countries. The theories said that even when both grew in terms of value-addition, the developing countries would still be producing goods which were relatively less in value-addition in comparison to the developed countries. In the present context, the relationship between the countries may reverse and the extent of reversal will depend on how far the traded sector in every country subsidises the non-traded sector.

One of the most certain ways for generating a surplus in the traded sector is to relocate industries - closer to outsourced units, closer to sources of power and water, closer to centres of consumption. All of such efforts are likely to reduce costs, increase value for the customers and in effect, corner a larger market share for itself. This is why, the world is increasingly likely to see intra-regional trade than interregional trade, trade which takes place due to the relocation of plants seeking facilities rather than specific resources. The global players of steel are increasing getting interested in channelising their sales into a particular country through service centres and other auxiliary facilities such that the final costs of the commodity when it reaches the final customer may be contained. Trade will now take place more in terms of relocation as well as get concentrated within regions. This will not happen due to a rising economic regionalism, as it is many a times made out to be, but will happen more out of a definite economic need to maximise its subsidisation to the non-traded sector.

Susmita Dasgupta

Age of Extremes: The Short Twentieth Century 1914-1991 was published in Great Britain in 1994 and in the United States shortly after. It was soon published in all the main international languages - except one. It has appeared in German, Spanish and Portuguese (in both European and American editions), Italian, Chinese (in both Taiwanese and Mainland characters), Japanese, and Arabic. A Russian edition was soon underway. Editions were also in progress in all the state languages of the European Union - except one - and in the languages of most ex-communist states of central and eastern Europe (Polish, Czech, Hungarian, Rumanian, Slovene, Serbocroat, Albanian).

But not, until October, in French. Unlike publishers in Lithuania (with 3.7 million inhabitants), Moldavia (4.3 million) and Iceland (270,000), publishers in France (with its population of 58.4 million) did not apparently consider it feasible, or desirable, to translate Age of Extremes into their national language. Yet the book was considered of sufficient importance for the review Le Debat (January-February 1997) to devote almost 100 pages to a critical symposium on it - including several pages by eminent French publishers explaining why the book could not be published in France. But for the initiative of Le Monde Diplomatique and a Belgian publisher, it would still not be accessible to the French-speaking world.

The resistance of French publishers, alone among those of some 30 countries, to translating Age of Extremes is curious. The author is not the only one to find it surprising. Most of my earlier books were translated into French and some, indeed, have recently been republished in France. I had certainly not expected the publishers of the three volumes of my history of the 19th century - still in print - to refuse, without comment or explanation, to publish Age of Extremes, which completes the series. Was it probable that this book (unlike my earlier French titles) would have lost money, as French publishers have suggested? To judge by its reception and sales in all the countries in which it has been published, lack of public interest is unlikely. The collective failure of French publishers to publish the present book calls for some explanation.

Anti-Marxist bias

The most concise explanation comes from an American academic journal that specialises in surveying intellectual debates and scandals, Lingua Franca:

"Twenty-five years ago", observes Tony Judt, a historian at New York University, "Age of Extremes would have been translated in a week. So what has changed? Three forces have apparently conspired to keep the book out of translation: the growth of a vituperative anti-Marxism among French intellectuals; a budget squeeze in humanities publishing; and, not least, a publishing community either unwilling or afraid to defy these trends" (1). That the present book appeared shortly before the late François Furet's highly successful Le Passé d'une Illusion, an "equally ambitious treatment of 20th century history and one considerably closer to current Paris taste in its treatment of Soviet communism", may, says Judt, have "made French publishers wary of coming out with a work like Hobsbawm's".

A similar explanation was offered by the new Newsletter of the Committee on Intellectual Correspondence sponsored by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the Wissenschaftskolleg in Berlin and the Suntory Foundation in Japan (2). Current Parisian intellectual fashion, it argues, would find Hobsbawm's unrepentant position on the left "something of an embarrassment". This is also the view of Pierre Nora of Gallimard in an authoritative and lucid account of the situation as seen by a French publisher. All the publishers, he says, "whether they want to or not, are obliged to take into account the intellectual and ideological circumstances in which they publish. There are serious reasons to think . that [Hobsbawm's] book would appear in an unfavourable intellectual and historical climate. Which explains the unwillingness to take chances." France was "the longest and most deeply Stalinised country". Thus "decompression", when it came, "accentuated hostility to anything that could from near or far recall that former pro-Soviet, pro-communist age, including plain Marxism. Eric Hobsbawm cultivates this attachment to the revolutionary cause, even if at a distance, as a point of pride . But in France at this moment, it goes down badly" (3). It is not clear whether, or to what extent, the publisher himself feels part of that France where the author's attitude "goes down badly".

In the light of such arguments readers might expect Age of Extremes to be - like Furet's Le Passé d'une illusion - essentially an extended political or ideological polemic. It was not written as such. It is not the same kind of book at all, as readers will immediately discover. It asks to be judged on its merits as a comprehensive history of the 20th century (and the final volume of a series, begun many years ago, which together constitutes a history of the world since the late 18th century Age of Revolution). It has been recognised and taken seriously as such in countries whose regimes and intellectual fashions differ as widely as China and Taiwan, Israel and Syria, Canada, South Korea and Brazil, not to mention the US. Much to the financial satisfaction of author and publishers, it has also been very widely sold - and read - in three continents. One may observe in passing that publishers in countries at least as profoundly "Stalinised" in their time as France, and exposed to an even more dramatic "decompression" - namely the ex-communist states - have not hesitated to publish the book. (In communist times my historical works were never published in Russia, Poland or Czechoslovakia).

The publication of a French translation of Age of Extremes now make it possible to discover whether reviewers and the intelligent reading public in France are really as different from those of other countries as Pierre Nora's unflattering assessment of the intellectual state of France suggests. It will also allow readers to judge another argument which has been privately used to justify the continued refusal to publish Age of Extremes in France - namely that by the time a translation was made, the book would already be out-of-date and hence no longer worth reading. In the author's view, the time for a revised edition has not yet come. The world situation has not changed fundamentally since the mid-1990s. If my general historical analysis and observations on the world at the end of the century require major revision, it is not because they have been invalidated by subsequent events.

The international situation remains as sketched in the first part of chapter 19. The dramatic and terrible events in the region of the Great Lakes of central Africa (former Zaire) provide an additional illustration of this. That the "short 20th century" ended in a general crisis of all systems, and not simply with the collapse of communism, is central to the argument of this book. If anything, it is confirmed by the eruption in 1997-98 of the most serious global crisis of the capitalist economy since the 1930s.

Indeed, it suggests that the author was too optimistic in suggesting that the world economy was "due to enter another era of prosperous expansion before the end of the millennium", although he also noted - as it turned out correctly -- "that this might be hampered for a while by the after-effects of the disintegration of Soviet socialism, by the collapse of parts of the world into anarchy and warfare, and perhaps by an excessive dedication to global free trade". In short, in the author's view, the merits and weaknesses of his interpretation of the 20th century have not - so far - been significantly affected by what has happened in the world since 1994.

For this reason the text before French readers, apart from minimal corrections, is the text as published, or about to be published, in other languages. I leave it to their judgement. However I would like to put on record my thanks to Editions Complexe, who have made this edition possible, to P.E. Dauzat and the other translators who have produced a superb translation of a long and difficult English text, and to those friends in Paris who, over the past few years demonstrated that not all French intellectuals are opposed to allowing their countrymen to read works by authors of whom the bien-pensant fashions of the 1990s disapprove.

* Historian. Author inter alia of Age of Extremes: The Short Twentieth Century, 1914-1991, The Age of Capital, 1848-1875, and The Age of Empire, 1875-1914, all published by Abacus (Little, Brown)

(1) "Chunnel Vision", Lingua Franca, November 1997 pp 22-24.

"Furet vs. Hobsbawm", Newsletter, Fall/Winter 1997-98, p 10.

Pierre Nora, "Traduire: nécessité et difficultés", Le Débat, Paris, no. 93, January-February 1997, pp 93-95.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Ron House

---

1999

Re: Infallibility and deception 8/15/99

Infallibility and deception 8/9/99

Re: Quote from Ruhiyiyh Khanum censored by SRB 3/3/99

Re: Shunning \(was: Interesting Conversations\) 3/3/99

---

1998

Re: talk.religion.bahai 1/19/98

Re: talk.religion.bahai 1/20/98

Re: talk.religion.bahai 1/22/98

Re: talk.religion.bahai 1/27/98

censorship problem 2/6/98

SRB's rejection of certain posts 2/6/98

Re "Baha'i Leaders Vexed by On-line Critics" 2/2/98

Re: talk.religion.bahai disclaimer 2/2/98

Re: "Bahai Movement targets Dissenters" 2/2/98

Re: House warning on Covenant extremists and fundamentalism / Re:
4/22/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] FW: Notifying srb posters of censorship](#) 6/23/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] Freedom of Choice](#) 6/24/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] This email list](#) 7/12/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] Press Release](#) 7/26/98

---

1997

Re: Mark Towfiq's BCCA gets its revenge 11/12/97

Re: TRBahai SRB Moderation 11/14/97 (He notes a frequent technique used by many Bahais.)

Re: RFD: talk.religion.bahai 11/17/97

Re: Fred Glaysher gets it backwards again 11/24/97

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: House warning on Covenant extremists and fundamentalism / Re:
From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/04/22
Message-ID: <"WJH32B.A.B1H.KqrP1"@bounty.bcca.org>
Newsgroups: soc.religion.bahai

Spiritual Warfare

Date: Wednesday, April 22, 1998 10:44 PM

Eric D. Pierce wrote:

> It is my understanding that no Baha'i institution can require a person > who wants to be a Baha'i to state belief in God as a condition for > membership, so I doubt that Mr. H's less supportable "criteria" has much > validity.

This is true. Abdul-Baha was asked point-blank by Dr Forel, who didn't believe in God, and he didn't say no. In my own case
I have told the Universal House of Justice point-blank that I don't accept
the infallibility of ANY figures in the faith, and they haven't told me to leave.

--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/01/22
Message-ID: <34C7019A.6E449C46@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Rick Schaut wrote:

> Guy Macon wrote in message <6a1fg5$12b$1@news01.deltanet.com>...

> > Discussing this on a private Bahai mailing list would be a Bad Thing, > > in my opinion. It would have three bad effects:

> > [1] It includes those who should not be included (Bahais who can not > > access Usenet).

> It does, however, include the wisdom of those Baha'is who do not have access > to Usenet yet whose experience on Covenantal issues is most valuable.
> Moreover, there are representatives of institutions who simply are not at > liberty to speak their minds in a public forum. Hence, pertinent facts will > not be available if the discussion of an appropriate Baha'i response, should > the newsgroup pass, is confined to news.groups.

Should the NG pass, you can discuss your plans anywhere you please. The question is, NOW, why are you concerned about there being a free place where people can practice Baha'u'llah's injunction to independently search after truth? This is the correct forum for discussing any _legitimate_ reason why this NG should not be approved. If you have such a reason, please post it here. (Note: Baha'i theological problems can NOT be legitimate reasons for voting no to this proposal; we've been all through that - so sensitivity about non-Baha'is reading your words doesn't come into it.)

> > [2] It excludes those who should be included (Non Bahais who have wisdom > > and experience in the ways of Usenet that most Bahais lack)
> >

> Reaching a consensus on the appropriate Baha'i response to the Covenantal > issues that arise if this newsgroup passes is not a discussion that can be > open to non-Baha'is. If you think a little bit about who we might intend to > exclude from the discussion, I think you'll understand why. (Hint: it's not > you.)

See above. This is not a reason for voting no, so it is irrelevant to any concerns about whether this NG should exist.

> > [3] It opens the door for the mailing list moderator to influence the > > vote, and will lead to accusations that he influenced it even > > if he did not.

> If the proponents of the newsgroup are in on the discussion, indeed if they > are leading the discussion, then they can ensure that the discussion is not > about the vote itself but about an appropriate Baha'i response should the > vote pass.

This may interest you; it doesn't interest me. I just want anyone who has an opinion, a question, or just wants to mull over the Baha'i Faith to have a free, open forum where they can be guaranteed to hear any responses their post may elicit. In short, I want it to be easy for people to practice independent investigation of truth. Sorry if your faith is so low that this proposition scares you.

> Such accusations, if made by the proponents, will sound very empty if, > having been given every opportunity to participate in the discussion, they > have adamantly refused to join the appropriate e-mail lists where they could > participate.

It is a basic principle of Usenet that discussions about the shape of Usenet be conducted on Usenet. If you want to discuss some OTHER issue somewhere else, fine. But I don't have to accept being railroaded into a forum I have no respect for just to be sure you don't break the rules. If I suspect you've been up to no good at a later date, be assured I shall say so. Just look at it: you expect me to join your forum so I can police you and make sure you don't break the rules, and if I don't, my accusation will sound hollow??? What happened to Baha'i integrity that you need me to watch over you?

> For my own part, I have honored the requests of the proponents by not > discussing these issues on those private e-mail lists, and, given their > absence, will not do so until after the vote.

Excellent. So why am I needed on the private and censored Baha'i lists?

> I haven't conducted a scientific poll on this, but my sense is that, if > Baha'is could reach a positive consensus on what to do in response to the > existence of an unmoderated USENET newsgroup, then the vote would likely > pass without any difficulty whatsoever. Indeed, the failure, in some cases > the adamant refusal, to seek to find such a consensus through consultation > with other Baha'is, more than anything else (including Fred Glaysher's > accusations), is the most significant factor working against this vote.

Let's just think about that for a mo. We have a religion here whose founder taught independent investigation of truth, to see with one's own eyes and not through the eyes of another, supported a free press, opposed book burning... Can you see a pattern here? Doesn't a free, open electronic medium fit this pattern? Yet you would have us believe there are loads of Baha'is huddled out there fearing the advent of this forum. Well, you may be right, but only, in my opinion, if those Baha'is lack faith in the founder of their own religion.

--

Ron House

<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=house@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">house@usq.edu.au</A>

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener,

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/01/20
Message-ID: <34C43065.7BE00128@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Rick Schaut wrote:

>
> Ron House wrote in message <<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=34C2D9CE.4DAB50A2@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">34C2D9CE.4DAB5
0A2@usq.edu.au</A>>...</A>

> > "Given up hope"? Did you see my reply to your earlier > > query on this matter? If so, why are you implying your > > questions have not been answered, if not, then please > > ask any questions you like based on my earlier answer > > (which I reproduce below) and I'll do my best to answer > > them.

>
> I saw your earlier post. Its thesis was, primarily, that if I think there's > some problem to address than I, Rick Schaut acting as an individual, should > do something about it. Asside from the fact that any such action on my part > would relieve the proponents of this newsgroup of any responsibility they > have to work to address this issue, I still won't act on my own. I would if > I thought this was an issue that could be adequately addressed via an > individual's action, I'd do so.

Quite frankly, I think this is a cop out. You want us to do something (what?) yet you won't discuss your concerns. NO, I won't discuss this on Baha'i email lists; this is a Usenet proposal and I will discuss it on Usenet. I am not a member of any closed Baha'i email lists and I have no intention of becoming so, probably only to find you won't tell us your concerns there either.

Once again: the proposal is for a forum for DISCUSSION
OF THE BAHAI FAITH. It is NOT a proposal for a pro-Baha'i publicity channel. I couldn't care less if the articles posted to the NG end up supporting or refuting the Faith. All I want is a FREE, OPEN place where anyone can discuss the topic. It is therefore no responsibility of mine to make sure that the NG works the way YOU would like it to, least of all if you won't tell me what your concerns are.

So, Risk, put up or shut up. Tell us your worries so we can discuss them or stop whinging.

--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space";

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1997/11/24
Message-ID: <34791580.33C27FA6@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups,alt.religion.bahai

Isaac Freeman wrote:

>
> In article <p$YOrCAaBad0EwGs@fragrant.demon.co.uk>, ?@?.com writes:
> > He says he has been a Baha'i for about 20 years? I do not see 20 years > > worth of study, 20 years of living the Baha'i Life, 20 Years worth of > > Prayer in any of his actions in the public newsgroups or in the Baha'i > > Mailing lists.
>
> You're entitled to your own opinion, but I'm concerned that this is > getting close to passing judgement on Mr Glaysher. There's no reason why > his twenty years of experience need result in anyone else's idea of what > it is to be a Baha'i.

Indeed. Isaac is dead right. I have much more respect for someone who is at times a bit hot under the collar than for these syruppy, ultra-polite "believers" who must surely spend more time cultivating their own image than actually engaging with real people in real communication. If someone is intemperate, my first reaction is to ask why; in many cases it is not so that the person is just basically nasty. More often than not something really horrible was done by the "nice" people behind closed doors that is having its outlet in anger on the part of the victim.

Until I know the inner story, I don't judge people by the tone of their keyboard.

--

Ron House

<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=house@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">house@usq.edu.au</A>
An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1997/11/17
Message-ID: <346FA886.53745469@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Guy Macon wrote:

> By my reading of Baha'u'llah, Bahais are not to interfere with other > religions. You can't close down a Quaker meeting house. You can't > burn a book written by a Covenant Breaker. You can't use your vote > to try to stop a new newsgroup about the bahai faith. All are > forbidden. Even I, a non-bahai, can see the basic principle behind > the bahai teaching: leave those who oppose you alone. Don't help them, > but don't interfere with them. It's a good, Godly principle, and I > advise you to at least address the fact that you seem to be violating > it. Saying that you have good reasons for violating it doesn't matter;
> all book burners have good reasons for burning books.

I agree 100%. It seems clear to me that Baha'u'llah did not intend a 'legalistic' interpretation of his words: "Think not that I have revealed to you a mere code of laws..."

To suggest that the fact that we are dealing with an electronic rather than a paper medium invalidates the law seems to me the height of legalistic, unspiritual reasoning. In essence, book burning is using some kind of physical means to prevent consideration of information. That is the 'spirit' behind the law: don't interfere with people's right to read the contents of the medium. Voting no against a newsgroup has exactly the same effect as voting to confiscate and burn a physical book.

Guy, a non-Baha'i, can see this. Why is it so many Baha'is can not?

--

Ron House

<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=house@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">house@usq.edu.au</A>

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1997/11/12
Message-ID: <34691AF0.43C58D77@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups,alt.religion.bahai

Notarius wrote:

> I am shocked, Frederick.
> I dont know what happened recently between you and the BCCA that triggered > the decision - I look at the timing. They are using force on you at a very > delicate moment:
> t.r.b. has a chance of being created.
> ...
> You are being banned from all lists by one central authority.
> Its like being banned from all official newspapers by a national authority.

> notarius

I found myself wondering why a Baha'i should be banned from Baha'i lists. So far we don't know the reason, and I for one would like Frederick and/or the list maintainers to tell us.

Is this another example of Baha'i censorship, or a valid response to unreasonable action? I for one would draw the line here: if the list maintainers don't like what Frederick says, or don't like the volume of his postings, then I would call their action unjustified; if Frederick has been doing something that sabotages the list, like postings huge volumes of spam or mass-mailing other list recipients, I would say the list maintainers are justified. I particularly do NOT think that disliking Fred's 'tone of voice' is a good enough reason.

Normally this wouldn't be a matter for discussion here, but as this action has taken place at just this critical time, I think the question of attempted interference in the TRB vote must be raised.

Will Fred or the list maintainers please respond?

--

Ron House

<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=house@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">house@usq.edu.au</A>

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] FW: Notifying srb posters of censorship
Date: Tuesday, June 23, 1998 2:15 AM

Island Business Center (Bill Hyman) wrote:

>
> Dear Mr. Glaysher:
>
> I think most of the posters to soc.religion.bahai know that it is moderated, > and they like it that way.
> I have an aversion to the posting of Covenant Breaker material on a channel > which has the name of > the Bahai Faith. As you know this has happened on this unmoderated channel.
>
> Bill Hyman

I think Bill's losing the plot. The point, as I always understood it, of the Baha'i Faith, was to make the world a better place, to tell people that God had sent a new manifestation, and to practice His teaching of love and tolerance. But to Bill, it has all shrunk down to a petty question of stopping Baha'is reading covenant-breaking material - in spite of the fact that the UHJ has said in writing that Baha'is should not try to censor the CB'ers. Make no mistake, Bill isn't simply 'shunning' the CB'ers, he is trying to stop others from reading their work. Why else would he object to posting links that others COULD follow (but don't HAVE TO follow) that contain references to CB material? All he is authorised to do, as a Baha'i, is not read it himself, yet he tries to stop others locating it of their own free will.

Instead of a gospel of love, it has become nothing but a control-freak thing.

--
Ron House
house@usq.edu.au

Utopia (n): The rule of law without the rule of lawyers.

----
List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>
To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com
To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com

--
Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] Freedom of Choice
Date: Wednesday, June 24, 1998 12:42 AM

When I saw the following article I just had to respond, as it betrays serious mistakes about the Internet and also the Baha'i Faith.

George & Marlana wrote:

> I fail to understand how the practices of S.R.B. are in any way contrary to > that which is written in the constitution or for that matter, are any > different from any major newspaper in the US.

True. The US constitution guarantees that governments won't censor people, it doesn't compel everyone to reproduce everything anyone else says.

> We are free to write and say > ANYTHING we want. Newspapers and newsrooms are not required to print it.
> Surely educated people know that the major newspapers are all predisposed to > advance their own particular point of view and not the view of others. Its > their newspaper; they can print what they want. I assume the "owners" of SRB > have the same freedom.

Here is the main error, and it is a serious one. The owners of a newspaper own it because they purchased it; they buy the ink and the presses and the paper and pay the writers, etc. etc. The Internet is not owned by Baha'is or the Baha'i Faith; it is carried free of charge by, and at the expense of, a variety of secular, business, educational, and even religious organisations who store it on their computers and transmit it at their own expense. These people have collectively said "Okay, we will GIVE our resources to any group who have a charter and who get X votes from other users." In other words, SRB (and all other Internet newsgroups) are a gift to the users from the carriers.

This raises some serious issues. First, ANY moderator of a NG has a responsibility to stick to the charter under which the NG was founded, as that is the basis of the gift; if I give money to a charity and find it is used by the collector to gamble or drink, I have a legitimate reason for complaint. The charter of SRB states that the NG is open to ALL comment on the Baha'i Faith except for covenant-breaking, provided it is civil and doesn't attack persons as individuals. Violating that charter is accepting a gift under false pretences, and is immoral, especially for Baha'is, given Baha'u'llah's high standard of truthfulness. It is absurdly easy to produce examples of postings that easily pass the test in the charter of SRB and which have been rejected by the moderators. Each such rejection is immoral on both secular and Baha'i standards.

Second, by accepting this gift and using it as an instrument for propagating the Baha'i Faith, Baha'is are using a secular contribution to do the work of the Faith, which should rightly be paid for by Baha'i funds. This violates Baha'u'llah's proscription against accepting contributions from non-Baha'is.

> As > a Baha'i I am glad that my contributions to the fund are not being wasted > publicizing points of view that are contrary to the teachings of the Baha'i > Faith. I am also glad that I don't have to read it.

But as these are non-Baha'i funds, you should clearly think again, no? And as a second thought: who are YOU to decide what is contrary to the Baha'i teachings? One of the fundamental principles of your religion is that you have no right to rule on this question (issue authoritative interpretations). Every time you support a decision that a certain view should be suppressed because it is against your interpretation, you make your own words authoritative and you commit a worse sin than any of the people you criticise.

> When all newsgroups are required to print everything that is submitted to > them, I loose the freedom of choice, because then all the groups would be > all the same. I vote to keep the freedom of choice, and S.R.B.

No one is suggesting that all NGs print everything they receive. We are suggesting that SRB should obey its own charter, and that there be ANOTHER channel that has no moderator. Surely THAT is freedom of choice; a choice of 1 isn't a choice at all.

--

Ron House
house@usq.edu.au

----

List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>
To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com
To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com

--

Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] This email list
Date: Sunday, July 12, 1998 10:58 PM

Manley, Timothy/CVO wrote:

>
> Is this list for discussing the Baha'i Faith -- and the Writings of the > Faith?
>
> Or is this list for bashing the Baha'i Faith and its followers?
>
> So far I'm afraid I've seen only the latter -- but, I have only been > signed up for a couple of days.....

Well, if the only mainstream newsgroup refuses to accept these kinds of things, there will obviously be a head of steam that has to blow off in the only forum it can get.

Unfortunately the Baha'i communities are really loaded with intolerance. I know many, many people who consider themselves sincere, believing Baha'is (unlike a no hoper like me!) who nevertheless don't attend feasts and the like because they find the closed-minded attitudes there just too unbearable and they don't have the confidence to be the only person standing up and saying "look, let's open our minds a bit!" You see, when we join the Faith, we are full of enthusiasm and we meet others who are ditto. But when we have a misgiving, or a criticism, or a complaint, we have it alone; the chances of everyone in the room having the same problem at the same time is low. So if the current state of affairs can't make people with problems feel welcome, they will leave. And then if they find a forum where others are saying the same kinds of things they have felt, they will get involved. It's only human nature.

But to me the interesting question is not whether this list is only for bashers, it is: are the accusations being made true? Because if they are, then the mainstream Baha'is have caused the problem in the first place. But remember, here, unlike at SRB, you have as much right and ability to make your views known as anyone else. If the denizens here are way off base, tell us why.

--
Ron House                    house@usq.edu.au

Speed bumps are installed in the belief that if a road is unsafe at 50, we should make it unsafe at 30.

-----
List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>
To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com
To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com
--
Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] Press Release
Date: Sunday, July 26, 1998 10:16 PM

FG wrote:

> >To these incidents must now be added the apparent conspiracy for more > >than a year and a half of the Bahai Computer and Communications > >Committee (BCCA), under the chairmanship of Mark Towfiq, to defeat > >twice now, along with the collusion of other Bahais, the creation of an > >unmoderated newsgroup on the Bahai Faith which would be known as > >talk.religion.bahai.

Indeed. I wanted to add a word or two about the long-term consequences of this. It seems to me that this policy is not sustainable. Imagine if the BF did become a major world religion (in terms of numbers). In that scenario, even the smallest rate of defection to disbeliever, disaffected believer, or covenant-breaker status would provide large numbers of people whom the BF thought it should silence somehow. (This is not to imply that all these types of divergent beliefs are the same thing.) But my point is: carrying on as at present in that situation would provide a major blight, eyesore, and scandal for the BF. Following the present policies might keep most believers 'solid', but it almost certainly guarantees that the number of believers won't ever grow by 'troops'.

--

Ron House                    house@usq.edu.au

Speed bumps are installed in the belief that if a road is unsafe at 50, we should make it unsafe at 30.

----

List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>

To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com

To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com

--

Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Subject: Infallibility and deception
Date: Monday, August 09, 1999 11:55 PM

Smaneck wrote:

>
> >Susan, only the UHJ has infallibility, not the secretariat. This is the > >reason the UHJ, quite conscious of its lack of such perfection prefers to > >have the secretariat say much of what comes out of Haifa. That way the UHJ > >can later disavow whatever turns out to be wrong.
>
> Dear Michael.
>
> Let's do a reality check here. Can you think of a single instance where the > House of Justice has ever disavowed a letter written on its behalf by the > secretariat? Nine people aren't going to sit down and write a hundred letters a > day. Infallible they may be, omnipotent they are not! But they will go through > those hundred things on their agenda and give instructions to their secretaries > and nothing goes out written on their behalf until at least five members have > examined the final draft and approved it.

On the Baha'i Studies mailing list, I recently posted a criticism of the Universal House of Justice, which, summarised, was this: that Baha'i apologists on the Internet allow less informed Baha'is to believe that the UHJ is infallible, when the original term actually is better translated as morally perfect, sinless, or something of that nature; that when this is challenged by producing demonstrations of their (or 'Abdul-Baha's, etc.) errors, then the fallback is made by then saying "No, you've got it wrong! They are actually not propositionally inerrant, but merely sinless."; and that when these apologists thereby deflect the critic, they go right back to using the term "infallible" and letting other hearers think they mean propositionally inerrant. My criticism of the UHJ was that they permit this cycle of deception (for the game can be played round and round as often as necessary). I will extend this criticism here to mention that, by the way, the UHJ prior to the advent of the Internet played the one-step equivalent game of simply allowing non-Iranians to believe that the UHJ is infallible - that is, inerrant. (The need to retreat round the cycle never existed whilst no means could be found for a believer to make their problems known worldwide.)

For my trouble I received a formal warning from the list managers, who included the above Susan Maneck, but more importantly, a denial that such a cycle of deception exists at all. But look at the above post: is this not the same Susan Maneck, who on numerous occasions has answered literalist criticisms of the infallibility doctrine by pointing out that the word really means "sinless" - is this not she now giving the good readers here the impression that the word means "inerrant"? Is this not a demonstration before our very eyes of the cycle of deception I mentioned being played out for one more round?

--
Ron House                    house@usq.edu.au

The evils of each age always seem self-evidently right at the time.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: TRBahai SRB Moderation
Date: Friday, November 14, 1997 2:42 AM

FG wrote:

- > Thanks, Ron, for saying it like it is.... I can't
- > respond to you on news.groups lest I'm attacked
- > again as the incarnation of all evil....

I know what you mean. I've found over the years that there is a technique used by traditional Baha'is and others to squash dissension: harry the dissenter so much he says something intemperate, then point out how 'loving' and 'compassionate' they are and how nasty the dissenter is. The trouble is that this technique works, so I've been making a conscious effort not to fall for it. Also, when they get the dissenter discouraged and miserable enough, he invariably makes a slip-up sooner or later that they can REALLY let loose the venom over. IMHO, they did this to you when you misread Sharon's intentions. At any other time, they would overlook faults, as Baha'u'llah says, but when they're in this mode they go for the jugular. Very sad.

- > If anything
- > interesting appears only on arb, I'll repost it to
- > news.groups or send you a copy directly.

Thanks.

- > From the bottom of my heart, thank you for sharing
- > your thoughts on everything on news.groups.... It's
- > been a long and lonely battle for during the last
- > year and I fear I'm giving out at the end, the
- > onslaught is so intense....

I am sure that Baha'u'llah Himself is with us.
I don't say that lightly but as a result of experiences (spiritual encounters). All that is needed is for us to be as fair and truthful as we possibly can and He will provide strength.

**--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it.      -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Subject: Re: Infallibility and deception
Date: Sunday, August 15, 1999 8:36 AM

Smaneck wrote:

>
> Ron writes:
>
> >On the Baha'i Studies mailing list, I recently posted a criticism of the > >Universal House of Justice, which, summarised, was this: that Baha'i > >apologists on the Internet allow less informed Baha'is to believe that > >the UHJ is infallible, when the original term actually is better > >translated as morally perfect, sinless, or something of that nature;
>
> Dear Ron,
>
> That is the principle meaning of ma'sum; the word translated as infallibility.
> But Baha'is are free to have various understandings of what that means and I > certainly am not interested in imposing mine on anyone else. In the post you > are responding to I was simply pointing out that to try to make too sharp a > distinction between letters from the House and those from the Secretariat > written on behalf of the House is probably a dead end as far as considering the > divine guidance contained therein. And as far as I'm concerned ma'sum carries > with it the meaning of providing such guidance.
>
> Much of the problem we have been having with you is that not only are you > unwilling to give this same tolerance to others

I am sick of your paraphrasing my views in vindictive and dishonest terms.

> but you went so far as to > condemn the House of Justice itself for not insisting on a more limited > meaning of infallibility. You even stated categorically that they had fallen > under divine judgement and that this was what the Tablet of the Holy Mariner > referred to when it spoke of the ark being "cast out."

I stated categorically that this was offered as my personal opinion.

> This kind of discourse > can only be disruptive to the list purpose of Baha'i Studies.

As I pointed out on the list, my opinion amounts to the belief that a prophesy of Baha'u'llah's is coming true. I leave it to the good readers here to ponder the spiritual conditions prevailing on a Baha'i list whose moderators find that such a belief "can only be disruptive".

--

Ron House                    house@usq.edu.au

The evils of each age always seem self-evidently right at the time.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Subject: Re: Quote from Ruhiiyyih Khanum censored by SRB
Date: Wednesday, March 03, 1999 12:36 AM

BrentMReed wrote:

> Soc.religion.bahai is a big joke and an affront to the Founders of the Baha'i > Faith. It is a lifeless and intellectually backward censored board, infused > with the spiritually suffocating air of profound and ignorant hypocrisy, and > and manipulated by those with a disdain for the Will and Testament of > 'Abd'ul-Baha.

> Brent Reed

> [Two messages attached, one from BR to SRB advertising the Orthodox Baha'i > Faith, and one from Bill Hyman, co-moderator, SRB, rejecting the post. - RH]

It is quite humorous seeing SRB reject an article that centred on a statement of Ruhiiyyih Khanum's. But more seriously, by doing so they have demonstrated that SRB is acting as an organ of the Baha'i Faith and not as an impartial source of information and discussion. SRB is carried free of charge by government, university, and commercial organisations as a service, and this represents considerable monetary value. By treating such a contributed facility as a Baha'i organ, the moderators of SRB are effectively accepting donations from non-Baha'is.

--

Ron House                      house@usq.edu.au

You can only be right if you have the courage to be wrong.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Subject: Re: Shunning (was: Interesting Conversations)
Date: Wednesday, March 03, 1999 12:09 AM

rlittle33@my-dejanews.com wrote:

>
> Two thoughts here (my upper limit for the week, unfortunately):
>
> I agree that Baha'u'llah exhorted the world to commune (like that word) in an > atmosphere of love and respect, and love.

> First, the situation found on these unmoderated Baha'i websites is not the > same situation found in Baha'i community life. Posters can enter here and > spew the ugliest things, knowing that they are safely hidden away in the > shadows. How many actual, physical rooms could contain this much animosity > (and verbosity :)?

It is easy for Baha'is to be too critical of the rough and tumble of Internet discussions. After attending one of the etherial, unworldly Baha'i events, one could easily come here and be disappointed. Fortunately for me, I learned that the ever so syruppy, hyper-polite, prayer-filled people are the most hypocritical and hateful, and that politeness is no measure of a person's real spirituality. I prefer to ask: who is giving me their _real_ thoughts, held for sincere and good reasons, trying to achieve some good in the world? Those are the people I feel close to.

--
Ron House                      house@usq.edu.au

You can only be right if you have the courage to be wrong.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/02/06
Message-ID: <34DA9359.7B663B43@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups,alt.religion.bahai

Donald Zhang Osborn wrote:

> To me the reposts seem rather to be an attempt to link the t.r.b. vote > with the notion that there's some kind of censorship problem in the > Faith.

The rejection of TRB last time by 591 votes (which I have demonstrated exhaustively to be highly suspicious (article will be reposted on request)) happened precisely because there was a huge panic that covenant breakers might gain a place to make their views known. I think that's pretty clear evidence that there is a censorship problem in the faith. Yes, I agree this is not the institutions doing this, but that huge glut of believers rushing to apply censorship is certainly a 'problem', given Baha'u'llah's views on independent search for truth.

I admit Fred has reposted a few articles too many, but in his defence, it is clearly his right to show the kinds of things that have no mainstream outlet available now. If seeing them on news.groups is annoying anyone, their best course of action is to vote yes for a newsgroup they really do belong on.

As for the remark that this will put Baha'is off from wanting to support TRB, I am reminded of an incident that happened when I was a Baha'i youth and still enthusiastic. An arrangement was made for a youth meeting with the local Mormon church. The Brisbane LSA sent the youth to the meeting with the words "have a good time!" When we arrived, the Mormon youth were there, accompanied by their elders!

I remember commenting afterwards that the faith of the Brisbane LSA was in sharp contrast with the lack of faith of the Mormon elders. I know exactly what my reaction then would have been if I could have been told about a world-wide, free, open electronic network where you can say anything you like about the Baha'i faith: "Bring on the critics! Bring on the enquirers! Let me at 'em!"

The pusillanimity of the Baha'is here now using Fred's irascibility as an excuse to vote no is a sad, sorry contrast to the faith displayed by the Brisbane LSA 25 years ago.

--

Ron House
house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/02/06
Message-ID: <34DA9431.53025287@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups,alt.religion.bahai

Dick Detweiler wrote:

> Although it is hard to resist a provocation no matter where it comes > from, I urge everyone on all sides of this debate to take the debate > to a more appropriate forum. If you think alt.religion.bahai or SRB > are too restricted for the audience you want, take it to > talk.religion.misc.

SRB's rejection of certain posts is one of the reasons articles are posted here. Leave ARB out of it - it's not official and not widely available. TRM is not appropriate because the lack of an appropriate group is the real issue, and that's an issue that is relevant here. These articles are being meta-discussed, not discussed.

--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/02/02
Message-ID: <34D55FB9.900CAA7@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups,alt.religion.bahai
Subject: Re "Bahai Leaders Vexed by on-line Critics"

Donald Zhang Osborn wrote:

>

> Rick Schaut wrote:

> > Ron House wrote in message 34CD6CED.4ED 50ED9@usq.edu.au>...

> > > Rick Schaut wrote:

> > > > Ron House wrote in message 34C7078A.FAFE56

4@usq.edu.au>...

> > > > > But what does the truth concern? This proposal?

> > > > >

> > > > > It concerns the possible effects that this newsgroup can have on > > > > > undeepened Baha'is. Is this, somehow, not worth consulting about?

> > >

> > > Not to me it aint. As I said, I don't care what > > > effect this NG has on Baha'is of any colour.I > > > just want people to be able to follow

> > > Baha'u'llah's advice without interference by > > > > wiser-than-thou moderators.

> > >

> > > I could understand this attitude if both concerns were mutually > > > exclusive rather than simply competing concerns for which we should > > > strive to find a solution that satisfies both.

> >

> > A few quick (if not brief enough) observations, if I may:

> >

> > 1. I agree that on this point it is best not to be limited by "either-> > or" thinking.

I'm not.

> > 2. I am disturbed by the negative characterizations about the s.r.b.

> > moderators that one encounters in some messages in the t.r.b.

> > discussion. IMHO it is important to remember that (a) the moderators > > are volunteers who render a service as best they can, and as such > > deserve some respect, even if they one may not always agree with their > > decisions -- in any event, I don't see how one could characterize them > > as "wiser-than-thou"; and (b) criticism of s.r.b. moderators seems to > > me to be one of the weakest arguments for t.r.b., yet one of the most > > controversial.

The mere fact that they ARE moderators is the essence of the main problem. For those of us who want freedom of speech, a moderator is not performing a service.

I characterise some of those moderators I have had experience of as "wiser than thou" because that is precisely my experience of their dealings. How else would you characterise someone who rejected an article, not for lacking relevance, not for being abusive, but for LACKING A CONCLUSION?????

--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

</body>

</html>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/02/02
Message-ID: <34D55D81.2E33F78E@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Chris Manvell wrote:

>
> As this is not really relevant to news.groups, I have set follow-ups to > ARB only.

I can't get ARB, so could you please put news.groups back in, and advise anyone posting on ARB to do so as well? I am particularly interested in this discussion.

In fact, this is a classic case of a need for TRB.

--

Ron House

<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=house@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">house@usq.edu.au</A>

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/01/19
Message-ID: <34C2E206.19EB0753@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Chris wrote:

> In a message which I read on news.groups, Rick Schaut
> <
HREF="/profile.xp?author=richs@microsoft.NOSPAMcom&ST=PS">richs@microsoft.NOSPA
Mcom</A>> wrote
> > I agree entirely that Baha'is will have to work out an appropriate response > > amongst ourselves. What concerns me is the fact that the proponents of this > > newsgroup have not taken the lead in beginning some effort along these > > lines. Indeed, one of the proponents seems to not want any consultation on > > this matter at all (though I'm absolutely at a loss as to understand why).

Well I for one will discuss anything with (almost) anyone, anytime. You tell us what worries you, and I'll do my best to respond. What I WON'T do, though, is solve your problem for you. You may be worried that criticisms of the Faith will be posted; well, you answer them. You may be concerned that covenant breakers will use the newsgroup; well, can you defend your religion or can't you?
(You don't have to engage the CBers to do this, you merely have to explain to the rest of us why the CBer is wrong.) You might be worried that (GOD FORBID!!!) someone will be impolite - well, can you show us reasoned, polite, loving discussion and show us the right way to do it, or can't you?

In short (and don't take this the wrong way, please) do you have the GUTS to expose your religion to the independent search for truth of those people who will not engage in discussion under the censored regime of soc.religion.bahai? Will you, as Baha'u'llah did, challenge the metaphorical clerics to take their best shot? (He asked them to name ANY miracle, and if he did not do it, he would be exposed as a charlatan.) Can you defend your Faith in the kind of forum you must surely be aware the modern world demands: an open one where no view is prohibited?

Or isn't your faith in Baha'u'llah strong enough?
Well, go on back to soc.religion.bahai and conduct tame little discussions with the already-converted, and leave the tough stuff to Baha'is with better mettle.

I apologise if you don't like the TONE of this article, or if you use its TONE to refuse to discuss the subject or to vote no or to tell us people aren't being polite enough, but I am getting a little sick of hearing that the objections have not been answered, and I am also getting sick of listening to this stuff about how the proponents should solve the Baha'is' problems for them. In case you missed it, the proponents want a newsgroup

where ANY civil discussion about the Baha'i Faith is permitted - for or against. If you are a committed supporter of the Faith, then YOU make sure the newsgroup becomes a source of positive information about the Faith and by your own example, show us how Baha'is embody the teachings of Baha'u'llah in their lives.

For the love of Mike, Baha'is are always talking at feasts about how to get opportunities to teach the faith, and here is a proposal to create a huge electronic 'public fireside' where anyone can ask their questions. Ye gods, what I wouldn't have done for an opportunity like this when I was still an active Baha'i! And yes, I am sure there must be some CBers somewhere who also are straining at the leash, just waiting for their chance to corrupt your faith, and some assorted other enemies waiting their chance to present all their arguments against Baha'u'llah. Well, do you have the faith and courage to confront these priests of Baal, or is all the stirring stuff you hear (and probably yourself say) at feasts and teaching conferences merely bluster?

Quite frankly, my personal belief is that only a LACK of faith could possibly cause any Baha'i to vote against this proposal. Sorry if this frank article and opinion offends you.

--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener, "Space"

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/01/27
Message-ID: <34CD6630.6A431E3D@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Chris wrote:

>
> In a message which I read on news.groups, FG
> <
HREF="/profile.xp?author=FG@hotmail.com&ST=PS">FG@hotmail.com</A> > wrote

> > An excerpt from Religion Watch, January 1997 issue, > > that may further help illuminate the discussion for > > talk.religion.bahai....
>
> Fred,
>
> I don't know what you are trying to prove here but I would suggest > a) that to use quotes from one individual who uses half truths to attack > the Faith through a small number of individual members is disingenuous, > (KPJ's accusations are not in line with my experience of the Faith) and > b) that this is not really relevant to the arguments in support of TRB.

The impression I got from Fred's article was that he was publishing an example of the consequences for the public opinion of the faith
if Baha'is try to suppress free exchange of information.

--

Ron House

house@usq.edu.au

An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener,

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Ron House <house@usq.edu.au>
Date: 1998/01/27
Message-ID: <34CD6CED.4ED50ED9@usq.edu.au>
Newsgroups: news.groups

Rick Schaut wrote:

>
> Ron House wrote in message <<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=34C7078A.FAFE564@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">34C7078A.FAFE564@
usq.edu.au</A>>...

<
< >My job as a proponent is<
< >to answer technical objections to the proposal,< < >no more. If my little demo wasn't complete, so<
< >be it.<
< ><
< Your responsibilities as a proponent of a Usenet newsgroup strike me as< < being abundantly irrelevant to your responsibilities as a Baha'i.

This remark's implication for the matter under< discussion is profoundly opaque to me, as the< proposal on the 'table' is not my goodness as< a Baha'i but the question: TRB or not TRB?

The rules of this forum are that good citizenship,< but not the letter of the law, requires that a no< vote only be cast for technical reasons.

If you want me to:

(A) convince you to not vote no:

then I respond that Baha'is are expected to be good< 'citizens', and therefore, as neither you nor anyone< else has suggested any plausible technical arguments,< a no vote just isn't acceptable for a 'good' Baha'i.

But if you want me to:

(B) convince you to vote yes:

then I simply point out to you that there are many people< in the world whose chief attraction to the Baha'i< faith is its adherence to Baha'u'llah's principle< of _INDEPENDENT_ search for truth, and that many< of these people simply won't consider any kind of< moderated forum to be free enough for their search< purposes. Quite a few people have independently< volunteered such a view during this discussion, and< I would suggest to you that not much purpose is< served by denying the fact. What you do with it< is up to you.

If I convince you of (A) but not of (B), then abstain.

That's the limit of what I intend to do here,< but you seem to want me to take some sort of< proprietary interest in the success of the  faith in the new NG. I have no intention of taking up any such matter.

> >>> You don't have the truth, and neither do I. The truth is only something > we > >>> can discover together through consultation.
>
> >>But what does the truth concern? This proposal?
>
> It concerns the possible effects that this newsgroup can have on undeeened > Baha'is. Is this, somehow, not worth consulting about?

Not to me it aint. As I said, I don't care what effect this NG has on Baha'is of any colour. I just want people to be able to follow Baha'u'llah's advice without interference by wiser-than-thou moderators.

> This is complete non-sequitur. If I didn't have faith in the ability of > Baha'is to answer our critics, would I be stressing the importance of > consultation as to how best to answer them?

By insisting on some kind of input from me, you show a lack of confidence in other Baha'is.

--
Ron House
<A HREF="/profile.xp?author=house@usq.edu.au&ST=PS">house@usq.edu.au</A>
An age is called Dark not because the light fails to shine, but because people refuse to see it. -- James Michener,

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Baha'i on Huffington Post - Another Forum of Disinformation

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Huffington\_Post\_Bahai.html

Homa Sabet Tavangar posted a blogger message to the Huffington Post, which I've included at the bottom here from Google's cach, titled "Baha'i Teachings to Prevent the Federal Government Shutdown." Posted: 04/ 7/11 05:24 PM ET After I responded to it on about April 11, 2011, the post was removed from Huffington Post, according to the editor, "This post has been removed at the request of the blogger."
<https://www.huffingtonpost.com/editors-note/removed.html>

Here is my response to the article:

""The Baha'i approach is profoundly spiritual while in harmony with the latest in management research: start with clarifying the overarching vision and purpose; allow, appreciate and truly listen to differences of opinion; and engage in honest discussion and decision-making for the sake of the greater good to move forward in unity. All of this is rooted in the most universal of principles: the Golden Rule." [Homa Sabet Tavangar]

That's what all fascists thinks and say while behaving the way the Wilmette Baha'is did by suing THREE other Baha'i denominations in the US Federal Courts from 2006 to late last year, 2010.

The 7th Circuit Court documents and Opinion are online for anyone who wants to read about the **actual** behavior of the "spiritual" religion Ms. Sabet imagines has something to teach the US Government. The US Government's Courts understand the Wilmette Baha'is very well

Opinion in case# 08-2306, Judge Sykes:

"When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church) [boldface added], the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed."

<https://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/fdocs/docs.fwx?caseno=08-2306&submit=showdkt&yr=08&n\um=2306>

No Golden Rule demonstrated by the supposed "Baha'i approach.""

My post displayed on the Huffington Post:

https://www.huffingtonpost.com/social/FG/bahai-teachings-to-preven\_b\_846361\_84055545.html

I would add here, non-Bahais might want to reflect on exactly what the organized Baha'is of Wilmette, Illinois, and Haifa, Israel have to offer the US Federal Government. These are the techniques used by Baha'is for decades but concealed as even a short amount of time on this website should persuade even a cursory look at the evidence:

Homa Sabet Tavangar: B...

webcache.googleusercontent.com/search?q=cache:x6JHLAT7214J:www.huffingtonpost.com/homa-sabet-tavangar/bahai-teachings-to-preven_b_846

HUFFPOST RELIGION

Search News and Topics

SEARCH

Like 270K

April 13, 2011 | Log In | Sign Up

Connect

Twitter

FRONT PAGE

POLITICS

BUSINESS

ENTERTAINMENT

MEDIA

TECH

COMEDY

SPORTS

STYLE

WORLD

FOOD

LIVING

IMPACT

EDU

LOCAL

RELIGION

LIVING

BUDDHISM

CHRISTIANITY

HINDUISM

ISLAM

JUDAISM

Enter email address

Get Alerts

Homa Sabet Tavangar

GET UPDATES FROM HOMA SABET TAVANGAR

FAN

RSS

EMAIL

Twitter

Like

Baha'i Teachings to Prevent the Federal Government Shutdown

Posted: 04/ 7/11 05:24 PM ET

React

Amazing

Inspiring

Funny

Scary

Hot

Crazy

Important

Weird

Follow

Government Shutdown

Congress

Environment

Federal Budget Deficit

Iran

Growing Up Global

Ileana Ros-Lehtinen

Richard Durbin

Baha'i Faith

Bahai

Cedaw

Conflict Resolution

Consultation

Interfaith

Interfaith Dialogue

Management

Nonpartisan

The Golden Rule

Religion News

SHARE THIS STORY

Like

456 people like this. Be the first of your friends.

There are no Baha'is in the U.S. Congress. The teachings of the Faith are decidedly non-partisan, yet around the world its members vote, organize around issues of principle (like leadership on

ADVERTISEMENT

OBAMA LAUNCHES MORTGAGE RESCUE PLAN

If you owe less than $729,000 on your mortgage, you probably qualify for the President's Making Home Affordable Program. Under this plan, the government will cut your mortgage payments by up to $12,000/year. If you are a homeowner and you haven't looked into refinancing recently, you may be surprised at how much you can save.

SELECT YOUR AGE: 55

CALCULATE NEW HOUSE PAYMENT

Lower My Bills.com

PHOTO GALLERIES

1:14 PM

4/17/2011

154

25

27

20 share

tweet

email

comment

Get Religion Alerts

Sign Up

Submit this story

around issues of principle (like leadership on religious freedom, environmental stewardship and women's rights), and can work for the government, but not as a registered Democrat, Republican, or any other party. Just as members of Congress have spoken out on behalf of Baha'is and others unjustly persecuted in Iran, like Congresswoman Ros-Lehtinen (R-FL) and Senator Durbin (D-IL), or stood behind legislation on women's rights, many members of Congress have been influenced positively by the involvement of their diverse Baha'i constituency in their hometowns across the country, and the principles of unity and justice that their friends and constituents have stood up for.

I'd like to propose that thoughtful members of Congress draw from the teachings of the Baha'i Faith to overcome their impasse. When almost a million federal workers need to turn in all computers and cell phones and are threatened by federal law if they do any official business while government shuts down, the impact will be felt by many more Americans: IRS refund checks won't be issued, toxic waste policing and cleanup will be halted, training of police and border patrol agents in Afghanistan, as well as many foreign intelligence operations will stop, mortgages and federal loans coming to a standstill will block positive economic activity, and much more.

The Baha'i approach is profoundly spiritual while in harmony with the latest in management research: start with clarifying the overarching vision and purpose; allow, appreciate and truly listen to differences of opinion; and engage in honest discussion and decision-making for the sake of the greater good to move forward in unity. All of this is rooted in the most universal of principles: the Golden Rule. In this case we might say it's 'legislate unto others the way you would want legislated unto you.'

Starting with the vision, Baha'u'llah counseled: "The well-being of mankind, its peace and security, are unattainable unless and until its unity is firmly established." Unite around the vision, so that bigger goals -- our peace and security -- can be attained. But it's hard to unite when leaders are outright mean to each other. A recent Harvard study found that 27% of communication by members of Congress is done by taunting.

This approach allows room for disagreement. To reach unity authentically, divergent opinions are voiced, and actually encouraged. The Baha'i Writings counsel: "The shining spark of truth cometh forth only after the clash of differing opinions." Further, once a view is put forth to the group, it's no longer 'owned' by the person who expressed it, but by all involved in the consultation. The Top 10 South Park Episodes About Religion

Sacred Music Traditions Of The World (VIDEOS)

Dis[Locating] Culture: Contemporary

Behind the Scenes of 'In the Shadow of the Buddha'

HUFFPOST SOCIAL NEWS

FOLLOW US

MOST POPULAR ON HUFFPOST

1 of 2

Could This Email Cost Mark Zuckerberg 50% Of Facebook?

Recommend 1K

Kentucky Miner Finds 300-Million-Year-Old Fossil

Like 3K

Senate Republicans Threatening To Make Harry Reid And Dems Go It Alone On Raising Debt Ceiling

Like 1K

AOL Jobs: Undercover Boss David Kim Tries To Be Baja Fresh

Like 1K

1:15 PM

4/17/2011

In this era of profound political contention, I humbly submit this approach that's as actionable on the national stage as it is in making decisions at work or at home. And, like the Golden Rule, it's the Christian, or Muslim, or Jewish, or Buddhist, or Hindu, or Baha'i thing to do.

This Blogger's Books from

Growing Up Global:
Raising Children to Be At Home in the World
by Homa Sabet Tavangar

Follow Homa Sabet Tavangar on Twitter: www.twitter.com/growingupglobal

Related News On Huffington Post:

Senate Republicans Threatening To Make Harry Reid And Dems Go It Alone On Raising Debt Ceiling

AOL Jobs: Undercover Boss
David Kim Tries to Be Baja Fresh

AOL News: Dangerous Thunderstorms Roll Into the East and South Today

Better Than Advil?

A Simple Fix To Relationship Miscommunication

TV Squad: David Letterman Receives the Johnny Carson Award on 'The Comedy Awards' (VIDEO)

TV Squad: 'Dancing With the Stars' Week Four Performance Recap: Kirstie Alley Steals the Spotlight ... Again

DON'T MISS HUFFPOST BLOGGERS

Bill Gates

View All Favorites

FGlaysher 03:25 PM on 4/11/2011
222 Fans

"The Baha'i approach is profoundly spiritual while in harmony with the latest in management research: start with clarifying the overarching vision and purpose; allow, appreciate and truly listen to differences of opinion; and engage in honest discussion and decision-making for the sake of the greater good to move forward in unity. All of this is rooted in the most universal of principles: the Golden Rule."

That's what all fascists thinks and say while behaving the way the Wilmette Baha'is did by suing THREE other Baha'i denominations in the US Federal Courts from 2006 to late last year, 2010.

The 7th Circuit Court documents and Opinion are online for anyone who wants to read about the "actual" behavior of the "spiritual" religion Ms. Sabet imagines has something to teach the US Government. The US Government's Courts understand the Wilmette Baha'is very well

Opinion in case# 08-2306, Judge Sykes:
"When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church) [boldface added], the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed."
<http://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/fdocs/docs.fwx?caseno=08-2306&submit=showdkt&yr=08&num=2306>

No Golden Rule demonstrated by the supposed "Baha'i approach."

Reply Permalink | Share it

---

Abdul-Halim Vazquez 03:27 PM on 4/09/2011
9 Fans

If you really want the Congress to move towards something like the Bahai Consultation process you need to get away from the two party system. People are elected as members of one party or another because the voters want to nudge the country in a particular direction. But then the elected representatives risk losing their jobs if they don't stay faithful to the party line.

Reply Permalink | Share it

Opinion in case# 08-2306, Judge Sykes:

"When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church) [boldface added], the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed."

<https://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/fdocs/docs.fwx?caseno=08-2306&submit=showdkt&yr=08&num=2306>

Here's my response to Homa Sabet Tavangar's Huffington Post of In Unity Is Our Security: Baha'i Wisdom For Violent Times Posted January 10, 2011 | 08:33 PM (EST)

What is Homa Sabet Tavangar actually saying in this post? Carefully consider the reasoning she presents here regarding the murder of Pakistan's governor in the province of Punjab, Salman Taseer, and the shooting of U.S. Representative Gabrielle Giffords in Tucson, Arizona, with 6 others killed. The solution to such violence in her opinion, she implies, by asking,

"How many wake-up calls do we need before we rethink our commitment to bringing opposing viewpoints together for the common good, so that differences don't spur violence?"

That's her key sentence. She just slips that into a lot of other cuddly sounding lovey-dovey.

Note "rethinking," i.e., *changing* our thinking or belief that "bringing opposing viewpoints together for the common good" needs to be done; she's advocating no longer doing that. Another words, not have people who hold various opinions talking or debating together. Hold that thought. Notice the next implication, that "differences" produce, yes, produce violence. So, in her reasoning, or the reasoning she's using here, "differences" in opinions, when brought together inevitably bring about violence. Solution, apparently, everyone should think the way she does. Conveniently, her understanding or interpretation of the Baha'i found Baha'u'llah supplies the opinions everyone needs. Just accept her interpretation of them, and we'll have peace on earth.

How does the Baha'i Faith work in reality? Meaning, the *real* world? Fortunately, the Wilmette Baha'i organization has given the world a demonstration of how it would treat *differences* in opinion if it ever obtained the theocratic control its interpretation of Baha'u'llah's leads it to believe it should have. From 2006 through 2010, the Wilmette, Illinois organization sued in the US Federal Courts three other small Baha'i denominations, essentially seeking to destroy them.

The 7th Circuit Court of Appeals oral argument and Opinion are online for anyone who wants to listen to and read about the *actual* behavior of the Baha'i interpretation that Homa Sabet Tavangar presents in such glowing terms. The US Government's Courts understand the Wilmette Baha'is very well, since it rule THREE times against them:

Opinion in case# 08-2306, Judge Sykes:

"When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession-, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church) [boldface added], the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed."

<https://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/fdocs/docs.fwx?caseno=08-2306&submit=showdkt&yr=08&num=23>

Perhaps Homa Sabet Tavangar should consider her own advice and that of Baha'u'llah: "He taught that if religion causes tyranny, injustice or hostility, "the absence of religion would be preferable."

Historically speaking, suppressing religious freedom and conscience is a recipe for tyranny and violence, not peace and love, as the actual actions of the Baha'i organization clearly demonstrate. Anyone can further substantiate that for themselves bygoogling "Baha'i censorship."

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Abdul-Baha's Tablet of a Thousand Verses:

"In the religion of God, there is no practice of declaring believers to be morally corrupt (tafsiq) or of declaring them not believers (takfir), nor is debasing or showing contempt for others permitted."

Majmu' ih-'i Makatib, INBA Private Printing Volume 59 (Tehran: National Baha'i Archives, 1978; digitally reprinted, East Lansing, Mi.: H-Bahai, 2000), pp. 340. Tr. Juan Cole.

Outside observers should be especially careful and alert for...

Hikmat & Taqiyya (taqqiya, taqiya, taqiyyih), "wisdom," deception, dissimulation, key Baha'i concepts
*****

Baha'i Takfir, denunciation of people as infidels, apostates, non-believers, commonly known to Baha'is as "Shunning"
Essential Reading *******
See also the comments by a

"What among human endeavours can be nobler or more useful than the protection of human liberty?"
—John Milton

"The shining spark of truth cometh forth only after the clash of differing opinions." —Abdul-Baha

"The conscience of man is sacred and to be respected."
—Abdul-Baha

"Refuse to set up once again a sect similar to that of the Shi'is."
—Baha'u'llah

Newcomers > Essential Readings in Red

"Mr. Glaysher, in my view, is taking some positive steps to resolve some serious issues in the Baha'i community. Because there are seven million Haifa/Wilmette Baha'is does not make them right or genuine Baha'is. It simply means that they are a large organization. And I emphasize the word "organization." While it is the main source of teaching, it is also an organization that has hurt a lot of people with authoritarian actions, and it has put a damper on honest scholarship unless it agrees with its policies. It is the only religion I know that has a "protection committee" and that spies on alleged dissidents. What are you Baha'is (I assume you are Baha'i) afraid of? What do you need protection from? The Faith widely claims "oneness and unity." There is none. There have been conflicts since the Faith began. This is shameful for a Faith that boasts unity. Fact is, it is a "party line" religion where to be a good Baha'i is to go along and keep your mouth shut. I have loved the Faith, but with its conflicts, I've been tempted to chuck the whole thing. But I've not been able to do that because in spite of them, there is a glitter of truth in it. And believe me, that "truth" is not the organization, but it is in the Faith self. You can't organize or legislate a faith, and, certainly, Haifa/Wilmette does not own it (even though they think they do). The Faith needs a total overhaul. It has forgotten what the real Faith is." --Joel Bjorling, comment #4 (Dec 14, 2014) on The Universal Principles of the Reform Bahai Faith, A new view of the baha'i faith.

FG
Tiananmen
Square, 1994

N.B. Please rely on my own books and publications as representative of my views. Since at least 1996, I have been a critic of the fanaticism of the Baha'i Faith, a Scientology-like criminal cult, based on Iranian Shiite millennialism and a fraudulent will and testament, which is attempting to create a global theocracy by deceiving and brainwashing its unsuspecting members into a false version of

dozen people about
The Baha'i Technique - Slander &
Shunning
Essential Reading *******

[Baha'u'llah's
Passport Photos](#)

"The light of men is Justice.
Quench it not with the contrary winds of oppression and tyranny." —
Baha'u'llah

"According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." —
Abdul-Baha

Google Site Search Engine at Bottom of Page

If an off-site link fails to connect,
remove the "s" in "https://" to access it.

Bahai Forums Online

CAUTION Newcomers

Beliefnet.com Censored
Talk.Religion.Bahai
1997+
Topix - Baha'i Rift
Chicago Tribune Interfaith Forums,
Abdul-Baha's 1912
Authentic Covenant
*****
Soulpancake \*\*\*
Huffington Post
[Reform Bahai Faith
Forum](#)

Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, British Museum document expert, in 1930, judged the supposed 1921 will and testament of Abdul-Baha fraudulent:

"That is to say, the writing does not agree with the hypothesis that it was all written by one person.... A minute comparison of the authenticated writing [of Abdul-Baha] with the writing on every page of the alleged will....has failed to detect in any part of the will the characteristics of the writing of Abdul Baha."

FROM The Certified Copy of his Report at the Library of Congress:

"Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha." *******

Comments on Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell's Report

Ruth White, EXCERPTS Is The Bahai Organization the Enemy of the Bahai Religion? 1929. Discusses the unauthentic will of Abdul-Baha. The foremost forensic expert of the British Museum, Dr. C.
Ainsworth Mitchell, judged it a fraud in 1929. For further details, see Ruth White's Bahai Leads Out of the Labyrinth. New York : Universal Publishing, 1944.

Ruth White Collection Deposited with Library of Congress, 1930

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, EXCERPTS from Broken Silence: The Story of Today's Struggle for Religious Freedom, 1940 Lawsuit

Julie Chanler, EXCERPTS *From Gaslight to Dawn:
An Autobiography*. The New History Foundation, 1956.

U. S. Federal Courts Rule *Three Times* against Wilmette, Haifan Baha'is:
November 23, 2010 (2)

Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals rules against Haifan Baha'is of Wilmette, Illinois

Court Opinion as a PDF from this website.
[Related Newspaper Articles - Opinion of US 7th
Circuit Court of Appeals](#), Case No. 08-2306

Opinion, Judge Sykes, p 14-15: "Considered in light of these First Amendment limitations on the court's authority, certain aspects of the 1966 injunction are troubling. The decree declares that "there is only one Baha'i Faith," that Shoghi Effendi was its last Guardian and none has come since, and the National Spiritual Assembly was its history and then using them to carry out Baha'i jihads against dissenters and critics.

I've been stalked, harassed, and misrepresented,
on and offline,
by fanatical
Haifan Baha'is and Iranian Shiite and other Muslims for over a decade and a half, some of the latter frequently anti-semites, as well as possibly other religious fanatics, posting to the Internet false information and mashups intended to libel and discredit me.

By attempting to destroy all other
Baha'i
denominations through various methods characteristic of the worst in Islam, Haifan Baha'is think they can maintain their claim since 1921 that they alone constitute the Baha'i Faith. As Professor Juan Cole writes in his book *Modernity
and the Millennium*, Columbia University Press
(1998), the
Baha'i
administration has increasingly come under the

Compare Baha'i Tactics to

Communist Cadre or The Modern Inquisition of Catholicism

Links of Conscience

Dale Grider's Fireside Letters
Christian Critiques on Google
Ontario Consultants on Religious Tolerance
Juan Cole's Talisman Archives
H-Net H-Bahai Censored
Dialogue: A Bahai Magazine
Talisman9 Censored

Archives

Talk.Religion.Bahai
BahaiCensorship
Download this site!
150meg. Details
Google News Server
Bahai Faith
WayBackMachine

Bahai Censorship

CAUTION -- Non-bahais & Newcomers -- Psychological War Zone

Especially on Soc.Religion.Bahai
Dmoz & Google Directories
Wikipedia Censored by Baha'is BCCA, BahaiApologetics
Why I Don't Respond to Bahai Fundamentalists
4/2001

"If he exercises his anger and wrath against the bloodthirsty tyrants who are like ferocious beasts, it is very praiseworthy...." -- Abdul-Baha, SAQ, 215
Psalm 35

Baha'i Hate Mail, AOL, Etc

Hate Mail
AOL - bahai Censorship
Susan Maneck - Bahai Scholar

Ex-Bahais, Recovery &

its representative and "highest authority" in the United States and was "entitled to exclusive use of the marks and symbols of the Faith," including the exclusive use of the word "Bahá'í." Declarations of this sort push the boundaries of the court's authority under Kedroff and Presbyterian Church. In church property disputes (trademark suits obviously qualify), the First Amendment limits the sphere in which civil courts may operate. When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church), the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed" (boldface added).

December 7, 2010 (3) - Wilmette-Haifan Baha'i NSA Petitions for Rehearing to 7th Circuit Court of Appeals Denied by the Court on December 29, 2010

May 18, 2009. The Chicago Tribune Baha'i rift: Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith Comments posted to Chicago Tribune Forum.

February 20, 2009 - 3-minute Mp3 Recording - Oral Argument
7th Circuit Court of Appeals Judges hammer NSA's attorney
Judge Diane S. Sykes: "Clearly raises some Constitutional concerns"

April 23, 2008 (1) - Judge Amy St Eve, US District Court of Northern Illinois rules against Haifan Baha'i Lawsuit filed in 2006 against Orthodox Baha'is, other Denominations

March 8, 2007 + Reform Bahai Faith Amici Curiae Letters to Judge Amy St Eve

Blog > Baha'i Faith & 7th Circuit Court of Appeals

9 Bahai Denominations

"The Wilmette NSA remains a threat to the First Amendment unless it gives up its mania for squelching the religious freedoms of those who disagree with it. It is my hope and wish that the Wilmette NSA will finally realize that you cannot enforce unity with a court order. The NSA simply must tolerate the existence of other groups of Bahá'í at least in the United States or it runs the risk of forever ruining the name of the Faith making synonymous the word "Bahá'í" with an "enemy of freedom of speech and religion." -- Jeffery Goldberg, Lawyer. Personal Reflections on the Baha'i lawsuits in US Federal Courts 2006-2010. April 29, 2011

Baha'is in My Backyard - Full Interview of FG, October 18, 2004, by the Israeli Belfilms. 2.4 hours.

control of fundamentalists, "stressing scriptural literalism... theocracy, censorship, intellectual intolerance, and denying key democratic values" (196).

Question? Ask me at AllExperts.com

Desultory comments on Huffington Post

Reform Bahai Faith

ReformBahai.org
Speakers Corner, London, UK

FORUM:

Reform Bahai Faith Forum

Universal Religion, Jenabe Fazel
Mazandarani

"Check for yourselves: during the last ten, twenty or thirty years, has rational argument ever been used against any dissident? No, never, because no such arguments exist. They always reply with curses and slander. Such was the 'answer' to Sakharov. And just as empty was the 'answer' to Heinrich Boll..."
--Solzhenitsyn,

Support, Etc.

Ex-Bahais Explain Why...
How Cults Work.Com
Cult 101: Checklist
Cult Information Centre
** www.factnet.org
**

Religious Freedom, Liberty, Conscience

History of Inquisition in Spain, Juan Antonio Llorente
Pierre Bayle, Dictionnaire
Martin Luther, Concerning Christian Liberty
John Milton's Areopagitica
John Locke, A Letter Concerning Toleration
Roger Williams
John Winthrop - Liberty
Salem Village Witchcraft Victims' Memorial
William Penn - Conscience
Virginia Bill of Rights 1776
Jefferson's Statute for Religious Freedom
James Madison, Remonstrance
First Amendment Proclaim LIBERTY throughout all the Land unto all the Inhabitants thereof
Lev. XXV X
The Jesuits, Jules Michelet 1848
Freedom is a Light for which Many Men have Died in Darkness
Universal Declaration of Human Rights Article 18
Inter-Parliamentary Union
International Association for Religious Freedom
International Coalition for Religious Freedom
The Religious Freedom Page
Acton Institute
A HISTORY OF FREEDOM OF THOUGHT Amnesty International

DMOZ Bahai Directory

Search Bahai on Google

Given the US Federal Court decisions ruling three times against the Haifan Baha'i denomination in 2008 to 2010, I believe it is the right moment to make available this full interview for people researching the Bahai Faith.

Transcript of key passages regarding the "Fraud Shop," demonstrating the concern of Israelis about who is truly in control of the Baha'i Faith in Israel and where the vast sums of money are coming from for the massive construction projects on Mt Carmel, Haifa, Israel, which is to say, Shiia and/or perhaps Sunni fanatics whose antisemiticism is reflected in the ban on teaching the Baha'i Faith in Israel; Baha'u'llah's universal teachings coopted into a multi-generational form of Islamic dawah or call to become Muslim that Westerners especially fail to perceive and understand; ultimately furthering the goal of subjugation of non-Mulisms, around the world, into dhimmitude--which most emphatically was not Abdul-Baha's open and universal interpretation of Baha'u'llah's teachings for the modern world, highly analogous to the open, universal respect for all religions and viewpoints that has evolved in pluralistic democracies around the world, Abdul-Baha's "spiritual democracy."

Shunning > Essential Reading *******
The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning
Essential Reading *******
Steven Scholl - "Why I voluntarily left the religion" - Shunning of Family
Alison Marshall - "How the Baha'i administration behaves"
Individual Conscience": "A Dangerous Delusion from Christianity"9/23/2001 Doug Martin, uhj member

Professor Juan Cole Surveys Bahai Censorship

Richard P. Mitchell Collegiate Professor of History at the University of Michigan

Brief Quotations - Professor Juan Cole Menu - Selected Messages
Biography of Juan Cole on his blog (search keyword "Baha'i" ), for his criticism of "the secretive and duplicitous leadership," among other things.
"Counselor" Birkland Calls Cole in the Night 1996

"Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community" RSR 2002
"The Baha'i Faith in America as Panopticon, 1963-1997" JSSR 1998
"Abdul-Baha's 'Treatise on Leadership'" May, 1998 (separation of church & state)
"Race, Immorality and Money in the American Baha'i Community [LA]" Religion 2000
In "The Evolution of Charismatic Authority in the Baha'i Faith (1863-1921)," in Robert Gleave, ed., Religion and Society in Qajar Iran (London: RoutledgeCurzon, 2005), pp. 311-345. [Important article not available online.], Cole writes, "This tying of wealth to charisma was to be crucial for the fortunes of the religion" (314).

The Oak and the Calf

Expertise

As one of the people extensively harassed both on and offline, since as early as 1996, by fanatical Wilmette-Haifan Baha'is and Muslims, including being tracked, slandered, and misrepresented across the Internet, I bring a unique experience and perspective to all things Bahai. Since 1976 I've been a member of the Reform Bahai Faith, a universal, unorganized form of religion that respects the essential truths of all of the great religions and wisdom traditions. I have published in the Bahai journal World Order, and served in several Bahai communities throughout the United States. Having read extensively in the Bahai writings for over forty years and having had university coursework in Biblical and Islamic religious studies and theology, I can address issues of cultural, historical, and

Various Websites on the Bahai Faith

Essential Books

Reform Bahai Press

The Universal Principles of the Reform Bahai Faith. Hardcover and Kindle. ePub.

Baha'u'llah & Abdul-Baha. 148 pages. With a new Introduction and the original 1912 Foreword. Reform Bahai Press, 2008. 148 pages. The Universal Principles of the Reform Bahai Faith collects many of the early writings of Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha, published in the West, seeking to restore and preserve their vision of the oneness of God, humanity, and all religions.

Letters from the American Desert: Signposts of a

"Baha'ullah was committed to a separation of religion and state, and renounced any theocratic claims on the civil government by himself or his religion, saying, he only desired the hearts of men" (317). Speaking of Abdul-Baha, Cole states, "...His first major work to be published after Baha'u'llah's death, his Treatise on Leadership. There he explained that leadership is of two sorts, worldly and spiritual. Spiritual leaders 'have no relationship to corporeal concerns, affairs of political leadership, worldly matters'. He added, 'These latter souls have nothing to do with affairs of civil leadership, nor do they seek to interfere in them. Thus, in this most great cycle of the maturity and adulthood of the world, this matter has been put into the text of the divine Book as one might put lead into the structure of a building.' He was emphatic that the 'function of the religious leaders' is only to attend to spiritual matters, and that whenever such leaders have 'intervened in the world of political leadership it was has resulted in disaster" (323). Later Cole quotes Abdul-Baha teaching, "'In the religion of God, he asserted, 'there is no practice of declaring believers to be morally corrupt (tafsiq) or of declaring them not believers (takfir), nor is debasing or showing contempt for others permitted' (331, cf. 332-333 for more details on "shunning" )." "Baha'u'llah believed that true discourse (bayan) would always win out, and although he counselled against close association with the ungodly, he never developed a system of shunning" (333). "Once established, shunning became a tool for later leaders with implications far beyond the Muhammad Ali schism, and was used to control and manipulate adherents with regard to issues of personal conscience and even sometimes choice of place of residence! A suspicion of non-conformity, a demand for blind obedience [taqlid], and a concern with being constantly 'firm in the covenant' came to characterize important elements of the community over time" (333). "Still, Abdul-Baha continued to respect individual conscience and individual contributions that acknowledged his authority, and in his talks in the US he often spoke with fervent admiration of rights, liberty and parliamentary democracy" (339). "The dispute over the succession to Baha'ullah demonstrated the instability of the system of authority he created" (340). It can not be overemphasized that the role of the "Baha'i merchant clans" is insightfully discussed.

See Juan Cole on New Orthodoxy of Baha'i Faith 2005

Dr. Linda Walbridge, Obituary, 2002, by Juan Cole; Selection of her Talisman posts

"Reply of Juan Cole to Peter Khan Talk in New Zealand of June, 2000"

>>>Ratcheting further and further toward being similar to Scientology 1999.

>>>Juan Cole On Baha'i Takfir Declaring people infidels, apostates, non-believers.

Cole mentions on his blog that he was "forced out of the community in 1996 by spiritual importance to members of the unorganized Reform Bahai Faith and other interested people of various religious and secular outlook. I no longer address questions directly related to the several other Baha'i denominations. I will not dignify antisemitism with a response.

Experience

I'm especially able to discuss the role of Iranian Shiite "takfir" in Baha'i circles, the identification and denunciation of "infidels" and "apostates," having witnessed its fanatical, pernicious use against countless victims on and offline, in the USA and elsewhere. As a member of the Reform Bahai Faith, I have been intimately involved in the issues of free speech and conscience within the Bahai Faith since 1996, if not longer. Most American Baha'is are naively uninformed about these issues, if not deceived and brainwashed into a cult-like and mindless acceptance of a

Journey, A Vision.

Hardcover, Kindle, ePub.

Twenty years in the making, Glaysher reflects on the cultural, political, and religious history of Western and non-Western civilizations, pondering the dilemmas of postmodernity, in a compelling struggle for spiritual knowledge and truth. In what is a highly autobiographical work, fully cognizant of the relativism and nihilism of modern life, Glaysher finds a deeper meaning and purpose in the universal Vision of Baha'u'llah, as expressed in the Reform Bahai Faith.

Confronting the antinomies of the soul, grounded in the dialectic, Glaysher charts a path beyond the postmodern desert. Alluding extensively to Martin Luther and W. B. Yeats at All Souls Chapel, "metaphors for poetry," from Yeats's book A Vision, Glaysher invites Reform Bahais and others to consider the fundamentalist elements in the leadership, who try to impose censorship and conformity on vocal intellectuals.... The more fundamentalist side of the religion is usually hidden from outsiders and new believers, and is probably more pronounced in the US than in the UK anyway."

"A weird Baha'i sub-cult has arisen. It structurally resembles al-Qaida." Juan Cole 2002

What the Haifan Baha'i Faith shares with Scientology, (but from Iranian Shiism):

"THE basic core belief in Scientology that is cult-like and dangerous:

Scientologists believe that Scientology is vital to themselves, mankind and the universe and its success, here on earth, right now, is more important than ANYTHING."

"...Scientology's extreme polycys on its importance makes it vilify its critics to the point that it figuratively blinds its members. ANY complaints, no matter how legitimate, are seen as "attacks" in the eyes of its members."

"...Naysayers are officially labeled a "Suppressive Person" or "SP" for short. ["covenant breaker," "apostate," in Baha'i.] They are not to be associated with and members who are connected to them are threatened with the same label unless they agree to disconnect from them. This has destroyed many, many families." [and in Baha'i, where husbands and wives are forced to divorce their spouse or they will be considered a "covenant breaker."] More on Scientology...

Abdul-Baha - Select Quotations

"These are effectual and sufficient proofs that the conscience of man is sacred and to be respected; and that liberty thereof produces widening of ideas, amendment of morals, improvement of conduct, disclosure of the secrets of creation, and manifestation of the hidden verities of the contingent world. Moreover, if interrogation of conscience, which is one of the private possessions of the heart and the soul, take place in this world, what further recompense remains for man in the court of divine justice at the day of general resurrection? Convictions and ideas are within the scope of the comprehension of the King of kings, not of kings; and soul and conscience are between the fingers of control of the Lord of hearts, not of [His] servants. So in the world of existence two persons unanimous in all grades [of thought] and all beliefs cannot be found." —Abdul-Baha, A Traveler's Narrative, 91.

"This is a goodly temple and congregation, for--praise be to God!--this is a house of worship [Central Congregational Church in Brooklyn on 16 distorted version of its history, "taqlid," which Baha'u'llah had explicitly "Removed from the Book."

Publications

I am also the editor or author of two books on the Bahai teachings. The Universal Principles of the Reform Bahai Faith. Baha'u'llah & Abdu'l-Baha. With a new Introduction and the original 1912 Foreword.

Hardcover: ISBN: 9780967042138
148 pages.
Reform Bahai Press, 2008.
Letters from the American Desert: Signposts of a Journey, A Vision. ISBN: 9780967042114.

Preface. 172 pages. 2008.
Glaysher finds a deeper meaning and purpose for the individual and the world community in the writings and global vision of Baha'u'llah, as expressed in the Reform Bahai Faith. Glaysher invites readers to consider the implications of the universal, moderate form of the Bahai Teachings as interpreted by Abdu'l-Baha, Baha'u'llah's son, who had spoken throughout the example of the global, universal, moderate form of the Bahai Teachings as interpreted by Abdul-Baha, Baha'u'llah's son, who had spoken throughout the West in Europe, England, and the United States from 1911 to 1913. Abdul-Baha's message of the oneness of God, all religions, and humankind holds out a new hope and peaceful Vision for a world in spiritual and global crisis. Far from a theocracy, the Reform Bahai Faith envisions a modest separation of church and state, as the will of God, in an unorganized religion, a universal synthesis of all spiritual and wisdom traditions, in harmony and balance with universal peace, in a global age of pluralism, where religious belief is a distinctive mark of the individual, not collective, communal identity.

Religion News Service By IRA RIFKIN, 1997.

June 1912] wherein conscientious opinion has free sway. Every religion and every religious aspiration may be freely voiced and expressed here. Just as in the world of politics there is need for free thought, likewise in the world of religion there should be the right of unrestricted individual belief. Consider what a vast difference exists between modern democracy and the old forms of despotism. Under an autocratic government the opinions of men are not free, and development is stifled, whereas in a democracy, because thought and speech are not restricted, the greatest progress is witnessed. It is likewise true in the world of religion. When freedom of conscience, liberty of thought and right of speech prevail--that is to say, when every man according to his own idealization may give expression to his beliefs--development and growth are inevitable. Therefore, this is a blessed church because its pulpit is open to every religion, the ideals of which may be set forth with openness and freedom." —Abdul-Baha, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, 197.

Baha'i Harassment and Persecution of Other Bahais

LA Study Class and origins of conflict \(1970\)

2/4/2001 Karen Bacquet

LA Study Class Documents and Newsletter 1976-83

Censorship of Salmani's Memoirs by the Baha'i Authorities re Kalimat Press 1982

"A Modest Proposal" 1987 David Langness
****

"The Service of Women" 1988 Several authors
Abbas Amanat, Resurrection and Renewal, 1989.
Denis MacEoin, Crisis in Babi and Baha'i Studies Bulletin, (British Society for Middle Eastern Studies), Vol. 17, No. 1 (1990), pp. 55-61.
Denis MacEoin, A Few Words in Response to Cole's 'Reply to MacEoin.' British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies, Vol. 18, No. 1 (1991), pp. 86-87.

[\[Bahai\] "Psychiatrist cuts deal on sex assault charges"](#) 4/94 re Dr. Danesh

The Majnun Post 2/7/96 (On talisman) John Walbridge

The Pickering Tape 4/96

"Crisis of Faith" 5/15/96 Steven Scholl ****
Letter: Stephen Birkland, Continental Board of Counsellors 7/16/96

"Baha'i Leaders Vexed by On-Line Critics" Winter 1997 K. Paul Johnson

The suppression of Dialogue Magazine 1997 Steven Scholl

"Critics chafe at Baha'i conservatism" IRA RIFKIN 2/27/1997, Religion News Service
Mark Towfig's NO Vote Campaign on BCCA mailing lists 3/12/97

uhj expulsion of Michael McKenny from the Bahai faith 7/97 Michael McKenny

BCCA Collusion Suppressing talk.religion.bahai Fall 1997

West in Europe, England, and the United States from 1911 to 1913. Abdul-Baha's message of the oneness of God, all religions, and humankind holds out a new hope and vision for a world in spiritual and global crisis. Far from a theocracy, the Reform Bahai Faith envisions a separation of church and state as the will of God, in harmony and balance with universal peace, in a global age of permanent pluralism, in a world of multiplicity, where religion is a reflection of individual distinctiveness, not of communal identity.

Education

MA, University of Michigan, English, 1981
BGS, University of Michigan, English, Biblical Studies, Islam, 1980
Illinois State University, All But Dissertation, English, Rhetoric. 1983- 1986. Ten years teaching, at the university and college level, English, Rhetoric, American literature, non-Western literature, World Religions, and other courses.

"Critics chafe at Baha'i conservatism."
 "According to the critics, the National Spiritual Assembly (NSA), which oversees the American Baha'i movement, is dominated by a tight-knit group of authoritarian officials who keep the lid on free expression by threatening dissidents with excommunication and by manipulating the process by which NSA members are elected."

The Chicago Tribune, May 18, 2009. "Baha'i rift: Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith."
 "[Haifan Baha'is] contend that...the Orthodox Baha'i Faith can't call themselves Baha'i or use one of its key symbols without violating trademark law.... ...the case could set a precedent for settling religious schisms, doctrinal disputes and claims to truth."

The Chicago Tribune, November 23, 2010. "Judge: Baha'i believers can call

Susan Maneck's NO Vote Campaign on AOL 12/7/98
Ex-Bahai - NSA warns Australian Bahais 11/4/97 Nima Hazini
Baha'i Encyclopedia hijacked by Farzam Arbab 2/17/1999
To LSA of Arlington, Massachusetts March 21, 1999 Jenifer Tidwell
Dismissal of NSA Member Judge James F. Nelson... April 1999 Juan Cole
Full Text of UHJ's Letter of April 7, 1999
"Commentary" on UHJ's "outburst of vehement ignorance" 6//6/99 Juan Cole
My case - a letter to my friends 7/28/99 Terry Culhane
uhj to Anthony A. Lee, editor of Kalimat Press re Cole's book Cf Cole below 8/99
Juan Cole Responds to the uhj's Backbiting Campaign Cf Kalimat above 8/99
Brief History of Douglas Martin, member, uhj 1/31/2000 Juan Cole
How "Review" acts as Censorship 3/28/2000 Alison Marshall re Bahai World
"Removed your Name from Membership Rolls" 3/29/2000 Alison Marshall
My experience as a member of the Baha'i Faith 2001 Dennis named deleted
New Mexico LAWSUIT against bahai institutions for FRAUD & LIBEL 3/2/2001 Deborah Buchhorn
New Mexico LAWSUIT - Response to Motion to Dismiss 5/2001 Yorgos D. Marinakis, Attorney
New Mexico LAWSUIT - Attorney's Statement 5/26/2001 Yorgos D. Marinakis, Attorney
New Mexico LAWSUIT - Amicus Curiae 7/13/2001
"Enemies Within: Conflict and Control in the Baha'i Community" 2001 Karen Bacquet Cultic Studies Journal
Denis MacEoin Reviews Making the Crooked Straight H-Bahai, 2001
Review of i baha'i by Margit Warburg. Turin, Italy, 2001. Daniela Pinna bahai faith & its Influence on the United Nations 5/2002
Hoda Mahmoudi's program on the Iranian TV Network (NITV) Nima Hazini 8/30/2002+
Obituary for Linda Walbridge by Juan Cole 12/10/2002
EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith > Bahai in Politics
Talisman9 "Moderator" Steve Marshall - "Baby Torturer" summer 2004
Bahai institutions DRIVING people out - Maneck's "get over it" - i.e., injustice of uhj 9/17/03; 12/2005
False Membership Statistics for US Baha'i community, India, & elsewhere
BANK FRAUD: Baha'i technique of loan application, false, inflated statistics to qualify for loans 5/2005
BCCA (Bahai Computer and Communication Association) long history of censoring Baha'is on the Internet
The Baha'i Cadre System, EXCERPTS Randy Burns 2005
The Modern Inquisition: Seven Prominent

Awards and Honors

A Fulbright-Hays scholar to China in 1994, I studied at Beijing University, the Buddhist Mogao Caves on the old Silk Road, and elsewhere in China, including Hong Kong and the Academia Sinica in Taiwan. While a National Endowment for the Humanities scholar in 1995 on India, I further explored the conflicts between the traditional regional civilizations of Islamic and Hindu cultures and modernity. I have been an outspoken advocate of the United Nations, an accredited participant at the UN Millennium Forum (2000), and attended the UNA Members Day 2012 on the Millennium Development Goals, held in the General Assembly Hall.

Cultural Context

John Milton, Paradise Lost, Book XII

Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves,
 Who all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
 To their own vile advantages shall turn Of lucre and ambition;
 and the truth
 With superstitions and themselves Baha'i." "...the judges criticized the ruling from more than four decades ago as wrongfully trying to resolve a question of religious authority...."

The Chicago Tribune, November 25, 2010. "Federal appeals court rules in favor of splinter Baha'i group."

"Adherents of the Orthodox Baha'i Faith...believe the mainstream Baha'i Faith...has strayed from the religion's original teachings."

"We're the true faith. That's what we would say," [lawyer Goldberg]. "That has to be decided in the hearts and minds of the Baha'i, not by a secular court order."

Early Reform Bahais

"Censorship is not wanted anywhere, especially in the Bahai Cause; and if we allow it to retain the upper hand in the great movement that has been entrusted to us, we will set ourselves up before the world and in the face of history as false trustees, and as men and women unworthy and unfit to call ourselves Bahais." —Mirza

Catholics and their Struggles with the Vatican.

2000. Australian former priest Paul Collins.

Kalimat Press Petition 2006

Professor Dann May, Phyllis E Bernard Please leave us alone. 2006

Why I Left.... 2-16-07

Susan Maneck - The Video: Shiite Ideology of Baha'i Fanaticism 2007

An environment of intellectual repression

September 10, 2007

Lessons for Christians in the history of the Bahai faith. Adrian Worsfold. Episcopal Café. 2008

A Response to Moojan Momen's Takfir & Slanderous Vilification FG. Religion 38 No 4 2008.

Challenging apostasy: Responses to Moojan Momen's 'Marginality and Apostasy in the Baha'i Community' Original Online FG, et al.

Wikipedia Entry > Baha'i Censorship May 21, 2010

FG | universal house of justice

To the UHJ - March 31, 1997
Essential Reading

"Please remove my name and address from your mailing list." 1996

Antinomies 1996 - 2000

Open Petition for Bahai Reformation 2/ 8/ 2001

A Bahai in \*Perfectly\* Good Standing 11/2001

Letter to the Editor - O&E Newspapers MODEL

News Release 3/7/2002 circ. 120,000

uhj message to Iranian baha'is Day of the Covenant 11/26/03

Letter to a Baha'i Scholar 2-14-04

The Old Lie

Scapegoat

Straw Man 9/14/06

William Garlington. The Bahai Faith in America. Praeger. 2005. Review.

Sen McGlinn & FG - A 1996 Conversation, Censored....

Sen McGlinn, Church and State. Leiden, 2005. Review.

Letters from the American Desert: Signposts of a Journey, A Vision 2008

Abdul-Baha's Fraudulent will and testament 2007 *****

Reposts

Other Reposts

traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure,
Though not but by the Spirit understood.
Then shall they seek to avail themselves of names,
Places, and titles, and with these to join Secular power; though feigning still to act
By spiritual, to themselves appropriating
The Spirit of God, promised alike and given
To all believers; and, from that pretence,
Spiritual laws by carnal power shall force
On every conscience; laws which none shall find Left them inrolled, or what the Spirit within Shall on the heart engrave. What will they then
But force the Spirit of Grace itself, and bind
His consort Liberty? what, but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand,
Their own faith, not another's? for, on earth,
Who against faith and conscience can be heard Infallible? yet many will presume:
Whence heavy persecution shall arise
On all, who in the worship persevere
Of spirit and truth; the rest, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and specious forms
Religion satisfied; Truth shall retire
Bestuck with slanderous darts, and works of faith Rarely be found: So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign;
Under her own weight groaning....

"Almighty God hath created the mind free.
All attempts to influence it by temporal punishments or burthens . . . are a departure from the plan of the holy author of our religion . . . No man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship or ministry or shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief, but all men shall be free to profess and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion." — Thomas Jefferson

"Few things have done more harm than the belief on the part of

Ahmad Sohrab.
Broken Silence.
The Story of Today's Struggle for Religious Freedom. New York:
Universal Publishing,
1942 (399).
EXCERPTS

Ruth White,
EXCERPTS The Bahai Organization
the Enemy of the Bahai Religion?
1929.

"A minute comparison of the authenticated writing [of Abdul-Baha] with the writing on every page of the alleged will....has failed to detect in any part of the will the characteristics of the writing of Abdul Baha" (Dr. C.
Ainsworth Mitchell
quoted in White's Bahai Leads Out of the Labyrinth. 259.
New York :
Universal
Publishing Co.,
1944). Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930

Hermann Zimmer, [A FRAUDULENT TESTAMENT Devalues
the Bahai Religion Into Political Shoghim.](#) 1973. Pdf

"Other Muslim sects in the Arab world include Sufi, Alawi, Wahabi, and Baha'i." --Arab American Museum, Dearborn, Michigan.
February 13, 2016. From the exhibit, "Three Monotheistic Religions."

Talk.Religion.Bahai - Finally Passed on 3rd Vote Jan. 1999 - 218: 63

[Talk.Religion.Bahai > MENU - Passed Jan 10
1999 - All Related Documents - FAQ alt.religion.bahai & talk.religion.bahai FAQ \(Frequently Asked Questions\)
soc.religion.bahai - Brief Quotations
How to Access \[talk.religion.bahai\]\(#\) &
\[alt.religion.bahai\]\(#\)](#)

Disclaimer: Given Abdul-Baha's respect for the individual's conscience and the frequent lack of it in everyday Bahai life, I must emphasize all ideas and opinions belong to their authors and do not necessarily reflect my views. And given the difficulty of authenticating identity on the Internet, I caution the reader that it is possible that people of ill-will of various opinion, whether Sunni or Shia Muslims and others, opposed to the Bahai teachings, however interpreted, might misrepresent themselves. It is left up to the individual here to make such judgements for him or herself.

Looking for something? Use the Google custom search engine below for this website.

Loading

individuals or groups (or tribes or states or nations or churches) that he or she or they are in sole possession of the truth: especially about how to live, what to be & do-& that those who differ from them are not merely mistaken, but wicked or mad: & need restraining or suppressing. It is a terrible and dangerous arrogance to believe that you alone are right: have a magical eye which sees the truth: & that others cannot be right if they disagree. ...the first people totalitarians destroy or silence are men of ideas & free minds." —Isaiah Berlin

"I, too, had to face the savage personal attacks by my former comrades that were designed to warn others to remain within the fold." —David Horowitz, Radical Son

"The right to search for truth implies also a duty: one must not conceal any part of what one has recognized to be true." —Albert Einstein"

"Unmeasured vituperation employed on the side of the prevailing opinion really does deter people from professing contrary opinions and from listening to those who profess them." —John Stuart Mill, On Liberty (51-52).

"Just and moderate governments are everywhere quiet, everywhere safe; but oppression raises ferments and makes men struggle to cast off an uneasy and tyrannical yoke." —John Locke

"In the past Americans have always been dissenters. Americans have never submitted for long to injustice." —Robert Hayden, interview in World Order, reprinted in Collected Prose, edited by FG. University of Michigan Press, 1984 (85).

"Men never do evil so completely and cheerfully as when they do it from religious conviction."
—Pascal, Penses #894.

"When a mass movement begins to attract people who are interested in their individual careers, it is a sign that it has passed its vigorous stage; that it is no longer engaged in molding a new world but in possessing and preserving the present. It ceases then to be a movement and becomes an enterprise."
—Eric Hoffer, The True Believer

"Foul deeds will rise, Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes." —Hamlet

87,157 on 9/15/2008 Counts homepage only (260,000 + yearly hits) Last Updated July 6, 2017 Site Map 600+ pages. OrdinarySiteMap 150+ megabytes. Bookmark this site!
Created and maintained since May 8, 1998 by FG. Contact Dedicated to the restoration of Abdul-Baha's respect for free speech and conscience.

CONTACT ME HERE with Baha'i related questions >>>
https://en.allexperts.com/q/Bah-2728/indexExp\_113873.htm

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Interfaith Forum Bahai UK

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Interfaith\_Forums\_UK.html

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/bahai.html>

For further discussion of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant, see

Questions from Soulpancake Baha'i discussion forum

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/soulpancake\_bahai.html

To access any off-site link on this page, remove in your browser address the "s" in "https"

Although claiming to be an Interfaith Forum, the UK site demonstrated it was not capable of resisting the manipulation of Haifan Baha'is and possibly fanatical Muslims. Attempts to discuss the Reform Bahai Faith and Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant proved unacceptable, especially to Haifan Baha'is. Three discussion threads were "closed":

The Fraudulent Will and Testament, Covenant

Ruth White

09-19-2011 04:05 AM

by bob x

Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant ( 1 2 3)

Ruth White

09-27-2011 04:19 PM

by I, Brian

Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

Ruth White

09-18-2011 02:48 PM

by I, Brian

My posts are copied and pasted below. I was given no warning, nor the courtesy of a chance to respond, especially to the final messages, essentially parting shots, of other participants, which were allowed to caricature me. It should be noted that perhaps quoting Professor Juan Cole on the fanaticism of Haifan Baha'is proved too much for the "moderators."

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252317-post29.html>

Bob,

With all friendliness, you're the one not listening, nor reading what's presented to you. If you don't want to make the effort, that's fine, but it leaves one at the mercy of Haifan disinformation.

"...back-biting and suspicion." My speculation would be, once one forges a will for one's own benefit, all that left as a defense is to slander Ruth White and the 1600 plus other people who objected and left, as a "besotted woman," "notorious covenant-breakers."

Incidentally, according to "I, Brian," <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251840-post14.html> "...please note this is an interfaith forum.... This is not about making judgements about specific faiths, trying to extoll one over another, and especially not about trying to diminish any specific faith here."

So my question to you and him is why is he, "I, Brian," you, and others, silent when Lunitik and others have used basically the Iranian Shiite tactics of practicing Islamic "takfir," labeling people "kafir" or infidels, and issuing fatwas, denying the very existence of other Bahais and denominations, all indicative of the worst in the Shiite Islamic heritage of the Baha'i Faith—practices Baha'u'llah specifically repudiated, teaching tolerance of different religious views, largely congruent with modern Western custom. Nothing could be more diametrically opposed to the modern democracy of Western civic and legal order than the jihad the Haifan Baha'is are conducting.

In terms of government, see Abdu'l-Baha's suppressed 'Treatise on Leadership' translated by Juan Cole at Treatise on Leadership (Suppressed, like Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant, because it contains a vision of the Baha'i Cause utterly different from the theocracy of Shoghi Effendi's clique.)

The "covenant breaker" mentality is clearly exhibited in the following link on Interfaith, which Wil had noticed and remarked on at <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250807-post71.html> - ...namely Covenant Breaker website? It's been used in this thread.

Juan Cole, a professor at the University of Michigan, who was driven out of the Haifan Baha'i Faith by its heresy hunters, explains what's involved with the witch hunts quite well:

"Right wing Baha'is only like to hear the sound of their own voices (which are the only voices they will admit to being "Baha'i" at all).

Obviously, the world is so constructed that they cannot in fact only hear their own voices. They are forced to hear other voices that differ from theirs. This most disturbs them when the voices come from enrolled Baha'is or when the voices speak of the Baha'i faith.

The way they sometimes deal with the enrolled Baha'is is to summon them to a heresy inquiry and threaten them with being shunned if they do not fall silent.

With non-Baha'is or with ex-Baha'is, they deal with their speech about the faith by backbiting, slandering and libelling the speaker. You will note that since I've been on this list I have been accused of long-term heresy, of "claiming authority," of out and out lying (though that was retracted, twice), of misrepresentation, of 'playing fast and loose with the facts,' and even of being 'delusional.' I have been accused of all these falsehoods by *Baha'is*, by prominent Baha'is. I have been backbitten by them.

This shows that all the talk about the danger a sharp tongue can do, all the talk about the need for harmony, for returning poison with honey, for a sin-covering eye, is just *talk* among right wing Baha'is. No one fights dirtier than they when they discover a voice they cannot silence and cannot refute."

Re: Baha'i backbiting 2/23/99

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252277-post27.html>

Sen McGlinn's not credible for reasons I have explained elsewhere:

Review of Church and State: A Postmodern Political Theology. Sen McGlinn. University of Leiden, 2005.

The Globe Blog Archive Church and State. Sen McGlinn.

and

Sen McGlinn & FG - A 1996 Conversation, Censored....

Sen McGlinn & FG - A 1996 Conversation, Censored...

As in the past, none of his arguments in the cited passage holds water. Like the Haifan Baha'is after the false will and testament was supposedly pieced together, conveniently "hidden underground," the Covenant, throughout the Star of the West and all early Bahai publications, does not refer to the bogus document, but the publicly delivered, repeatedly published, Address Upon the Covenant of 1912, which is emphatically not an "announcement" of the fraudulent will, an anachronistic subterfuge if there ever was one.

Hearsay and falsehood have long been the Haifan Baha'i way of "proving" its specious creed, while avoiding at all costs an independently probating and authentication of it, since it can't be done, then or now.

They have every civic and religious right to follow and worship it, if they wish; there is no reason why other Bahais must, who can use the independent investigation of truth that Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha guaranteed them.

Abdul-Baha's Interpretation of Baha'u'llah's Teachings is a broad, open, loving Covenant of God with humanity, and it is articulated in simple language, in his 1912 Address Upon the Covenant. It is universal, moderate, predicated on pluralistic spiritual democracy, based on a separation of church and state, not tyranny, and emphasizes the universality, the non-creedal and non-exclusivism of religious truth.

Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252259-post25.html>

You really don't understand the history of the supposed "trademark" of the generic word Bahai. Ruth White and Ahmad Sohrab's books cover it in detail. And the US Federal Courts brought it up to date when they ruled, Opinion, Judge Sykes, p 14-15: "Considered in light of these First Amendment limitations on the court's authority, certain aspects of the 1966 injunction are troubling. The decree declares that "there is only one Baha'i Faith," that Shoghi Effendi was its last Guardian and none has come since, and the National Spiritual Assembly was its representative and "highest authority" in the United States and was "entitled to exclusive use of the marks and symbols of the Faith," including the exclusive use of the word "Bahá'í." Declarations of this sort push the boundaries of the court's authority under Kedroff and Presbyterian Church. In church property disputes (trademark suits obviously qualify), the First Amendment limits the sphere in which civil courts may operate. When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church), the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed" (boldface added).

List of Documents in case

Your arguments are those of the Haifans. I suggest you do more homework since your sources "stink"; enough that you don't merely repeat the opinions the Haifans regularly feed the uninformed.

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252239-post22.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by Lunitik  View Post

Reform Baha'is are part of how Baha'u'llah's covenant has been broken, but you are too much concentrated on the issue with UHJ.

I respect your right to your own opinions and have striven not to say anything that might offend you, while being true to my conscience, study, and reflection.

How ironic that it's actually what many consider to be the UHJ that has broken Baha'u'llah's covenant, along with its followers, most of whom do not even have a clue about the actual history and teachings of Abdul-Baha prior to his death.

I invite you to seek truth, independently, as Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha taught. Consider, it is only after Abdul-Baha's death that that teachings was reversed...

Jenabe Fazel Mazandarani. Universal Religion
Jenabe Fazel Mazandarani, Universal Religion

---

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252218-post20.html>

You repeat the usual reasoning and arguments of the Haifan Baha'is, but add nothing new. Much of your comments reflect the Shiite structure of thinking that Shoghi Effendi dragged back into the teachings despite Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha's repudiation of such ideas.

I invite you to read Abdul-Baha's actual covenant of 1912 and ponder its implications:

Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

---

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252174-post18.html>

Lunitik,

I respect your conscience and feel for you and your experience, with love and compassion.

I've read many Sufi books, recently and through the years. With all respect, Baha'u'llah's teachings are deeper and more profound than those from a Sufi pir. His claim is that of a Manifestation of God... His appointment of his son Abdul-Baha as the Interpreter of his teachings gave the Master a special station and ability to bring his father's teachings into the modern world.

Although other Bahai denominations have done what human beings always have with the Divine Light, subjugated it to a political power symbol, as Arnold Toynbee and others have so rightly pointed out, as Baha'u'llah did in The Tablet of the Holy Mariner, the Master's authoritative vision of the Bahai Cause remains, renewed in the teachings of the Reform Bahai Faith.

I invite you to investigate it at

About the Reform Bahai Faith
About the Reform Bahai Faith

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252161-post16.html>

---

Incidentally, Bob, since you bring up the Orthodox Baha'is and so forth, you might want to read the following article from The Chicago Tribune:

Federal appeals court rules in favor of splinter Baha'i group
November 25, 2010 8:12 PM

Federal appeals court rules in favor of splinter Baha'i group - Chicago Breaking News

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252158-post15.html>

---

Bob,

After you finish that stage of your reading and research, please read my books:

"The Universal Principles of the Reform Bahai Faith" Reform Bahai Press, 2008. 148 pages. Kindle, ePub. 2008.

Reform Bahai Press

"Letters from the American Desert." Kindle, ePub. 2008.

Reform Bahai Press

You might even start with "Letters from the American Desert." I recommend the ebook edition, ePub or Kindle.

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252145-post13.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by bob x  View Post

I am reminded of my discussions with Thomas about the evolution from the disciples of Jesus to the Catholic/Orthodox Church....

I respect your observation about the Catholic/Orthodox Church, and I agree fully with you.

Are you rummaging "around the Internet" on Wikipedia? It's a completely controlled and distorted source of information on Baha'i, as are the majority of books published by the Wilmette Baha'i publishing company.

It's possible that the UU "Unitarian Baha'is" are a bogus group. There are people supposedly involved with them who have definitely been false identities in the past. I leave it up to you to assess them at your own risk. I have never seen any corroborating evidence that the "UU Baha'is" are actually accepted or sponsored by the Unitarian Universalists.

The "unenrolled" appear credible, usually. I don't believe, though, that they're very intellectually astute, nor consistent, indeed, in my opinion, naive, for many seem to think they're going to change the Haifan denomination, which is entirely corrupt by its wielding power for decades over its little kingdom of blind followers.

I mentioned earlier here on Interfaith that Abdul-Baha had used the term the "Universal House of Justice" for as long as a decade prior to his death in 1921, as did the early Bahais in the US and Canada. My memory had failed, then, Baha'u'llah himself had used it, too, in his Kitáb-i-Aqdas, Book of Laws, basically Bahai Shariah, from which he has "removed from the Book" all of the negative things about Islam, jihad, burning books, infidels, etc.

In my opinion, Baha'is of other denominations have every right to establish their own Universal House of Justice. While I do not personally find the claims of BUPC persuasive, they are my fellow American citizens and Bahai brothers and sisters. I have exchanged views with a few of them in the past, and all were cordial. The US Federal Courts were right in protecting their and other Bahais' rights. I invite you to consider that the fact that it was necessary for the Federal courts to do so might be worth reflecting on and speaks volumes, as the phrase has it, about the denomination that filed the lawsuit.

Being well known is not proof of anything, nor is having the most Bahai members indicative of anything whatsoever, let alone the truth. Religious history is replete with many examples, many of which apply in the current Bahai context. The argument you advance was the Haifan Baha'i argument that was wisely repudiated by the Federal Courts, *three* times.

You cite a lot of hearsay off the Internet, and speculation, but it's quite probable that much of it is Haifan disinformation. I encourage you to speak directly with members of the Baha'i denominations concerned, if you're genuinely interested and a person of goodwill.

The US Federal Courts have ruled repeatedly upholding the First Amendment against the Shiite fascists and criminals who deceive and brainwash people into believing in their false will and testament and seek to destroy other Bahai denominations and individuals, through the courts, online, and in other ways, like the Scientologists.

List of Documents in case

You've completely misjudged me. I suggest reading the 150 megabytes of documentation on my Bahai Censorship site:

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

After doing that, read the 400 megabytes of books and information on the Reform Bahai Faith
Reform Bahai Faith

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252125-post11.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by BruceDLimber  View Post
Precisely!

And as 'Abdu'l-Baha and Shoghi Effendi have asserted, the Baha'i Faith itself will survive and endure, while these other groups not only keep splitting but keep going extinct!

Most of the remaining groups--other than the Baha'i Faith itself--number only a very few people--hundreds at most, compared with seven million Baha'is! Further, some of those groups may in fact be comprised solely of one or two very vocal individuals who are very good at promoting themselves on the Internet while in fact having no "following" whatever!

Precisely why Baha'is feel they can largely be ignored.

And the claims of the ORIGINAL Ruth White and her ilk were thoroughly refuted in an 850-page book titled Making the Crooked Straight which you may be able to read yourself if you ask around among the Baha'is.

Regards, :-)

Bruce

I'm not sure Bruce is being *positive* here. Anyone else notice it? It's okay, though, it doesn't bother me. I respect his conscience. He has a right to it, one which I defend, as we all should.

The seven million number is highly inflated, as suggested above, for instance in the case of India and elsewhere. See False Statistics for Baha'i Membership in the USA, India, & Elsewhere (updated August 2010)

False Statistics for Baha'i Membership in the USA, India, & Elsewhere

Slandering the smaller Bahai denominations haven't made them go away after 80 years for very good reasons. The Haifans don't have the truth. Deceived and brainwashed believers, of any denomination, Eric Hoffer's "true believers," don't change a thing.

Again, as I cited here elsewhere, Denis MacEoin, an outstanding British scholar and man of integrity, demolishes Udo Schaefer's Making the Crooked Straight at Denis MacEoin Reviews Making the Crooked Straight H-Bahai, 2001

I do agree with the notion that Abdul-Baha asserted that the Bahai Cause would "survive and endure." In that regard, Baha'u'llah too emphasized symbolically that after a schism his Faith would endure, in The Tablet of the Holy Mariner, <https://www.omphaloskepsis.com/ebooks/pdf/mariner.pdf>

Compare the repeatedly published and emphasized 1912 Covenant with these three crucial statements by Abdul-Baha published prior to his death in the Star of the West November 23, 1920, p 243:

"In New York City, July, 1912, Abdul-Baha said to several believers: 'Any one quoting me must have authority written either with my own hand, or Tablets signed with my seal. Otherwise these statements do not belong to me. Every instruction, every teaching that I desire to spread I will write with my own hand. You must know this generally. Never accept any statement without my writing which is signed and sealed--any statement."

"In Egypt, in August, 1913, Abdul-Baha stated (Mirza Ahmad Sohrab interpreting): 'When in America I repeatedly said that no one must believe one word said by another regarding any commands, teachings or statements made by me unless they can produce the same in writing over my signature.'"

"That which has come forth from the Center of the Covenant you must take fast hold of. That which issues from my lips and that which is written with my pen is the Reality. With this you can irrigate the vineyard of God. With this you can make the tree of the Cause of God become verdant. Through this Name the Kingdom of God will be spread all over the world. Through this the Sun of Reality will shine. Through this the clouds of Mercy will pour down. Whosoever utters a word you must ask: 'Where is the authority of the Center of the Covenant? Show it.' Without this you must not listen to him. If an angel comes down from heaven and has no authority from the Center of the Covenant, you must require his authority. Otherwise the vineyard will become withered and dry. This is the reality."

For Reform Bahais, it is clear that the Will of God is to preserve His Faith in the long run. Despite the unprobated, unauthenticated "covenant," the true Covenant of Abdul-Baha still exists and is working its positive effect in the world and among the followers of his father's teachings.

Hope this helps.

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252122-post10.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by bob x  View Post

Well Ruth, I can't speak for Brian, but I think he wants from you more about what you DO believe, instead of just "Those other guys are wrong."

Yes, Bob, let's "start over," as you said in the other thread, and highlight the positive. Since truth is positive, I observe,

1) Some have even argued less than a few million, with about ten thousand in India. You do the math on the actual percentage of 2 million.... By the way it used to be THREE MILLION, but widespread criticism of the deception brought it down some years ago. For reliable statistics, see ravi.kumar, former Baha'i NSA member of India

Google Groups

2) Disinformation is a Baha'i forte... You might want to reassess your trust in any source, especially on the Internet, even if it purports to be neutral Haifan, if you're interested in truth. There's a long history of disinformation.

3) Ditto.

4) Whatever account you're relying on is incorrect in numerous ways. And there's much more history involved than you realize or the Haifans want you to know.

5) Ditto. Getting all this from Haifan sources? Talk to the Orthodox Baha'is, and others, if interested at, Open Directory - Society: Religion and Spirituality: Baha'ism

On the positive side, please reread Abdul-Baha's actual 1912 covenant at the start of this thread. You may find it thoroughly documented as authentic by Google's scanning of the copies of the Star of the West magazine at

Star of the West - Bahá'í Temple Unity, National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada - Google Books

Abdul-Baha's Address Upon the Covenant was first published in Star of the West, November 23, 1912, 9-10; again, a mere year later in Star of the West, November 23, 1913, p. 234-9; and just before his death, emphasizing the importance of the 1912 Covenant exactly when Bahais needed to recall Abul-Baha's guidance the most, in Star of the West November 23, 1921. The reader may corroborate independently this publishing history of the Address Upon the Covenant since the entire 1912 to 1913 and 1920 to 1921 volumes of Star of the West can be download directly from Google Books.

Similarly, on a positive note, As far back as 1929 early Bahais were publicly emphasizing the importance of the Address Upon the Covenant. See Ruth White, Appendix to Abdul-Baha and the Promised Age, 1929, and her comments on this passage, bottom of the first page. Also see, Star of the West, Vol. VII, No. 15. p. 139: "When the Universal House of Justice is organized...." Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Ruth White book at Ruth White

Hope this helps.

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/252081-post7.html>

---

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

I, Brian:

"Ruth White, you obviously believe very passionately about your position, and that is to be respected.

However, please note this is an interfaith forum - we're here to gain inputs from people of all different faiths. This is not about making judgements about specific faiths, trying to extoll one over another, and especially not about trying to diminish any specific faith here.

This, however, seems to be your remit.

In which case, I can only politely inform you that this thread will need to be closed and that I don't expect any more threads or posts which seek only to undermine another faith, not matter how sincere your arguments are intended.

If you wish to take the position of "Reform Baha'i" and provide your own personal insight in general discussion topics based on this, then that will be all well and good.

However, as to your comments on Shogi Effendi and the "Haifan Baha'is" - you've made that point clear, we've heard, but we're moving on now. It's entirely your decision as to whether you wish to validate your position by remaining with us in the manner of interfaith dialogue as stated."

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251840-post14.html>

Dear I, Brian,

I'm surprised to return from a little holiday to discover your post. Sorry if you've taken offense!

I'm responding here in this thread because I'm able to, since the one you addressed me in seems to be "closed."

I'm glad you respect passion, but I prefer reason, logic, and evidence, which is why I have been very careful to *document* my arguments and thoughts. To reduce my posts to "passion" doesn't seem quite fair to me, if you don't mind my saying so. I invite you to read the suppressed history of the Bahai Movement and the relevant documents, if you haven't.

I believe it's also fair to point out that the apparent members of the Haifan Baha'i denomination here have not provided much, if any, evidence that they've seriously read and considered the sources I've cited, such as Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant, published repeatedly in the Star of the West, the only Bahai magazine of the time, from 1910 to 1921, and central to the unfolding of the Bahai Cause in the West.

I do apologize if you feel I've been too vigorous in expressing my opinions. Alas, we human beings do believe things, and inevitably others think otherwise. I have tried to be broad and open minded, as in my discussion with Radarmark, mentioning Fritjof Schuon, Fox, the Quakers, and other Perennialists. <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250452-post30.html>

I assure you that my posts do not "seek only to undermine another faith." Quite the contrary. As with Christianity, Islam, what have you, knowing the *actual* history is essential, and where there is significant divergence on what that history was, in any faith, I would think thoughtful minds would want to know it so that they might weigh the matter for themselves, not merely accepting the duplicities of the Vatican or the local imam.

I don't claim to have the exclusive truth about the Bahai teachings, but I know the version most people accept as representative of it is not based on Abdul-Baha's actual interpretation of Baha'u'llah for the modern world. That may not matter to you, but it does matter. As a sincere believer of any faith, or most, I believe I have a duty to not hide the Light under a basket. I'm not afraid to hear the opinions of other Bahais or of non-Bahais hearing the criticism Haifans have of the Reform Bahai Faith. I ask only for what John Milton aptly put into words, "Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties." I recall the Roman Forum was open to different opinions.

Nevertheless, I'll try harder not to hurt the feelings of others, while inviting others to make an effort too.

Best wishes.

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251783-post11.html>

Source, from Ruth White:

"The reader may ascertain for himself ... in THE WORLD ALMANAC for 1931 on page 391. There he will find that in 1916 the number of Bahais in the United States and Canada was listed as 2,884. But since this group became papists under Shoghi Effendi their numbers have diminished to 1,247 under his "Guardianship" [1,637 left]."

Ruth White

Re: The Fraudulent Will and Testament, Covenant

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251527-post4.html>

Hearsay, even from Munírih Khánum, is still hearsay.

Societies with respectable systems of law and order require wills to be probated, *proven* to be legitimate and authentic. It is entirely in character for criminals *not* to want wills probated, nor independently authenticated, especially when, as in the case of Shoghi Effendi, he both *translated* the purported will and was the major *beneficiary* of it!

In this context, thoughtful people concerned about justice, might want to reflect that Shoghi Effendi, when he "translated" Nabil's 70 page narrative of the early history of Babism, transformed it into a volume of several hundred pages. Only an authenticated will would prove that he didn't do so with Abdul-Baha's purported last testament. Shoghi Effendi always evaded and schemed against authentication.

Note Ruth White's observations,

"Shoghi Effendi ignored my request for permission to send a handwriting expert to Haifa to examine the original document."

"Therefore as all indications are overwhelmingly in favour of the belief that this alleged will, which was undated, unwitnessed, unprobated and unstamped by the government, is fraudulent, and especially as this belief is backed up by the report of Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell showing it to be fraudulent, I am confident that you will take the final step and have the document examined and make a report so that these victims may no longer be defrauded by Shoghi Effendi Rabanni, who claims to be the successor of Sir Abdul Baha Abbas, and that restitution may be made to me, and to many others, from whom large sums have been obtained under the false pretences."

"This alleged will is undated, unwitnessed, unprobated, and unstamped by the Government. It also contradicts the intent that its alleged maker held during his lifetime. For the alleged will commands people to obey Shoghi Effendi as if he were God, and to pay a tax to him. This is the motive of the fraud—money and power."

Re: The Fraudulent Will and Testament, Covenant

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251415-post2.html>

Responding to a question regarding Munírih Khánúm, I would note, as I've already quoted, Ruth White on Abdul-Baha's "family, with the exception of his wife and sister..."

"In fact his family, and "in-laws," with the exception of his wife and sister, were somewhat materialistic, and viewed the religion more or less as a little family affair with a strong bent toward organization."

"...partly nullified the great universal teachings."

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251399-post127.html>

"Ahanu" seems to have a predilection for putting words in other people's mouths and then turning them to his own purposes. I would stick with the words of Ruth White. The burden of proof regarding whether or not the purported will and testament is authentic rests with the Haifan Baha'i denomination.

The overwhelming evidence as discussed in the "Website Suggestion" thread, citing,

Dr. C. (Charles) Ainsworth Mitchell's Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha. 1930. Certified Copy from the Library of Congress.

Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha and citing,

Ruth White

Ruth White

clearly demonstrates substantial "prima facie" reasons for further investigation of the authenticity of the questionable document, especially since both Shoghi Effendi and the family of Abdul-Baha benefited monetarily from it but refused and denied all efforts to determine its reliability.

Since 1921, throughout the decades, significant reasons have only continued to mount to call the "will and testament" into question.

For further details, see,

Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251781-post10.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by bob x

...I do not care whether Baha'ullah "counts" as a "prophet" because that doesn't mean anything to me, nor do I care whether your group or the group in Haifa has a better interpretation of his words).

All I did was say "except for the imprisonment-and-execution..." which I meant in the sense of the old joke....

On the "trademark" issue I think your side is definitely in the wrong. If you don't like the Haifa organization, then don't imitate their identity....

All that the court ruling you cite is saying, is that the issue of which names and symbols you shouldn't be using needs to be litigated from scratch...

I would hardly call the fraudulence of that will a "fact": all I see from your side is that it was one person's opinion-- .... Now again, I am an outsider to this fight, and have no stake in whether the will was genuine or not, but I do not find the evidence here very compelling.

The only "slander" you seem to be complaining about is that they call you "apostate" and so on. Well, you ARE a breakaway group.... Well, as a non-Christian I do not presume to decide whether Luther or the Vatican had a better interpretation of the original meaning of Paul's epistles or whatever; each side has their reasons for saying what they do.

And I don't understand your complaint about "shunning" at all. If you hate them so much (the vitriol does seem to be much more from your side than the other way around, from what I've seen), then why do you WANT them to associate with you? Are you claiming that they have some DUTY to associate with you, whether they want anything to do with you or not? Especially when you've made it clear you don't want anything to do with them, either?"

"I do not care..." I respect your conscience. I do care.

"Old joke." It's not a joke. The one you cite seems callous and insensitive of Mrs. Lincoln's pain and suffering and that her husband was murdered.

The Interpretation of Abdul-Baha defines Baha'u'llah's Teachings for the modern world, not the fraudulent will and testament of the corrupt uhj, elected in a non-democratic system, unlike what was proscribed by Abdul-Baha. We're not imitating them; they're imitating, while perverting and destroying, the historical form demonstrated in word and deed by Abdul-Baha. Their "identity" is not the Bahai Faith, which existed in the West for over two decades before Shoghi Effendi and his family took it over.

"All that the court ruling you cite is saying..." False. The US Federal Courts repeatedly affirmed the right of other Bahai denominations to exist:

Judge Diane S. Sykes: "Clearly raises some constitutional concerns."

Judge William J. Bauer: "How about Reform Bahai?"

From Judge Sykes' Opinion:

p 7: False finding of "fact" by Judge Austin in 1966

p 13: "...civil authorities may not make judgments about religious controversies when deciding church property disputes. Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 116. (The church-autonomy principle recognized in Watson "must now be said to have federal constitutional protection as a part of the free exercise of religion against state interference.").

"Building on Kedroff, the Supreme Court held in Presbyterian Church that "the First Amendment severely circumscribes the role that civil courts may play in resolving church property disputes."

p 14-15: "Considered in light of these First Amendment limitations on the court's authority, certain aspects of the 1966 injunction are troubling. The decree declares that "there is only one Baha'i Faith," that Shoghi Effendi was its last Guardian and none has come since, and the National Spiritual Assembly was its representative and "highest authority" in the United States and was "entitled to exclusive use of the marks and symbols of the Faith," including the exclusive use of the word "Bahá'í." Declarations of this sort push the boundaries of the court's authority under Kedroff and Presbyterian Church. In church property disputes (trademark suits obviously qualify), the First Amendment limits the sphere in which civil courts may operate. When a district judge takes sides in a religious schism, purports to decide matters of spiritual succession, and excludes dissenters from using the name, symbols, and marks of the faith (as distinct from the name and marks of a church) [boldface added], the First Amendment line appears to have been crossed."

Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals

Public Access to Oral Argument recordings, Opinions

08-2306 : Nat'l Spiritual v. Nat'l Spiritual

2 02/20/2009 02/20/2009 Oral Argument

3 11/23/2010 11/23/2010 Opinion (SYKES)

List of Documents in case <https://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/fdocs/do...yr=08&num=2306>

"One person's opinion..." False. The historical record shows that many left the Bahai Movement because of the fraudulent will and testament, given the fact that it changed the entire nature of Abdul-Baha's Interpretation for the modern world:

"The reader may ascertain for himself ... in THE WORLD ALMANAC for 1931 on page 391. There he will find that in 1916 the number of Bahais in the United States and Canada was listed as 2,884. But since this group became papists under Shoghi Effendi their numbers have diminished to 1,247 under his "Guardianship" [1,637 left]."

" I am an outsider..." I don't know that for a fact; nor have the time nor inclination to investigate whether that's true. In Haifan Baha'i cyberspace, such claims have often proven false upon scrutiny. See Good Cop/Bad Cop,

CAUTION *** Psychological War Zone *** Newcomers ____

CAUTION \*\*\* Psychological War Zone \*\*\* Newcomers

You have not investigated the evidence beyond a cursory level, apparently since you "don't care."

"You ARE a breakaway group..." False. They are the group that broke away from Abdul-Baha's open, liberal, universal, progressive Interpretation, which emphasized true religion "cannot be organized." They wanted to organize it for power, money, and control. That's what the Haifans are all about. Your relativism, not caring about the truth of the matter, is negatively influencing your perception, in my view, with all respect.

"Vitriol..." You clearly don't know much about the Haifans, or you've been duped by them, or one of them using a false identity. For the tip of the iceberg, see the following, then click to the homepage for more:

"The Bahai Technique":

The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith - "According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." -- Abdu'l-Baha

Shunning & Slander > Menu

Baha'i Shunning > Menu - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith

"...why do you WANT them to associate with you?" We don't. Bahais of all other denominations merely want their Constitutional right of Religious Freedom... which is exactly what Haifans have tried to deprive other Bahais of since 1921, following their Papist, Shiite distortion of Baha'u'llah's Teachings.

Hope this helps...

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251753-post8.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by BruceDLimber  View Post

...and the one or two individuals who spend all their time attacking other individuals and the established Baha'i Faith as a whole!

Bruce

Covering for Moojan Momen? His attacking and slandering people as "apostates" suits you just fine? Ad hominem is what you've indulged in; I presented the *published* evidence of what Momen passed off on a reputable academic journal as "scholarship." It's no surprise the Haifan Baha'is would want to hide that fact, as they have sought to conceal their acts against other Bahai denominations in the US Federal courts...

Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals

Public Access to Oral Argument recordings, Opinions

08-2306 : Nat'l Spiritual v. Nat'l Spiritual

2 02/20/2009 02/20/2009 Oral Argument

3 11/23/2010 11/23/2010 Opinion (SYKES)

List of Documents in case <https://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/fdocs/do...yr=08&num=2306>

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251732-post6.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by bob x

Well, except for the whole imprisonment-and-threats-of-execution part..."

Does that mean we're in agreement on

"Slandorous Vilification" = The Baha'i Technique - Ad Hominem, Libel, Slander, Demonize, Scapegoat, Ostracize, Shun, Banish, Backbite, Defame, Vilify, Discredit, Smear, Revile, Suppress, Attack, Bully, Intimidate, Threaten, Malign, Blackball, Deceive, Coerce, Silence, Harass... etc., etc... through the US Courts, driving out university professors, on and on...

Not to mention a FRAUDULENT will and testament, the fact of its CRIME, fobbed off as the Master's for over 80 years, on a naive, uninformed, gullible flock of eager believers...

Shunning > Menu

Baha'i Shunning > Menu - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith

Compare "The Bahai Technique" - Slander & Shunning

The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith - "According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." -- Abdu'l-Baha

And it's clear what other crimes have been committed in the dark, have not yet made to the light of day... sounds and acts like Shiism.

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251710-post4.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by arthra

I would strongly suggest here that the status of "apostates from Islam" has little to do with someone labelled an "apostate" by one Baha'i writer.

Also US Court cases concerning the Faith are not in my view comparable in any way to the "General Directorate of Fatwas and Accounts" under the Supreme Court in Afghanistan.

Sure it would be wonderful if Afghanistan were to adopt say a civil rights stance and recognize minority religions but such is not the case.

Also I don't believe the internet is the proper venue to try cases.. US Courts hear cases all the time and I think in this country they have their own case histories and precedents which include hearing both sides of a dispute and Baha'is also respect the Court rulings and follow the laws of the land."

Here's a link to Moojan Momen's 'Marginality and Apostasy in the Baha'i Community.'" Pages 384-393. I invite the reader to read or skim for him or herself. I "strongly suggest" there isn't any difference between the way accusations of apostasy are used in Islam and in the Haifan interpretation of the Baha'i Faith. "One Baha'i writer" is a prevarication. Many Haifan Baha'is think the same way and *treat* Baha'is and non-Baha'is like "apostates" despite their misrepresentations otherwise: Marginality and Apostasy in the Baha'i Community

Note that "apostate" occurs 129 times in Momen's paper. Again, his fervor demonstrates it is *exactly* the same as in Islam, because the Haifan Baha'i essentially reverted to Shia Islam under the imamate of Shoghi Effendi. Momen's article is libelous and the editors were appalled and abashed that they had had the poor judgement to let it slip by and publish it, when I exchanged emails with them regarding my own "Response to Takfir," which was published in the same academic journal, Religion, in a subsequent issue:

"A Response to Takfir." Moojan Momen's Takfir & Slanderous Vilification:
"Marginality and apostasy in the Baha'i community." Religion.
Volume 37, Issue 3, September 2007, Pages 187-209.
FG, A Response to Takfir, Religion 38 No 4 2008, Moojan Momen

The US Federal Court cases in the 7th District of Northern Illinois are highly relevant because the judges had the wisdom to recognize that what the Wilmette Haifan Baha'i denomination was attempting to do violated the US Constitution and rights of the Bahai members of the several different interpretations of Bahai. Extensive details accessible at The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience Essentially, it's the fact that the US Courts are real courts concerned about justice and individual conscience, unlike the fanatical courts of Afghanistan, whose sense of "justice" the Haifan universal house of "justice" basically shares, issuing its own "fatwas" against "apostates" and "covenant breakers."

Sure it would be wonderful if the Haifan Wilmette universal house of justice and Baha'is were to adopt say a civil rights stance and recognize minority Baha'i denominations but such is not the case.

What you're saying is that you don't believe a free, open, uncensored forum on the Internet is the "proper venue" to discuss the fact that a Haifan Baha'i scholar who is highly respected by the Haifan community has published an article in a prestigious religious studies journal in London, "Religion," that smears and reviles **FIFTEEN** different people, including citizens of the United Kingdom, as *apostates* for expressing their own opinions and ideas, on and off the Internet, ideas which differ in various degrees from the doctrines of the uhj. I believe a free, open, uncensored forum on the Internet is the *perfect* place to exchange ideas with my fellow citizens in the USA and people throughout the world. The less a forum is controlled by a religious theocracy or its minions the better in my opinion.

The US Courts certainly listened to both sides of the cases before them and they rendered their verdict:

Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals
Public Access to Oral Argument recordings, Opinions
08-2306 : Nat'l Spiritual v. Nat'l Spiritual
2 02/20/2009 02/20/2009 Oral Argument
3 11/23/2010 11/23/2010 Opinion (SYKES)

List of Documents in case

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251660-post3.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by arthra

The plight of Afghan Baha'is is I think an important issue and this ruling by the Afghan Supreme Court occurred around 2007. Here is a more detailed account of what it involves:

Here's a more detailed account of what that Fatwa entails:

"According to Islamic law, conversion from Islam is punishable by death. In recent years this sentence was not carried out in practice. On April 9, police arrested a citizen, born a member of the Baha'i faith, after his wife exposed his religious beliefs to authorities. Officials detained him for 31 days in jail without charges, in contravention of the penal code. Authorities released him on May 11 after the international community expressed its concern. Upon his release, he fled to another country. On May 20, the General Directorate of Fatwas and Accounts under the Supreme Court issued a ruling on the status of the Baha'i faith, declaring it a form of blasphemy. The ruling also declared all Muslims who convert to Baha'i to be apostates and all followers of the Baha'i faith to be infidels."

<https://www.ecoi.net/188769::afghanis...2747/bahai.htm>

I would strongly suggest here that the status of "apostates from Islam" has little to do with someone labelled an "apostate" by one Baha'i writer.

Also US Court cases concerning the Faith are not in my view comparable in any way to the "General Directorate of Fatwas and Accounts" under the Supreme Court in Afghanistan.

Sure it would be wonderful if Afghanistan were to adopt say a civil rights stance and recognize minority religions but such is not the case.

Also I don't believe the internet is the proper venue to try cases.. US Courts hear cases all the time and I think in this country they have their own case histories and precedents which include hearing both sides of a dispute and Baha'is also respect the Court rulings and follow the laws of the land."

Much of what you say ignores the hypocrisy and double standards implicit in Haifan Baha'i denouncing of other Bahais as "covenant breakers" and apostates. Further, though the terms change from Shia Islam, the *function* remains largely the same. Most Baha'is and non-Bahais fail to perceive and realize that fact, though many ultimately experience the reality. For decades of such abuse of conscience, see

Shunning > Menu

Baha'i Shunning > Menu - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith

Compare "The Bahai Technique" - Slander & Shunning

The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith - "According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." -- Abdu'l-Baha

Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251631-post1.html>

"Non-Muslim minority groups, particularly Christian, Hindu, Sikh, and Bahai groups, which together constitute approximately 1 percent of the population, were targets of discrimination and persecution. The minority Shia community continued to face discrimination from the majority Sunni population. Authorities detained at least two converts from Islam to Christianity during the reporting period, although both have since been released. Television programming led to increased negative public opinion and suspicion of Christian activities and targeted violence and harassment against Christians, including converts from Islam. The Afghan Supreme Court ruled that membership in the Bahai Faith constituted blasphemy and that Muslims who convert to the Bahai Faith are apostates. Local Hindu and Sikh populations continued to encounter problems in obtaining land for cremation and harassment during major celebrations."

allAfrica.com: Africa: Executive Summary of Individual Country Reports \(Page 1 of 2\)

Recognizing Bahais aren't alone in terms of religious persecution in Afghanistan, I find it interesting that the Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahais are blasphemers and apostates, exactly what Haifan Bahai "scholars" have long done against Bahais of other denominations and conscience.

Here's the likely scenario, judging from past cases: The Wilmette-Haifan nsa, after repeatedly trying to destroy other Bahai denominations in the US Federal Courts, and after such Bahais as Moojan Momen libeled 15 Bahis in the London academic journal "Religion," the nsa and the uhj will appeal to the US State Department to protect its rights to religious freedom and conscience in Afghanistan, running ads in the New York Times and media beating its breast, bewailing how innocent it is, though nary word about its hypocrisy...

'Marginality and Apostasy in the Baha'i Community' (Religion 37 [2007] 187-209.

Response to it from some of the maligned: Responses to Apostacy

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251391-post126.html>

The last few paragraphs clearly quote Ruth White's references to Munírih Khánúm:

"For his family, with the exception of his wife and sister..."

"In fact his family, and "in-laws," with the exception of his wife and sister, were somewhat materialistic, and viewed the religion more or less as a little family affair with a strong bent toward organization."

"...partly nullified the great universal teachings."

Ruth White

Ruth White

I'm a member of the Reform Bahai Faith. We don't follow the cult practices of the Haifan denomination, like "takfir," identifying and denouncing others as infidels (kufir) and apostates, taqlid, "blind obedience," issuing fatwas, and so forth. All that started with the fraudulent will and testament of Shoghi Effendi and his family... Abdul-Baha clearly taught such reprehensible tactics were things of the past.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251384-post124.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu

So, according to Ruth White, Munírih Khánúm (1848-1938), the wife of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, was also involved in this so-called forgery scandal. Hmm . . . The character of many people are being called into question here. That is, if you accept the Reform Baha'i view."

So you imagine no human being is above suspicion? That evidence shouldn't be independently evaluated by reliable authorities, such judges and elected officials that represent the best interest of the community?

It is a fact that Abdul-Baha did not provide for any way of support for Munírih Khánúm after his death. Much of the family was worldly and corrupt, as Ruth White observed and describes below:

FROM Correspondence between the High Commissioner of Palestine and Ruth White, regarding the alleged Will of Sir Abdul Baha Abbas. By Ruth White March, 1932:

"I have submitted the photographs of the alleged will to Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, the renowned English handwriting expert; and editor of The Analyst, at 85 Eccleston Square London, S.W.1. and his report shows that this document is fraudulent. No part of it was written by Abdul Baha, although Shoghi Effendi, and the family of Sir Abdul Baha assert that every word of its ten pages was written by Sir Abdul Baha. Shoghi Effendi ignored my request for permission to send a handwriting expert to Haifa to examine the original document.

"...all of Abdul Baha's family share in the tax that is derived from the powers granted in this alleged will."

Ruth White. Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament. Beverly Hills: White, 1946:

"For his family, with the exception of his wife and sister, were the average types with a strong bent toward organized religion, whereas Abdul-Baha was universal, "super-racial and undogmatic.""

"It is important for those who are interested in the Bahai Religion to free themselves from the idea that the family of Abdul-Baha is a "Holy Family." In fact his family, and "in-laws," with the exception of his wife and sister, were somewhat materialistic, and viewed the religion more or less as a little family affair with a strong bent toward organization. For years they have indoctrinated, more or less, the pilgrims who visited the home of Abdul-Baha, myself included, with this conception of religion. This partly nullified the great universal teachings. The result was that when Abdul-Baha passed from this world in November, 1921, some of his family, who had laid the ground-work for organization through these pilgrims while he was alive, hastened to establish it more firmly when he died. All this resulted in making the Bahai Movement, under the dictatorship of Shoghi Effendi, an organization which for narrowness and bigotry has no parallel in history except in the dark ages" (31).

Ruth White

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251380-post122.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by arthra

The problem is Ruth you're basing your assumptions on your unproven conspiracy theory which is also based on innuendo .. A single handwriting expert who commences his analysis with the statement that "any conclusions must be "provisional" and the animus directed at the Guardian of the Faith.

Ask yourself why was Ruth White not successful seventy some years ago..? It was unsuccessful then and it remains unsuccessful."

"Assumptions." The evidence that Shoghi Effendi and his family subverted the interpretation of Abdul-Baha is not based on "assumption." It's based on documentary evidence, which the subverters have always tried to ignore and discredit, in much the same way that you have thus far done throughout this thread so far.

"Unproven conspiracy theory." I have not used the expression "conspiracy theory" nor "innuendo." That's a common way apologists use to attempting to discredit someone when they can't refute the ideas and evidence against them. It's basically a form of *ad hominem.*

"Single handwriting expert." Another attempt to discredit Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, of the British Museum, not an insignificant institution, especially back in the 1920s. You seem to suggest there should be more than one analysis but the fact remains that Shoghi Effendi and the illegitimate house of justice based on the forgery have always prevented further examination of the document, because he and they obviously knew and know its bogus.

"Any conclusions must be "provisional." Dr. Mitchell's phrasing and careful qualification is that of a reputable scientist, not someone unqualified from the street merely spouting opinions. That's why his opinion was and remains significant. That's why his extensive research in forensic science, including the analysis of ink, paper, and technical details of forgery remain respected by professionals within the legal community and continue to be cited in academic circles and court room proceedings, as can be verified easily by anyone at Google Scholar:

[CITATION] CHAPTER II OILS AND FATS

CA Mitchell - Recent Advances in Analytical Chemistry, 2007 - Barton P.

Related articles

[CITATION] Cordage and Cordage Hemp and Fibres

P Kilgour - 2008 - Read Books

Related articles

Medico-Legal Society Centenary Dinner

M Brahams - Medico-Legal Journal, 2001 - mlj.rsmjournals.com

... 1927–28 Sir William Willcox KCIE CB CMG MD FRCP 1928–33 The Rt Hon Lord Riddell 1933–35 Sir Bernard Spilsbury FRCP 1935–37 C Ainsworth Mitchell DSc FRIC 1937–39 The Rt Hon Mr Justin Humphries 1939–42 G Roche Lynch OBE MB BS FRIC ...

BL Direct

[CITATION] The Mammoth Book of Murder and Science

R Wilkes - 2000 - Running Press

Library Search

"C. Ainsworth Mitchell" - Google Scholar

"Animus." The allegation that Ruth White or anyone else who believes the purported will is bogus is merely motivated by "animus" against the so-called "guardian," a Shiite imamate essentially, is once again a tactic of avoidance and obscuring what's at issue. It attempts to conceal and defend the crime committed by basically smearing the person, once again, against the person, ad hominem.

Ninety years after the crime, Ruth White's testimony and evidence remains and endures, so I for one would not call that unsuccessful at all. Quite the reverse. Knowledge of the crime continues to spread, especially as many people, in many countries, continue to realize there is something very fundamentally wrong about what claims to be the "Baha'i Faith."

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251370-post120.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by arthra

Well Ruth your "report" to the High Commissioner of Palestine all those years ago has little to do in my view with what Radar had posted and what I was asking him about..."...too many objective sources indicating some divergence from the texts of the Bahá'u'lláh."

The Report was written by Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, not Ruth White. A full text transcription is now available at Dr. C. (Charles) Ainsworth Mitchell's Report on the Writing

Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha. 1930. Certified Copy from the Library of Congress.

Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha

"all those years ago"

The truth doesn't age or become out of date; that's why it's the truth, no matter how many people are deceived into falsehood.

I've carefully reread Radarmarks' comments:

"But judging from objective material from academic sources the burden of proof is clearly the Bahai's (the Haifa-UCJ, NSA type). Why? There are just too many objective sources indicating some divergence from the texts of the Bahá'u'lláh."

Website Suggestion

I believe what he said was quite clear, and I believe I responded clearly to him. I'll leave it to Radarmark to correct me, if he thinks I misconstrued his meaning, which was basically that there are reasons for the "burden of proof" lying upon Baha'is of the Haifan persuasion.

That perspective is reminiscent, even essentially the same, as Ruth White's statement that the burden of evidence constituted a "prima facie" case for further legal scrutiny.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251334-post118.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by arthra  View Post

Radar wrote:

There are just too many objective sources indicating some divergence from the texts of the Bahá'u'lláh....

My comment:

And we know this how? Provide examples please.

As Ruth White wrote, on June 5th, 1931, to the High Commissioner of Jerusalem, Palestine,

"Your report that the photographs examined by the handwriting expert to whom I submitted these (Dr. Mitchell) have been verified as accurate reproductions of the original document, in conjunction with the report of Dr. Mitchell make a prima facie case of fraud against those who have used this alleged will as a basis of soliciting money from the public, and you will hence recognize the necessity of further action on your part."

In my view, Radarmark is quite right, "There are just too many objective sources indicating some divergence...." That's essentially what "prima facie" means, sufficient legal evidence to indicate a basis necessitating further investigation.

Readers might want to reflect carefully on the nature and claims of a religious denomination that evades and denies such conclusions and evidence for well 80 years, including slandering and attempting to discredit a widely recognized forensic expert such as Dr. Mitchell.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251332-post117.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by radarmark  View Post

P.S. great website (the pdf). I could only find bits and pieces.

I'm not sure what you mean by "bits and pieces." All Documents Deposited by Ruth White at the Library of Congress are now also in text format on this page:

Ruth White

The PDF copy is the same link, available from the Ruth White page.

Incidentally, Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell's Report is now also available in text format at https://reformbahai.org/CAMitchell\_Report.html

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251226-post115.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by radarmark

P.S. great website (the pdf). I could only find bits and pieces."

No problem in my view regarding H... I understand you were just being illustrative.

Yes, in terms of the PDF, all the documents that Ruth White deposited with the Library of Congress in 1931 or '32 are included this single PDF file:

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930

<https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

Much of the evidence of the imposition of a false will and testament upon the Bahai Cause is contained in these documents, along with Ruth White's books, and some other documentary information, especially the Star of the West volumes prior to his death and his 1912 Address Upon the Covenant, available here on the Interfaith Bahai Forum:

Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251223-post112.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Pod by radarmark

Let me add something. While handwriting analysis is scoffed at by the "scientific" and "legal" communities at this juncture, it was not at the time of the analysis. But that is besides the point, as I understand it the issue was not identifying the hand writing as not being that of Abdul-Baha, but rather that it was a composite of several handwritings. Forgive me, that is a different kettle of fish. Much easier to see, verify and objectify. If that is true (as I read the Mitchell deposition), if this had gone to court there would have been a pretty clear outcome.

Please note I am not saying anything about what is true or false, so please do not jump on me. Using the term criminal is NBD... Hitler was a criminal, the kid who broke into my house was a criminal. Criminality is not the sole responsibility of the legal system, if you believe that do you think that criminal procedures get to the truth or enforce what is right? It is rather an imperfect system we try to refine and better.

Whether or not the case went to court or not any objective, rational individual can (and is entitled to) judge the criminality of the action (before you reply, remember Hitler). Now as for the truth of the matter, I don't know. But judging from objective material from academic sources the burden of proof is clearly the Bahai's (the Haifa-UCJ, NSA type). Why? There are just too many objective sources indicating some divergence from the texts of the Bahá'u'lláh. P.S. this is nothing so bad, I feel the same way about the majority of professed Quakers."

You're quite right that according to the British Museum document expert,

"That is to say, the writing does not agree with the hypothesis that it was all written by one person."

"A minute comparison of the authenticated writing with the writing on every page of the alleged will . . . has failed to detect in any part of the will the characteristics of the writing of Abdul-Baha, as shown in the authenticated specimens." -- Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, 1930.

Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha

Had the case gone to court in 1930, what people know of as the "Baha'i Faith" would be very different today.

All jumping aside, I didn't mention Hitler nor do I think the comparison apt. It is a crime in all Western jurisdictions to pass off a fraudulent will and last testament, depriving the rightful heirs of their inheritance. That the crime went unadjudicated does not mean it went undetected, by Ruth White, Dr. Mitchell, and others, while its ramifications continue to disrupt the Faith of Baha'u'llah even to today. Often in this world it has taken many decades for justice to win out over evil.

I do agree with your conclusion. There are indeed many indications of wrong-doing surrounding the purported will and testament and its divergence from everything Abdul-Baha said and did in public and private throughout his ministry, as Ruth White indicates in her books. The burden of proof was placed squarely on Shoghi Effendi by Ruth White and Dr. Mitchell. Shoghi Effendi's response was to evade and avoid, as the letters Ruth White deposited at The Library of Congress clearly documented, especially the two following

Mitchell's Report:

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930
<https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

Thank you for your thoughtful consideration of the issues involved.

---

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251200-post109.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu  View Post

Your point about Ainsworth Mitchell saying the Will and Testament is a forgery does not determine it is. That's my point.

Shoghi Effendi saying, and your saying, and every Haifan Baha'is since Shoghi saying, does not determine that it isn't a forgery. All the hearsay in the Haifan Baha'i tradition does not prove it's not a forgery.

That's why courts don't rely on hearsay. They probate and authentic will and testaments, unlike the bogus one Haifans call a "covenant."

---

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251195-post108.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu

...I would like to see your sources to support your claims."

Already given it to you but like Shoghi Effendi you're trying to ignore it.

Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Ruth White. Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament.
Beverly Hills: White, 1946.
<https://www.reformbahai.org/WhiteABQWT.pdf>

Dr. C. (Charles) Ainsworth Mitchell. Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha. 1930. Certified Copy from the Library of Congress.
Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930
<https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

I invite readers to consider a book by another Bahai who came basically to the same conclusion:

Hermann Zimmer, A FRAUDULENT TESTAMENT Devalues the Bahai Religion Into Political Shogism. World Union for Universal Religion and Universal Peace, Free Bahais, 1973.
https://reformbahai.org/images/Herman...\_Testament.pdf

As Ruth White observed, the overwhelming burden lied with Shoghi Effendi and his criminal family to prove the so-called "will and testament" was legitimate. He couldn't because it was false, and he knew it. So he resorted to slandering Ruth White and all of the early Bahais who realized he was departing from the teachings of Abdul-Baha, in his attempt to create a Shiite imam, though using the Western sounding "administration," while the function remained, and remains, the same.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251184-post102.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu

Ruth White, your evidence is weak.

Yes, Mitchell declared the Will and Testament a forgery.

However, as has been noted above, Mitchell did not know Persian. This led him to make faulty conclusions (such as thinking the Will and Testament was written by three different people because he did not know it was written over a period of time). If you accept Mitchell's evidence, then why is Shoghi Effendi the only conspirator? Neither is handwriting analysis a surefire method to conclude the Will and Testament is a forgery. You're not standing on concrete ground. Handwriting analysis is questionable.

Also, as Sen notes, Abdu'l-Baha died in November 1921, the time Shoghi Effendi, the alleged conspirator, was studying in Oxford! The Will and Testament was found in Abdu'l-Baha's safe in November. Gasp! Did Shoghi Effendi plot this long before Abdu'l-Baha's death? How did the Will and Testament get in Abdu'l-Baha's safe?"

What was weak was Shoghi Effendi's response to Ruth White when she and other early Bahais figured out what his family and he had done. Evading her charge confirmed it. Shoghi Effendi's "evidence" for the authenticity of the purported will and testament was and is the weakest link in the chain of lies, distortions, and half-truths advanced by him and subsequently deceived and brainwashed Baha'is. Ruth White, others, and I have always maintained that it was quite possibly that initially the forgery was the work of his family. Either way, the spurious document is nothing like the teachings of Abdul-Baha, whether in public or private.

The analysis of handwriting has been and remains recognized by the courts as a valuable forensic tool. That you dredge up a quotation to the contrary doesn't change that fact. Mitchell and Ruth White go beyond that.

Dr. C. (Charles) Ainsworth Mitchell. Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha. 1930. Certified Copy from the Library of Congress.
Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha

Ruth White
Ruth White

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

NOTE WELL, What's purported to be Abdul-Baha's will and testament has never been probated or authenticated independently of those who were and are its beneficiaries.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251158-post100.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by BruceDLimber  View Post
ad hominem attacks?

It's false to characterize criticism of criminal acts as ad hominem. You might want to look up the meaning. But one of the oldest tactics of apologists, when confronted with a truth they cannot handle, is to try to change the subject:

"No lawyer or judge would in the United States or Western countries, indeed much of the world, would consider a purported, unprobated will and testament authentic, especially when it was translated by the very person who was its beneficiary, as Ruth White observed, Shoghi Effendi!

Forgery masked as the will of Abdul-Baha..."

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251135-post98.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu
...prejudice masked as science."
...sic.

Ludicrous... No lawyer or judge would in the United States or the Western, indeed much of the world, would consider a perported, unprobated will and testament authentic, especially when it was translated by the very person who was its beneficiary, as Ruth White observed, Shoghi Effendi!

Forgery masked as the will of Abdul-Baha...

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251107-post96.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ruth White

What's purported to be Abdul-Baha's will and testament has never been probated or authenticated independently of those who were and are its beneficiaries.

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930
<https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

NOTE WELL, What's purported to be Abdul-Baha's will and testament has never been probated or authenticated independently of those who were and are its beneficiaries...

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930
<https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

---

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251056-post94.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu

...I think Sen had some important points. ... [/I]

[/INDENT]

To repeat, in my response to Sen McGlinn's mistaken attempt to discredit Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell's Report, I point out briefly the key fact:

What's purported to be Abdul-Baha's will and testament has never been probated or authenticated independently of those who were and are its beneficiaries.

No court of law would permit such a bogus "will and testament" to stand.

The documents Ruth White placed in the national archive of the Library of Congress unequivocally demonstrate that Shoghi Effendi was a calculating criminal, part of a criminal takeover of the Bahai Cause:

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress, 1930
<https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

You seem to be impressed with what Sen McGlinn presents as scholarship. I urge you to look more closely and critically. Here again is a link to my review of his Church and State:

Church and State. Sen McGlinn.

The Globe Blog Archive Church and State. Sen McGlinn.

---

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251030-post92.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil

However there are many similarities...

Of the various Bahai denominations, setting the will aside, what can you all agree on?"

Wil,

The Haifan ideology has always held that it alone has the Truth. Following the Shiite interpretations of Shoghi Effendi, especially takfir, declaring a Muslim/Bahai has departed from the Faith, Haifan Baha'is aren't, shall we say, constitutionally capable of respecting the conscience of other Bahai believers, though Abdul-Baha taught, "The conscience of man is sacred and to be respected." Haifans, though most Western ones don't realize it, actually operate in the worst intellectual and spiritual framework of Islam, which Baha'u'llah Himself had specifically rejected and reformed into a moderate, universal Faith.

The three Haifan responses to your completely rational question is highly indicative of all of the above.

In the view of Reform Bahais, all of the several Bahai denominations largely share the broad, universal teachings of Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha, revere largely the same corpus of writings, though select ones have been dropped out by the Haifans, those which clearly contradict their theocratic interpretation.

I believe it's fair to say that Abdul-Baha's Interpretation of Baha'u'llah's Teachings for the modern world was much more along the lines of the Quakers, Theosophy, Sufis, and Unitarian Universalists, than the Shiites and Sunnis, the califate or the papacy. He also emphasized "spiritual democracy," meaning a separation of church and state.

My review on my blog of Sen McGlinn's book might help in this context:

Church and State: A Postmodern Political Theology. Sen McGlinn. University of Leiden, 2005. 432 pages

The Globe Blog Archive Church and State. Sen McGlinn.

Incidentally, Reform Bahais do teach, as do Bahais of other denominations. Here I am talking with people at Speakers Corner, Hyde Park, London, UK July 26, 2009

https://reformbahai.org/Speakers\_Corner...London\_UK.html

---

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250996-post86.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by BruceDLimber

Both long dead covenant-breakers."

The Haifan Baha'i administration, while publicly hiding behind a facade of liberalism, essentially practices Islamic "takfir," labeling people "kafir" or infidels, and issuing fatwas, denying the very existence of other Bahais and denominations, all indicative of the worst in the Shiite Islamic heritage of the Bahai Faith—practices Baha'u'llah specifically repudiated, teaching tolerance of different religious views, largely congruent with modern Western custom.

Nothing could be more diametrically opposed to the modern democracy of Western civic and legal order than the jihad the Haifan Baha'is are conducting.

By brainwashing the ordinary Western Baha'i into blind obedience, taqlid, betraying Abdul-Baha's promise of "independent investigation of truth," Shoghi Effendi concocted a deceitfully oppressive Shiite "world order" upon the pernicious foundation of the fraudulent will and testament.

Re: Website Suggestion

Quote:

Originally Posted by Ahanu <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250988-post84.html>
Ainsworth Mitchell?

....2009/05/27/mitchells_mistake/"]Mitchell's mistake Sen McGlinn's blog[/URL]"

Mitchell's mistake Sen McGlinn's blog

In my response to Sen McGlinn's mistaken attempt to discredit Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell's Report, I point out briefly the key fact:

What's purported to be Abdul-Baha's will and testament has never been probated or authenticated independently of those who were and are its beneficiaries.

All of McGlinn's arguments are variations of the same old calumnies that the Haifans have always used to smear Dr. Mitchell and Ruth White, following Shoghi Effendi's despicable example. They are not any more convincing coming from a supposedly excommunicated Haifan, namely Sen McGlinn, trying to redeem himself with his masters than when Mirza Sohrab essentially did the same thing, though with more subtlety.

McGlinn concedes in his attack on Mitchell that "I am not a forensic handwriting expert" and knowing a language is irrelevant to forensic experts. His assumptions about what Mitchell did are merely that.

McGlinn's other tactics are unseemly and entirely in keeping with those widely used by members of the Haifan denomination based on the fraudulent will and testament.

Again, the attempts to discredit Dr. Mitchell and Ruth White have relied on, for over 75 years, slander and ad hominem and are no more convincing now than they have ever been. Note the pervasive attempt to shift, from Mitchell's conclusion and his call for an examination of the original, to the man himself. Classic ad hominem.

I ask the reader to reflect on the fact that Dr. Mitchell remains one of the most respected forensic researchers of the 20th century and is still quoted and cited by academics and legal experts. His professional integrity is beyond question as is, and was, his ability to assess the authenticity of the purported will itself. As the document curator for the British Museum, Dr. Mitchell used techniques and methods still widely used and recognized, whether or not one has a command of the language being scrutinized. Knowledge of a language in and of itself has never been the essential for handwriting experts, and informed people know that to be a fact. Those who seek to conceal the act of forgery hope to confuse the uninformed about what is involved. See the link at the bottom to one of his books available online.

Ruth White placed Dr. Mitchell's signed Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha with the Library of Congress in 1930. Certified copy below.

A bibliography of Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell's published work is available from the Library of Congress at the bottom of this page.

Mitchell was singularly qualified to judge the authenticity of the purported will of Abdul-Baha:

"In England, C. Ainsworth Mitchell was a public analyst interested primarily in questioned documents and the chemistry of inks during the early twentieth century" (25).

Introduction to Forensic Sciences. William G. Eckert.

Published 1997 CRC Press. Legal Reference / Law Profession. 390 pages. ISBN 0849381010

The authenticity of my quotation from the Introduction to Forensic Sciences above, regarding Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, may be verified by Previewing the book and selecting page 25. On Amazon.com: Amazon.com: Online Shopping for Electronics, Apparel, Computers, Books, DVDs & more

"Documents And Their Scientific Examination" (1920) Author: C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Date 1920

Documents And Their Scientific Examination : C. Ainsworth Mitchell : Free Download & Streaming : Internet Archive

[can be downloaded in full]

Professional genealogist Will Johnson's webpage on Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell:

Charles Ainsworth Mitchell - RoyalWeb

Will Johnson to a fundamentalist Baha'i who dismissed Dr. Mitchell:

From: "wjhonson" wjhonson@aol.com

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Saturday, April 21, 2007 10:36 PM

Subject: Re: 4-20-07 - Ruth White. Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament.

>

> That's a bit disengenuous to his memory. Charles Ainsworth Mitchell > wrote several books in which he details pencil, ink, writing styles, > etc. It wasn't a hobby, he was a professional in this type of > analysis.

>

Link to Library of Congress SEARCH for your own confirmation: Library of Congress Online Catalog

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250964-post82.html>

Here's the key passage by Sohrab,

"Abdul Baha had never in speech or writing given the slightest indication that there would be a successor to himself. On the contrary, a number of addresses delivered by him on various occasions had made the opposite impression." The Will and Testament of Abdul-Baha (61). Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Many of Sohrab's comments and books should be read in the light of his attempting to make tactical amends with, or influence, Shoghi Effendi, who "excommunicated" him, as Shoghi Effendi had done with his own entire family. Ruth White and Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell went much deeper into what had gone wrong after Abdul-Baha's death, but Sohrab throws light upon various Bahai problems of the time, such as freedom of religious conscience, of which many such problems continue today for other Bahai denominations based upon the fraudulent will and testament of 1921. It is not clear what Sohrab's real motivation was.

Given subsequent Bahai history, it is clear Sohrab also failed to understand the wisdom and very profound change in religious form and conduct that Abdul-Baha taught when he repeatedly stated the Bahai Movement could not be organized. Abdul-Baha's Teaching runs entirely contrary to what people usually think of as "religion," and is still today a profoundly challenging paradox for many seekers and Bahais.

Ad hominem is an attack on the person. I would appreciate it if members of the Bahai denomination located in Haifa, Israel, would refrain from personal attacks and address ideas. For others, for the history of that approach by Haifan Baha'is, see The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning The Baha'i Technique - Slander & Shunning - Coercive Methods used in the Baha'i Faith - "According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." --Abdu'l-Baha

Re: Website Suggestion

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil

I'm thinking with the controversy possibly 'ruth' thought the post was being blocked and reposted it an hour later under another name...

This will be looked into, thanks for pointing it out."

Wil,

I'm afraid that's what may have happened. I apologize to people on the forum since I accidentally posted the same message a few times.

On technical level, the message at the end of the posts then, just flashed by, so I wasn't sure what the message even said.

Perhaps "I, Brian" made a relevant comment at post #62: "Firstly, my apologies - a couple of posts ended up in the moderation queue for some reason, now approved."

I believe I have the hang of this Forum now and shall endeavor to do better.

Best.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250949-post79.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by radarmark

...With the kind of doctrinal control I found in the literature, I now know why many are confused (especially me). Why is it Sikhs seem the only monotheistic religion not to fragment?"

...IMHO a group that is exclusional or triumphalist add little good to the world. For instance, the best attitude I ever saw along these lines was at a Native American Gathering. Wise men from various nations sat around (realize the linguistic and cultural differences among them is much wider than generally recognized). One elder finished his Hopi (I think) creation story and an Haudonashone elder said "I like it, now let me tell you our version". This went on for the evening and everyone genuinely accepted all the other stories as valid...

"Doctrinal control" has been called "review" since after 1921. It's a very comprehensive, oppressive censorship that has regularly even changed the facts of history to suit its own version of events. For instance, Nabil's account of early Babi history was a mere 70 pages; Shoghi Effendi turned it into several hundred pages of largely fiction. Denis MacEoin is especially insightful in that regard.

I have a long interest in the Sikhs, going back to the early 1990s, and have attended services at Gurdwaras on three occasions. Kabir's poems are especially important to me. You'll understand I consider myself a friend of the Sikhs when I say that actually they have had a history too of struggling for understanding and unity. Harjot Oberoi's book "The Construction of Religious Boundaries: Culture, Identity, and Diversity in the Sikh Tradition" (Chicago UP, 1994) is a particularly good account of it all. Alas, Sikhs too are human.

I fully share your view of the "exclusional or triumphalist" impulse. THAT is the problem of institutional, organized religion, according to Abdul-Baha's true interpretation of Baha'u'llah's teachings:

""This movement is not an organization—it is the realization of a new spirit. The foundation of that spirit is the love of God; and its method, the love and service of mankind. Many who have never heard of this revelation teach its laws and spiritual truths. These people are performing what Baha'u'llah hath commanded though they never heard of him."

Your citing American Indians speaks so well to the problem. As someone who lived on a reservation in Arizona for two years, I really appreciate your anecdote, which evokes warm and human memories for me. Those are the Indians I knew on a personal level too. I would add, though, as many observe, the Australian Aborigines, African traditional religions, and other non-doctrinal, non-creedal peoples and conceptions of transcendence also have the same universal perspective.

Religion isn't the Judeo-Christian-Islamic attempt to separate the sheep from the goats. Unfortunately, the Haifan Baha'is reverted to the Shiite mold under Shoghi Effendi's false "covenant," a creed that has already destroyed many individuals and families.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250790-post70.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by BruceDLimber
...Schaeffer's Making the Crooked Straight..."

The British scholar Denis MacEoin's review of Schaeffer's Making the Crooked Straight discusses its many flaws and Baha'i fanaticism. Denis MacEoin Reviews Making the Crooked Straight H-Bahai, 2001

Denis MacEoin, Crisis in Babi and Baha'i Studies Bulletin, (British Society for Middle Eastern Studies), Vol. 17, No. 1 (1990), pp. 55-61. <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensor...%20Studies.pdf>

Denis MacEoin, A Few Words in Response to Cole's 'Reply to MacEoin.' British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies, Vol. 18, No. 1 (1991), pp. 86-87. <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensor...%20MacEoin.pdf>

Professor Juan Cole on Denis MacEoin
Making the Crooked Straight - Reviewed by Denis MacEoin posted on H-Bahai, 2001

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250789-post69.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by arthra

...

Universal House of Justice - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia ...

Bahá'í Faith by country - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Like many subject areas, the Bahai pages on Wikipedia are completely corrupted and biased by the Haifan "editors" who long ago took control of every page they consider necessary "to protect the faith." Wikipedia is essentially a propaganda platform for the Wilmette-Haifan denomination. Use at your own risk.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250785-post68.html>

---

To understand the real history of the Bahai Cause in the Western world, it is necessary to read the works of Ruth White and Ahmad Sohrab. They are available on the Reform Bahai Faith website, under Early Reform Bahais, Reform Bahai Faith

Bibliography

Ruth White, Appendix to Abdul-Baha and the Promised Age, 1929. ("Is the Bahai Organization the Enemy of the Bahai Religion?") <https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteOEBR.pdf>

Ruth White Collection, Library of Congress,
1930 <https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteLCDocs.pdf>

Ruth White, Bahai Leads Out of the Labyrinth. Universal Publishing Company, 1944. 259 pages. (pages 257, 258, 259 restored) <https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteBLOL.pdf>

Ruth White. Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament. Beverly Hills: White, 1946. <https://reformbahai.org/images/WhiteABQWT.pdf>

Dr. C. (Charles) Ainsworth Mitchell - Certified Copy from the Library of Congress:
Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha

Selected Bibliography of works by Ahmad Sohrab:

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. Broken Silence: The Story of Today's Struggle for Religious Freedom. New York: Universal Publishing, 1942. Entire Book
PDF <https://reformbahai.org/images/SohrabBrokenSilence.pdf>

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. Abdul Baha's Grandson: Story of a Twentieth Century Excommunication. New York: Universal Publishing for The New History Foundation, 1943. Reprinted. H-Bahai: Lansing, Michigan, 2004.
Abdu'l-Baha's Grandson

Mirza Ahmad Sohrab. The Will and Testament of Abdul Baha, An Analysis. New York: Universal Publishing, 1944. <https://reformbahai.org/images/SohrabWTAB.pdf>

See also McDaniel v. Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, 27 NYS 2d 525 - 1941
https://scholar.google.com/scholar\_ca...dt=20000000002

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250782-post67.html>

Haifan Baha'is regularly violate the First Amendment rights of the Reform Bahai Faith and other Bahai denominations. Basically, their argument is often like a Catholic saying, "Be wary, they're Protestant," implying Protestants are heretics. The Reform Bahai Faith does not represent itself as the Baha'i Faith of Wilmette, Illinois, and Haifa, Israel. The very word "Reform" clearly indicates that fact, as does, for instance, Reform Judaism being different from Orthodox Judaism.

Notice the Haifan Baha'is here imply we do not have a Constitutional right to our own religious conviction, which we do, as do Christians of various denominations. Violating another religion's or someone's Constitutional rights is not "helpful." It's a crime under Federal Law. The content of their argument is "distasteful" to people of various open-minded religious and non-religious conviction, for it fails to demonstrate respect or tolerance of opinions other than the person's own opinion. In so far as that is the case, their remarks are spiteful. They express religious hatred.

Shoghi Effendi was the fanatical leader of the Wilmette-Haifan Baha'is and was actually the beneficiary of the 1921 fraudulent will and testament, forged by either himself or possibly his family. Again, it was judged as fraudulent by the distinguished document expert of the time at the British Museum in London, Dr. C. (Charles) Ainsworth Mitchell. See Dr. Mitchell's "Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdul-Baha." 1930. Certified Copy from the Library of Congress.

Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, Report on the Writing Shown on the Photographs of the Alleged Will of Abdu'l-Baha

None of the remarks here offer anything other than usual, typical equivocations of Shoghi Effendi, who like a coward evaded and hid from the pen of Ruth White, slandering her behind her back to the Baha'i flock of docile and malleable personalities as a "besotted woman," a misogynist slur, comparable to his referring to his brother's wife as a "low-born Christian woman." Such reprehensible tactics and opinions came from the pen of the "guardian" of the Haifan Baha'is.

If you would like to know more about the Reform Bahai Faith, please read About the Reform Bahai Faith at About the Reform Bahai Faith

Again, the US Federal Courts ruled *three* times against the Wilmette-Haifan Baha'i Faith from 2006 to 2010, in its attempt to destroy in court several Baha'i denominations, including the Reform Bahai Faith, which is specifically mentioned in the oral testimony before the Court on 02/20/2009. List of Documents in case

For obvious reasons, the Haifans have been obsessed with trying to keep knowledge of the lawsuit off the Internet, on all Baha'i forums that they control or influence.

Their open, unmitigated contempt for the US Constitutional rights of the Reform Bahai Faith and other Bahai believers is blatant and undeniable. All freedom-loving people should be concerned about their duplicity and power-hungry theocratic drive for control and domination.

FG

Member of the Reform Bahai Faith

Reform Bahai Faith

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250647-post58.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil
ditto!

So from what I can find 98% are of the Haifa variety?

The other nine denominations are distinct and distant minorities?

RW it seems you follow closely the contender of the will... why is it that most don't believe the contention? Is there other ill will at foot?

It seems reading about the Sunni Shi'ite split it is an old arguement more social/political than religious is this the same?"

Sure, more than welcome. Often in human history the majority is wrong. Martin Luther and countless came to that conclusion about Catholicism, the Shiites about the Sunnis, vice versa, and so on. Majority in and of itself means nothing, can and has throughout history been indicative of cunning and deceit.

Speaking as a Bahai since 1976, having spent decades reading the voluminous Bahai writings and books, watching, discerning, and experiencing deeds from words, I believe the historical record clearly demonstrates Abdul-Baha had a profoundly different vision of Baha'u'llah's teachings from what has evolved under the spurious will and testament and Shoghi Effendi. All of the objections of Arthra are the typical ones of Haifan Baha'is, repeatedly by rote for decades, from Shoghi Effendi, who clearly exhibited the tell-tale cunning of the guilty when it came to Ruth White. Artha's claims are covered in my piece,

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

In terms of the Sunni/Shiite split, I believe I have read that the issues are religious as well as social and political. Ibn Khaldun, often considered the most important Muslim historians, in his Introduction to History, chronicles and argues that under Muawiya and others, the princes took over Islam, subverting it into basically a political power symbol. That's what has often been argued happened to Christianity under Constantine. It is what has happened to the Bahai Movement under Shoghi Effendi.

Again, most of the Haifan Baha'is have been completely deceived and brainwashed into believing an entirely false version of the early Bahai events during Abdul-Baha's lifetime, so that many Baha'is are well meaning but in the dark, without knowing it. The entire "covenant breaking" mentality that has been inculcated into them prevents them from seeking the truth of their own tradition. Instead, unsuspectingly, they accept the half-truths and distortions concocted by Shoghi Effendi and others who benefited monetarily and otherwise from the forged document.

Much of all this is explained in more detail and relevant documents linked to at

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250582-post53.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil
ditto!

So from what I can find 98% are of the Haifa variety?

The other nine denominations are distinct and distant minorities?

RW it seems you follow closely the contender of the will... why is it that most don't believe the contention? Is there other ill will at foot?

It seems reading about the Sunni Shi'ite split it is an old argument more social/political than religious is this the same?"

Sure, more than welcome. Often in human history the majority is wrong. Martin Luther and countless came to that conclusion about Catholicism, the Shiites about the Sunnis, vice versa, and so on. Majority in and of itself means nothing, can and has throughout history been indicative of cunning and deceit.

Speaking as a Bahai since 1976, having spent decades reading the voluminous Bahai writings and books, watching, discerning, and experiencing deeds from words, I believe the historical record clearly demonstrates Abdul-Baha had a profoundly different vision of Baha'u'llah's teachings from what has evolved under the spurious will and testament and Shoghi Effendi. All of the objections of Arthra are the typical ones of Haifan Baha'is, repeatedly by rote for decades, from Shoghi Effendi, who clearly exhibited the tell-tale cunning of the guilty when it came to Ruth White. Artha's claims are covered in my piece,

Google "An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant"

In terms of the Sunni/Shiite split, I believe I have read that the issues are religious as well as social and political. Ibn Khaldun, often considered the most important Muslim historians, in his Introduction to History, chronicles and argues that under Muawiya and others, the princes took over Islam, subverting it into basically a political power symbol. That's what has often been argued happened to Christianity under Constantine. It is what has happened to the Bahai Movement under Shoghi Effendi.

Again, most of the Haifan Baha'is have been completely deceived and brainwashed into believing an entirely false version of the early Bahai events during Abdul-Baha's lifetime, so that many Baha'is are well meaning but in the dark, without knowing it. The entire "covenant breaking" mentality that has been inculcated into them prevents them from seeking the truth of their own tradition. Instead, unsuspectingly, they accept the half-truths and distortions concocted by Shoghi Effendi and others who benefited monetarily and otherwise from the forged document.

Much of all this is explained in more detail and relevant documents linked to at

Google "An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant"

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250570-post51.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil
ditto!

So from what I can find 98% are of the Haifa variety?

The other nine denominations are distinct and distant minorities?

RW it seems you follow closely the contender of the will... why is it that most don't believe the contention? Is there other ill will at foot?

It seems reading about the Sunni Shi'ite split it is an old argument more social/political than religious is this the same?"

Sure, more than welcome. Often in human history the majority is wrong. Martin Luther and countless came to that conclusion about Catholicism, the Shiites about the Sunnis, vice versa, and so on. Majority in and of itself means nothing, can and has throughout history been indicative of cunning and deceit.

Speaking as a Bahai since 1976, having spent decades reading the voluminous Bahai writings and books, watching, discerning, and experiencing deeds from words, I believe the historical record clearly demonstrates Abdul-Baha had a profoundly different vision of Baha'u'llah's teachings from what has evolved under the spurious will and testament and Shoghi Effendi. All of the objections of Arthra are the typical ones of Haifan Baha'is, repeatedly by rote for decades, from Shoghi Effendi, who clearly exhibited the tell-tale cunning of the guilty when it came to Ruth White. Artha's claims are covered in my piece,

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

In terms of the Sunni/Shiite split, I believe I have read that the issues are religious as well as social and political. Ibn Khaldun, often considered the most important Muslim historians, in his Introduction to History, chronicles and argues that under Muawiya and others, the princes took over Islam, subverting it into basically a political power symbol. That's what has often been argued happened to Christianity under Constantine. It is what has happened to the Bahai Movement under Shoghi Effendi. In Shia and Sunni, there are significant spiritual and religious nuances involved too, which is the same for Reform Bahais and the other Bahai denominations.

Again, most of the Haifan Baha'is have been completely deceived and brainwashed into believing an entirely false version of the early Bahai events during Abdul-Baha's lifetime, so that many Baha'is are well meaning but in the dark, without knowing it. The entire "covenant breaking" mentality that has been inculcated into them prevents them from seeking the truth of their own tradition. Instead, unsuspectingly, they accept the half-truths and distortions concocted by Shoghi Effendi and others who benefited monetarily and otherwise from the forged document.

Much of all this is explained in more detail and relevant documents linked to at

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250535-post47.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil

What about Bahai....

Can someone provide the various offshoots that still call themselves Bahai, their differences, their websites, their approximate percentage of adherents?"

I'm a newcomer here, so I have the 10 post limit prohibiting links.

Here's my account of "9 Bahai Denominations" from which I've removed the links:

The Orthodox Baha'i lawyer Jeffrey Goldberg in his Response to the 2006 lawsuit that is currently being brought against other Bahai denominations in the Courts of Illinois rightly points out that there are now 9 denominations of the Bahai Faith. (I believe there has now evolved a 10th Baha'i denomination.)

"There are at least nine organizations now existing and operating at some level that practice a denomination of the "Bahá'í" religion (Goldberg Decl., Para. 51; Schlatter Decl., Para. 18-21). One is not a Bahá'í because of which denomination one belongs to, one is a Bahá'í because of the system of set of beliefs and doctrines one holds. The NSA's own web site defines a Bahá'í in this manner (Schlatter Decl., Para. 43)."

Nine Denominations (10):

Four Orthodox Bahai denominations, believing Charles Mason Remey was the successor to Shoghi Effendi.

- 1) Orthodox Bahá'í Faith (the OBF Respondents, following Joel B. Marangella);
- 2) Bahá'ís Under Provisions of the Covenant (the other Respondents, following Leland Jensen);
- 3) Tarbiyat Bahá'í Community (formerly known as Orthodox Bahá'ís Under the Regency) (Rex King group);
- 4) Bahá'ís Under the living Guardianship (Donald Harvey as the third Guardian and Jacques Soghomonian as the fourth Guardian), an organization that is the successor to the Remey NSA;

Three denominations believing that the 1921 unprobated will & testament of Abdul-Baha is a fraudulent document and that Abdul-Baha did not appoint Shoghi Effendi or anyone else as a successor, but that he looked forward to a "spiritual democracy, not a theocracy," with ultimately an elected Universal House of Justice.

- 5) Reform Bahai Faith
- 6) Free Baha'is
- 7) Unitarian Baha'is

One denomination believing in the authenticity of the unprobated, unauthenticated will and testatment of Abdul-Baha, which they believe appointed in 1921 Shoghi Effendi as a guardian, a Shiite mullah or pope-like figure controlling a theocratic world order.

- 8) The Bahá'í Faith or Bahá'í World Faith (the Movant NSA) - (AKA Haifan Baha'is)

One denomination believing the next Manifestation of God is imminent, rather than appearing in a thousand years as prophesied by Baha'u'llah.

9) John Carre (followers of Alif a Third Manifestation of God - the third letter of the Greatest Name)
THE SPIRITUAL FOUNDATION OF SOCIETY
AN ISLAND OF HOPE
TARIQAT

10) I would add a 10th denomination. The so-called "unenrolled Baha'is" or "independent Baha'is" who in some sort of quixotic dream await the uhj to wake up or reform itself into the liberal, sane, moderate religion that both Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha clearly taught and envisioned, yet who, in their implicit exemplification of Abdul-Baha's Teaching that the Bahai Movement cannot be organized, essentially follow, partway, the practice of the Reform Bahais, who realize that the only course now open at this historical juncture is to renew and return to the Example and Interpretation of the Center of the Covenant, the 1912 Covenant, the authentic Covenant of Abdul-Baha.

For those unfamiliar with the Haifan NSA's attempt to deprive other Bahais of their first amendment rights of liberty and freedom of religious conviction, I urge you to read the documents involved on both sides at

Jeffrey Goldberg has further annotated a few of the nine denominations mentioned above:

"NSA-UHG = The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States Under the Hereditary Guardianship. This was the entity against whom the 1966 Judgment was entered -- the NSA under Mason Remey --.

PNBC = The Provisional National Baha'i Council of the United States - the national governing body of the Orthodox Baha'i Faith (OBF) and one of the entities the Wilmette NSA brought into court.

SIBC - This is the Second International Baha'i Council. Involved in the action brought by the Wilmette NSA, the SIBC was the governing body of the Jensen group. This has nothing to do with the OBF. The SIBC also was the name of an unrelated body under Mason Remey of the same name.

BPUPC - Baha'i Publishers Under the Provisions of the Covenant - One of the entities the NSA brought contempt charges against and it is related to the Jensen/ Chase group and not to the OBF."

For a historical perspective, see the documents at Lawsuit by Wilmette NSA Against Other Denominations

One can only hope the Court will be wise enough to understand what is truly involved. [which fortunately it did, in its November 2010 Opinion, available on the Internet via "The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience"; Google it or "9 Baha'i Denominations" for links.

Hope this helps give you the larger picture of Bahai. Most people who are only familiar with the Haifan Baha'is and their books and sources don't know anything about the others... for obvious reasons.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250518-post44.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by radarmark

In what short time I had looking over some academic references (let's hear it for Google Scholar), it appears you are right on, Ruth White (I wonder if I should call myself "James Naylor"). If you have time post or PM some references to me."

James Naylor, the Quaker? Wouldn't kiss the hand of George Fox! I like the spirit!

Google "Reform Bahai Faith" for the web site, under Early Reform Bahais > Ruth White. Skim down to the link to what is her most important book:

Ruth White. Abdul Baha's Questioned Will and Testament. Beverly Hills: White, 1946.

There are a lot of extracts from it on that web page, if you want to read or skim first.

Similarly, under Early Reform Bahais, Ahmad Sohrab, Julie Chanler, Janebe Fazl, C. Ainsworth Mitchell's Report, read or skim to your interest.

The integrity of soul of the first three was proven when the Haifan Baha'i imam Shoghi Effendi declared them kuffar, infidels...

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250511-post40.html>

---

Quote:

Originally Posted by I, Brian

That's an interesting comment - my impression is that the Baha'is are effectively a religion, where the tenets of Baha'u'llah are effectively infallible and take precedent over all over religious texts. So anyone seeking to join the Baha'is but lay claim otherwise would be effectively ostracised and certainly not treated as a fully functioning member of the Baha'i community."

I, Brian,

I think your system for categorizing religions makes perfect sense. Prove it, over time... The Haifan Baha'is are always trying to get in the big league, while not informing people of the realities documented at The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience Google, "The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience"

Well, yes, Bahais of all denominations consider Baha'u'llah the Promised One of all religions and traditions, though some minds tend to emphasize infallibility more than others in whatever religion. His son Abdul-Baha was appointed the Interpreter and Center of his Covenant, and it was he who brought the Bahai teachings into the modern world, to Europe, England, and the USA. Baha'u'llah had emphasized the progressive nature of religion in his writings, that religion evolves and changes, and Abdul-Baha understood the lesson, moderating and moving even further away from the Islamic milieu, which Baha'u'llah had already done in terms of Islam and Babism, the latter the early forerunner of sorts of Bahai, but very fanatical and violent in some regards.

Anyway, by the time Abdul-Baha spoke at the Friends Meeting House in London in 1913, he had found and developed a highly universal vision of religious oneness and unity. When he died in 1921, his family and lesser minds, not up to that of the Master, reverted basically to their Shiite past, creating a type of imamate they called the "guardian" under a spurious will, driving out thousands of early Bahais who had embraced the more universal, less organized and oppressive vision of Abdul-Baha. Ruth White was foremost in opposing the institutionalization that led away from Abdul-Baha's highly universal and moderate interpretation. She wrote several books that preserve the record of events, etc. The Reform Bahai Faith web site has all her books available on it, if interested, under Early Reform Bahais.

Like all of the institutionalized Judeo-Christian-Islamic tradition, the usurpers of the Bahai Movement or Cause, created a creed, calling it a Covenant, judged a forged document by the previously mentioned document expert at the British Museum, C. Ainsworth Mitchell. It has always been recognized by careful readers as not characteristic of Abdul-Baha's own words and deeds, a clear departure for many reasons. Part of the Haifan Baha'i reversion to the Shiite tradition was to drag back in "takfir," the stigmatizing and repudiation of "infidels," all of that kind of thing so reminiscent of the worst in all religious traditions, in order to take control, weed out the people capable of actually thinking, and so forth. The very long history of the rotten fruit of this supposedly "Baha'i" doctrine is also documented on the Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience site.

In my view, all these things are present here in the discussion in this thread.

Re: Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251337-post6.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil  View Post

How large is the reformed Baha'i denomination?

What cities have meetings?

Thanks for your interest.

We're a small denomination. Like many, especially at our stage of growth, we don't disclose our membership statistics, primarily because there are other Baha'i denominations that seek to harass and undermine our development, as the recent lawsuit in the US Federal Courts clearly demonstrated.

February 20, 2009 - 3-minute Mp3 Recording - Oral Argument

Judge Diane S. Sykes remarked about the implications of the Wilmette-Baha'i lawsuit that it "Clearly raises some Constitutional concerns."

Judge Bauer queried the lawyer for the Wilmette denomination, in terms basically about our right to exist and develop, "How about Reform Baha'i?" (scroll down for text or list to the 3-minute mp3 excerpt.)

Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

The verdict of the Court was delivered *three* times that the Reform Bahai Faith and all other Bahai denominations have, under the First Amendment of the US Constitution, the right to exist. Obviously that includes the Haifan Baha'is, who regularly seek, along the Shiite lines reimposed on the Bahai Movement by the spurious will and testament, to deny (takfir) the existence of other Bahais, essentially denouncing them as infidels (kufir) and apostates, reminiscent of the worst in the Islamic heritage, which both Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha had clearly moved away from, the former writing specifically that he had "removed from the Book" such things.

While the decision was taken not to announce our meetings ahead of time online, any longer, you can consult, if interested, our RBF Update page which was formerly used for such things. The Reform Bahai Faith remains an active Bahai denomination, participating in religious meetings and activities, sharing the vision, teachings, and interpretation of Abdul-Baha, on and off line. For example, I and other Reform Bahais participated yesterday in a Red Cross blood drive for Muslims for Life, sponsored by the Ahmadiyya Muslim Community.

Reform Bahai Faith, Update

There's a very long history of Haifan-Wilmette Baha'is using back-channel communications to smear and discredit individuals, denominations, and websites, and others, with sys ops, moderators, administrators, and so forth, along the lines suggested above, leading thereby to the suppression of dissident voices. The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience documents decades of that sort of thing, on and off line.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

The US Federal Courts have spoken on our right to exist. You might find the letters of the Reform Bahai Faith submitted to the Court of note along these lines, toward the bottom:

Reform Bahai Faith, Amici Curiae

Hope this helps.

Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251031-post1.html>

Long suppressed by Bahais of other denominations, Reform Bahais have returned to, and renewed, Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Abdu'l-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

"After Abdul-Baha—whenever the Universal House of Justice is organized it will ward off differences."

Of the several Bahai denominations, the Reform Bahai Faith is the only denomination that follows Abdul-Baha's authentic Covenant— delivered in New York, which is why it came to be called the City of the Covenant—not the fraudulent will and testament of 1921.

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

"Address upon the Covenant" by Abdul-Baha in text format:

New York City, June 19th, 1912.

Translated by Dr. Ameen U. Fareed.

Parentheses supplied.

Tomorrow I wish to go to Montclair [New Jersey]. Today is the last day in which we gather together with you to say farewell to you. Therefore, I wish to expound for you an important question, and that question concerns The Covenant.

In former cycles no distinct Covenant had been made in writing by the Supreme Pen; no distinct personage had been appointed to be the Standard differentiating falsehood from truth, so that whatsoever he was to say was to stand as truth and that which he repudiated was to be known as falsehood. At most, His Holiness Jesus Christ gave only an intimation, a symbol, and that was but an indication of the solidity of Peter's faith. When he mentioned his faith, His Holiness said, "Thou art Peter"—which means rock—"and upon this rock will I build my church." This was a sanction of Peter's faith; it was not indicative of his (Peter) being the expounder of the Book, but was a confirmation of Peter's faith.

But in this dispensation of the Blessed Beauty, (Baha'u'llah) among its distinctions is that He did not leave people in perplexity. He entered into a covenant and testament with the people. He appointed a Center of the Covenant. He wrote with His own pen and revealed it in the Kitab-el-Akdas, the Book of Laws, the Book of the Covenant, appointing him (Abdul-Baha) the Expounder of the Book. You must ask him (Abdul-Baha) regarding the meanings of the texts of the verses. Whatsoever he says is correct. Outside of this, in numerous tablets He (Baha'u'llah) has explicitly recorded it, with clear, sufficient, valid and forceful statements. In the tablet of The Branch He explicitly states, "Whatsoever The Branch says is right, or correct; and every person must obey The Branch with his life, with his heart, with his tongue. Without his will not a word shall anyone utter." This is an explicit text of the Blessed Beauty. So there is no rescue left for anybody. No soul shall, of himself, speak anything. Whatsoever his (Abdul-Baha's) tongue utters, whatsoever his pen records, that is correct; according to the explicit text of Baha'u'llah in the tablet of The Branch.

His Holiness Abraham covenanted with regard to Moses. His Holiness Moses was the Promised One of Abraham, and He, Moses, covenanted with regard to His Holiness Christ, saying that Christ was the Promised One. His Holiness Christ covenanted with regard to His Holiness "The Paraclete," which means His Holiness Mohammed. His Holiness Mohammed covenanted as regards The Bab, whom He called, "My Promised One," His Holiness The Bab, in all His books, in all His epistles, explicitly covenanted with regard to the Blessed Beauty, Baha'u'llah—that Baha'u'llah was the Promised One of His Holiness The Bab. His Holiness Baha'u'llah covenanted, not that I (Abdul-Baha) am the Promised One, but that Abdul-Baha is the Expounder of the Book and The Center of His Covenant, and that the Promised One of Baha'u'llah will appear after one thousand or thousands of years. This is the Covenant which Baha'u'llah made. If a person shall deviate, he is not acceptable at the Threshold of Baha'u'llah. In case of difference—Abdul-Baha must be consulted. They must revolve around his good pleasure. After Abdul-Baha—whenever the Universal House of Justice is organized it will ward off differences.

Now I pray for you that GOD may aid you, may confirm you, may appoint you for His service; that He may suffer you to be as radiant candles; that He may accept you in His Kingdom; that He may make you the cause of the spread of the light of Baha'u'llah in these countries, and that the teachings of Baha'u'llah may be spread broadcast.

I pray for you, and I am pleased with all of you, each one, one by one; and I pray that GOD may aid and confirm you. From Montclair I will come back to you. New York is favored, I go away and I come back to it. The friends in New York must appreciate this. At present, farewell to you!

Published November the Twelfth, nineteen hundred and twelve.

The ninety-fifth anniversary of the birth of Baha'u'llah.

The Bahai Assembly of Washington, D.C.

An Analysis of Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant
Comments on Abdul-Baha's 1912 Authentic Covenant

Reform Bahai Faith
<https://www.ReformBahai.org>

NEW >> Reform Bahai Faith Forum <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250118-post1.html>

After the US Federal Courts ruled, on December 29, 2010, for the THIRD TIME, against the lawsuit filed by the Wilmette Baha'is against Bahais of other denominations, the Wilmette Baha'is appear to have managed to destroy the Topix Forum, in one way or another, that Bahais of several other denominations had used for over three years to discuss the lawsuit against them. Google "true seeker orthodox bahai" for details.

This type of fanatical tactic is exactly what Wilmette-Haifan Baha'is have done for many decades, as extensively documented on various websites. That the Wilmette Baha'is would demonstrate such unmitigated contempt for the ruling of the Federal Court system, probably through Baha'is working in one way or another under the so-called "Continental Board of Counsellors" for "protection and propagation," should give thoughtful people reason for serious concern. For further incidents:

Google "Comments posted to The Chicago Tribune Forum"

PDF copies of pages on Topix documenting nearly 4,600 (4,626+) posts to that forum, from Google's cache copies as of July 9, 2011, have been preserved at the link above:

Baha'i rift_ Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith - Topix1

Baha'i rift_ Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith - Topix6

Baha'i rift_ Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith - Topix215 (documents 4,626+)

Baha'i rift_ Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith - Topix229

Baha'i rift_ Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith - Topix230

See also Thread Orthodox believers can call themselves...

....

For those unfamiliar with the record of Wilmette-Haifan Baha'is online and elsewhere, Google "The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience"

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250452-post30.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by radarmark

"anyone (from atheist to pagan) can be a Quaker"

I agree. Exactly. That's basically the interpretation of Abdul-Baha too. Reform Bahais don't accept any creed because they're always used to coerce people, for example, the bogus "covenant" or "will and testament" of Haifan Baha'is.

Abdul-Baha publicly delivered his authentic covenant in 1912 in New York. It's been suppressed ever since his death.

""one religion" (and I believe that is what Schuon and Fox are getting at)."

Fritjof Schuon and other Perennialists are right on target in my personal opinion. A metaphysician with a universal perspective, Schuon was actually also a Sufi, as Seyyed Hossain Nasr, another Perennialist, explains in his recent book on Islam. I've read several of their books and find them very compatible to what I find in Abdul-Baha's own open, universal vision of the unity of the religions. Nasr describes some of the Perennialists, though, as Muslims, essentially, and that one must become Muslim, in an exclusive sense, to follow the correct spiritual path. Bahai really isn't a secret platform for Islam, except for some Shiite Iranian Baha'is, but is on the journey beyond all the historical pasts toward a universal Form, one we are all seeking together, in my view.

Most presentday Baha'is have little to no knowledge about the early years of Abdul-Baha's actual teachings and interpretation of what he called the Bahai Movement or Cause. That's reflected in some of the comments here. He died in 1921 and it was only then that a fraudulent will and testament was used by his family to take control of the religion, reverting significantly back to their Iranian Shiite heritage, as I've already suggested. Although both Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha had repudiated such negative practices in Islam as takfir, denouncing others as infidels, and taqiyya, dissimulation and lying, for the "good of the Faith," Shoghi Effendi brought all that kind of thing back, moving away from universalism to exclusivism, in his pursuit of a Bahai theocracy, which Abdul-Baha had clearly rejected, emphasizing a "spiritual democracy."

If interested, my "A Response to Takfir" was published in a London journal, Religion 38 No 4 2008. Just google the title.

Ruth White was an early Bahai who rejected the unprobated, unauthenticated will and testament, wrote several books about it, and hired the foremost forensic researcher of the time at the British Museum to examine the purported will. He declared it a forgery in 1930. google "Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell" She's been loathed by Haifa Baha'is ever since...

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250363-post22.html>

Quote:

Originally Posted by wil

"we are interfaith, but as we are the culmination and the religion that naturally follows and has superceded whatever religion you believe in we are more interfaith than the restuvya?"

"So you agree the only one true religion is as stated by the Bahai? That all other beliefs are now superceded?"

I also agree there is only one religion, one all encompassing belief, but each religion is there for its adherents towards a common end."

Wil,

Abdul-Baha, the son and appointed interpreter of Baha'u'llah's teachings, taught a universal conception of the nature of interfaith understanding and identity when he said, speaking in England, "You can be a Bahai-Christian, a Bahai-Freemason, a Bahai-Jew, a Bahai-Muhammadan."

Similarly, he emphasized that it was not "organized" religion but an "attitude" or frame of mind and is important and that followers of all faiths can have it:

"The sun of truth rises in each season from a different point of the horizon—today it is here, yesterday it was there, and tomorrow it will appear from another direction. Why do you keep your eyes eternally fixed on the same point? Why do you call yourselves Christians, Buddhists, Mohammedans, Bahais? You must learn to distinguish the sun of truth from whichever point of the horizon it is shining! People think religion is confined in an edifice, to be worshiped at an altar. In reality it is an attitude toward divinity which is reflected through life."

There are several Bahai denominations. (Google "9 Bahai Denominations") The other Baha'is here are members of the Baha'i denomination located in Haifa, Israel, which follows a very exclusive interpretation of the Bahai teachings that was imposed in 1921, attempting to create essentially a Catholic-like or Shiite imamate. They've basically reversed the open, universal teachings of Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha into a political power symbol, as so many religion have done throughout history.

Abdul-Baha brought his father's faith into the modern world in an open, universal form, emphasizing that one does not even have to be a "member" to be a Bahai! reformbahai dot org for further details.

Re: Website Suggestion <https://www.interfaith.org/forum/250013-post7.html>

The membership statistics are grossly inflated for the Haifan Baha'i denomination. That's a fact that's widely recognized by many people, Bahai or otherwise. See for instance,

Google "Estimates of the Baha'i membership" on religioustolerance dot org

Google False Statistics for Baha'i Membership in the USA, India, & Elsewhere

The U. S. Federal Courts Ruled *Three Times* against Wilmette, Haifan Baha'is, who were trying to deprive other Bahai denominations of their First Amendment rights to religious freedom:

November 23, 2010 - Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals rules against Haifan Baha'is of Wilmette, Illinois. A link to the Court's own Opinion in the case is available online. Google Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

I don't believe any Bahai denomination belongs in the first rank of the major religions while it says one thing in public and behaves the way the Wilmette-Haifan Baha'is do in the dark.

Re: Afghan Supreme Court rules Bahai Apostates

<https://www.interfaith.org/forum/251813-post13.html>

"You are using identifying marks which, whether you like it or not, have become the hallmarks of the larger organization which you ought not to wish to, and have no right to, confuse yourself with. "

False. They all existed long before they fobbed off their fraudulent will and testament on the gullible and uninformed.

"That was never even a question..."

You might want to spend more time than you have in researching the Haifan Baha'is through sources other than their own.

"You have not presented anything more than "cursory" evidence, which I tell you is seriously unconvincing."

Enjoying yourself?

"I have no opinion about whether their reading of the original interpretation is or isn't valid."

That definitely explains a lot. I suppose every forum has a troll or two who gets his kicks this way.

"As a group, you are a break-off from the larger body."

It doesn't sound as though you've read a single word thus far.

"Shunning."

Please review everything posted above, including the links, especially in terms of actually reading...

"variants of "Universal House of Justice""

You're repeating their falsehoods and smears. Abdul-Baha referred to the Universal House of Justice existed for more than a decade before the Haifans usurped it and other such terms. Most Baha'is don't do the reading either to realize the fact, which is exactly what the Haifans rely on.

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Quotation from the Inter-Parliamentary Union - Universal Declaration on Democracy, Item #21:

"The state of democracy presupposes freedom of opinion and expression; this right implies freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers."

<https://www.ipu.org/>

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

K. Paul Johnson

---

2002

Selected Messages for 2002

---

2000

Selected Messages for 2000

---

1999

Re: trb & arb FAQ \(Frequently ASKED Questions\) 10/11/99

Re: My case - a letter to my friends 7/28/99

Re: Letter of resignation 7/27/99 Re Terry Culhane & Paul Dodenhoff

Re: Letter of resignation 7/27/99 Re Terry Culhane & Paul Dodenhoff

Re: The Pickering Tape 7/22/99

Undermining others' faith 6/7/99

Re: House warns of opposition "campaign" 6/2/99

---

1998

Re: Maneck's AOL slander of me, trb, Juan Cole, etc.... On The Baha'i Technique, etc.... 12/30/98

[\[bahai-faith\] fw K. Paul Johnson re Relentlessly aggressive cult apologists](#) 9/19/98 General reflections, including on Bahais

Re: Censorship at alt.religion.bahai 9/16/98

Re: Censorship at alt.religion.bahai 9/15/98 Aside on the Baha'i Technique

[Re: fw Juan Cole \[bahai-faith\] mutilation theology \(further\)](#) 9/10/98

Re: Censorship at alt.religion.bahai 9/10/98

Re: Why I left \( \(K. Paul J\) 8/19/98

Re: Why I left \( \(K. Paul J\) 8/19/98

Re: Why I left \(expanded version\) 8/17/98

Re: Freedom of Choice 6/29/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] Glaysherspam](#) 6/29/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] fw Re: \[bahai-faith\] Censorship vs Free Speech](#)
6/10/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] Censorship vs Free Speech](#) 6/5/98

[\[bahai-faith\] Softening the rhetoric](#) 6/5/98

All religions unified this century? \(Baha'i\) 5/20/98

[Re: \[bahai-faith\] Fw: Internet - norms and values \(normen en waarden\)](#)
5/20/98

Re: Re your site \(Bahai\) 5/20/98

---

1997

Re: Michael McKenny's expulsion from Baha'i Faith 9/2/97

Re: Michael McKenny's expulsion from Baha'i Faith 9/3/97

Re: Michael McKenny's expulsion from Baha'i Faith 9/4/97

Re: More SRBahai censorship \(Re: Re Non-sense\) 8/10/97

Re: Talk.Religion.Bahai Fails Official Complaint 3/28/97

---

Cf. His article from Gnosis: "Baha'i Leaders Vexed by On-Line Critics" Winter 1997

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: All religions unified this century? (Baha'i)
Date: Wednesday, May 20, 1998 10:41 AM

Having had repeated problems with the moderators at soc.religion.bahai in posting this, I hope to get some discussion going in talk.religion.misc. An explanation of the difficulties with srb will follow the main part of the post.

In Baha'i World Faith, p. 280, `Abdu'l Baha writes that "fierce and contending religions, hostile creeds and divergent beliefs will reconcile and associate, notwithstanding their former hatreds and antagonism. Through the liberalism of human attitude demanded in this radiant [20th] century they will blend together in perfect fellowship and love...The age has dawned when human fellowship will become a reality. THE CENTURY HAS COME WHEN ALL RELIGIONS SHALL BE UNIFIED..." [caps mine for emphasis]

My question to Baha'is is how they can reconcile the conflicting beliefs that 1) `Abdu'l Baha was infallible in the words found in Baha'i-published literature and 2) that the unification of religions in the future can be accomplished only by their members all becoming Baha'is. While it's clear that AB's vision is far from fully manifest as this century closes, it's also quite evident that the spirit of ecumenicism within Christianity and among world religions has made considerable advances since his time. But AB's vision of religious unity in the future as depicted in the passage above is exactly what I as a New Age Christian long for and believe in, and 180 degrees away from the universal domination of one religion's institutions and beliefs which has become the prevailing expectation among contemporary Baha'is.

That was the gist of what I wanted to post to srb a couple of months ago when someone else posted the line about "The century has come when all religions shall be unified." I waited until after the thread was gone, but posted in reference to that recently posted quote. Srb moderator Bill Hyman refused to accept my post, saying he could only accept references to the Baha'i writings if they were *documented* from Baha'i sources. (A rule invented for my case, and never apparent in the posts from Baha'is, AFAIK.) His tone was rather unpleasant at this point, saying "I don't have time to look for it" and "since Baha'is believe in independent investigation of truth, you need to find that quote before you can post on the subject." Well, I spent a fruitless hour going through Dejanews, like looking for a needle in a haystack. Finally gave up and wrote back to Hyman (politely) saying that I couldn't find the post, but could I simply *inquire* on srb if anyone remembered the quote in question? At this point he got really nasty, insisted that there was no such quote, couldn't possibly be, `Abdu'l Baha would never have said such a thing. And made it clear that I was getting the "enemy of the Faith" treatment. So I gave up. But last week I found, on Fred G.'s website, a link to a search engine for Baha'i texts which allowed me to call up all AB's passages with the word "century" in them. Took five minutes at most to find the passage in question. Hyman almost surely knew of this resource and deliberately chose not to tell me about it in order to prevent my posting on the topic to srb.

When I did find the passage, I posted it to srb on Friday with similar commentary to what is above, and a single line about having been previously subject to harsh unfriendliness from a moderator who denied such a passage existed. By Tuesday I had neither seen the post on srb or gotten a rejection letter, so I posted again, this time addressing myself to a moderator and asking what the story was. Michele Smith answered me immediately saying that she was now on duty as moderator, had not been before, and would check into the situation. But I have heard nothing now a day later.

There's a real problem over at srb, in my opinion based on recent dealings. Earlier moderators like Dick Detweiler or Alma Engels would never had behaved in this obstructionist manner.

Cheers,
KPJ

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vsla.edu>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] Censorship vs Free Speech
Date: Friday, June 05, 1998 2:28 PM

According to George & Marlana:

>
> IMHO:
> I have seen a lot on the Net (and here) about censorship and free speech. I > have also had some personal dealings with censorship in some newsgroups. I > question, though, if any freedoms are in question here.

How so? For example, my own freedom to raise a question about a prophecy of `Abdu'l Baha in a way that cannot conceivably be seen as rude, hostile, etc. or violating any newsgroup rules.

I see no reason why
> everyone should be allowed to print anything they want, anywhere they want.

Straw man. The fact is that no one is asking for that. Just for consistent, fair application of the guidelines.

> There is enough of a subject choice that a person should be able to find a > newsgroup sympathetic with their beliefs that would allow them to freely > vent. If I am a guest in a church of another faith, I don't bring a picnic > lunch to the service and eat it during the sermon.

A newsgroup is not church. I've seen a great many Eckists treat nonmembers who raise difficult issues on alt.religion.eckankar freak out and accuse the critics of "violating their space." But newsgroups are *public* space, and even those groups devoted to some religion or other are virtually always explicitly for inquirers as well as members.

And if I have anything to > say about the what went on or what was said I'll ask the proper person at > the proper time and in the proper manner. Meetings in real life follow rules
> I see no difference online.

Some differences: people don't conduct religious ceremonies in newsgroups or lists that could be disrupted by "inappropriate" questions or comments. Believers who discuss their faith on a public forum are inviting public visibility and response, rather as if Baha'is took over public parks for their firesides or deepenings. Srb has a responsibility to the non-Baha'i public, by virtue of being a public newsgroup. That's not equally true of a private list, where behavior like that of Bill Hyman would be less reprehensible.

If you come into my local study group meeting and start asking skeptical questions in an unfriendly tone about Edgar Cayce, or criticizing the ARE, you'll probably get a chilly reception. If you do the same on a public newsgroup, say talk.religion.newage, no one could accuse you of invading private space. Baha'is generally are too control-oriented when it comes to expression of independent ideas or dissent, and cyberspace is the Waterloo for such attitudes. It's a new world order and censorship is part of the old.

Cheers,
Paul

----

List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>

To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com

To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com

--

Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vsla.edu>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] fw Re: [bahai-faith] Censorship vs Free Speech
Date: Wednesday, June 10, 1998 10:00 AM

According to George & Marlena:

> >I
> >>> have also had some personal dealings with censorship in some newsgroups.
> >I
> >>> question, though, if any freedoms are in question here.

quoting me:

> >>
> >>>How so? For example, my own freedom to raise a question about a > >>>prophecy of `Abdu'l Baha in a way that cannot conceivably be seen > >>>as rude, hostile, etc. or violating any newsgroup rules.
> >>
> >> I see no reason why > >>> everyone should be allowed to print anything they want, anywhere they > >want.
> >>
> >>>Straw man. The fact is that no one is asking for that. Just for > >>>consistent, fair application of the guidelines.
> <snip>
>
> Dear Paul,
> It seems to me, based on what you have just written(above), that unlimited > freedom to write anything you want IS exactly what you want.

How is that? I specifically stated that the post in question was not in any way rude, hostile, or in violation of newsgroup rules. The problem isn't even that it was *rejected* but that it was simply thrown away, and when I asked for an explanation there was none. This surely violates the procedures that srh has set in place. And above, I say that all I'm asking for is consistent, fair application of the guidelines. I really don't see where you're coming from on this, with such an accusation.

> Insulting and demeaning people by calling them names is not what I would > call freedom, but an abuse of freedom. And that kind of abuse is what I am > against.

Where in the world do you see me insulting and demeaning people by calling them names? Surely not in the passage quoted above. I'm mystified. And surely not in the post which was discarded without an explanation; if I'd kept a copy you'd be able to see the evidence. But the gist of it was posted to this list, followed by an explanation of all the hassles Bill Hyman put me through.

The only possible reason for your making such a harsh accusation that I can imagine is that you think my line "Straw man" was intended to call *you* a name, to insult and demean you by calling you "straw man." Well, what kind of goofy namecalling is that? What could it mean? If this misapprehension is at the root of your accusation, then let me clarify. The dictionary definition is "an argument or opponent set up so as to be easily refuted."

Thus what I was calling a straw man was your setting up the critics of srb moderation as people who want to be able to say whatever they want wherever and whenever they want. You were making *me*-- or rather your imagination of me-- a straw man for the sake of argument, caricaturing my position. Now you're sticking to that caricature in spite of clear evidence against it, and imagining that you see namecalling where there is none. You can easily attack and defeat such a position, but it's an artificial construction designed (unconsciously perhaps) to be easily defeated. The critics of srb moderation want simply 1) clearcut policies 2) fair and evenhanded application of them 3) responsive and helpful moderators rather than rude and hostile ones.

That's NO BIG DEAL. For most of its history srb had all these things in my opinion, and only recently has it slid (ever more rapidly, it appears) in the direction of arbitrary, high-handed, hostile, nonresponsive moderation. If Dick Detweiler or Alma Engels, for example, were on the team now, we wouldn't see the kinds of abuses that are cropping up, IMO.

> PostOn.
> George

Agreed!
Paul
-----

List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>
To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com
To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com
--
Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vsla.edu>
To: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: Freedom of Choice
Date: Monday, June 29, 1998 2:27 PM

In article <6n2m1o$bgm@news3.newsguy.com> you wrote:
: YU ZIR wrote in message <14246-35941FDA-5@newsd-161.iap.bryant.webtv.net>...
:
: In Fred's case I speculate, (since it happened to me), the milk went
: sour early on in the interchanges with SRB, and particularly with Bill
: H.

This seems plausible. I've never seen any outright obnoxious, hostile behavior from any other moderator. But have yet to see anything *but* that from this one.

In my case, my attempts to ameliorate the hostility that I sensed
: from Bill H were, as I perceived it, rebuffed by him.

Amen again, and worse, his aggressiveness escalated despite my not mirroring it.

No problem for : me. My response was simple and effective: to walk away from SRB and
: post on ARB.

Simple, yes. Effective, no, since ARB is read by one percent the number who have access to SRB.

:
: My personal impression of SRB is that it is in the hands of cadre
: loyalists who can be adequately defended on the technical letter of the
: law,

Not Bill H. in the case of throwing away a post and never writing to the author, nor in the case of refusing an explanation when one was requested.

but who really do as much as they can get away with to discourage
: those of us who make cogent arguments they don't like.

Sounds absolutely true. The cogency of my argument was just too much for him, in light of his earlier denial that any such passage as the one I was discussing could possibly exist.

:
: That would
: cause me discomfort if an organization I belong to did that.
: If you're comfortable with SRB, support it. Just don't cross
: them.

Which doesn't even mean confronting them, or being unpleasant, or attacking the Faith. All it means is politely, cogently, and informatively raising an issue they don't want raised.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: srb censored 6-29-98
Date: Wednesday, July 01, 1998 6:56 AM

-----Original Message-----

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vsla.edu>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Cc: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>
Date: Monday, June 29, 1998 10:49 AM
Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] Glaysershspam

>Dear Mr. Hyman,

>

>Since I see you posting here, I take the opportunity to ask you >why my post about `Abdu'l Baha's prophecy about religions being >unified in the twentieth century (a prophecy which you strongly >asserted did not exist, in a previous and quite unfriendly >message to me) was never posted on s.r.b. And why was I never >notified of any reason for its nonappearance? And why when I >wrote again asking for an explanation, and Michele Smith said she >had no idea what had happened but would forward the question to >the moderator on duty at the time, there was *still* no >explanation. Fred, who goes out of his way to be aggressive and >name-calling with you, at least gets the courtesy of a rejection >letter. I, who have gone out of my way not to reciprocate the >hostile tone you have taken with me, do not. What gives?

>

>Sincerely,

>Paul Johnson

>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Re: Why I left (expanded version)

Date: Monday, August 17, 1998 12:25 PM

Seeing an exchange about the honesty and reliability of an ex-Baha'i's story of "why I left" inspires some comments. There are so many ways to parse the question "Why did you leave?" that I think a couple deserve mention. First would be "What were your conscious thoughts at the time you chose to withdraw concerning the reasons for doing so?" Another would be "What reactions were going on unconsciously at the time that you can now look back on and recognize as motivating factors?" In my own case, the answers to these two questions would be quite different. First would be that the claims of the Bab and Baha'u'llah about their own status and their place in history no longer were persuasive to me. Second would involve so many aspects of being turned off by dogmatism, implausible readings of history, totalitarian hopes for the future, etc. etc., that it took me years to realize all the factors involved.

I'd think that at this stage Tim might be learning more of those second-order motivating factors, since it takes a long while to process such things.

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Re: Why I left ( (K. Paul J)

Date: Wednesday, August 19, 1998 9:41 AM

zutetflute@aol.com wrote:

: Your approach to the Baha'i faith is quite different than Tim's, however,
: and I think you understood the basic teachings better than he did.

Yes, and perhaps. I see Baha'u'llah as someone with an important and timely message, who due to the blinders of the culture in which he lived interpreted his role as messenger to mean something far more grandiose than what it really was.

: You address what you see as problems with the Baha'is without being : insulting and demeaning.

Thank you. That didn't prevent the srb moderators from treating me as an enemy of the faith, rejecting posts for the most specious of reasons or none at all. And of course there was a lengthy exchange with R. Schaut who insisted that I was indeed an enemy of the Faith. I sure don't regard anyone who criticizes ARE or Cayce or Jesus or Christianity as an enemy of the faith.

People can actually enter a dialogue with : you without feeling that their beliefs are being insulted, just disagreed
: with.

Perhaps this is a case of what goes around comes around. Although I've taken plenty of extreme personal hostility on the Net from Baha'is, in the days when I actually was one, and I the fold, people were entirely pleasant and respectful and I retained many Baha'i friends. Whereas Tim seems to have had a much harsher experience.

I think Tim upset people not because he left the faith, but : because he felt it necessary to mock their beliefs and insult people
: for whom they feel a great deal of reverence. In my opinion he has : problems that go beyond what happened to him with the Baha'is. He is : displacing his anger on a convenient target.

If I may interpret the situation in the absence of deep insight into the particulars: when people are really angry and lash out at followers of movements they themselves once followed, I think the root anger is at themselves. "How could I have fallen for anything so stupid/dogmatic/deceptive/etc.?" Then that anger gets turned outward and those who are still followers become scapegoats. Part of the work of an ARE study group is to do exercises during the week trying to practice the lesson we are studying. Recently one of the disciplines was to (paraphrase) see whatever belief system a person adhered to as being the right and proper place for their development at this time, and to bless them. Sounds like a good way to live.

Cheers,
Paul

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Re: Why I left ( (K. Paul J)

Date: Wednesday, August 19, 1998 12:37 PM

Richard Schaut (RSSchaut@email.msn.com) wrote:

:

: K. Paul Johnson wrote in message <35dad616.0@vlinsvr>...

: >specious of reasons or none at all. And of course there was a : >lengthy exchange with R. Schaut who insisted that I was indeed
: >an enemy of the Faith.

:

: Mr. Johnson, I believe your memory is faulty. I've said that it's not hard
: to see why someone might consider you an enemy of the Faith.

Pardon me for missing the subtle distinction between arguing (at length, in several exchanges) that it was *justifiable to describe me as* an enemy of the Faith, and actually saying that I *was* one. Don't agree that different memories are at fault here, since *at the time* I felt that you were calling me an enemy of the Faith. Even now, your distinction doesn't seem a very meaningful one. Especially when the real issue wasn't what I was being *called*, but how I was being *treated* on the basis of a perception which you were defending as justified.

I've said that

: it's difficult to consider as a friend someone who thinks we should set
: aside one of our most basic and unifying principles for the sake of some
: superficial change.

Sometimes our friends are those who will tell us things we don't want to hear but are in our best interests to know. But no, I would never claim to be a friend of the Baha'i Faith, or Christianity, Islam, Buddhism, Theosophy, etc. They're all institutions and I'm not friends with institutions. But try to be friends with Christians, Buddhists, Baha'is, Theosophists, etc. while retaining freedom to dissent respectfully from their views. In any case, there is a huge category of people who are neither friends nor enemies, so saying I'm not a friend does not imply that I'm an enemy.

What most basic and unifying principles, and what superficial change are you talking about?

But I've never insisted that you are an enemy of the : Faith.

Pardon me for misunderstanding. Were you, though, saying that it was justified for Baha'is to treat me as one? (Hasten to add that only a handful of Baha'is have done so, but these act so very proud of themselves when they're into that mode.)

:

: I have never questioned your intentions, Mr. Johnson. I've merely pointed : out how the things you think might be good for the Baha'i Faith are viewed,
: by at least most Baha'is, as destructive of the Faith.

:

And I would not call Baha'is "enemies of humanity" even though I have pointed out how the things you think might be good for humanity are viewed, at least by most non-Baha'is who know about Baha'i visions of the future, as destructive of hard-won freedoms and pluralism.

Cheers,
PJ

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: fw Juan Cole [bahai-faith] mutilation theology (further)
Date: Thursday, September 10, 1998 7:06 PM

Richard Schaut (RSSchaut@email.msn.com) wrote:

:
: FG wrote in message <6t9c1d$m80@news1.newsguy.com>...
: >For the umpteenth time, I'm not the moderator, I'm not
: >the moderator, I'm not the moderator!!!
:
: What does this have to do with forwarding messages from makelist? Why
: forward any messages at all?

Stepping up to bat here: you asked what was different about Fred selectively forwarding posts that espouse only his own POV and the srb moderators selectively rejecting posts that espouse opposing POVs. The difference is that they are **moderators**. They have **power** to determine what gets expressed and what doesn't. They have a policy that requires them **not** to reject posts simply because they don't like or agree with them or their authors. This policy has been ignored or twisted, as I and many others have experienced. Fred has no such power to keep people's views from being expressed. You are accusing him of a sin of **omission**-- not forwarding things you think he ought. He, and I, and others accuse the srb moderators of a sin of **commission**-- rejecting posts, harassing authors, etc. because of ideological factors. That's far more serious.

No individual has a responsibility to forward willy-nilly all kinds of posts that espouse all points of view. It's presumed that as individuals people have their own axes to grind and won't grind others' for them. But as **moderators** the folks running srb have a much higher responsibility. They are **not** supposed to be active partisans for a particular viewpoint, discriminating against others. They are supposed to be fair and impartial because they are acting not as individuals but as moderators.

:
: >I forward what I want, none too consistently, and
: >shan't accept criticism lightly for it.
:
: None too consistently? Why, then, are the forwarded items consistently
: those that attack the Baha'i Faith and consistently not items that present : opposing views on the issues discussed in the messages you forward?

Well, um, might that be due to human nature? You seem to be accusing Fred of some specific wrongdoing. In fact, have you ever seen **anyone** consistently argue for both sides of a controversial issue in the religious domain? Or forward posts other than those that support his/her own views?

Rick, I must say that you in my observation have been every bit as consistent in defending the Baha'i administration and its supporters and attacking its critics as Fred has been the reverse. Pot, kettle.

PJ

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: Censorship at alt.religion.bahai
Date: Tuesday, September 15, 1998 9:43 AM

Richard Schaut (RSSchaut@email.msn.com) wrote:

**:

: I am not, however, accusing you of any nefarious activity. You, on the other hand, are.

Au contraire. I didn't accuse you, or any specific person, of anything. Just speculated about the likely cause of phenomena observed. Too strongly worded, but still not personally accusing anyone. Whereas, it seems to me that you are accusing me personally of something pretty nefarious: libel. Who, exactly, was libeled?

**:

: Just so there's no misunderstanding as to the principle: one doesn't go around accusing, or even suggesting, nefarious conduct without sufficient evidence.

Tell that to the Baha'is who feel it perfectly justifiable to start throwing around "disloyal to the covenant" and "enemy of the faith" on the flimsiest of pretexts, about specific persons.

**:

: Dr. Cole's rhetoric is, indeed, quite eloquent. It is, nonetheless, rhetoric, and rhetoric which is substantially devoid of sufficient facts to support his rhetoric. Then, again, I shouldn't be surprised to see that you would be persuaded by such rhetoric.

What are you insinuating here? Why?
It's not his rhetoric that persuades me, but the observation of Baha'is in action over the last few years.

**:

: We can discuss Dr. Cole's credibility in these matters, but I'm quite sure
: you don't want to.

What are you insinuating here? Why?

I have substantive proof.

Of?

**:

: span a number of different issues is of no importance here? Why would a
: cancellation of their posts be suspect, but not one of mine?

Large number and simultaneity.

**:

: Not a particularly bad assumption. You post a message. You don't see it.
: You start wondering what happened to it.

Or perhaps you do see it, and when it disappears you assume that it expired.

**:

: >Certainly not in the sense I was using it.

**:

: Then you're not using it, you're abusing it. In logic,
that's called
: "equivocation".

That's your insistence on a possible *implication* of a term. I repeat the question: IF a Baha'i, inspired by what the writings
and institutions say about covenant-breakers not deserving a hearing (which is putting it mildly), decided to cancel Marangella's posts, that person would be a self- appointed
WHAT? Prankster, or censor?

**:

: No, Mr. Johnson, I'm being perfectly candid. `Abdul- Baha's and Shoghi
: Effendi's instructions regarding Covenant-breakers is abundantly clear: we

: avoid them. We don't ban their books.

That's a very confused picture. In my observation, in real life and on the Net, a large number of Baha'is think that reading CB literature is forbidden. When I tried to post otherwise on srb,
with the eminent Dr. Robert Stockman as my authority, I was shouted down.

We don't deny them their civil : rights.

You are not in a position to. If your imagined Baha'igoverned world were a reality, I wonder what would happen.
:
: No. What it comes down to, Mr. Johnson, is that those who have accused
: Baha'i institutions and their supports of wrong-doing have not presented
: sufficient evidence to support their accusations.

I gather that you are sincere in your use of the word
"sufficient." But sufficiency of evidence is, alas, usually a subjective realm. I find it almost as hard to imagine what you would consider "sufficient" evidence of wrong-doing by the House-- something you presumably regard as impossible by definition-- as to think of what would be "sufficient" evidence to prove to a Mormon that the BOM is not historically accurate.

Indeed, many such : accusations are libelous, and warrant at least an apology.

To whom, by whom, for what exactly? I will admit that in the Mulligan case at least my speculation was premature and should not have been expressed before checking with him first. But you seem to identify with the Baha'i community, speak for it, etc.

And therefore seem to feel that you are personally owed an apology by me and anyone else who expresses a negative view of Baha'i institutions and culture. Considering the thousands upon thousands of negative judgments of Christianity expressed by Baha'is in my hearing or on the Net, with very little evidence, and the extreme implausibility of apologies from any of these Baha'is, I think your expectation/demand/whatever is excessive, unrealistic, and extremely partisan.

:

: Yes, I've seen the extent to which you are persuaded by accusations that are

: not adequately supported by the evidence.

THERE YOU GO AGAIN!! "Not adequately supported by the evidence"

IN YOUR OPINION. Don't imagine that your opinion is God's judgment.

:

: There's a rather clear principle of justice, Mr. Johnson, a principle that I : think you may well have forgotten in your fervor and your desire to be : considered "liberal" and "free-minded". That principle is: people are

: innocent until proven guilty.

If that principle were followed by Baha'i administration and individuals in their condemnations of their fellow believers, I would have very little to complain about regarding Baha'i affairs. But character assassination by innuendo is the preferred way of dealing with anything remotely resembling dissidence. Seems like that's exactly what you're doing to Juan

Cole in your message. Saying I don't want to know what you've "got" on him, thus attacking me but insinuating you have some awful proof of unspecified guilt on his part. If that's not character assassination by innuendo, what is?

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: Censorship at alt.religion.bahai
Date: Thursday, September 10, 1998 7:47 PM

Richard Schaut (RSSchaut@email.msn.com) wrote:

:
: Clearly, you saw no other reasonable explanation. At no point did you _ask_
: as to whether or not there might be other explanations. You reached a : conclusion, however tentative, in a matter about which you profess
: ignorance.

You are jumping to conclusions about my own thought processes without asking the one who knows, which seems contrary to the principles you are espousing here. Actually I did see another reasonable explanation-- self-cancellation-- but thought that conceivable on Mulligan's part but not Marangella's. The coincidence of the two was striking.

:
: It's not your suspicion that amazes me. What amazes me is the fact that : people reach conclusions on matters about which they profess ignorance.

Not knowing how cancellations can be forged has little to do with knowing that it's possible. I don't know *how* precisely what I'm typing gets to your screen, but I still conclude, on reliable evidence, that it does.

: As for the "dark possibilities of Baha'i fundamentalism," even the : existence of this alleged "Baha'i fundamentalism" is far more a matter of
: rhetoric than it is a matter of fact.

Not at all. We can come up with objective definitions of fundamentalism as a historical phenomenon in 20th century Christianity, and then compare non-Christian movements to it to see how they display the same characteristics. Juan Cole has posted eloquently on this score.

: Oh, because one might want to test a hypothesis before running with it to
: some public forum.

What would your cancelling your own posts have to do with Marangella cancelling his? Or Mulligan? Isn't it obvious especially in the former case that there is cause for suspicion?

: about such things before putting one's foot so squarely in one's mouth.

As you know, I now have written to both people and we will see what Marangella has to say.

:
: Indeed, why in the world would you post such an inflammatory tentative : conclusion without having first gathered sufficient information as to at : least know what you're talking about?

You keep harping on the *technical* knowledge. I do know, very well, how Baha'is feel about Joel Marangella. And how a fair number have felt about Tim Mulligan. And that forged cancellations occur.

:
: No. I _conclude_, based upon the extent to which I would expect these : people to complain about it had someone else cancelled their messages, that

: they themselves cancelled their own messages.

That rests on the assumption that they knew of the cancellation.

: >: Thus, it takes a substantive leap to go from the appearance of a couple
: of
: >: cancelled messages to the conclusion of censorship. One needs a bit more : >: evidence of such, and that evidence is lacking here.

Eight so far, and from about the most controversial people who have ever posted to arb.

:
: And, let's not forget that the word "censorship" implies an official
: sanction in some way.

Certainly not in the sense I was using it.

Even the existence of a few rogue cancellation
: messages demonstrates little with regard to "censorship" unless one can : prove who sent those messages, and can prove that the person was acting : under the knowledge and sanction of some official institution. Absence any : evidence of such sanction, all one has is evidence of a prank--a single : individual acting inappropriately.

You are awfully disingenuous here. Are you really pretending that someone cancelling posts by Marangella (especially) would be simply an individual pulling a prank? That *official* and *institutional* attitudes toward that gentleman would not have any impact on the person who would pull such a "prank?" I do not suspect that any Baha'i institution knew of the forged cancellations, if they occurred at all. But censorship can be official or unofficial. If a person forged cancellation messages based on his institutional loyalties, in order to prevent an opposing view being heard, that's a self-appointed censor.
Which is all I ever suspected.

: So, Mr. Johnson, you have a long way to go in order to justify even a : tentative conclusion of "censorship".

By your definition, yes. But what word would you use, if what I suspected were true? If an individual Baha'i, whose attitudes toward Marangella were shaped by institutional policies, decided to forge cancellations in order to prevent others from reading his posts? A prank, by my definition, is random and playful, not ideologically directed and purposeful.

This is all rather beside the point until we hear from Marangella. But even if he denies cancelling his posts, you will presumably insist that this proves nothing and that whoever did cancel them was probably not ideologically motivated anyhow.

What it comes down to, of course, is that you are resolutely fixed in your conviction that Baha'i institutions and their supporters are entirely innocent of any charges made against them. This conviction has been apparent in years of your posts that I have read. Whereas I am equally fixed in my conviction that these institutions and their supporters are in many cases guilty as charged-- not necessarily every case. That leaves me the flexibility to admit that perhaps this case is purely coincidental and nothing underhanded was going on. But I don't see that you have any room at all to admit that a supporter of the Baha'i administration might take it upon himself to cancel posts by a "Covenant-breaker" in the belief, institutionally shaped and nurtured, that such people are spiritually diseased and their words should never be read by the faithful.

Can you admit that possibility?

PJ

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

-----Original Message-----

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vsla.edu>

To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>

Date: Wednesday, May 20, 1998 5:11 PM

Subject: Re: [bahai-faith] Fw: Internet - norms and values (normen en waarden)

>As a witness to the rise and fall of Talisman I, may I offer some >comments on passages from the letters of the House:

>> -----

>>

>> >From a letter of 20 July 1997:

>>

>> Not surprisingly, the abuse of Internet discussions on the Faith and >> its Teachings has had the effect of greatly distressing friends who >> became aware of it.

>

>"Perceived" abuse would be more accurate, as the way this is >stated implies that the original "wrong" was the way more liberal >or critical Baha'is discussed certain issues. My recollection is >rather that all went smoothly until more >conservative/fundamentalist Baha'is came on board, were outraged, >and started an atmosphere of contention.

>

> That the response has included, as your letter >> suggests, a degree of intemperate criticism, inappropriate comment and >> unjust accusation is lamentable, but also not surprising, for >> contentiousness begets contention.

>

>This has the ring of blaming the victim, since the vast majority >of personal attacks were made against the people who are >implicitly accused of "starting the trouble" and they rarely >responded with comparable ferocity. When they did, it was after >continued personally hostile treatment from their fellow >believers. Thus I would say that the contentiousness of the >conservative/fundamentalists was what led to the contention by >the scholars. Going back over the files of Talisman, one would >find that Scholl, Cole, Linda Walbridge, Hazini, and other >supposed "contentious" people were actually getting along just >fine until attacks from the right wing started. And even when >under attack they never matched their antagonists' level of >hostility as I recall.

>

> You should be confident that the >> House of Justice will not permit a climate of intolerance to prosper >> in the Baha'i community, no matter from what cause it arises.

>

>I'd love to believe that but cannot in light of the evidence.

>

>snip

>> >From a letter dated 8 Feb 1998

>>

>> Some of the protagonists in the discussions on the Internet have >> implied that the only way to attain a true understanding of historical >> events >> and of the purport of the sacred and historical records of the Cause >> of God is through the rigid application of methods narrowly defined in >> a materialistic framework. They have even gone so far as to stigmatize >> whoever proposes a variation of these methods as wishing to obscure >> the truth rather than unveil it.

>
>This is quite a misrepresentation of the discourse I remember >from Talisman. I do remember when Mark Foster told me that he >had been writing to the House accusations of this nature about >Cole et al. I was horrified at this turn of events, which ended a >year or two of friendly relations between us. Juan, John and >others never said "the only way to attain a true understanding" >was through either rigidity or materialism. They said rather >that the only way to write about history, *if one is a historian >responsible to the professional standards of the field*, is by >adhering to those standards. And the attacks they got from >fellow Baha'is who were not historians stigmatized them as "weak >in the Covenant" etc. No one was stigmatized for "proposing a >variation on those methods." All published Baha'i histories have >varied from those methods more or less, and they were not >attacked. It was rather those who consistently attacked the use >of scholarly standards in approaching Baha'i history who were >(rightly, IMO) accused of wanting to stifle the search for truth.
>>
>snip
>Lots of reasonable comments here, but-- >> unscholarly attacks and calumnies which may periodically be injected >> into their discussions by the ill-intentioned. Discussion with those >> who sincerely raise problematic issues, whether they be Baha'is or >> not, and whether -- if the latter -- they disagree with Baha'i >> teachings, can be beneficial and enlightening. However, to continue >> dialogue with those who have shown a fixed antagonism to the Faith, >> and have demonstrated their imperviousness to any ideas other than >> their own, is usually fruitless and, for the Baha'is who take part, >> can be burdensome and even spiritually corrosive.
>
>
>It's so easy to see "fixed antagonism to the Faith" and easy >to be blind to one's own fixed antagonism to anyone who questions >certain elements of the Faith. Easy to accuse others of >imperviousness to alternate ideas, easy to be blind to one's own >rigidity. I am sorry for the breakdown in communication that has >occurred, but can see here a consistent note of placing most of the >burden of blame on the wrong shoulders. Fortunately there are >thousands of pages of documents from Talisman I which will allow >future historians to disentangle the facts of the matter from the >interpretation they have received.
>
>Cheers,
>KPJ

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: Censorship at alt.religion.bahai
Date: Wednesday, September 16, 1998 10:08 AM

Richard Schaut (RSSchaut@email.msn.com) wrote:

:
: You accused un-named, unknown, persons of having censored certain posts to : alt.religion.bahai. That whomsoever presumably committed this act is : unknown to you doesn't magically justify your making the accusation.

That wasn't the point. You're treating the speculation as if it were directed at a specific person, when it was not.

: Indeed, the mere fact that you have no idea who did it should be sufficient : reason for you to _not_ suggest that there is censorship afoot.

Your position is clear, but it's your subjective judgment. I can accept the argument that I should have asked the cancellees first, but now you're suggesting that even in the face of denials from each of them that they cancelled their own posts, no one would have the right to speculate about the motives of the person(s) who did? It seems that your attitude that you are supremely qualified to dictate to others what they can and cannot post is, well, censorious.

:
: I can assure you, Mr. Johnson, if I am ever to accuse you of libel, then it : won't merely appear that I am. It will be quite obvious.

I can assure you, Rick, that your continual personal hostility, calling me "Mr. Johnson" repeatedly, and now making an implicit threat, might be winning you points with your own constituency but does not make a positive impression of Baha'i for outsiders who read it.

: >Tell that to the Baha'is [...]

:
: And, here we have one of the more classic weasils. Other people do this, so
: it's OK for me to do this. No. It isn't.

That's "weasel" and not the argument at all. What I'm saying is that you are hassling me, for thousands of words now, for a speculation about possible persons who may have done something, and have been silent to the best of my knowledge in cases where specific people have been maligned. You say otherwise:

:
: And, for the record, I have been as strident with Baha'is about their : accusations as I have been with you in this message. That you might have : never observed this is also not particularly compelling reason for you to : suggest that I'm employing some double standard.

What was your position on the publication, in May 1996 I believe, in the American Baha'i, of a letter from the House denouncing a group of unnamed people, leaving Baha'is to figure out for themselves who these people were? Who they were was fairly obvious and I'm sure word got around fast. No due process, no rights to defend themselves, and no protests from you. Or were there?

:
: You brought up Dr. Cole, not me.

Specifically on the objective indices of fundamentalism, and how these apply to contemporary Baha'i practice.

I've merely pointed out that his rhetoric
: is substantially devoid of supporting evidence.

No, you didn't "point out" that, for such a phrase implies a fact rather than an opinion. You *claimed* it and there are voluminous archives for people to make up their own minds about whether your *unsubstantiated claim* about Cole is valid.

snip
: If Dr. Cole's rhetoric isn't persuasive, then why did you bring it up in the : first place?

You brought it up. I said nothing about rhetoric in general, but specifically about the meaning of "fundamentalism" and the ways in which this was applicable to Baha'i, about which Cole has been eloquent.

: >: We can discuss Dr. Cole's credibility in these matters, but I'm quite : sure
: >: you don't want to.
:
: >What are you insinuating here? Why?
:
: Is there an echo in here? I'm not insinuating a thing. I'm stating it : directly: Dr. Cole alleges some things that stretch credibility beyond the : breaking point. However, since it's off topic of this thread, I'm not sure : you really want to get into it.

First you were "quite sure" that I don't want to discuss it. Now you are backing down to "not sure" that I *do*-- a more modest and defensible statement. And the former claim implied something about me, which was unclear, therefore an insinuation rather than a statement or question.

:
: So, all I have to do to have you suspecting that someone's trying to silence
: me is to cancel a large number of my posts? Does the word "coincidence"
: mean anything to you?

It was two people's posts, two people unpopular to say the least with a certain kind of Baha'i.

:
: >Or perhaps you do see it, and when it disappears you assume that
: >it expired.
:
: Why would you assume this when messages you've posted before the one's that
: got cancelled are still available?

That's two degrees of speculation. I saw no posts by Marangella or Mulligan still available.

:
:
: >That's your insistence on a possible *implication* of a term.
:
: No. That's my insistence on the primary meaning of the term

The word is spelled *insistence* and you are stretching your claim here. First you said that "censor" *implied* official sponsorship, and now you say it's the primary meaning. Primary meanings vary from one dictionary to another.

:

: >I repeat the question:

:

: You can repeat loaded questions until you're blue in the face, and I won't
: answer them. Sorry.

It was a simple question about the difference between a prankster and a censor and which term is appropriate in the hypothetic instance.

:

snip

:

: Baha'is are strongly discouraged from reading Covenant-breaker's material,
: and the strength of the discouragement can be easily misunderstood as a : personal prohibition. That Baha'is would somehow take this personal
: prohibition as a reason to go out and violate some of the other clear
: instructions about how we are to treat Covenant-breakers requires a very
: huge leap.

Considering the extent and volume of Baha'i violations of clear instructions about how they should treat one another, and followers of other faiths, that I've witnessed on the Net, I think it requires a very huge leap to assume that they would not do such a thing.

:

: Then I can't be accused of censoring anyone, can I? Nor can any other
: Baha'i for that matter.

Not being in a position to deny civil rights does not equate to not being in a position to censor. As you know, that occurs daily on srbb and in Baha'i publications.

:

: I appreciate the vote of confidence. Have I ever given you reason to : believe I've been insincere in any other exchange we've had?

Yes. You just wrote a classic self-defeating argument, since your appreciation of the "vote of confidence" is quite evidently insincere and sarcastic. Not the first time I've seen it.

:

snip

:

: Accusations of censorship are not matters of opinion. They are matters of : fact. Have you forgotten this distinction?

Have you forgotten that I used "apparently" and that the entire point of the post was to ask Fred to look into it and see what had happened?

:

: This is the same fallacy you committed earlier. Moreover, it's loaded with fallacy

snip

:

: It never ceases to amaze me how the first I hear of any form of character
: assassination or innuendo comes from the people who are alleged to have been : the target.

Shouldn't amaze you. You would not, I suspect, be willing to call it that or show an ounce of sympathy to the victims of such treatment when it comes from infallible mouthpieces of God.

: >Seems like that's exactly what you're doing to Juan

: >Cole in your message.

:

: Here we go with this "seems" stuff again. Can you, for a change, stop

: trying to read between the lines in order to find stuff that simply isn't
: there?

It was *in* the lines. You said that he used rhetoric but his arguments were devoid of substance, that you had incontrovertible evidence of his unreliability. But you offered no substantiation of this accusation, and attributed the reason for that to my unwillingness to discuss it. Of which you were "quite sure" at first, but have now backed down to "not being sure" of.

:
: I can assure you that, if I am ever to accuse Dr. Cole of anything, it won't
: "seem" like I'm doing so. It will be quite obvious.

And so it was. But it is still innuendo, when you make vague charges with no details.

:
:
: Regards,

You asked me about insincerity? What's with the hostile, hectoring "Mr. Johnson" stuff and then closing with a friendly word?

: Rick Schaut

It's clear to me that you're in a "win/lose" mindset with all critics of the Baha'i institutions, and that this struggle to vindicate them has a pretty high priority for you. Whereas among my interests, Baha'i affairs are way down the list, even if we just count religious movements. Thus I don't have the interest or the will to continue debating you. If that strikes you as a victory, so be it. Congratulations. But in all sincerity, I would urge you to consider in future, when you are facing a critic in a public forum, that your tone reflects on the cause you think you are defending. I don't think you are winning any points for that cause in the eyes of onlookers, however much your coreligionists might encourage you to take this approach.

Sincerely,

PJ

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: <kpauljohnson@my-deja.com>
Subject: Re: Rollcall of bahai Victims....
Date: Monday, November 20, 2000 6:16 PM

In article <3A177FD0.5B4BCC7F@usq.edu.au>, Ron House <house@usq.edu.au> wrote:

**>
> Alison put her review on Talisman only a day or two, no more, before
the > news was received that she had been expelled.
Bureaucracies simply > cannot operate that fast, so we know for sure it was not the review.

You and apparently Karen are making a HUGE error in logic here. All you can possibly argue based on the above is that "we know for sure it was not the appearance of the review on Talisman" that caused the expulsion. But the powers that be in Haifa *knew about the review*
WELL before that publication on the Internet. It had after all been submitted for review, become controversial, and sent to Haifa for approval/disapproval. It was ONLY AFTER THE REVIEW WAS SPIKED BY ORDERS OF HAIFA that Alison posted it on Talisman.
Thus, Haifa already decided to silence the review; I think they had also already decided to expel Alison for having written it (and a host of other supposed sins of attitude based on things she'd written on the Net but never been warned about.)

Cheers,

PJ

>
> --
> Ron House     house@usq.edu.au
>                https://www.sci.usq.edu.au/staff/house > Whoever tells a lie cannot be pure in heart -- and only the > pure in heart can make a good soup. -- Ludwig Van Beethoven
>

Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
Before you buy.

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: loyal opposition in Baha'i
Date: Wednesday, December 15, 1999 3:01 PM

dfiorito@my-deja.com wrote:
: To me it is not a division between acceptable and unacceptable. To me
: this seems to be about methods and fundamentals.

Methods seem to arise as a justification only when unacceptable views are at issue. No one has been punished or threatened for unacceptable methods of propounding accepted views on the net, AFAIK.

snip

:

: But let's get to the heart of the matter. There is a difference
: between expressing the idea that one disagrees with a policy of the NSA
: and one disagrees with 'Abdu'l-Baha and Shoghi Effendi.

Of course. But there is also a difference between disagreeing with something AB or SE said, and rejecting their authority to say it. Only the latter would place one outside the pale. Or disobedience to the policy one disagrees withn.

There are
: channels set up to consult with administrative bodies on issues that : one disagrees with. Consultation is the vehicle for agreement.

: Disagreeing with the authorized interpreters _should_ land you in hot : water – especially when you take those disagreements into the public : space.

FSVO "should." Is saying in cyberspace that AB (like everyone else of his time period) didn't know what we now know
about physics and his remarks show it, or that SE (like everyone else of his time period) didn't understand homosexuality as contemporary mental health professionals do, treason? If so, then you're compounding the problem of claiming fallible people to be infallible with the problem of persecuting anyone who dares point out their fallibility.

**:
: Attacking the fundamentals of the Baha'i Faith will lead to disunity

Imagining every jot and tittle ever said to be "fundamentals" and every disagreement to be "attacking" has caused a zillion times more disunity.

Cheers,

PJ

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: Warning - Dejanews Posting Rules
Date: Monday, June 14, 1999 2:01 PM

: > > On Sat, 12 Jun 1999 11:22:35 -0500, Saman Ahmadi
: > > <perspolis@earthlink.net> wrote:
: > > >
: > > >Slander is, as I understand, a civil offense in the United States of : > > >America -
: > > >it is, one could argue, a proper limitation on free speech. The next
: > > >time
: > > >Fred Glaysher, or his cyberspce permutations, posts anything regarding

: > > >the murder of Dr. Daniel Jordan being a work of Baha'is, I will first : > > >pursue action through Dejanews.

Speculations about the religious affiliation of an unknown murderer are not slanderous, whatever else they may be. I'll agree they are objectionable. Who is being slandered? All Baha'is?

: > > >One question would be my legal standing in bringing suit against Fred
: > > >Glayersher - well, I am a Baha'i and Glayersher's phrasing of his calumny
: > > >so far has been, praise God, all-inclusive.

Just because Fred speculates that there was Baha'i involvement does not give one particular Baha'i the right to claim to be slandered. If Fred's words constitute an accusation against specific persons or a specific group of Baha'is, they would have cause to sue for slander. Otherwise, I doubt it.

PJ
From: "K. Paul Johnson" <pauljo@cstone.net>
Subject: Re: Review as censorship
Date: Wednesday, March 29, 2000 5:40 PM

kalamity@my-deja.com wrote in message <8btji2$g2j$1@nnrp1.deja.com>...
>I've just got the news today from H-Baha'i that Alison Marshall has been >removed from the rolls for her outspokenness.

Outspokenness-- there's a new charge! They keep expanding the pretexts for ousting people. Inventing new thought crimes.

I haven't yet been able to >get into t9 to find out more about what happened,

Nothing was in this morning's digest.

but it doesn't even >seem like there was even any warning. Is this some kind of new approach >to those who don't tow the party line? - just boot them out without even >talking to them?

New in 1997 when it was done to Michael McKenny.

This >is really vile! And cowardly, since I would guess that just suddenly >tossing somebody out of the Faith

Tossing someone out and admitting that's what you're doing is light years better than doing so and calling it something else, as was done in the McKenny case. (Declaring him "not a Baha'i" as if they were describing an objective fact rather than creating one.)

PJ

just avoids more ugly stories about >people being intimidated by Counselors and the like.
Just what in the >hell did this lady do to deserve this?

Wrote a book review that dared criticize something emanating from Haifa; put it on the Net after it had been rejected for publication.

From: "K. Paul Johnson" <pauljo@cstone.net>
Subject: Re: >>Freddy's facts.....
Date: Monday, March 20, 2000 11:18 AM

Mark Elderkin wrote in message ...
>As I have done before and shall continue to do: I think it is very important >for the general public here be able to communicate with Fred.

They can. His email address is attached to every post.
All that posting his home address and phone number adds to the equation is that it gives people the chance to harass him or worse in person.

His continual >spamming and his attempt to inflame posts between this news server and >others, is a clear attempt to disrupt the normal flow of discussion.

For which the appropriate punishment was decided by you, right? On what basis?

He >needs to be told that his actions are not welcome.

Tell him that, then. Don't use terror tactics to support your religion; it makes you and the religion look awful.

With a little research, >it is quickly possible to attribute the majority of his presentation as >absolute rubbish.

Then do that research and post it, don't just assert it, and DON'T do this (details removed):

>Mr. FG, xxxxxxxxxx Street, Rochester, MI. 48307-2819 >to call: xxxxxxxxxx in the USA.
>

You make your motives clear in another post to which I'll respond.

PJ

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Relentlessly aggressive cult apologists

Author: K. Paul Johnson author profile

Email: pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu

Date: 1998/09/18

Forums: talk.religion.misc

-----
----

There's a particular toxic type of person who hangs out in religious/spiritual newsgroups and lists, and I think that the common features of this type are more important than the particularities. Most of my unpleasant encounters with them have involved Theosophists, with Baha'is and Eckists in second and third place. But for each of my own such interactions I've witnessed dozens more involving others, with a wide range of groups.

The chief preoccupation of this type is to use the Net to defend a belief system against criticism. But that in itself doesn't make a person a RACA. Reasoned debate about the merits and demerits of a religion is a good thing, and many honorable people do it. It's the relentlessly aggressive nature of the cult apologia-- sometimes rather **passive** aggressive-- that marks the particular type I'm talking about. The aggressive part of the "defense" means that the topic of discussion is always immediately shifted from the belief system itself to the **person** who criticizes it. The relentless aspect of the type is that they place a very high priority on having the last word, consistently take a "win/lose" approach to discussion, and will go on and on indefinitely, exhausting their opponents who usually have far less invested in the subject and a lower threshold for giving up the debate as hopeless.

What is most mysterious to me about such people is that they are relentlessly and personally aggressive to those they debate, yet are in complete denial of this behavior. Indeed, anyone who points out that they are being RACA will be told that this is imagination, there is nothing personal or aggressive about their style of argumentation, blah, blah. The funniest and most mind-blowing part of it all is that they use this very denial as part of a **further** strategy of RACA. That is, turning discussion of their own behavior into an attack on the mental health of their victims, saying that you must be crazy if you think they're behaving like hateful bastards. Do they really believe this? Are they fooling themselves but no one else? Or is there a conscious, cynical strategy here? Who knows? What I do know is that they behave **as if** they were thinking this: "My chief goal is to stifle all criticism of My True Religion by being so unpleasant to anyone who dares criticize it that they eventually give up and go away saying 'I'll never mess with a _____ again.'"

Several strange paradoxes characterize the dynamics of interaction with such people. One is that they manage to arrange things, in their own minds at least, so that they "win" no matter what. If you give up and say "I've had it trying to talk to you, forget it," their response is "I WIN!! My peerless logic and overwhelming evidence has so cowed you that you have no choice but to give up." But if you keep arguing with them, they win in another way-- tying up your energy and time in a fruitless endeavor to make some kind of breakthrough that can never ever happen with such people. Damned if you do walk away, damned if you don't. But another paradox is that their self-perceived victories are usually defeats for the belief system they espouse, in terms of the impression they make on outsiders. How many people read them and think "YUCK! If *that's* what [Baha'is, Eckists, Theosophists, etc.] are like, to hell with them!"

I welcome comments from anyone who has engaged in fruitless discussion with RACAs, or better yet who has ever seen one evolve into a decent human being capable of open, give-and-take interchange. Is it possible?

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: Maneck's AOL slander of me, trb, Juan Cole, etc....
Date: Wednesday, December 30, 1998 10:09 AM

Dear Sue and Pat,

It seems to me that part of what Fred calls "the Baha'i technique" is in fact far broader. It's the technique of all defenders of some religious orthodoxy or another in response to criticism of their beliefs or organization. And you're engaging in it here. Some principles by which it can be discerned:

1. Show scornful contempt for all criticisms, and the individuals making them. This has the advantage of furthering group solidarity and encouraging believers to regard criticism as contemptible. It also tells them "This will happen to you, too, if you step out of line." Unfortunately, it has the disadvantage of saying to observers, "We true believers are a bunch of hostile, sarcastic nasties who don't care at all what people in the outside world think of us, since we're too busy bashing critics to worry about the impression our tone or attitude makes." (See the Eckists or Scientologists or fundamentalist Christians on Usenet for real virtuosity in this regard.)
2. Personalize, personalize, personalize. If you can relentlessly focus attention on the individual(s) raising difficult issues, you just might keep yourself and others from facing the issues themselves. Not facing the crucial issues is of utmost priority.
3. Polarize at all possible opportunities. Never give an inch. Don't acknowledge even a single point that an "enemy" makes, or modify your vigilant tone for an instant. Prove that you're a "spiritual warrior" for the "true faith." Kindness is weakness, forbearance is never appropriate when God's on your side.

Some comments on your post in particular:

Sue (sw.unit02.msn@cwix.com) wrote:

: Pat:

: You silly guy...telling the undisputed truth with the proofs to back it up
: can't, by any stretch of the imagination, be considered slander--even by
: Fred, who it seems, routinely, "goes there" in the *absence* of truth and

That's the most backhanded, hostile compliment I recall seeing in a long time. Let's see-- what you're saying is that "Fred wouldn't consider your post slander" and topping it off with sarcasm and personal invective.

: proofs. You must appreciate that to Fred calling for a Yes vote was a : perfectly legitimate activity, especially, if one can incite others to : really go after it (his *denunciation* of them was weak and lame).

But he did denounce them? Do you really expect that someone who has been repeatedly denounced by Baha'is opposing creation of a newsgroup is going to be *equally* offended by lobbying *for* it? If you expect nonpartisan evenhandedness from Fred, you should also expect it from yourself and those who denounce him. Do you? Have you ever seen it? Don't blame him for lacking a virtue you're conspicuously showing yourself to lack too. (And, beating you to the punch, I'm biased, we're all biased-- read the pro- and anti-impeachment posts for a real love fest of people calling one another partisan without admitting they themselves are.)

Why,
: it's just good politics!!! Whereas, calling for a No vote represents an
: affront to "Truth, Justice, and the American Way".

In fact, there is a huge moral difference involved. A yes vote makes possible a venue for discussion that a large number of people have repeatedly said they want. A no vote denies them that option. It's much worse to lobby against creation of a forum for free discussion than to lobby for it, morally, although technically both violate Netiquette.

:
: If you are indeed "insignificant", which in my esteem is false, it is : because Fred cannot figure out how to use your comments to contribute to the : pathos of his self-appointed victim role and thereby, gain sympathy for his : "cause".

I.e., everything Fred is saying about the Baha'i Faith can be contemptuously dismissed because his "cause" is an entirely personal and delusional victimhood. Any kind of remark about him or treatment of him is OK, since his victim role is self-appointed, therefore **you're** not victimizing him.

I'm afraid you're going to have to become way more extreme to land
: on Fred's website--perhaps denouncing your faith, criticizing the premises
: of it's institutions, or just saying he is so right about the extreme : oppression that he suffers from the unjust censorship and slander of those
: sending "hate mail" and engaging in acts of subterfuge all aimed towards : stifling his creativity and obstructing his freedom of conscience, or that : you've experienced this too. These are just a few suggestions about how to : win his favor. Of course, sigh....having a PhD might give you that little : extra push pro or con....seems to work both ways.

I'm on Fred's website, and dispute every single one of these characterizations as applied to myself. Moreover, most of them don't apply to most of the people represented on his site. You have now moved on from contemptuous dismissal of Fred, to his website, to the dozen or more people represented on it. I won't generalize and consider that "typical Baha'i partisanship" but rather just say that **some** Baha'is consistently think that way. IMO this is to the detriment of the Faith.

: Under the circumstances, I think you've done just about all you can do
: unless Fred can find some use for you.

There are a hundred issues that are addressed on the site and instead of dealing with any of them, you all are just using sarcasm to bash Fred and all whose writings are on his site. Not good PR, but perhaps useful in scaring the already converted from seriously thinking about the real issues.

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlin.svr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: House warns of opposition "campaign"
Date: Wednesday, June 02, 1999 10:42 AM

My own comments on the letter follow.

:
: As a number of the friends are aware,, a campaign of internal
: opposition to the Teachings is currently being carried on through : the use of the Internet, a communications system that now reaches : virtually every part of the world.

This is not true, and reflects the biased understanding of a single partisan faction. A faction that regards itself as capable of *defining* "the Teachings" and rejecting the understanding that others bring to the subject. "Campaign of internal opposition" implies that

- 1) There is organized cooperation among enrolled Baha'is
- 2) Who seek to oppose Baha'u'llah's teachings which is preposterous on the face of it. Promoting one's own understanding of the Teachings, to be considered along with everyone else's, is not waging any campaign against them.

Differing from attacks
: familiar in the past, it seeks to recast the entire Faith into a
: socio-political ideology alien to Baha'u'llah's intent.

This of course begs the question. I would urge anyone interested in weighing the issue of Baha'u'llah's intent to read Modernity and the Millennium, by Juan Cole. *This book is the first on Baha'u'llah by a university press* and should be looked at with respect by Baha'is even if they disagree with it. It should have been received as the signal work on its subject that it is, not turned into the occasion of a partisan witchhunt.

In the
: place of the institutional authority established by His Covenant,
: it promotes a kind of interpretive authority which those behind
: it attribute to the views of persons technically trained in : Middle East studies.

This is a total nonsequitur. The authority of technically trained scholars to explicate texts is what it is. It does not and never has threatened Baha'i institutional authority established by the Covenant. By seeing a threat to the Covenant in what would in any other religion be considered normal scholarly endeavors, those institutions are undermining their own authority.

:
: Early in 1996, the deliberate nature of the plan was revealed in
: an accidental posting to an Internet list which Baha'i
: subscribers had believed was dedicated to scholarly exploration
: of the Cause.

Whose plan? What plan? No such plan was revealed and in fact the post in question showed *opposition* to any "campaign." Showed it explicitly and emphatically in fact.

Some of the people responsible resigned from the : Faith when the Counsellors pointed out to them the direction
: their activities were taking.

In plain English, threatened them with sanctions.

A small number of others
: continue to promote the campaign within the Baha'i community.

Meaning, did not allow themselves to be intimidated into withdrawing, were not sanctioned, but now find themselves unnamed yet the target of a campaign of intimidation and exclusion nonetheless.

snip
: In this same spirit of forbearance the Universal House of Justice
: has intervened in the current situation only to the extent that : it has been unavoidable,

Rather, has been judged to be unavoidable, mistakenly IMO.

: of the Guardianship and the Universal House of Justice as twin : successors of Baha'u'llah and the Centre of His Covenant-- : attempts to cast doubt on the nature and the scope of the : authority conferred on them in the Writings.

Only a dogmatist authoritarian would translate the reality of "attempts to understand on the basis of the original texts the nature and the scope..." into the thought crime of "attempts to cast doubt." The presumption all along is that the normal scholarly activities of 1) trying to understand and 2) communicating with other students of the subject are not normal or innocuous but rather a fundamental threat to the legitimacy of the institutions, and an attempt to take over the Faith.

When other Baha'is
: have pointed out that such arguments contradict explicit
: statements of the Master, persons behind the scheme have : responded by calling into question the soundness of `Abdu'l
: Baha's own judgment and perspective.

Since there is no scheme, who is meant by "persons behind the scheme?" I recall no such calling into question by any Baha'i on any list or newsgroup.

Gradually, these arguments
: have exposed the view of those involved that Baha'u'llah Himself
: was not the voice of God to our age but merely a particularly : enlightened moral philosopher, one whose primary concern was to : reform existing society.

That's a very telling either/or. What if there's no opposition there? What if the voice of God to our age **was** that of a particularly enlightened moral philosopher whose primary concern was to reform existing society?

: influencing reasonably informed Baha'is. As one of the letters
: in the enclosed reprint (20 July 1997) points out, the scheme

This "scheme" accusation being repeated often enough, people will forget to ask for evidence as to whether there is or ever has been such a scheme.

: relies for effect, therefore, on exploiting the confusion created
: in modern thought by the reigning doctrines of materialism.

So, there is a cabal of unnamed persons who have consciously set out to undermine the authority of Baha'i institutions and beliefs by deliberately choosing to exploit the confusion caused by materialism? That seems awfully far fetched.

snip

: religions, dogmatic materialism today insists that even the : nature of religion itself can be adequately understood only : through the use of an academic methodology deigned to ignore the : truths that make religion what it is.

There is no such thing as dogmatic materialism in the social sciences and history any more. Academically methodology in religious studies is hardly "designed to ignore the truths" but rather to focus on the observable realities of how those truths manifest in history, psychology, sociology etc.

:
: In general, the strategy being pursued has been to avoid direct
: attacks on the Faith's Central Figures.

Assuming there is a strategy or scheme. But what if these unnamed malefactors actually avoid direct attacks on the Central Figures, not out of some strategic considerations, but because *they believe in them*?

The effort, rather, has : been to sow the seeds of doubt among believers about the Faith's
: teachings and institutions by appealing to unexamined prejudices
: that Baha'is may have unconsciously absorbed from non-Baha'i : society.

More presumption that the motives of those trying to explore independent investigation of truth are actually those of traitors out to harm the Baha'is.

In defiance of the clear interpretations of `Abdu'l
: Baha and the Guardian, for example, Baha'u'llah's limiting of : membership on the Universal House of Justice to men is : misrepresented as merely a "temporary measure" subject to eventual
: revision if sufficient pressure is brought to bear.

That is a matter for discussion, not backchannel denunciation. Let all the evidence be brought forth and discussed in broad daylight among collegial scholars and experts. On what basis is the alleged position a misrepresentation?

Similarly,
: Shoghi Effendi's explanation of Baha'u'llah's vision of the : future Baha'i World Commonwealth that will unite spiritual and : civil authority is dismissed in favour of the assertion that the : modern political concept of "separation of church and state" is : someone one that Baha'u'llah intended as a basic principle of the : World Order he has founded.

It is totally obvious that for a scholar constructing an understanding of what Baha'u'llah meant cannot rely on a fourth generation explanation of same, but must go to the original sources. *Any* scholar would do the same. Cole should be read, discussed, argued with perhaps, critiqued. But to treat the fundamental responsibility of a historian as a deliberate threat to the legitimacy of Baha'i institutions implies that the evidence presented by Cole *cannot be discussed*.

Particularly subtle is an attempt to : suggest that the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar should evolve into a seat of : quasi-doctrinal authority, parallel to and essentially
: independent of the Local House of Justice, which would permit

: various interests to insinuate themselves into the direction of : the life processes of the Cause.

That is *so* subtle as to show in sharp detail the defensive and highly imaginative mindset of anyone who would perceive the discussion in question as treasonous.

More later...

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Re: Letter of resignation

Date: Tuesday, July 27, 1999 9:25 AM

I am glad that the story of Terry Culhane came forth. If the House is saying that the April 7 letter didn't implicitly refer to him when denouncing "proponents" of emphasis on the Mashriq-ul-Adhkar, I don't believe them. It is evident on the face of it that he was an object of attack. All the subsequent attacking made that all the more evident. No wonder he was reluctant to accept an apology that never admitted the wrong done by the House itself! What is sad in my view is that *anyone* is reconciled to such institutions as thrive in the Baha'i world.

In some way it is admirable that Susan dropped everything and went from Florida to Nebraska to try to save Terry from his persecutors. And better that the persecutors have had some mild tap on the wrist over it than if they were rewarded. But the bottom line message, I think, is this: if you are a Baha'i and become the object of vicious, ignorant, scholar-baiting, "Covenant-upholding" persecution from any member of the institutions, you have *almost absolutely no hope of justice*. The only thing that can possibly save you is an all-out, elaborate, time-consuming, costly intervention by someone who has very good "ins" with the higherups and can plead on your behalf. Otherwise, you're up Baha'i Creek.

Comparisons to totalitarian regimes seem to outrage Baha'is, but I'd like to know what else one can compare such a situation to.

Paul

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: Letter of resignation
Date: Tuesday, July 27, 1999 10:36 AM

Dear Susan,

Sorry, the wording made it seem as if you were an eyewitness.
The fact remains that in one sense you did "drop everything" to intervene in this. I recall distinctly that you had been trashing Juan here for days on end, and suddenly announced that a crisis had arisen that would occupy your energies to the exclusion of continuing the attacks on Juan. Then, months of silence.

You wrote that the House had no reason to deny Terry's being targeted in the April 7 letter if he was indeed the target.
Seems to me they had *every* reason. A community was being subjected to terror, the PR ramifications were horrendous, Terry had powerful friends intervening on his behalf, and the House had plausible deniability because the letter was written on their behalf rather than by them directly. I see no reason *for* them to admit his being targeted. That's the "beauty" of attacking people without naming them. Juan was no more "obvious" a target than Terry; both were *implicitly described in terms of the positions they advocated*. In either case, you have to be in the know to tell who's being trashed. In either case, the

House can deny it meant whom it obviously did.

Who in the world *was* the target of the "Mashriq-ul-Adhkar enthusiasts are a threat to the Covenant" if not Terry?
As the leading spokesman for this idea, he came immediately to my mind upon reading that passage and I'm sure to many others. Anyone else who might hold such a position is a minor player compared to him.

You may imply that I "believe whatever I want" but my conclusions about the Baha'i AO have nothing to do with my personal wishes and everything to do with the abundant evidence that has been pouring in for years. Paul D. is the most recent and to my mind the most damning of the witnesses. Sure, there are people who refuse to regard this evidence as even slightly persuasive. But from a sociology of knowledge perspective, "the plausibility, in the sense of what people actually find credible, of views of reality depends upon the social support they receive."
The
deniers that anything is deeply wrong in Haifa and Wilmette have absolutely tremendous social support for their denial.
Those who recognize serious problems might scratch out a little social support from a few people via the Net. But by and large they receive not support but social ostracism for coming to their conclusions. On the face of things, that makes them
more credible to me because they are paying a big price for their perceptions, whereas you are *receiving* lots of social support from the very AO that is persecuting so many others.
There's always a danger of compromising one's integrity when one gets too cozy with dictators.

Sincerely,

Paul

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>
Subject: Re: My case - a letter to my friends
Date: Wednesday, July 28, 1999 5:17 PM

Dear Friends and non-friends,

The Baha'i tradition of writing dismissively, angrily, contemptuously about people without naming them continues. Since I'm the target in this case and some factual inaccuracies are included, I'll respond. But it is with regret that I find myself made the center of attention here (no--being demonized in fact), when I simply commented on the dispute between Susan and Paul about this case and what it reveals about Baha'i administration. I understand Terry's unwillingness to discuss this further in public, but also know that we are not friends and thus cannot discuss it in private. Herewith some reflections:

: especially an uninformed topic of conversation. One of the dangers of lack of : knowledge is sheer speculation that allows for the assertion of preformed
: ideological templates to dominate discourse.

Lack of knowledge isn't total in this case, and the speculation isn't sheer. Nor are ideological templates the issue. Considerable but not total (who has that?) knowledge of how Baha'i administration has been operating in recent years, and what Susan and Paul revealed about this particular case, inspired my speculation. It wasn't any ideological template but specific real recent history that made and makes me suspicious of the AO. A few years ago I had no such suspicions, even though I was not a believer.

snip

:
: The response of the House of Justice is hardly a case of "Plausibility
: structures and denial.

Terry seems to have read in great haste my remarks on this. They were *entirely* directed to the issue of the relative persuasiveness of Susan and Paul on the Baha'i Administrative Order. He has nothing to gain by taking his stance; she has a lot to gain by taking hers.

snip

Their letter was a : response to my questions two months earlier before anything related to the : April 7 letter became a public issue. The disingenuous
: combination of the : sociological concept of plausibility structuresd

they were combined only in being mentioned in the same post, and had no connection otherwise.

with the ideological concept
: of "plausible denial" is an example of a preformed template that will generate : conclusions even in the absence of substantive knowledge of a case. In this : situation the facts of my case.

I think the preformed template here is being imposed on my words, totally misunderstood.

snip

:

: Friends, dictators and totalitarians do not express deep regret that a
: soul was disressed or estranged by certian actions.

Sure they do, if it is in their interest to do so. I bet you could find plenty of such letters from Stalin or Hitler.

They most assuredly do not : take steps or direct that steps be taken to resolve the anguish or distess of
: *one human being.

If a situation has gotten out of hand and threatens to undermine public confidence; if it turns a firm supporter of the AO like Susan into a crusader for a persecuted person's case; if the facts of the matter are on the side of the victim-- why not do precisely what they did? It was in their interest.

yet that is exactly what the House of Justice did in my case.
: They intervned on my behalf because of the mistakes that were made in my case
: by Institutional representatives.

:

: For anyone who is unable to distinguish bettween acts of love and care and
: hypocritical PR damage control I have compassion.

I don't think Terry feels anything but pure hostility for me, based on serious misrepresentation of my remarks. I NEVER said that any regrets expressed to him were insincere. I said that the denial that he had been targeted was insincere. *Someone* was threatened by his theology; *someone* attacked it in the April 7 letter without naming him; we will never know the total facts of who was thinking what about whom when it was written. I don't believe their denials. Guess that makes me Satan.

This kind of cynical linkage
: is an example Orwellian newspeak where love becomes hate.

I'll switch to the second person here.

You have misunderstood me, and reacted based on misunderstanding. I forgive that, and apologize for commenting on the basis of limited information. I am very sorry about your trials and torments. If at present you need to turn all your blame and anger and hostility on me, demonizing me as an example of everything wrong with humanity, I won't blame you for it. I'll blame the ordeal you've been through, and the fact that you don't choose to attribute responsibility for that ordeal to the system that produced it.

:

snip

: There is no monolithic system around the Bahai world bent on crushing
: people.

That's a straw man. There is a system bent on "protecting the Faith" and if crushing people is part of the process, so be it. I'm sorry that you were temporarily one of its victims.

This will be my final contribution to any Baha'i discussion on the Net. It is pretty shocking to find oneself demonized so dramatically by someone for whom one feels only sympathy and sorrow. I take it (ideological template or no) as further evidence of the toxicity of the whole Baha'i system, something I personally must avoid for reasons of spiritual health. That business about contagious spiritual disease really does have some merit. No organization I belong to, no individual I know has the kind of problems Baha'is are experiencing daily with their system. It's not my problem, and no one is benefited by my taking it on as a burden. You will have to work it out for yourselves. But my heart bleeds for you all.

Best wishes to you all, friend and foe

Paul

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Re: The Pickering Tape

Date: Thursday, July 22, 1999 7:19 PM

Dear Berekiah:

You wrote:

:

: Yes, definitely. There is much evidence to show that Baha'u'llah,
: `Abdul-Baha did not envisage the kind of system we have before us
: today.

Agreed. Very much evidence. But going further back to the real roots of the movement, it seems to me that there is plenty of evidence that the Bab was triumphalistic and totalitarian in his vision of the future. And Baha and `Abdu'l Baha, while I think seeing pretty clearly the horrors of Babism, were too cowardly or politic to denounce them outright. They praised the Bab to the skies rather than saying explicitly that what they wanted for humanity was 180 degrees from what he wanted. (Usually, although in one place AB talked very harshly about the Bayan.) That worked in acquiring and keeping the loyalty of the Babis. But it laid the foundation for the undermining of everything Baha and AB wanted and believed in. They kept the triumphalist rhetoric while rejecting the totalitarianism. Little wonder that Shoghi Effendi could bring the bad stuff back so easily, since it went back to the foundation which was itself rotten.

And I will say this: it was to some degree the fault of Shoghi
: Effendi (or, rather, the Shoghi Effendi era) which set the pretext for
: the authoritarianism current in Baha'i now.

An admission that I wish were made more often by those who see the current House and American NSA as out of sync with what Baha and AB envisioned. They are indeed; but they are following in SE's path.

: where the key lies. Shoghi Effendi was a closet Leninist, imv, and was : much inspired by its message. Notice how the Baha'i administration
: functions under the democratic-centralist model of Lenin and the old : Soviet-style Communist parties in most aspects. But look at how much the : triumphalistic language and imminentist world-outlook of SE resembles : that of Marxism-Leninism.

Absolutely. Which is why in the West the heyday of Bahai, the 1970s, was also the heyday of Marxism-Leninism as a fashion among the youth. No one wants or believes in one-size-fits-all ideologies any more.

The reason therefore why the Baha'i : administration has become so authoritarian is because it was designed to : be a 'Vanguard Party' by its architect. IMO, this isn't at all what the : two Baha'i Central Figures had in mind.

True indeed. But any Baha'i can be shunned as a Covenant-breaker for saying anything was wrong with Shoghi Effendi.

:

: I think the way the system is working now this sort of thing becomes

: inevitable. Reform the system, place safeguards, checks and balances,
: and you prevent this sort of thing from happening. But unfortunately the : Baha'is leaders are not prepared to do this and don't even see a : problem or the need to adjust. It's all very depressing.

Very sad for people of good will and good sense who have been drawn into the system and now find themselves facing a crisis of conscience.

Cheers,

Paul

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: trb & arb FAQ (Frequently ASKED Questions)
From: pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson)
Date: 1999/10/11
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai,alt.religion.bahai

Mark Elderkin (elderkin@nor.com.au) wrote:
: You have to get a life Patrick Henry

It would surely be better to actually discuss matters than just to robotically repost the way Fred does.

..... Are these postings
: going to just keep showing up every week or so?

Apparently.

It is a feeble attempt to : try to influence people new to this bulletin board. I am sure that anyone : who has been here for awhile, will have already developed their own opinion
: of your material.

Without reading it, in some cases, probably.

I, myself, have read and totally dismissed every single
^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^
: topic.
^^^^^

This is highly revealing. If you'd read everything on the website, and dismissed everything a particular person had to say on any topic, or dismissed everything anyone said on a particular topic, there might be some question about your objectivity. But when you *totally dismiss every single topic* regardless of who said what about it, there's no room for questioning. You're totally partisan.

Your sources are imaginative.

Professor Cole's recent appointment as IJMES editor shows just what esteem his professional colleagues have for this "source."

I get your point, though. It is obvious : that you must have great animosity towards the Universal House of Justice. I : still consider Them an infallible source of guidance in my
: beliefs..... but that's me.

Not even what they claim for themselves! Guidance for your actions, yes. As to your beliefs, they disclaim being any such infallible source (out of one side of their collective mouth, at least.) Who needs or wants an infallible source for his/her beliefs, and why?

Maybe you could start your own
: bulletin board 'alt.disbelievers.bahaism' or something similar.

He started this newsgroup and arb.

PJ

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Undermining others' faith

Date: Monday, June 07, 1999 1:40 PM

I take rather seriously the accusation that by criticizing some aspects of Baha'i belief and practice, I am out to "undermine" the faith of Baha'is. Pat's accusation seems parallel to the accusation made by the House through its spokesman on April 7: that a *conceivable implication* of a course of action can be assumed to be a *deliberate objective*. It's certainly conceivable that some Baha'i's faith might be getting undermined lately, but I think the actions of the NSA and House would be far more potent in that regard than *any* commentary some long-ago ex-Baha'i might make. Still, it's also conceivable that some Baha'i might find his faith undermined by something I write. It's a huge leap to conclude that is the intention behind my participation in discussion here.

There are four major reasons I participate, off the top of my head:

1. Baha'i is the newest world religion, and the Internet is the newest change in the global religious environment. Discussing here gives one a front row seat at a process with important implications for everyone.
2. I was once helped and encouraged, when writing a book touching on Baha'i, by several of the people who are now under attack from the administration. I am far more motivated to *support* them and *defend them against unjust attack* than to try to change how Baha'is see the House or their belief system.
3. As an ex-Baha'i, I know how painful and difficult it was to free myself from the belief system. One of my intentions behind posting here is to help those Baha'is who are on the way to becoming ex-Baha'is, to give information and commentary that will help them understand what they are going through. No need to recruit *new* ex-Baha'is, nor do I have any interest in doing so. There are plenty being "recruited" by the behavior of the leadership and some of the believers.

That's not to say there aren't some other motives of which I'm not conscious. But if, as Pat says, I were out to convert Baha'is to either Christianity or Edgar Cayce's approach to same, you'd have seen a vastly different posting profile. I've said very little that could be construed as proselytizing for any belief system. (Unlike some other non-Baha'i posters, BTW.) There is no reasonable hope of converting anyone, and I wouldn't want to do so anyhow.

Cheers,
PJ

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vlinsvr.vsla.edu>

Subject: Re: Re your site (Bahai)

Date: Wednesday, May 20, 1998 2:08 PM

Having seen both the smiling and the snarling face of Baha'i attitudes toward ex-Baha'is, I can see that Maryam and Robert and Nima are all telling the truth. My own experience in leaving the Faith back in 1974 was much as Maryam and Robert have described. Kept all my old Baha'i friends, got no hassles, for years regarded the Faith with some nostalgic fondness, hired a Baha'i employee and sold a house to Baha'is years after withdrawal. Absolutely no problems in relating to Baha'is.

But on the other hand I have seen the extreme hostility directed at Nima and people like him; Baha'is who are also scholars of religion and/or history, who cannot express a hair's breadth deviation or doubt from the party line without having someone swoop down on them with accusations of covenant-breaking. That Inquisitorial atmosphere has really become apparent in the wake of the Talisman I debacle. Nima, by sympathizing with people like Juan Cole and Steven Scholl, ended up being at least unofficially an "enemy of the Faith" after withdrawal, and thus suffered treatment that neither Maryam, Robert's wife nor I even experienced.

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: Michael McKenny's expulsion from Baha'i Faith
From: pjohnson@leo.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson)
Date: 1997/09/02
Message-ID: <1997Sep2.150738.29735@leo.vsla.edu>
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,misc.misc,talk.religion.misc

[More Headers]

[Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]

FG writes:

> Chris wrote:

> >
> > However, the nub of it is that if someone makes public statements, or > > makes statements to the House that indicate that he is not, after all, a > > Baha'i, then the response would be to tell that person that, no, they > > are not a Baha'i.

And if a person makes voluminous statements that indicate to everyone concerned who has read them that he **is** a Baha'i, a rather "true believerish" type of Baha'i at that... then what? Everyone on Talisman was shocked by the expulsion because McKenny had been so consistent in his support of the Covenant and the Central Figures, etc.

In this case it appears as if the person thought they > > were a Baha'i but that after writng to the House they proved otherwise.

After 25 years or so of being accepted as a Baha'i in good standing. Then expressing sentiments that seem too "liberal" about things like women serving in a future House, or interpreting infallibility in a broader way, cause this person to get targeted as a problem by Haifa, and then declared a non-Baha'i.

> > So maybe it is not so much expelling someone as telling them that what > > they believe does not accord with Baha'i beliefs, ipso facto they are > > not a Baha'i.

It's creating a new litmus test of unquestioning support not merely for the authority of the House but the theological views of its members.

>
> > We will never know all the facts of this case and anything less than all > > the facts is idle speculation.

>
> He seems not reluctant to share them with others.

Right, and "idle speculation in the absence of all the facts" is an excuse to ignore tyranny.

>
> > And, no, I do not find it scary. I see it as the natural outcome of a > > series of communications about the beliefs of an individual.

They were not at all natural. The House never told McKenny **which** beliefs he stated made him a non- Baha'i! Nor did they answer his pleas for explanation at all. Nor did the Canadian NSA, simply reasserting the expulsion.

>
> So do I. It's unreasonable to wish to belong to Christianity > or Islam (though Abdul-Baha did) and still be considered > a Bahai.... Illogical, if nothing else.

McKenny did not maintain dual membership or wish to SFAIK.
What's your point?

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: Michael McKenny's expulsion from Baha'i Faith

From: pjohnson@leo.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson)

Date: 1997/09/04

Message-ID:

<1997Sep4.194728.12180@leo.vsla.edu>

Newsgroups:

alt.religion.bahai,misc.misc,talk.religion.misc

[More Headers]

[Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]

Chris writes:

snip

**>

> Well, that doesn't stop the issuing of death threats, slagging of

> Princess Diana and various other statements and acts that I, and many > others, would consider totally uncivilized.

The fact that there is no > individual central authority does not affect the principle of what I > posted.

Right. But "We're not as bad as the Muslims at persecuting dissent" is not much of a defense IMO.

**>

> Well, that is your opinion, which, of course, you are entitled to.

> Personally, I don't have a problem with what the House does about these > things.

No, it's a matter of fact rather than opinion that the House has refused to engage the arguments of those it attacks. How that makes one view them is where opinions come in.

**>

> I did not ignore him initially. Only later. Also, in one breath you > are saying that I should be believing everything Mike has posted (or

Said no such thing. I said that it wasn't "speculation" to believe him, which is what you had labeled me as doing.

> others have repeated as I haven't seen anything of Mike's for a while, > but as soon as I try to apply similar criteria to the House I am being > brainwashed, or whatever.

One judges on the basis of past behavior. I've seen Mike's communications, I've seen those of the House, and I know which source seems reliable and which doesn't. If you come to the opposite conclusion, that doesn't mean I think you're brainwashed. But you are after all subject to ENORMOUS social pressures. Believe Mike's version, and you lose everything you love the most according to your own testimony. Believe the House, and you are rewarded as a true and faithful Baha'i. With the deck stacked like that, can you blame me for doubting your objectivity?

> You seem to be coming from a "let's assume that they are wrong unless I > agree with what they say" approach.

When religious authorities are concerned, that's a wise course. And even if you do agree with them! As a general rule it's a good policy to assume anyone claiming to speak with divine authority is wrong.

> Paul, I absolutely agree with you. But if one, say, decides that > although paragraph 27 of the Kitab-i-Aqdas is wonderful, paragraphs 28 > to 30 are really not to one's liking and one, therefore, does not accept > them, then one is rejecting the infallibility of Baha'u'llah, and, by > implication, of God.

The infallibility of Baha'u'llah is factually impossible. He says things that are just plain wrong. As far as God being infallible, that seems pretty devoid of meaning. God can't make mistakes? This is a universe full of them, unless you want to say that by definition there are none and it's just our puny human reason that imagines otherwise. But then you have a non-falsifiable position.

I would suggest that at that point one is getting > very close to not being a Baha'i. (Ask yourself, what is the definition > of a Baha'i?)

There is `Abdu'l Baha's very broad one, and the Administrative Order's ever-narrowing one.

>
snip

>
> I don't *have* to believe anything, I choose to believe because I have > investigated the Writings and have satisfied myself that they support > Baha'u'llah's claims to be rasul.

But you *have* to believe certain things or face consequences.
That's putting improper pressure on what is proclaimed to be "independent investigation of truth."

>
> This fear seems to be very much an American phenomenon. I have never > come across it in the UK, or amongst European and Iranian Baha'is that I > have met. The other day I admitted openly on the Net to having read > parts of Miller's book on the Baha'i Faith. I received a response from > one person saying that I was brave to admit to it as it could bring > repercussions. Such is the UK community that it had not even occurred to > me that that could happen.

I'm glad you acknowledge the terrorized state of the U.S.
Baha'i community. Now, does or does not Haifa endorse the state of affairs and support those responsible for it?

snip
>
> Paul, I don't think you understand what I am saying at all. If I decide > to pick and choose what suits me and reject what does not then in no way > can I call myself a Baha'i as that would be, as the Muslims would say,
> joining partners with God.

Well, joining partners with God sounds like a good thing to me.

If I like a lot of what Baha'u'llah teaches > and say, 'Yes, I will go along with that and practise it' but also add
> 'but I do not like this idea of the one-ness of mankind thing', or > whatever, then I am denying Baha'u'llah as God's Messenger.

Not at all. You are rejecting the definition of "God's Messenger" as someone who is always right.

>
snip
>
> I don't know what Edgar Cayce's central philosophy was but it seems a > very easy one to follow -- essentially it denies the divinity of God's > Messengers.

Where are you coming up with this? If you don't know about it, how can you summarize? Cayce asserts there's a divine spark within all life, and says that some souls are especially enlightened and chosen as messengers. He even, like Baha'is, asserts that the Christ is present in all the founders of great religions.

It would be not too difficult to slip from that philosophy > to another one -- 'Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law' -- > though I am sure that Cayce himself would never have approved of the > latter.

No. One is to serve humanity and the will of God as one can understand it.

> Oh, how many of Baha'u'llah's teachings did 'Abdul-Baha reject?
Only polygamy SFAIK. But I didn't say AB rejected the teachings of Baha, rather that Shoghi and the House rejected the teachings of AB on freedom of speech and belief in the Baha'i Faith.

snip

>
> OK, "suspend judgement" -- "For the time being I will accept it and hope > that it will become clear to me in time."
Not, "I don't understand it > so I will reject it, accepting it later if I can make sense of it."

Neither one! How about a plain old honest "I don't know?" I can't accept or reject the Resurrection, for example, since there's no way of knowing at this point just what happened. But I can entertain hypotheses about it. Why do people feel the need to "accept" things when they can't possibly know whether or not they are true? That seems silly.

>
> I'm still not sure about the use of the word
'expelled' here. You > obviously see this man as being, by definition, a Baha'i and having been > kicked out of the Faith. But it appears that by his public statements > and statements to the UHJ he has shown that, although he thinks he is a > Baha'i, he actually does not believe in the basic teachings.

Which ones? It would be nice of them to tell him.

There are > then two steps, a) tell him what the beliefs are and, if he still feels > that he cannot accept them, b) tell him that he is not a Baha'i and > remove his name from the list of believers.

The infallible House ignored your step a and is now refusing to tell McKenny what his errors were or how he can amend them.

snip

> >
> >Duality exists whether or not we can accept it in ourselves.
> >Somewhere in the heart of sensitive and perceptive Baha'is lies > >the capacity to realize how far astray the House has gone in > >the direction of being international thought police.

>
> Oh dear, you really are serious aren't you.
Well, as I've said before, > you are welcome to your beliefs, it's just that I do not share them.

>
You might if you had been acquainted with Juan Cole, Steve Scholl, Linda Walbridge and others when the axe fell on them.

>
> What is ARE?
>
The Association for Research and Enlightenment.

**>

> Again that is your opinion. You imply that anyone who does not agree > with it is brainwashed and "where THEY want you". Well, I'm sorry but I > just don't agree. I love my Faith and find it far more satisfying that I > could ever have believed.

Your Faith and the alleged infallible leadership are not the same thing. I'm glad you find satisfaction in being a Baha'i, but am sorry that this seems to blind you to the abuses now being perpetrated in its name.

Sincerely,
Paul

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: Michael McKenny's expulsion from Baha'i Faith
From: pjohnson@leo.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson)
Date: 1997/09/03
Message-ID: <1997Sep3.145258.21712@leo.vsla.edu>
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,misc.misc,talk.religion.misc
[More Headers]
[Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]

Chris writes:

>
> That is not how I read some of his posts. Did you see, for instance, > his "Tablet of the Nine Brewers" which I felt verged on blasphemy.

No.

Had
> he done the same with Muhammad I suspect the reaction would have been > far more swift.

There's no central authority in Islam that could do what the House has done.

I have long since stopped reading Talisman as I found > the forum constantly sails very close to the wind.

That says a lot right there. Baha'is live with a constant sense of danger that their thoughts or statements may be viewed as being too nonconformist, and punishment (informal or formal) always follows in such cases.

It is one thing > wonder why certain things are as they are in the Faith; it is another to > continually question their validity even after statements have been made > by the House of Justice.

The statements by the House typically ignore, rather than engage, the scholarly concerns that have been raised. That's a sure-fire way to keep the pot boiling.

snip
>
> Paul, neither you, nor I, nor anyone else knows exactly what went on and > for how long.

Mike does.

To speculate on that matter is to indulge in idle fancy.

It's not speculating to believe the primary source. It's idle fancy to ignore him.

> I know you don't believe in the infallibility of the House, but I do, > and my sources are the Writings. If I reject that infallibility then I > have to reject everything that can be traced back to Baha'u'llah and, > hence, my Faith.

They've got you where they want you. Your whole being is tied up with the Baha'i Faith, and you see all the belief system to be interdependent so that if you pull one thread

the whole thing unravels. This insures that you can't even allow yourself to look openly and honestly into the decisions of the House, at the risk of abandoning the Baha'i Faith entirely. Point of correction: you absolutely do NOT have to abandon everything good about Baha'i just because you stop believing in parts of it. That's the BIG LIE they feed you. I still appreciate substantial portions of the Baha'i writings and have never abandoned what I see as worthwhile about the Faith. The same is true of the tens of thousands of ex-Baha'is, I suspect, who probably now outnumber the enrolled members in this country.

General observation: anytime you *have* to believe in something, not because there's evidence of its truth, but because its integral to an elaborate belief system enshrining some people's power over others, you're in BIG trouble.

In fact, I have generally found Baha'is much more > interested in probing the central and peripheral teachings their Faith > than members of other faiths, thus laying themselves more open to > finding flaws, if there are any.

They're generally converts, which means they're more conscious of having made a choice. But there is an awful lot of fear in that "probing" due to all the unpleasant consequences, informal and formal, that one's fellow-Baha'is bring to bear.

>
> Either you are a Baha'i or you are not. You cannot pick and choose.
> Would you consider it OK if I just followed those teachings and laws > that suited me and quietly forgot the rest?

OF COURSE. ABSOLUTELY. BE MY GUEST. Any religious group that does not allow this kind of freedom is not worth belonging to. The only kind of assent that is meaningful is FREELY given, not compelled. Cayce says in effect "Try and test these teachings, and what you find useful should be incorporated into your life; forget the rest."

Sure, there are laws and > tenets that I find difficult to follow but either I accept the whole or
> I have to say I am not a Baha'i.

That was not the way of Baha'u'llah AT ALL and even less so of `Abdu'l Baha. I could give you dozens of chapter and verse citations, but that matters little when Shoghi Effendi and the House have overruled Baha'u'llah and `Abdu'l Baha and said NO, you do not have freedom of conscience.

"Unquestioning" is a loaded word -- it > implies blind following. We all DO question but, in the end, if we > cannot find an answer for ourselves, we must accept on trust. Often, > the answer presents itself after a while anyway.

No, we don't have to accept on trust. We can suspend judgment, which is what I do with a lot of very basic elements of Christianity.

>
snip
>
> Again, you are putting words in my keyboard. I would not ignore tyranny > any more than you. But there are two questions -- Is the tyranny part > of the teachings of Baha'u'llah?

No. It is certainly not in keeping with his teachings that someone can be expelled from a religion without any explanation of the charges against him.

and Is what appears to be tyranny > really what it appears to be?

It would be nice if the House were answerable to anyone so an explanation of their extremist behavior might allay fears of a witchhunt ahead.

snip

>
> What I think he was saying (and I am sure he will put me right if I am > wrong) is, in effect, that there cannot be any duality. Either one is a > Baha'i or one is not.

Duality exists whether or not we can accept it in ourselves. Somewhere in the heart of sensitive and perceptive Baha'is lies the capacity to realize how far astray the House has gone in the direction of being international thought police.

True none of us can be regarded as an exemplar, > though some are far nearer that station than I am, but it is what is in > our hearts that matters -- and striving towards the station of being a > true believer and practioner.

which in my opinion would be believing and practicing this:
> of strength I created thee; and within thee have I placed the essence of > My light. Be thou content with it and seek naught else, for My work is > perfect and My command is binding. Question it not, nor have a doubt > thereof. [Baha'u'llah]

Well, neither I nor my fellow A.R.E. members have any problem being content with the strength and light God has placed *within us to discern the truth without reliance on external authority.* Baha'i's however, are clearly *not* content with the inner light (which, if listened to, will give the right answer about the House vs. McKenny). Instead of seeking "naught else" they have created the most elaborate and oppressive religious bureaucracy imaginable to keep people from thinking their own thoughts too freely.

Cheers,
KPJ

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: More SRBahai censorship (Re: Re Non-sense)

From: pjohnson@leo.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson)

Date: 1997/08/10

Message-ID: <1997Aug10.033218.10032@leo.vsla.edu>

Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc

[More Headers]

[Subscribe to alt.religion.bahai]

Chris writes:

>

> In a message which I read on alt.religion.bahai, Kavosh Soltani

> <kavosh@mnsinc.com> wrote

> >However, the problem I have with soc.culture.bahai is much more > >fundamental! They refuse to post anything that questions Bahaism.

>

> Dear Kavosh,

>

> Either you have only looked at s.r.b (not s.c.b) very recently, or you > have a short memory. Certainly in the last year or so there have been > many posts from non-Baha'is questioning and challenging the claims of > Baha'u'llah and of the Faith. It is very easy to dissimulate but it > does not lie well on the shoulders of the followers of any religion.

>

Dear Chris,

Ever since the creation of alt.religion.bahai, however, there has been far less criticism and questioning on s.r.b. I had two or three posts simply not appear, with no word from the moderators. But later I did get a rejection notice from a moderator for a post, so don't know what to make of it.

However, when someone says critical posts have vanished without word from the moderators, I know better than to call that dissimulation. It's happened to me several times.

Cheers,

Paul

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: Talk.Religion.Bahai Fails Official Complaint
From: pjohnson@leo.vsla.edu (K. Paul Johnson)
Date: 1997/03/28
Message-ID: <1997Mar28.213820.13454@leo.vsla.edu>
Newsgroups: news.groups
[More Headers]
[Subscribe to news.groups] Harman:>

> > It seems that nowadays, every vote that fails, someone cries censorship.
>
> I must say, it seems pretty blatant to me in this case. (Like with the > rec.music.white-power group a while back)

The more you know about Baha'i, the more obvious it is. In looking over the list of no votes, I saw dozens of names of people who on various lists and on s.r.b. have been upholders of orthodoxy shouting down any criticism or dissent. Among the no voters was the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Iceland, two current members of the NSA of the United Kingdom, a former member of the NSA of the US, and scores of Iranian names I had never seen before, people who were called into action solely to prevent uncensored discussion of Baha'i issues.

> > (2a) Neither showing any substantial Bahai threads in talk.religion.misc > > (2b) Nor by demonstrating how his posts being moderated out were > > oppression of free speech and not in compliance with the current > > s.r.b to keep discourse civil
>
> I don't know. I think he did a pretty good job, if you could see through > the yelling. But there were others (including myself) who coraberrated the > claim.

Indeed so. The thing Baha'i officialdom is most paranoid about is that anyone read anything emanating from the splitoff groups called "Covenant-breakers." Like the Amish, Baha'is are ordered to totally shun these people, on pain of being likewise declared Covenant-breakers themselves. Soc.religion.bahai recently adopted rules forbidding any challenge to mainstream Haifa/Wilmette Baha'i understanding of the covenant. That means no one, Baha'i, covenant-breaker or non-Baha'i, is allowed to post anything questioning the succession of authority from the Bab to Baha'u'llah to `Abdu'l Baha to Shoghi Effendi to the Universal House of Justice. As if soc.religion.mormon forbade members of the Reorganized Church from even mentioning that some LDS don't accept the Utah Mormon lineage of succession.

Don't get me wrong; I think the Covenant-breaker groups are downright silly. But the kind of censorship practiced in the Baha'i world is worse than silly. It's scary, and you Mr. Harman have unwittingly supported it.

>
> > it stands, there was no difference between this group and a > > hypothetical t.r.b.f-glaysher, since the only actual support he > > showed was his own.

I and many others posted supportive comments.
Soc.religion.bahai has rejected my posts for content rather than tone, when a topic was deemed inadmissible because too hot. I doubt that many of the yes voters approved of Mr. Glaysher's tone, as I certainly did not. But he was standing up for an important principle.

>
> > Therefore, given a lack of demonstrated need, I voted against the > > group seeing it as nothing but additional clutter for one man to gain > > his personal soapbox.

You ignored plenty of evidence to retain that position.

It may help you understand the dynamics of this orchestrated no vote to know something about recent history of Baha'i on the Internet. The suppression of discussion of controversial issues by Baha'is has gone much further than what is seen on soc.religion.bahai. A listserv based in a university was the object of an inquisition by Baha'i officialdom in Haifa, which led to the resignation of several leading Baha'i scholars and the excommunication of one member for opinions expressed on the list. (Called "removal of administrative rights" in Baha'i terminology, which is a step short of being declared a covenant breaker.) My article "Baha'i Authorities Vexed by Internet Critics" is found in the Winter 1997 issue of Gnosis magazine, and describes these events in more detail.

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: K. Paul Johnson <pjohnson@vsla.edu>
To: bahai-faith@makelist.com <bahai-faith@makelist.com>
Subject: [bahai-faith] Softening the rhetoric
Date: Friday, June 05, 1998 11:49 AM

According to FG:

>
> They're passages from the writings he quoted in an > attempt to change the subject from Hyman's forging > my sig file

Roger is right; forging implies his writing something and claiming you wrote it. Instead, Hyman edited your sig file. It was still arbitrary, unfounded in policy, and done without consulting you. (As was his rejection of my post about `Abdu'l Baha's predictions of all religions being unified in this century, which he apparently just threw away. Perhaps because I'd proven him wrong in having denied such a passage exists.) Hyman is clearly a real detriment as srb moderator. Quite unlike any others I've ever dealt with. But forgery is an excessive charge.

to backbiting and criticism, from Bud Polk's > threatening me, to it being all my fault....

Again, you're making more of this than what happened. He didn't outright threaten you; his message was harassment, in my book, with an *implicit* threat at best.

>
Sometimes, Fred, I think your excessive rhetoric plays right into the hands of Baha'i defenders of the status quo (even defenders of Hyman and Polk in these indefensible instances.) If you would just calmly describe what they did, rather than editorialize about it, I think it would have more persuasive power.

At other times, I wonder if any critic of destructive behavior by any Baha'i (e.g. the Danesh incident in Canada, described by Cole and Scholl in various emails) will ever get the least bit of credence from any other Baha'i. Those who don't want to hear bad news will always blame the messenger rather than attend to the problem.

Paul

-----
List Archive: <https://www.findmail.com/listsaver/bahai-faith/>
To Subscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-subscribe@makelist.com
To Unsubscribe: e-mail to bahai-faith-unsubscribe@makelist.com
--
Start Your Own Free Mailing List at <https://www.MakeList.com> !

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Juan Cole on Baha'i Takfir

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Juan\_Cole\_On\_Bahai\_Takfir.html

Also see Shunning > Menu

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Shunning.htm>

And A Response to Takfir

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/apostates.htm>

Juan Cole on Baha'i Takfir

"Refuse to set up once again a sect similar to that of the Shi'is." --Baha'u'llah (Cited in 2002 by "Giangiacomo" <janji@aruba.it>)

From: "Juan R. Cole" <jrcole@u...>
Date: Wed Apr 9, 2003 1:47 pm
Subject: a Baha'i Vatican II is needed

yeah, yeah, yeah. Ultramontane Catholic priests used to make the same arguments, before Vatican II, that Jesus Christ does not permit any change to what he set forth in his writings.

I am not arguing for a change in Baha'i doctrine or law in the sense of Baha'u'llah's vision of those things. I am arguing for a change in contemporary Baha'i procedures and fundamentalist mindset, which have nothing to do with Baha'u'llah. The reactionaries in any religion always substitute their hidebound misinterpretation of the religion for the real thing, and then claim it is the real thing, and then claim that no one can change it because it is the real thing. The whole bit is a shell game for suckers.

As for the argument that only the Universal House of Justice can change current procedure, and only by cozying up to them and convincing them nicely could you hope to influence them, the same thing could have been said of the popes. It is a silly argument, because the popes had a dictatorial attitude and most of them couldn't be influenced by niceness or criticism. They ruthlessly silenced or excommunicated anyone who spoke for a Catholic modernism. What the example of those brave Catholic thinkers shows is that even a highly authoritarian institution can be changed, and it can be changed by **criticism** and by **new thinking**. The tyrants on the current UHJ won't be there forever, and their ability to clone themselves forever is never secure. And, if a majority of Baha'is begins to know that they are by their actions contradicting explicit Baha'i law, they will eventually be shamed into backing off their indecency.

For example: `Abdul-Baha was implored by the hardline Baha'is of his day (what Shoghi Effendi later called the dangerous "extreme orthodox") to declare Mirza Muhammad `Ali and his group infidels, i.e. "not Baha'is."

`Abdul-Baha replied that he could not do this because in the Baha'i faith, unlike in Islam, there was to be no expulsion of believers for immorality or wrong beliefs. If someone says he or she is a Baha'i, the Baha'is are stuck with them. The most you could do to someone disapproved by Baha'i authorities is to not hang out with them. But you can't say "so and so isn't really a Baha'i because he believes X." This is the Baha'i Supreme Exemplar speaking, the appointed Interpreter of the Baha'i scriptures. `Abdul-Baha explicitly said that *He Himself* could not declare the Mirza Muhammad `Ali people "not Baha'is" because it would be contrary to Baha'i principle (see the Kitab-i Aqdas).

The present so-called Universal House of Justice, in contrast, declared our dear Alison "not a Baha'i." They issued a fatwa of takfir against her, [BOLD ADDED] declaring her an infidel, i.e., a non-believer. They broke Baha'i law in so doing. When they were challenged on this by Ron House, they wrote back that individual Baha'is couldn't declare people non-Baha'is, but that the UHJ had that prerogative. They have a prerogative that *`Abdul-Baha* did not? They think they are better than He is? That they have powers *He* did not have? That they can contradict his explicit instructions in an ad hoc and arbitrary manner, *at will*? And then it is pretended that they are upholding the *real* Baha'i faith, which no one can change! If you believe that, well, P.T. Barnum said a sucker was born every minute.

This is what Vatican II says:

"The Vatican Council declares that the human person has a right to religious freedom. Freedom of this kind means that all men should be immune from coercion on the part of individuals, social groups and every human power so that, within due limits, nobody is forced to act against his conscience in religious matters, nor impeded from acting in accordance with it, in private or in public, alone or in association with others. The Council further declares that the right to religious freedom is based on the very dignity of the human person as known through the revealed word of God and by reason itself."

This is what one commentator wrote about the situation before Vatican II:

"Both Gregory XVI in Mirari Vos (1832)<sup>2</sup> and Pius IX in Quanta Cura (1864)<sup>3</sup> condemned the demand for "liberty of conscience" as "insanity" (deliramentum). The latter pontiff also condemned, in the Syllabus accompanying Quanta Cura, the proposition that, "In the present day it is no longer expedient that the Catholic religion should be held as the only religion of the State, to the exclusion of all other forms of worship." His successor Leo XIII insisted that "lying opinions . . . should be diligently repressed by public authority, lest they insidiously work the ruin of the State." "

This is the sort of situation the Baha'is are in now, the situation of Pius IX and Leo XIII. "Lying opinions" according to the Haifa authorities should not be tolerated. Hushmand Fatheazam, a UHJ member, told me that in future when Baha'is control the government, they would just jail [BOLD ADDED] dissidents. What is the difference between that point of view and the ideas of the 19th century popes, or indeed, of present-day Iranian Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, the Supreme Jurisprudent?

In contrast, the Baha'i scriptures stand for freedom of conscience and freedom of expression, *even within the Baha'i Faith*. This freedom has been quashed by the Saddam Husseins in Haifa, and the reign of tyranny everywhere is now coming to an end.

cheers Juan

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Cole2003.htm>

.....

Following 2001 excerpts from posts by Juan Cole from <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Cole2001.htm>

This is among the most flagrant exercises in blaming the victims in Baha'i history. What Khan is referring to, without being brave enough to come out and say it, is that he and his colleagues summarily declared Alison Marshall of the Dunedin, NZ community, to be "not a member of the Baha'i community." They declared her an infidel, which in Islam is called a decree of takfir. Such decrees were forbidden in the Baha'i faith by `Abdul-Baha, but of course Khan deeply dislikes `Abdul-Baha and everything he stood for, so this doesn't matter to him. Alison Marshall was never contacted by any Baha'i institution with any concerns about her email messages. She was investigated behind the scenes but never contacted directly. She was never warned, never cautioned. Her messages were to small, private email lists with no-forwarding policies. So even the "evidence" of her objectionable views could only have been obtained by Khan through spying, as with the Stasi spies for the communist party in East Germany. And, her objectionable views appear only to be that she thought women should be able to serve on the House of Justice and that intellectuals have been badly treated. She woke up one morning to find that Khan and his colleagues had decided she didn't belong to her own religion, with never a by your leave. It is like something out of Kafka. And, of course, the New Zealand Baha'is who knew the particulars and had any backbone were outraged. This is the "disillusion" Khan is speaking of. It is the disillusion of devoted Baha'is who thought they were joining Baha'u'llah's religion of universal peace, love and tolerance. They have suddenly found themselves in Khan's religion, where Khan straps on his scimitar, binds up his pugri turban, and issues the fatwa of being a despicable infidel against inoffensive New Zealand business consultants. And, of course, if these New Zealand Baha'is object to people's souls being toyed with, that means in Khan's view that they aren't "spiritual" enough!

.....

This is further confirmation that while Khan thought he was coming down to condemn Alison Marshall and put out any fires her summary takfir had [BOLD ADDED] caused, his audience hadn't the slightest idea for the most part what he was talking about. I find it extremely amusing that Khan says he doesn't want to "backbite" Alison by actually mentioning her name. But he backbit her relentlessly without naming her! And what is worse anyway, backbiting someone or kicking them out of their spiritual community for no good reason?

.....

Then in 1997 they changed the rules again. Although `Abdul-Baha forbade the practice of takfir or declaring a Baha'i to be not a [BOLD ADDED] Baha'i, the UHJ did this to Michael McKenny. They just summarily removed him from the Canadian rolls. Apparently they did not like the things he was saying on email, in particular his argument that women should be able to serve on the House of Justice. They did the same thing, even more arbitrarily, to Alison Marshall in 2000.

....

jricole

4/19/01 2:27 PM 1 out of 14

In Islam there is a custom called "takfir" where some Muslims get together and call other [BOLD ADDED] Muslims infidels, unbelievers, "not Muslims." Actually, one Shi`ite ayatollah issued such a decree against Shaykh Ahmad al-Ahsa'i, declaring him not a Muslim.

When you are declared 'not Muslim' it puts you outside the law. So, anyone can steal from you, rape you, murder you, without fear of punishment by the authorities. One of the ways the Baha'is from a Muslim background in Iran are persecuted is for the clergy to declare them "not Muslim."

Pithy, Dusty and others have declared Alison Marshall and Karen Bacquet "not Baha'i." That is, they have issued a Baha'i takfir against them. [BOLD ADDED]

There is only one problem, folks. In `Abdul-Baha's Tablet of a Thousand Verses He explicitly abrogates the custom of takfir. He says it does not exist in the Baha'i faith. Baha'is are not to declare other persons, who claim to be Baha'is, "not Baha'is."

What about, you may ask, villainous covenant breakers like Mirza Muhammad `Ali? Surely they could be tossed out of the Faith?

Nope. This letter is specifically about covenant breakers. Even they can't have a takfir issued [BOLD ADDED] against them.

So, the neo-Muslim-fundamentalist Baha'is on this list who have put on large green turbans, cultivated bushy beards dyed with henna, strapped on a saber about their waists, and called for their amanuenses to issue the dire writ of takfir against Karen and Alison may be very proud of [BOLD ADDED] themselves. But they have broken Baha'i law and displeased `Abdul-Baha, who is weeping at their antics as he looks down from the Abha kingdom. He thought we'd be able to get past these feudal customs, of takfirs and heresy trials. It was the point of the coming of a *new* religion.

People like the old.

cheers Juan

.....

jricole

4/19/01 7:52 PM 5 out of 14

Yes, removal of administrative rights does not stop someone from being a Baha'i. But that isn't what was done to Michael McKenny and Alison Marshall by the UHJ. They were declared unfit to be "members of the Baha'i community." That sounds to me like a takfir [BOLD ADDED] pure and simple. I believe that the House of Justice has contravened the Law of God as laid down by `Abdul-Baha in behaving in this way. Perhaps it was in ignorance of the Law, but in that case they should reverse their decision.

As for the rest, Pithy and Dusty have stridently asserted that Karen Bacquet is not a Baha'i, despite her own assertion that she is. That is also a takfir. [BOLD ADDED]

Thanks to Pat for pointing out that it is a severe offense in Islam to issue a groundless takfir.

Here's something I've written on the Tablet, with a provisional translation of the key sentence and the citation to the original text. There is no official translation.

"In the religion of God," `Abdul-Baha asserted, "there is no practice of declaring believers to be morally corrupt (tasfiq) or of declaring them not believers (takfir), nor is debasing or showing [BOLD ADDED] contempt for others permitted."* In Islam, the ulama declared suspect Muslims to have departed

from the faith for reasons of moral lapses or incorrect doctrine. In medieval legal theory, Muslims found to be actually infidels were open to having their lives and property taken by others without fear of legal reprisal. This practice was distasteful to Baha'is for many reasons.

For one, they were often victims of it at the hands of the Muslim clergy. For another, it offended against the ideals of unity, tolerance and freedom of conscience for which many Baha'is felt their religion stood."

*Abdul-Baha, Majmu`ih-'i Makatib, INBA Private Printing Volume 59 (Tehran: National Baha'i Archives, 1978; digitally reprinted, East Lansing, Mi.: H-Bahai, 2000), pp. 340, published on the World Wide Web at

<https://www2.h-net.msu.edu/~bahai/areprint/ab/G-L/I/59inba/inba59.htm>

.....

jricole

4/20/01 1:08 AM 8 out of 14

I have to keep repeating this. The administrative rights of Alison Marshall and Michael McKenny were not removed. They did not experience tard-i idari.

Also, they were not declared covenant breakers, which is tard-i ruhani. These are the only two sanctions we know from the time of `Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi.

Instead, Michael and Alison were declared to be *not* members of the Baha'i community and their names were removed from the rolls of the Canadian and New Zealand Baha'i communities respectively. This was never done by any of the holy figures. These two believers were declared to be not Baha'is, which is takfir. Takfir or declaring someone an infidel was prohibited by [BOLD ADDED]

`Abdul-Baha. Ipso facto, the House of Justice contravened `Abdul-Baha's explicit instructions

when they acted in this manner.

And, your point raises the perfectly reasonable question of why, if Michael and Alison had in fact broken Baha'i law, they were not formally charged and tried for doing so, with presentation of evidence, and why their administrative rights were not simply removed.

Alison not only was not charged with wrongdoing, she had no idea she was even on trial until she suddenly learned she had been turned into a non-Baha'i. This is like something from a Kafka novel. You are on trial but you don't know what the charges are. You go to bed a Baha'i and wake up a non-Baha'i because people you don't know have decided what religion you are.

I know it is very hard for people to hear criticism of the House of Justice. It is especially hard for those brought up Baha'is, who imbibed reverence for this institution in their childhoods. I understand that and do not wish to hurt their feelings for no reason.

But it is very hard for *me* to see `Abdul-Baha trashed, to see the clear text of his explicit command blithely ignored. I feel he has been disrespected, major-league. We used to sing about him, "Look at Me, follow Me, be as I am." Don't people sing that any more? Don't they want to be like our Exemplar?

In this case the House of Justice has contravened a clear principle of `Abdul-Baha. There are no easy choices. Either you can sweep aside `Abdul-Baha's concerns and disobey his clear directive, or you can stand up for the arbitrary actions of the Martins and Khans. You may love and want to obey `Abdul-Baha and love and want to obey the House of Justice. But here you cannot do both. If you acknowledge `Abdul-Baha as having a higher station than the House of Justice, then you must recognize that He is right and they are wrong.

The institution is new, is growing in maturity, and will make some mistakes along the way. These expulsions are such mistakes. Recognizing and fixing them will make the Faith stronger and better. Leaving them to fester will undermine it.

cheers Juan

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Baha'u'llah

---

`Abdu'l-Bahá in London, p. 20: In the days of old an instinct for warfare was developed in the struggle with wild animals; this is no longer necessary; nay, rather, co-operation and mutual understanding are seen to produce the greatest welfare of mankind. Enmity is now the result of prejudice only. In the Hidden Words Bahá'u'lláh says, "Justice is to be loved above all." Praise be to God, in this country the standard of justice has been raised; a great effort is being made to give all souls an equal and a true place. This is the desire of all noble natures; this is today the teaching for the East and for the West; therefore the East and the West will understand each other and reverence each other, and embrace like long-parted lovers who have found each other.

`Abdu'l-Bahá in London, p. 29: Sixthly: Equality and Brotherhood must be established among all members of mankind. This is according to Justice . The general rights of mankind must be guarded and preserved. All men must be treated equally. This is inherent in the very nature of humanity.

`Abdu'l-Bahá in London, pp. 48-49: The light of liberty is the light of the West, and the intention of government is to work for truth and justice in Western countries.

`Abdu'l-Bahá in London, pp. 109-110: The effort made for justice is real and in this country [England] the law is the same for the poor as for the rich.

`Abdu'l-Bahá in London, p. 122: I counsel them that they may day by day strengthen the bond of love and amity to this end,--that they may become the sympathetic embodiment of one nation.--That they may extend themselves to a Universal Brotherhood to guard and protect the interests and rights of all the nations of the East,--that they may unfurl the Divine

Banner of justice ,--that they may treat each nation as a family composed of the individual children of God and may know that before the sight of God the rights of all are equal. For all of us are the children of one Father. God is at peace with all his children; why should they engage in strife and warfare among themselves?

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, pp. 19-20: Theirs will be the duty and privilege, in their capacity first as the establishers of one of the most powerful pillars sustaining the edifice of the Universal House of Justice , and then as the champion-builders of that New World Order of which that House is to be the nucleus and forerunner, to inculcate, demonstrate, and apply those twin and sorely needed principles of Divine justice and order--principles to which the political corruption and the moral license, increasingly staining the society to which they belong, offer so sad and striking a contrast.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, p. 20: Civilization of which their country, no less than the entire human race, stands in desperate need. Theirs will be the duty and privilege, in their capacity first as the establishers of one of the most powerful pillars sustaining the edifice of the Universal House of Justice, and then as the champion-builders of that New World Order of which that House is to be the nucleus and forerunner, to inculcate, demonstrate, and apply those twin and sorely needed principles of Divine justice and order--principles to which the political corruption and the moral license, increasingly staining the society to which they belong, offer so sad and striking a contrast.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, p. 22: The first is specially, though not exclusively, directed to their elected representatives, whether local, regional, or national, who, in their capacity as the custodians and members of the nascent institutions of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, are shouldering the chief responsibility in laying an unassailable foundation for that Universal House of Justice which, as its title implies, is to be the exponent and guardian of that Divine Justice which can alone insure the security of, and establish the reign of law and order in, a strangely disordered world.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, pp. 22-23: A rectitude of conduct, an abiding sense of undeviating justice , unobscured by the demoralizing influences which a corruption-ridden political life so strikingly manifests; a chaste, pure, and holy life, unsullied and unclouded by the indecencies, the vices, the false standards, which an inherently deficient moral code tolerates, perpetuates, and fosters; a fraternity freed from that cancerous growth of racial prejudice, which is eating into the vitals of an already debilitated society--these are the ideals which the American believers must, from now on, individually and through concerted action, strive to promote, in both their private and public lives, ideals which are the chief propelling forces that can most effectively accelerate the march of their institutions, plans, and enterprises, that can guard the honor and integrity of their Faith, and subdue any obstacles that may confront it in the future. This rectitude of conduct, with its implications of justice , equity, truthfulness, honesty, fair-mindedness, reliability, and trustworthiness, must distinguish every phase of the life of the Bahá'í community.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, pp. 24-25: "Be fair to yourselves and to others," He thus counseleth them, "that the evidences of justice may be revealed through your deeds among Our faithful servants." "Equity," He also has written, "is the most fundamental among human virtues. The evaluation of all things must needs depend upon it." And again, "Observe equity in your judgment, ye men of understanding heart! He that is unjust in his judgment is destitute of the characteristics that distinguish man's station." "Beautify your tongues, O people," He further admonishes them, "with truthfulness, and adorn your souls with the ornament of honesty.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, p. 25: Beware, O people, that ye deal not treacherously with anyone. Be ye the trustees of God amongst His creatures, and the emblems of His generosity amidst His people." "Let your eye be chaste," is yet another counsel, "your hand faithful, your tongue truthful, and your heart enlightened." "Be an ornament to the countenance of truth," is yet another admonition, "a crown to the brow of fidelity, a pillar of the temple of righteousness, a breath of life to the body of mankind, an ensign of the hosts of justice , a luminary above the horizon of virtue." "Let truthfulness and courtesy be your adorning," is still another admonition; "suffer not yourselves to be deprived of the robe of forbearance and justice, that the sweet savors of holiness may be wafted from your hearts upon all created things. Say:

Beware, O people of Bahá, lest ye walk in the ways of them whose words differ from their deeds. Strive that ye may be enabled to manifest to the peoples of the earth the signs of God, and to mirror forth His commandments. Let your acts be a guide unto all mankind, for the professions of most men, be they high or low, differ from their conduct. It is through your deeds that ye can distinguish yourselves from others.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, p. 27-29: So great and transcendental is this principle of Divine justice, a principle that must be regarded as the crowning distinction of all Local and National Assemblies, in their capacity as forerunners of the Universal House of Justice, that Bahá'u'lláh Himself subordinates His personal inclination and wish to the all-compelling force of its demands and implications. "God is My witness!" He thus explains, "were it not contrary to the Law of God, I would have kissed the hand of My would-be murderer, and would cause him to inherit My earthly goods. I am restrained, however, by the binding Law laid down in the Book, and am Myself bereft of all worldly possessions." "Know thou, of a truth," He significantly affirms, "these great oppressions that have befallen the world are preparing it for the advent of the Most Great Justice." "Say," He again asserts, "He hath appeared with that Justice wherewith mankind hath been adorned, and yet the people are, for the most part, asleep." "The light of men is Justice," He moreover states, "Quench it not with the contrary winds of oppression and tyranny. The purpose of justice is the appearance of unity among men." "No radiance," He declares, "can compare with that of justice. The organization of the world and the tranquillity of mankind depend upon it." "O people of God!" He exclaims, "That which traineth the world is Justice, for it is upheld by two pillars, reward and punishment. These two pillars are the sources of life to the world." "Justice and equity," is yet another assertion, "are two guardians for the protection of man. They have appeared arrayed in their mighty and sacred names to maintain the world in uprightness and protect the nations." "Bestir yourselves, O people," is His emphatic warning, "in anticipation of the days of Divine justice, for the promised hour is now come. Beware lest ye fail to apprehend its import, and be accounted among the erring." "The day is approaching," He similarly has written, "when the faithful will behold the daystar of justice shining in its full splendor from the dayspring of glory." "The shame I was made to bear," He significantly remarks, "hath uncovered the glory with which the whole of creation had been invested, and through the cruelties I have endured, the daystar of justice hath manifested itself, and shed its splendor upon men." "The world," He again has written, "is in great turmoil, and the minds of its people are in a state of utter confusion. We entreat the Almighty that He may graciously illuminate them with the glory of His Justice, and enable them to discover that which will be profitable unto them at all times and under all conditions." And again, "There can be no doubt whatever that if the daystar of justice, which the clouds of tyranny have obscured, were to shed its light upon men, the face of the earth would be completely transformed." "God be praised!" `Abdu'l-Bahá, in His turn, exclaims, "The sun of justice hath risen above the horizon of Bahá'u'lláh. For in His Tablets the foundations of such a justice have been laid as no mind hath, from the beginning of creation, conceived." "The canopy of existence," He further explains, "resteth upon the pole of justice, and not of forgiveness, and the life of mankind dependeth on justice and not on forgiveness." Small wonder, therefore, that the Author of the Bahá'í Revelation should have chosen to associate the name and title of that House, which is to be the crowning glory of His administrative institutions, not with forgiveness but with justice, to have made justice the only basis and the permanent foundation of His Most Great Peace, and to have proclaimed it in His Hidden Words as "the best beloved of all things" in His sight. It is to the American believers, particularly, that I feel urged to direct this fervent plea to ponder in their hearts the implications of this moral rectitude, and to uphold, with heart and soul and uncompromisingly, both individually and collectively, this sublime standard--a standard of which justice is so essential and potent an element.

The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi, pp. 34-35: Let them call to mind, fearlessly and determinedly, the example and conduct of `Abdu'l-Bahá while in their midst. Let them remember His courage, His genuine love, His informal and indiscriminating fellowship, His contempt for and impatience of criticism, tempered by His tact and wisdom. Let them revive and perpetuate the memory of those unforgettable and historic episodes and occasions on which He so strikingly demonstrated His keen sense of justice, His spontaneous sympathy for the downtrodden, His ever-abiding sense of the oneness of the human race, His overflowing love for its members, and His displeasure with those who dared to flout His wishes, to deride His methods, to challenge His principles, or to nullify His acts.

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

This letter is essential to understanding the censorship and coercion of conscience that has become increasingly pervasive in the bahai faith since 1970. It was apparently written by the uhj to Anthony A. Lee, editor of Kalimat Press, a small but distinguished bahai publishing house, which initially had an agreement with Columbia University Press to distribute Prof. Cole's book to bahai readers: <https://www.kalimat.com/>

Compare Prof. Juan Cole's response to excerpts of this letter at <https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/1999/modernit.htm>

Three reviews of Cole's book, from different perspectives, may be found at *Modernity and the Millennium*

For the use of similarly coercive tactics by the bahai administration, see Hoda Mahmoudi's coercive email of 1997.

See also Censorship of Salmani's Memoirs by Baha'i Authorities in 1982, published by Kalimat

For those unaware, it should be noted, beforehand, that it has been alleged by a number of bahais and ex-bahais, that the uhj has apparently forced some couples to divorce in order to prove their loyalty and obedience and some family members to cease associating with siblings, children, and parents, such seems to be the background to the threats at the end regarding Mr. Lee's marriage. Cf. Steven Scholl

---

August 1999

Transmitted by email: XXXXXXXXXXXX

XXXXXXXXXXXX
XXXXXXXXXXXX
XXXXXXXXXXXX

XXXXXXXXXXXX

U.S.A.

Dear Baha'i Friend,

The Universal House of Justice has reviewed the letter of 8 May 1999 to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States, signed by you on behalf of VVVVV Press and copied for the House of Justice, on the subject of the manner in which VVVVV has promoted to Baha'is Juan Cole's book, Modernity and the Millennium. We have been asked to write as follows.

A good deal of the work of VVVV Press, which you have ably directed during the twenty or so years of the firm's existence, has constituted a significant contribution to the advancement of the Cause we all love and seek to serve. It is clear, too, that, beyond the administration of VVVVV's activities, this valued contribution owes a great deal to your own creativity and professional talents. These circumstances move the House of Justice to share with you candidly the deep concern it feels regarding your relationship with the Baha'i Faith.

As you are aware, such concern prompted earlier efforts, including those made by Counsellor Stephen Birkland and Dr. Pierre-Yves Mocquais, a member of the Auxiliary Board, in their interview with you and your wife, Dr. GGGGGGGG, in May of 1996, to draw to your attention the serious dangers of the course you have long been following. At that time, you expressed to Mr. Birkland your deep regret over actions on your part that were seen by the House of Justice to be clearly in conflict with the beliefs you profess as a follower of Baha'u'llah, as well as your firm assurance that your actions would not again give cause for such intervention.

It is impossible to reconcile professions of this kind with the arguments made by you in the 8 May letter. The inappropriateness of the promotional statements and of the approach taken in the letter serves as an illustration of the attitude and behavior on your part that have long been a source of difficulty. It is these personal elements that the House of Justice has asked us to address.

Clearly, no one would dispute the right of Dr. Cole to write and publish whatever work a publisher is prepared to handle. Nor has anyone questioned the right of a Baha'i who is interested in such a book to purchase it. To suggest that the House of Justice is saying otherwise would be to seriously misconstrue the nature of its concern. The book itself is incidental to the problem of

Mr. XXXXXXXX
August 1999

3

Page

2

attitude on your part that the National Assembly was asked to raise with you. As a participant in various Internet discussion groups over the past five years, and particularly in the last year or two, you cannot but be aware from these exchanges that Dr. Cole has embarked on a deliberate assault against the Baha'i Cause, in which he has not hesitated to attack its institutions, to misrepresent its fundamental teachings, and to abuse the trust of Baha'is who had been led to believe that they were engaged with him in a detached and scholarly search for the truth. These same Internet exchanges exposed you, like other participants, to a flood of calumny and invective against a great many of your fellow believers, on the part of Dr. Cole, that is scarcely credible in rational discourse.

Had such a book as Modernity and the Millennium been written by a disinterested non-Baha'i scholar, its misconception of the nature of Baha'u'llah's Mission and its other shortcomings would have represented no more than understandable weaknesses of an honest attempt to explore a religious phenomenon as yet little understood in the West. Indeed, in this context, such an attempt to make the Baha'i Faith comprehensible to the Western academic mind, however inadequate it might appear to knowledgeable Baha'i scholars, would surely have earned its author a measure of genuine Baha'i appreciation for the writing and research skills deployed in devising it.

As you -- like other participants in certain Internet discussion groups -- are well aware, however, the book's author is not a disinterested scholar. Rather, he is a deeply embittered individual who, as his book was in preparation, had just denounced in the most intemperate language an apparent twenty-year allegiance to Baha'u'llah, in the wake of a failed attempt on his part to impose his private ideological agenda on the Baha'i community's study of Baha'u'llah's Message. Modernity and the Millennium represents an effort to provide the current stage of this long-running scheme with the underpinnings of scholarly rationalization.

What is this rationalization? Although distorted by its evasion of Baha'i Texts that contradict its main assertions, and blurred by reliance on speculations peculiar to its author's purpose, the thesis appears to run somewhat as follows: Baha'u'llah's work and Writings represent essentially one of several efforts by Middle East thinkers to work out a "response" to the challenges posed by European modernity in the form of rationalism, revolution, nationalism, economic upheaval, feminism and other contemporary developments.

Although Oriental in origin, this particular "response", in contrast to various others, was unusually "progressive", "liberal", "idealistic", even "radical". Because it "grew up" in a congenial modernist era, its Author was able gradually to adjust and revise the ideas with which He had been "grappling", through benefiting (in a manner generally insinuated rather than explicitly stated) from successive interactions with other thinkers and movements. By 1862, apparently in order to deal with the problem of religious exclusivity in the Muslim world, and in response to some form of "private mystical experience", He "decided to make a prophetic claim of his own".

As mentioned above, if such a view had represented the interpretation of Baha'u'llah's Mission arrived at by a non-Baha'i as the result of his objective study of the sources, no Baha'i institution could have an objection. Its relevance to the concern of the House of Justice about your behavior arises rather from your long-standing and widely recognized involvement with a few present and former members of the Faith who seek to foist this caricature of

Mr. XXXXXX
August 1999

3

Page

3

the Cause on the Baha'i community, and your perceived identification with their purpose.

The Covenant, the distinguishing feature of Baha'u'llah's Revelation, has been made the central target of this effort (a maneuver that Dr. Cole's book is at particular pains to shore up). Although forced to acknowledge the appointments of `Abdul-Baha and the Guardian as Interpreters of Baha'u'llah's Message, every effort has been made to call such authoritative interpretation into question wherever it presents a problem for the notions being promoted. Similarly, although ostensibly acknowledging that the Universal House of Justice is Head of the Baha'i Faith today, this opposition has tried by every means possible to undermine the broad authority conferred in Baha'u'llah's own words and emphasized in the Master's Will and Testament. (In Dr. Cole's book, this agenda makes its appearance in the conclusion: namely, that the Faith founded by Baha'u'llah has failed in its mission because, like "the Khomeinist state in Iran", it has been somehow captured by "fundamentalists", by which term Dr. Cole has repeatedly characterized the members of the Universal House of Justice.)

Why would a Baha'i or a Baha'i publisher who is genuinely devoted to advancing Baha'i scholarship and to encouraging confirmation of believers in Baha'u'llah's Covenant seek to persuade his Baha'i readers that a device intended as the mainspring of an attack on their Faith is "an indispensable book for any serious student of Baha'i history"? How could an effort to represent to the Baha'i community such a work as "a brilliant, scholarly analysis of the life and teachings of Baha'u'llah" serve the Cause of God? What moral benefit do you imagine a Baha'i reader could conceivably derive from taking seriously the theories of an individual whose apparently ungovernable malice has made his activities the focal point of contention and disharmony among any believers unwise enough to be influenced by him?

Indeed, what relevance do Dr. Cole's academic credentials, so strongly emphasized in your letter of 8 May, have to the moral and spiritual issue raised in the letter from the National Spiritual Assembly? Clearly, no reader, Baha'i or otherwise, would be interested in reading a supposedly scholarly study whose author lacked the relevant scholarly qualifications. Nor, presumably, would any publisher, Baha'i or otherwise, promote a work from such an unqualified source. It is both meaningless and disingenuous to argue that these qualifications, however valid in themselves, assure that a publication meets the moral and spiritual standards that are made explicitly clear in the Writings of the Faith whose interests VVVV's activities are ostensibly designed to serve.

The assumption of Baha'i institutions is that the purpose motivating a group of believers to create a publishing house that enjoys privileged access to the Baha'i community is in order to promote the advancement of the Baha'i Cause. The House of Justice has always assumed -- as is no doubt the case with Baha'is generally -- that this was the desire that motivated you and your associates to create VVVV Press. If some different conception of purpose underlies the VVVV enterprise, then it is essential that you advise the United States National Spiritual Assembly of the facts of the situation, frankly, unequivocally, and without delay.

Mr. XXXXXX
August 1999

3

Page

4

The House of Justice calls on you to meditate profoundly on the questions raised in the foregoing, as these issues bear directly on the relationship that binds you to your Lord. Does not the Master in His Will and Testament itself, specifically warn: "According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander, are commanded to show forth peace and amity, are exhorted to rectitude of conduct,

straight-forwardness and harmony with all the kindreds and peoples of the world"? Does He not, in that same foundation document of the Cause, counsel all of us: "O ye beloved of the Lord! Strive with all your heart to shield
the Cause of God from the onslaught of the insincere, for souls such as these cause the straight to become crooked and all benevolent efforts to produce contrary results"?

The impressive services that you have rendered the Faith, with GGGG's loving support, represent for you a spiritual treasure.
God forbid that so precious a capital should be squandered. While there is yet time, the House of Justice earnestly appeals to you to turn away from the course on which you have long been set, a course that has been marked by steady spiritual deterioration and that will lead to grievous loss in both this world and the next. As you will recall, because the matter was of direct concern to her, GGGG asked urgently to be included in your discussion with Mr. Birkland and Dr. Mocquais. Because these issues continue to bear so immediately on the well-being of your family, you need to recognize your moral obligation to take her fully into your confidence also on the contents of this present letter.

In the past, you have expressed bewilderment that your actions should have required the intervention of senior Baha'i institutions. The House of Justice expects that you have now understood clearly what is at stake and that you will resolve, unambiguously and at once, to abandon the course you have, alas, been pursuing.

The House of Justice will pray ardently at the Holy Threshold that you will be granted the courage and will to meet the spiritual challenge you face.

With loving Baha'i greetings,

Department of the Secretariat

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

David Kelly & Bahai Faith EVIDENCE grows
Assorted Baha'i Documents
www.fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship
Interest:

Last updated 03/25/2008

An Appeal to Investigators and Journalists

(My appeal to investigators and journalists is for careful, sober consideration of what actually may have happened, not a conspiracy theory.)

Note well: In short, the Baha'i Faith had a great deal to gain by the war going forward, reclaiming the House of Baha'u'llah in Baghdad and the Garden of Ridvan, extending the Baha'i pilgrimage circuit to Iraq, and leading to a more tolerant climate there and generally in the Middle East, for Baha'i expansion, all long sought goals. Interference of the Baha'i administration in Dr. Kelly's work should seriously be considered and investigated. Kelly appears to have disclosed the apparent State secret of his identity, as an official who had worked on the dossier, to Baha'is on October 5, 2002, including to members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United Kingdom, who would not have failed to pass information to the Baha'i Universal House of Justice in Haifa, Israel.

My comments on Barnabus (sic, Barnabas) Leith's testimony before the Hutton Inquiry also at disclosed : Roger Kingdon versus Barney Leith's Account

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly100502.htm>

The role of Baha'i Mai Pederson now raises many complex, if not Byzantine, possibilities and should also be carefully investigated by the Hutton Inquiry. "Kelly did not kill himself."

My response to Sir Richard Dearlove's comments, Chief of MI6, on Kelly's "serious breach" near bottom of this page.

Lastly, by way of introduction, note that Baha'i institutions have a long record of discrediting dissenters, labeling anyone concerned regarding David Kelly a "conspiracy theorist." My appeal to investigators and journalists is for careful, sober consideration of what actually may have happened, not a conspiracy theory, with which such charges Baha'i fundamentalists seek to discredit and smear people with whom they disagree. For numerous comments on such tactics among my fellow bahais, see

"The Baha'i Technique": <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

See the Blog comments too at this link.

See my video interview on David Kelly for the movie Baha'is in My Backyard - Segment 2

https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Bahais\_in\_My\_Backyard.html

After USING David Kelly, the bahai administration has clearly decided to subtly repudiate and scapegoat him. Few long-time observers of my fellow bahais will believe for a second that the truth will be learned from UK NSA member Barney Leith, who issued a letter on July 20, 2003 prohibiting UK Baha'is from speaking to the media. His comments should be weighed in the context of ESSENTIAL READING - Two introductory articles on Baha'i fundamentalism and censorship - See links below

"Barney Leith, secretary of the National Spiritual assembly of Britain, who knew Dr Kelly and will testify before the Hutton inquiry about the impact of the Baha'i faith had on him, said he could not know whether the scientist might have taken his own life because of guilt. But he added: "The teachings of the Baha'i faith strongly emphasise the importance of ... keeping one's word."

<https://politics.guardian.co.uk/kelly/story/0,13747,1027373,00.html>

NOTE WELL: My first email message to the Lord Hutton Inquiry:

----- Original Message -----

From:

To: hutton.inquiry@dca.gsi.gov.uk

Sent: Wednesday, August 06, 2003 8:24 AM

Subject: Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith - EVIDENCE grows....

The Hutton Inquiry Secretariat

2nd Floor

81 Chancery Lane

LONDON

WC2A 1DD

Tel: 020 7855 5295

Fax: 020 7855 5299

E-mail: hutton.inquiry@dca.gsi.gov.uk

<https://www.the-hutton-inquiry.org.uk>

Dear Lord Hutton,

Professor Juan Cole of the University of Michigan, Department of History, has mentioned on Yahoo's Talisman9 discussion board that, given Kelly's briefing of 30 Baha'is in October 5, 2002 and the Baha'i administration's issuing multiple warnings prohibiting Baha'is from protesting against the war, it may be that there actually is a Baha'i angle involved.

Here are the crucial documents, so far, suggesting the complicity of the Baha'i administration in the Dr. David Kelly affair. It may be necessary for the non-bahai to read these messages, especially those of the National Spiritual Assembly of the UK and the Universal House of Justice, in the context of the struggle within the baha'i faith during the last decade, provided by two articles on Baha'i fundamentalism, one by Professor Juan Cole, the other by Karen Bacquet, in order to understand the subtlety of what's being communicated to Baha'is.

At the very least, I believe the speculation ought to be carefully investigated by the British authorities. The Baha'i National Spiritual Assembly of the United States issued last fall the directive that bahais not protest the war, and the NSA of the UK issued a similar one. In the context of the Universal House of Justice's Ridvan Address for 2003, celebrating improved conditions for the Baha'is of Iraq, and Kelly's briefing Baha'is, I urge the British police to weigh carefully anything they hear from my fellow Baha'is, especially given their record of abusing free speech and conscience, thoroughly documented on my website.

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

---

ESSENTIAL READING - Two introductory articles on Baha'i fundamentalism and censorship

Professor Juan Cole, of the University of Michigan, Department of History, has a website of extensive and disturbing documentation that anyone interested in the Baha'i Faith should be aware of, especially his article "Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community," Religious Studies Review, Vol. 43, no. 3 (March, 2002):195-217:
<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2002/fundbhfn.htm>

In his book Modernity and the Millennium, published by Columbia University Press in 1998, Professor Cole observes the Baha'i administration has increasingly come under the control of fundamentalists, "stressing scriptural literalism . . . theocracy, censorship, intellectual intolerance, and denying key democratic values (196)."

See also Karen Bacquet, "Enemies Within: Conflict and Control in the Baha'i Community." Published in American Family Foundation's Cultic Studies Journal, Volume 18, pp.109-140:
<https://www.angelfire.com/ca3/bigquestions/enemies.html>

For numerous other views, I also recommend the over 50 megabytes of documentation on my own website, especially "The Baha'i Technique":
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

---

NOTE WELL: My second email message to the Lord Hutton Inquiry:

----- Original Message -----

From:

To: hutton.inquiry@dca.gsi.gov.uk

Sent: Friday, August 22, 2003 11:43 AM

Subject: Bahai UK NSA Puppet to DECEIVE Lord Hutton

Right Honourable Lord Hutton:

Few long-time bahai observers will believe for a second that much truth will be learned from UK NSA member Barney Leith. After USING David Kelly, the bahai administration has clearly decided to repudiated and scapegoat him.

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly.htm>

For an historical perspective, see "The Baha'i Technique":
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

---

NOTE WELL: The NSA of the UK below promotes the policy developed by the Universal House of Justice in Haifa, Israel, a policy released subsequent to Dr. Kelly's address to Baha'is in October, 2002, and calculated to ensure that Baha'is do nothing to prevent the war from going forward, a war recognized by Baha'i institutions as in its own best interest:

National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United Kingdom
27 Rutland Gate, London SW7 1PD
Tel: 020-7584-2566 Fax: 020-7584 9402
E-mail: nsa@bahai.org.uk

RESPONDING TO THE MIDDLE EAST CRISIS

Guidance from the National Spiritual Assembly, 24 February 2003

The National Spiritual Assembly is aware that reactions in the UK at national, regional and local levels to the possibility of war in Iraq and to the anticipated policies of the UK and United States governments has resulted in an increase in anti-war and anti-government activities, and that these activities are contributing to divisive sentiments and tensions. Members of the Baha'i community may be uncertain as to what the proper Baha'i attitude should be with regard to their involvement in these matters. Some Baha'is may wish to participate in anti-war demonstrations or to assert their Origh and responsibility<sup>1</sup> to protest.

The National Assembly asks the believers to carefully study the relevant guidance given by the Guardian and by the Universal House of Justice so that they will be better able to appreciate and understand not only the implications of any actions they wish to take, but also the wider perspective on the unfolding of world events.

In a letter dated 12 January 2003 and written on its behalf to an individual believer, the Universal House of Justice summarises the issues very clearly:

As you are aware, it is not the practice of Baha'i institutions or individuals to take positions on the political decisions of governments. [\[See links below regarding involvement in politics.\]](#) One of the greatest obstacles to progress is the tendency of Baha'is to be drawn into the general attitudes and disputes that surround them. The central importance of the principle of avoidance of politics and controversial matters is that Baha'is should not allow themselves to be involved in the disputes of the many conflicting elements of the society around them.

The aim of the Baha'is is to reconcile viewpoints, to heal divisions, and to bring about tolerance and mutual respect among men, and this aim is undermined if we allow ourselves to be swept along by the ephemeral passions of others. This does not mean that Baha'is cannot collaborate with any non-Baha'i movement; it does mean that good judgment is required to distinguish those activities and associations which are beneficial and constructive from those which are divisive.

Baha'is should exercise extreme caution in any active involvement in demonstrations. Although there is no prohibition against individual Baha'is joining in marches and demonstrations as long as they are legal, non-violent, and politically non-partisan, the National Assembly hopes that individuals will be guided by their Baha'i principles when considering the implications of their participation in this type of activity. In the current situation, the overarching principle is that the Baha'i Faith does not take sides in conflicts between countries. Participating in a march or demonstration for or against military action in another country presupposes taking sides.

In a letter dated 27 November 2001 on its behalf to an individual, the House of Justice says this:

The programme of the Baha'i Cause itself operates in the political realm to the extent that it is concerned with inducing changes in public policy and behaviour at local, national and international levels. To this end, the community collaborates with other like-minded organisations and works closely with sympathetic governments and United Nations agencies. In doing so, its efforts are scrupulous to avoid entanglement in agendas that serve the interests of particular parties, factions, or similarly biased political forces. This standard must likewise govern the behaviour of individual believers.

Baha'is may wish to consider channelling their energies into more positive actions, particularly those which enable Baha'is at local level to participate in building peace without becoming entangled with political interests<sup>1</sup>. Local Spiritual Assemblies are free to explore such possibilities, in accordance with their financial and human resources. Baha'is who are asked for the Baha'i position on the Middle East situation should respond that the Baha'i Faith does not take positions on particular crises or conflicts. We hope and pray that all such conflicts will be resolved quickly and as peacefully as possible. We are confident, in spite of conflicts which erupt in the world, that world peace is inevitable. Baha'is support international law and the role of the United Nations. It would not be appropriate for Baha'i institutions or individuals representing Baha'i institutions to participate in demonstrations regarding the crisis in the Middle East.

As Baha'is, we are aware that there will be great turmoil in the world before world peace is attained. The Baha'i Faith teaches that through the development of collective security and of international law the means will be found to control aggression.

Study of the following will help the friends develop a deeper understanding of the processes at work in the world: The World Order of Baha'u'llah, especially pages 6467 and pages 191193, The Advent of Divine Justice, especially pages 7277, OThe Promise of World Peace<sup>1</sup>, The Promised Day is Come, pages 114124, and Citadel of Faith, pages 3038. The National Spiritual Assembly also strongly recommends that we study Century of Light, the document issued by the Universal House of Justice at Naw-R-z 2001 that reviews the profound changes that our world underwent during the twentieth century in the context of the Baha'i Teachings.

The Major Plan of God proceeds in mysterious and unpredictable ways until it has achieved its destined goal the unification of the human race in a global society that has banished war and taken charge of its collective destiny. But this process has barely begun and we still have a long way to go. It is ultimately a spiritual process, and in traversing the great distance that lies ahead there will clearly be many obstacles and pitfalls. As Century of Light states:

It would be unrealistic to imagine that the challenges lying ahead may not exact an even greater toll of a human race that still seeks, by every means in its power, to avoid the spiritual implications of the experience it is undergoing. [Century of Light, p. 138].

The Baha'is should not be daunted by the world situation. In a timeless piece of exposition, Shoghi Effendi has already set out what should be our approach to the operation of God's Major Plan and the recurrent turbulence associated with it. The Baha'is must:

acknowledge its necessity, observe confidently its mysterious processes, ardently pray for the mitigation of its severity, intelligently labour to assuage its fury, and anticipate, with undimmed vision, the consummation of the fears and the hopes that it must necessarily engender. [Promised Day Is Come, p. 4]

Let this guidance of our beloved Guardian shape our response to what is happening to current world events.

At moments of crisis such as this, the needs and the opportunities for attracting ever larger numbers of souls to the Cause of God are at their greatest. People are longing for solutions to the problems that have beset humanity for far too long. Let us, then, devote ourselves, our time, energy and resources, to the Plan at hand, with complete confidence that from our humble efforts will emerge the unassailable foundation of the true and enduring peace of mankind.

With loving Baha'i greetings
National Spiritual Assembly

NOTE WELL: The Universal House of Justice below celebrates the effectiveness of its policy of so-called non-involvement in politics and the second Iraq war, which clearly opens the way for a return of the House of Baha'u'llah in Baghdad, the Garden of Ridván, and the extension of the Baha'i pilgrimage from Haifa to Iraq as well, where Baha'u'llah began the Baha'i Faith, also leading, definitely, to a significant increase in revenue:

Universal House of Justice

Ridván 2003 [April 21]

To the Bahá'ís of the world

Dearly loved Friends,

1. As the Five Year Plan enters upon its third year, momentum is building: the record of achievement during the year just ended far outdistanced that of the previous twelve months. The thrust of this momentum owes as much to the increased coherence achieved in the Plan's constituent elements as to the animating effect of the spirit of unrest pervading the planet.

2. The circumstances attending the opening of this new administrative year are at once critical, challenging and extraordinary in their significance. The entire course of the previous year was agitated by a succession of crises that culminated in the outbreak of war in the Middle East. The implications are no less significant for the progress of the community of the Most Great Name than for the evolution of an increasingly global society in the throes of a turbulent transition. Of necessity, the timing, scale and tendencies of this transition have not been predictable. How swift indeed has been the current change in the tide of world conditions! In the resultant conflict, involving so conspicuously the countries in which the earliest history of the Cause took shape, we see a fresh reminder of Bahá'u'lláh's warning that the "world's equilibrium hath been upset through the vibrating influence of this most great, this new World Order". That the events of this crisis directly affect a territory with as rich a Bahá'í legacy as Iraq is particularly noteworthy.

3. The disruptions caused by this and other situations in the world have, in one instance, suggested the opening of a new chapter in the history of the highly prized but woefully oppressed Bahá'í community of a land in which the Manifestation of God for this Day resided for a whole decade. In another, they have dashed the preparations for the Ninth International Convention at the World Centre of our Faith. But, however disappointing, this calls for no dismay. When the Major Plan of God interferes with His Minor Plan, there should be no doubt that in due course a way will providentially be opened to an opportunity of stellar possibilities for advancing the interests of His glorious Cause.

4....

The Universal House of Justice

FULL TEXT at

<https://bahai-library.org/published.uhj/ridvan/2003.html>

---

NOTE WELL: Compare this letter sent to all UK Local Spiritual Assemblies with my comments at *disclosed*. Here is the UK NSA's response immediately after his suicide became known, a complete clamp down on information and an attempt to control everything released to the general public. Notice too that the AUTHOR of this letter is the only Baha'i being interviewed by the Inquiry, a fact and blatant conflict of interest that ought to give serious pause:

20 July 2003

Dear Baha'i friends

We can confirm that Dr David Kelly, whose death was confirmed by the police on Saturday afternoon was a registered Baha'i. He had become a Baha'i in New York in 1999 and had been a member of the Vale of White Horse community in Oxfordshire before the Local Assembly boundary changes left him as an isolated believer.

He quite regularly attended Baha'i events in Oxfordshire but his membership of the Faith was not widely known outside the county.

We are aware that quite a number of the friends have been approached by journalists about Dr Kelly. We would ask that any further approaches by the media should be referred to the National Secretary or to Carmel Momen, our Public Information Officer in the Office of Public Information on 020-7590 8785.

Please do NOT give the Secretary's contact details to journalists but obtain their telephone number and say that the Secretary will call them back. Then please telephone the National Office with these details and ask that they be passed to the National Secretary urgently.

We feel sure you will appreciate the sensitivity of all of this.

Needless to say, we extend our deepest sympathies to his his wife and daughters. It should be noted that they are not Baha'is.

With loving Baha'i greetings

National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the UK Barney Leith, Secretary

---

NOTE WELL: Evidence that the Baha'i administration was looking forward to the success of their policies ultimately leading to future pilgrimages to Iraq. Given Baha'i involvement in NITV in LA, it's only reasonable and prudent to consider to what extent the administration actively worked for change, behind the scenes, with or through David Kelly and others:

From: "errol9"

I would also like to add to this post that many Baha'is with long time experience in the Faith do not consider a pilgrimage to Haifa and Akka in Isreal to visit the holy shrines as a full pilgrimage. A fuller and richer pilgrimage can only be acheived when Baha'is have freedom to travel to both Iraq and Iran. Could many of these same Baha'is have actually supported the UK US war against Iraq hoping to fulfill their dream that: "The future is expected to lead to a fuller and richer **pilgrimage experience.**" Although pilgrimages to Iraq and Iran are at present impossible, the Bahá'ís are optimistic, and hope that one day the situation will change."

<https://bahai-library.org/pilgrims/pilgrimage.viswanathan/pilgrimage02.html>

For an early indication of the importance of the Bahai sites, see Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

---

NOTE WELL: UK members of the baha'i faith clearly got the message from the UK NSA through various channels:

Kerry/Steve 12/02/2003

<https://www.stevedaymusic.com/articledata.asp>

This is a statement from the NSA on the Bahai stance concerning the possibility of war in Iraq.

Dear Kerry, further to our telephone conversation this morning here is the brief statement we issue to the media on request of an opinion about the pending conflict in Iraq. As I said, we do not have a position on what is happening and tend to talk in very general terms about basic Baha'i principles. This statement was prepared by members of the NSA in response to the times newspaper enquiry. I hope will assist you some what in your endeavours, it is always a tricky one. with loving greetings Carmel Momen

Text as follows: What Baha'is see as the main challenge facing the world is the establishment of a form of administration which can deal with an emerging global society. An effective doctrine of collective security is a fundamental part of establishing lasting peace in the world. However such efforts must be channelled through a genuinely universal mechanism which has the mandate and support of all nations. We are on an evolutionary course towards ever-greater degrees of unity and co-operation. The ongoing disparity between rich and poor, prejudices of race, colour and religion are all barriers to peace.

---

NOTE WELL: How worried is the universal house of justice and the UK nsa about the David Kelly investigation? Why would they worry so much if they don't have anything to hide? Fear that further details might come to light? The uhj clearly sent this message as instructions for the Baha'i UK community, via the UK NSA, on how to handle the UK press and any questions from the Lord Hutton Inquiry. Compare this message with the one from Jo, near the end of this page, regarding Baha'i involvement in politics, especially in Iran via NITV out of LA.

MESSAGE FROM THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

7 August 2003

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United Kingdom

Dear Baha'i Friends,

We deeply sympathize in your grief over the tragic circumstances compounded by the political atmosphere surrounding the death of Dr. David Kelly, a devoted member of your community. Our ardent prayers in the Holy Shrines join yours that his soul may progress throughout the divine realms and that the members of his family may be solaced through the boundless grace of God.

For obvious reasons, the press has shown particular interest in the view of the Baha'i Faith on suicide. Our Teachings are clear on this subject and can be stated simply: The act of suicide is strongly condemned, but Baha'is do not adopt a condemnatory attitude toward those who commit suicide.

We hope and pray that the public arguments aroused by the conflicting issues associated with Dr. Kelly's death will soon subside. Our expectation is encouraged by the prospect that the investigation of these issues that has been officially initiated will not be unduly prolonged. In whatever way, whether by request of the official investigation or of the media, members of the Baha'i community may be called upon to provide information or comment, they will no doubt respond in a manner that upholds the principled character of our Faith. They will speak with complete truthfulness, and will not permit themselves to take sides in the ongoing public debate, eschewing all partisanship.

NOTE WELL: David Kelly had apparently shared the experience of tens of thousands of converts to the Bahai Faith, in the USA, UK, and elsewhere, an eventual dropping off of interest in Baha'i meetings due to their tedious structure and the obnoxious personalities of many local Baha'is, who tend to literal-mindedness, self-righteousness, and fundamentalism, effectively driving people away.... a typical pattern for prominent "people of capacity" who unsuspectingly enter the Baha'i Faith. See the link below to a Baha'i compilation on converting prominent people.

Lord Hutton & Mrs. Kelly:

1 Q. We have heard at some time Dr Kelly became a member of 2 the Baha'i faith. Do you know anything about that?

3 A. Only a little. He kept it very privately to himself.

4 It was a few years ago, perhaps five or six years ago,
5 when I realised he was reading the Koran and he was 6 becoming perhaps gentler in his ways, in some ways. It
7 really was a spiritual revelation for him. He read
8 widely on the subject and met a number of people.

9 I think there was one interpreter, Mike Peddison, who in 10 fact later became a family friend, who was quite 11 influential there. He certainly went to a number of 12 meetings in our own local area too until about two years
13 ago and then that dropped off somewhat.

14 Q. It dropped off about two years ago?

15 A. Yes, in terms of meetings. His faith did not drop off.

16 Right to the very end that was important to him, 17 I believe.

18 Q. Do you know why it dropped off?

19 A. I think the prayer meeting structure in the local area 20 changed from being larger groups right down to twos or 21 threes. He found that less comforting and less 22 comfortable.

<https://www.the-hutton-inquiry.org.uk/content/transcripts/hearing-trans24.htm>

---

NOTE WELL: If Kelly discussed confidential CX reports, without authorization, with journalists, why should one believe Barney Leith's version, not Roger Kingdon's? Why would one assume that Kelly would have refrained from such a "serious breach" as disclosing information to the Baha'i community, with it passing, ultimately, to the Universal House of Justice? As a Baha'i for over 27 years, I believe Kelly's involvement goes far beyond what Barney Leith and similar Bahai administrators would like the Hutton Inquiry to think. There are outright falsehoods in Leith's version that should be cause for alarm and for cautious investigation to determine the truth.

On September 15, 2003:

A. [Sir] Richard Billing Dearlove. I am the Chief of the Secret
20 Intelligence Service popularly known as MI6....

25 A. As chief of the service, I am shocked to see someone 1 discussing one of our CX reports, which is what he is
2 discussing, with a journalist without authorisation.

3 Q. I appreciate he was not within your specific area, which 4 is why I have not asked you about it, but what would 5 your reaction have been to finding out about these 6 discussions?

7 A. That it is a serious breach of discipline.

NOTE WELL: Importance and methods of converting prominent people:

Compilation on Prominent People Extracts from the Baha'i Writings and Letters Written by or on Behalf of Shoghi Effendi and the Universal House of Justice

I. The Importance of Guiding "Distinguished Souls to the Cause"

"I hope that thou wilt ... endeavour to teach some high-ranking and influential persons,"

<https://bahai-library.org/compilations/prominent.people.html#I> (numerous quotations)

II. Some Guidelines for Reaching Prominent People

"Our Guardian hopes and prays that you will be guided in your endeavour to bring together at the banquet various prominent citizens of various races and religions with the sole purpose of winning then ultimately to the recognition of God's sacred Faith. You must stress the universal aspect of the Cause and show utmost kindness and love to them all as a preparation to their eventual acceptance of the entire truth."

---

NOTE WELL: Journalists and Investigators of the David Kelly affair will doubtlessly be told by representatives of the Baha'i administration that Baha'is don't get involved in politics. I urge those interested to carefully read this message and reflect on how deceptive such claims are:

From: "jodarling2001" <jodarling2001@y...>

Date: Tue Aug 19, 2003 8:52 pm

Subject: Re: Baha'i Influence

I'm not sure how this thread started. It probably had something to do with David Kelly and the influence that Baha'is are having in current world affairs, including protests, politics, and maybe even wars.

To answer your questions - it is a matter of connecting the dots.

> Are you saying that people here on the LSAs in > the Perth community have connections to political parties in Iran?

Dot one: The first 'dot' is that there is a TV program based in Los Angeles who has Baha'i anchor people and Baha'i guests:

Here is the heading of an article from the NY Times linking the NITV programs to the call for new Government in Iran:

TV Stations Based in U.S. Rally Protesters in Iran
By NAZILA FATHI (June 22, 2003)

TEHRAN, June 21 &#8212; Jilla, a prosperous homemaker, has been trying to outwit the Iranian government's campaign to jam Persian-language satellite television stations based in Los Angeles.

-----

Dot two: One of the Baha'i couples that you named as the linchpins in the Perth Community broadcast into Iran from NITV.

Dot three: The article from the NY Times suggests the NITV broadcasts have contributed to the student's protesting in Iran:

"In Iran many of those who came to the demonstrations said they did so after listening to the foreign broadcasts."

Dot Four: The article in the NY Times makes a connection with political parties in Iran:

"The foreign stations are also viewed with suspicion because of their support for Reza Pahlavi, the son of the former shah of Iran."

So if we connect the dots we see a Persian Baha'i couple (active in the Baha'i Administration) from Perth broadcasting from a LA radio station which is influencing the students and politics in Iran. What's more the US Government is going to fund the station to do more.

The web is beyond my investigative skills. I just think, like Juan, that it is wise to know the influences that the Baha'i Faith has and how they operate. The Faith is now what it is and there isn't much that can be done to change that - members and the world just have to understand it.

Jo*

---

To understand the uhj's attempting to appeal to the NGO community, a further instance of its subtle involvement in politics, see its repeated use of Marxist historian Eric Hobsbawm cited in The Century of Light.

---

For further evidence of baha'i involvement in politics, see extensive manipulation of the United Nations

---

The above-mentioned NITV in LA broadcasting pro- return-of-the-Shah propaganda into Iran

---

Outside observers should be especially careful and alert to Hikmat & Taqiya, "wisdom" and dissimulation, key Baha'i concepts

---

Article on David Kelly in De Morgen, Sept. 6, 2003, by Maarten Rabaey <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/DeMorgen.htm>

---

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly.htm>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Roger Kingdon versus Barney Leith's Account

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly100502.htm>

See my video interview on David Kelly for the movie Baha'is in My Backyard - Segment 2
https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Bahais\_in\_My\_Backyard.html

NOTE WELL: Incredibly, many have accepted, without the slightest hesitation, suspicion, and, apparently, investigation, the claims by the fundamentalists among my fellow Baha'is regarding David Kelly's talk at the home of Geeta and Roger Kingdon. It should be carefully considered to what extent Barney Leith's July 20 letter prohibiting Baha'is from talking with the press influenced the comments here. The timeline should also be carefully investigated since the possibility exists that local Baha'is revealed that the October 2002 meeting took place prior to Barney Leith's July 20 letter. Notice too that the only Baha'i being interviewed by Lord Hutton is the author of that prohibition and Secretary of the UK NSA. Obviously, Barnabus Leith and Roger Kingdon have very different accounts and only one can be the truth:

"Roger Kingdon told The Observer last night that Kelly expressed his unhappiness with how the document was being interpreted, saying the intelligence information supplied was accurate, but indicating that he was uncomfortable about how it was being represented."
<https://observer.guardian.co.uk/politics/story/0,6903,1006711,00.html>
or
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly100502.htm>

Barnabus Leith, UK NSA Secretary:

Media exposure 'led to Kelly suicide'
Matthew Tempest, political correspondent
Tuesday September 2, 2003

"...Earlier the court heard testimony from Barnabus Leith, the secretary of the national spiritual assembly of the Baha'i faith, who denied media reports that Dr Kelly had addressed a Baha'i meeting on the September dossier.

"Mr Leith said that the scientist was always "particularly discreet" and that although Dr Kelly did address a meeting in Oxfordshire about his work as a weapons inspector, it was not a Baha'i faith meeting and he neither mentioned the dossier nor was asked about it....

"Mr Leith revealed that Dr Kelly joined the religion - founded by an Iranian prophet in the 19th century - while in California in September 1999."
<https://politics.guardian.co.uk/kelly/story/0,13747,1034240,00.html>

---

If you're unfamiliar with hikmat and taqiya in either a Muslim or Baha'i context, it's basically the "wisdom" of lying and dissimulating when necessary to protect yourself or the faith..... Outside observers should be especially careful and alert to Hikmat & Taqiya, "wisdom" and dissimulation, key Baha'i concepts
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/hikmatMENU.htm>

For anyone interested, the Wikipedia article on taqqiya cites an outstanding article by Ibrahim, Raymond. "How Taqiyya Alters Islam's Rules of War: Defeating Jihadist Terrorism". Middle East Forum. Winter 2010. Having read a number of articles on taqqiya (taqiyya or taqiya) over the years, I've highly recommend Raymon Ibrahim's piece. It is available online: <https://www.meforum.org/2538/taqiyya-islam-rules-of-war>

NOTE WELL: See FULL TEXT for Roger Kingdon's account below. My comments interwoven here with Barnabus Leith's testimony before the Hutton Inquiry, EXTRACTS:

24 A. You use the word "progress", it is not really 25 a progression.

89

1 Q. Sorry.

2 A. Because there is no career structure, as it were.

One can be re-elected EVERY YEAR, for decades, which is the way it actually works in the Baha'i Faith, much complained about by "liberal Baha'is," but there's no career structure.... Please, someone inform his Lordship that he's been duped.

8 Q. I think you wanted to comment on an article in 9 a newspaper which claimed that Dr Kelly had spoken about 10 his work. Did Dr Kelly speak about his work, as far as 11 you knew?

I.e., Lord Hutton had been told ahead of time that Leith wanted to refute Roger Kingdon's claim, note, not the newspaper's, that Kelly HAD discussed the dossier....

12 A. He did not, or at least he did not ever in my hearing 13 and I understand from the Baha'is in Abingdon that he 14 did not at Baha'i meetings talk about his work.

THEY said otherwise earlier in public.... According to them, Kelly had spoken about the dossier IN THEIR HEARING and had been questioned about it. Leith knows that and hence his equivocation. Was Leith in the WC?

He was

15 extremely discreet. The particular press comment 16 claimed that he had spoken at a Baha'i meeting
17 critically about the September dossier.

WRONG. Roger Kingdon claimed.... The press reported his claim. Time to interview the interviewer or author of article.... Time to interview ALL 30 of those at that meeting....

This was not in 18 fact the case. I was at that meeting.

Barnabus Leith is the author of the gag order issued on July 20 from the UK NSA.... As a fundamentalist, on the career ladder/structure, he's completely untrustworthy.

It was not

19 a meeting organised by the Baha'i local assembly, it was 20 privately organised and he was invited to speak to an 21 audience of Baha'is and non-Baha'is about his work as 22 a weapons inspector in Iraq from 1991 until 1998; and he 23 did so with the aid of slides. He did not mention the 24 dossier. Nobody asked him about the dossier.

And 30 people just happened to be Baha'i? Kelly didn't think he was addressing a Baha'i gathering? How many non-Bahais were there? Who called around to organize the meeting? It wasn't the Local Spiritual Assembly as usual? Or members thereof? Hence, other Baha'is would have certainly believed they were attending a Baha'i meeting. Roger Kingdon clearly thought, implied, and said as much....

<https://www.the-hutton-inquiry.org.uk/content/transcripts/hearing-trans27.htm>

---

FULL TEXT of Roger Kingdon's account:

<https://observer.guardian.co.uk/politics/story/0,6903,1006711,00.html>

***BEGIN ARTICLE*****

Revealed: Kelly told church of dossier fears

Scientist briefed Hoon days before attack on Iraq

Jason Burke and Kamal Ahmed
Sunday July 27, 2003
The Observer

David Kelly spoke openly to fellow members of a religious sect about his concerns over the 'interpretation' of intelligence material in the Government's September dossier on whether Saddam Hussein possessed weapons of mass destruction.

As the dead scientists' family yesterday met the senior law lord appointed to head the judicial inquiry into the affair, remarkable new details emerged of Kelly's views on the dossier during a discussion with worshippers of the Bahai faith, a Persian religion that promotes global peace, inter-racial harmony and self-discipline.

The disclosure of new evidence about his 'unhappiness' with the dossier came as it was revealed last night that Geoff Hoon, the Defence Secretary, had a private lunch with the weapons scientist shortly before the Iraq conflict, undermining government claims that Kelly was a middle-ranking official with little access to intelligence.

Hoon met Kelly to discuss Saddam and the weapons of mass destruction. Although it is not clear whether Kelly raised his concerns about the use of intelligence to make the case for war, it is unusual for a member of the Cabinet to meet officials unless they have high levels of information unlikely to be known by the Minister.

Kelly, who joined the 5000-strong British followers of the Bahai faith in 1999, made his comments at the home of Geeta and Roger Kingdon, two fellow worshippers, in Abingdon, Oxfordshire, on 5 October last year. Also present were around 30 other invited Bahai guests.

Kelly gave a 40-minute talk, which was accompanied with a slide show, about his work as a weapons inspector in Iraq. He ended with a question-and-answer session on the intelligence dossier, which had been made public 10 days earlier as part of what opponents claim was a government attempt to swing public opinion behind war on Iraq.

Roger Kingdon told The Observer last night that Kelly expressed his unhappiness with how the document was being interpreted, saying the intelligence information supplied was accurate, but indicating that he was uncomfortable about how it was being represented.

At the time of the discussion, newspapers and broadcasters were reporting, with government guidance, that the document proved that the Iraqi military could deploy chemical and biological weapons at 45 minutes' notice; that there had been recent attempts by the Iraqis to acquire 'significant quantities of uranium from Africa'; and that Iraq could produce a nuclear weapon in 'between one and two years' if Saddam's Hussein's agents obtained bomb-grade uranium and other components.

The Sun reacted with the headline: 'He's got 'em... Let's get him.'

Critically, however, Kingdon said it was unclear whether Kelly was saying that he was unhappy at the way the document had been presented by the government, or at the way it had been interpreted by the media, or both.

'I asked him what he thought of [the dossier]. It was clear that he was happy with the factual content but less happy... and felt frustrated... by the way it had been interpreted... But he did not say who by.'

Kingdon said Kelly was 'ambiguous' about exactly who he blamed for the misrepresentation of the dossier. '[He] expressed frustration at how it was interpreted but did not say by whom,' he said.

The news that he talked so openly will be seized on by those who have been trying to paint the scientist as a maverick with an inappropriate taste for talking about his work.

However, Kelly's friends attribute it to his personal determination to ensure that the problems of weapons proliferation was properly understood by the public and the media.

The disclosures last night added fresh intrigue to the crisis that has engulfed the government and the BBC since the Ministry of Defence scientist's body was found two miles from his home in Southmoor, Oxfordshire, on 18 July. Kelly, 59, bled to death after slashing his left wrist.

Lord Hutton, who was appointed by Tony Blair to carry out a judicial inquiry into the events surrounding Kelly's death, yesterday visited his widow, Janice, and her three daughters before starting to hear evidence in a case that is likely to last six weeks. Friends of the family indicated last night that they were unlikely to make any public comment until the inquiry was completed.

Kelly, who was employed by the Ministry, though he had frequent contact with the security services, appears to have often briefed journalists on the hunt for WMD programmes in Iraq and elsewhere. It was one such discussion, with Andrew Gilligan of the BBC in a hotel in London earlier this year, which eventually led to the disclosure of his name to the media and his suicide.

The Observer has also learned that Kelly was vetted by the Ministry of Defence and MI5 in the months before his death. As a senior official at the top secret chemical and biological weapons research centre at Porton Down, Kelly was subject to so-called 'developed vetting'.

This enhanced level of checks tests for which involve comprehensive interviews with colleagues, superiors and other associates, is usually only reviewed every three years. A more cursory check, of police and financial records, is carried out every year. It is unclear which vetting procedure was carried out on Kelly earlier this year.

There have been reports - denied by his family - that Kelly had been suffering from depression for some time. Ministry of Defence officials said last night that vetting, conducted by a special section in York, is largely focused on security issues and that a medical problem, unless entered on medical records, might not be detected. However, one former colleague of Kelly told The Observer that the scientist would have been subject to a high degree of scrutiny. 'This is someone with access to the highest levels of intelligence and who, through his work at Porton Down, worked closely with extremely dangerous substances,' he said. 'They would have been, or should have been, watching him closely.'

Kingdon said that Kelly was a strong admirer of Hans Blix, the Swedish head of the United Nations weapons inspection programme who was criticised by American hawks for being too moderate. Blix is known to be committed to the idea that inspections offer a better alternative to international disputes over weapons of mass destruction than war.

Bahai officials said they are discussing funeral plans with Dr Kelly's family. 'Bahais locally are in touch with the family and are offering whatever support they can to Mrs Kelly,' one said.

'We're working very closely with the family to have a funeral in accordance with the family's needs and Dr Kelly's life,' he said.

Meanwhile, Sky News and ITN are making legal representations to Lord Hutton in a bid to have television cameras admitted to the inquiry hearings, a Sky spokeswoman said yesterday.

The secretary to the inquiry, Lee Hughes, announced last Thursday that the judge had decided TV and radio broadcasts would be limited to the opening and closing statements.

***END ARTICLE*****

---

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly.htm>

---

Article on David Kelly in De Morgen, Sept. 6, 2003, by Maarten Rabaey
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/DeMorgen.htm>

---

Mai Pederson (Al-Sadat) Arab Kuwaiti American Baha'i
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/KellyMai.htm>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

FACT: Barnabus (bas) Leith made several misrepresentations in his testimony to the Hutton Inquiry.

I appeal to you to uncover what really happened to David Kelly, and I appeal to you to be on your guard against the deceptions and misrepresentations of the fundamentalists among my fellow bahais who now control the institutions of the baha'i faith. Their doctrine of hikmat or "wisdom" has long permitted them to lie and equivocate on behalf of their extremist faction within the Bahai administration.

As a bahai for over 27 years, I know you're truly up against much more than you realize when it comes to discovering the truth about David Kelly and the role the Bahai Faith played in his death/suicide.

Here's the truth: The truth is not going to be an easy sound bite for you. You're going to have to work and read a considerable amount of documentation, starting on the web, the only free and open source of information when it comes to understanding the Baha'i Faith. As a Baha'i who has maintained a website dedicated to restoring free speech and conscience to the Baha'i Faith for more than six years, I understand the complexity of the labyrinth that confronts you and caution you to consider there may be much more involved than readily meets the eye.

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly.htm>

See my video interview on David Kelly for the movie Baha'is in My Backyard - Segment 2
https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Bahais\_in\_My\_Backyard.html

FG
The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

In addition to my Kelly page, I urge you at the very least to READ these two articles:

--

Professor Juan R. I. Cole, University of Michigan,
"Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community,"
Religious Studies Review, Vol. 43, no. 3 (March, 2002):195-217:
<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2002/fundbhfn.htm>

Karen Bacquet, "Enemies Within: Conflict and Control in the Baha'i Community." Published in American Family Foundation's Cultic Studies Journal, Volume 18, pp.109-140:
<https://www.angelfire.com/ca3/bigquestions/enemies.html>

-----
At some point consider skimming "The Baha'i Technique":
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

---

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly.htm>

---

Article on David Kelly in De Morgen, Sept. 6, 2003, by Maarten Rabaey
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/DeMorgen.htm>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Mai Pederson (Al-Sadat) - Arab Kuwaiti American Baha'i

---

NOTE WELL: I urge the reader to peruse Professor Juan Cole's article on the treatment of liberals by fundamentalists in the Baha'i Faith, linked to at the bottom, and then reflect again on the events surrounding Dr. David Kelly's death and the possible involvement of Mai Pederson. Life can be stranger than fiction, and the David Kelly affair has already corroborated that cliché in more ways than one.

See my video interview on David Kelly for the movie Baha'is in My Backyard - Segment 2
https://fglaysia.com/bahaicensorship/Bahais\_in\_My\_Backyard.html

---

Medical evidence does not support suicide by Kelly

<https://www.guardian.co.uk/print/0,3858,4856799-103683,00.html>

Thursday February 12, 2004
The Guardian

Since three of us wrote our letter to the Guardian on January 27, questioning whether Dr Kelly's death was suicide, we have received professional support for our view from vascular surgeon Martin Birnstingl, pathologist Dr Peter Fletcher, and consultant in public health Dr Andrew Rouse. We all agree that it is highly improbable that the primary cause of Dr Kelly's death was haemorrhage from transection of a single ulnar artery, as stated by Brian Hutton in his report.

On February 10, Dr Rouse wrote to the BMJ explaining that he and his colleague, Yaser Adi, had spent 100 hours preparing a report, Hutton, Kelly and the Missing Epidemiology. They concluded that "the identified evidence does not support the view that wrist-slash deaths are common (or indeed possible)". While Professor Chris Milroy, in a letter to the BMJ, responded, "unlikely does not make it impossible", Dr Rouse replied: "Before most of us will be prepared to accept wristslashing ... as a satisfactory and credible explanation for a death, we will also require evidence that such aetiologies are likely; not merely 'possible'."

Our criticism of the Hutton report is that its verdict of "suicide" is an inappropriate finding. To bleed to death from a transected artery goes against classical medical teaching, which is that a transected artery retracts, narrows, clots and stops bleeding within minutes. Even if a person continues to bleed, the body compensates for the loss of blood through vasoconstriction (closing down of non-essential arteries). This allows a partially exsanguinated individual to live for many hours, even days.

Professor Milroy expands on the finding of Dr Nicholas Hunt, the forensic pathologist at the Hutton inquiry - that haemorrhage was the main cause of death (possibly finding it inadequate) - and falls back on the toxicology: "The toxicology showed a significant overdose of co-proxamol. The standard text, Baselt, records deaths with concentrations at 1 mg/l, the concentration found in Kelly." But Dr Allan, the toxicologist in the case, considered this nowhere near toxic. Each of the two components was a third of what is normally considered a fatal level. Professor Milroy then talks of "ischaemic heart disease". But Dr Hunt is explicit that Dr Kelly did not suffer a heart attack. Thus, one must assume that no changes attributable to myocardial ischaemia were actually found at autopsy.

We believe the verdict given is in contradiction to medical teaching; is at variance with documented cases of wrist-slash suicides; and does not align itself with the evidence presented at the inquiry. We call for the reopening of the inquest by the coroner, where a jury may be called and evidence taken on oath.

Andrew Rouse

Public health consultant

Searle Sennett

Specialist in anaesthesiology

David Halpin

Specialist in trauma

Stephen Frost

Specialist in radiology

Dr Peter Fletcher

Specialist in pathology

Martin Birnstingl

Specialist in vascular surgery

---

Dr Kelly 'did not kill himself'

Femail, UK 1-26-04

An American confidante of David Kelly has cast doubt on whether his death was suicide.

Days before Lord Hutton's report into his death is published, Mai Pederson claimed the Government scientist received death threats because of his work in Iraq.

She said she was surprised that he had apparently taken 20 painkillers before slashing his wrist in remote woodland - because he had an aversion to swallowing tablets.

Mrs Pederson, a United States Air Force translator who worked alongside Dr Kelly in Iraq, refused to give evidence to Lord Hutton's inquiry.

But in a statement to police she said Dr Kelly had told her he would "never" commit suicide and that he feared he would be found "dead in the woods".

She rebutted speculation that she had been romantically involved with the 59-year-old married father of three, insisting their relationship was more like "brother and sister".

Mrs Pederson told The Mail on Sunday: "I told the police that the fact that he was found dead in the woods was not surprising.

"The fact that they said he committed suicide was."

Mrs Pederson, who lives in Alabama, is a member of the Baha'i faith which Dr Kelly joined some years ago.

She said Dr Kelly told her how his mother had committed suicide and confided: "Good God no, I couldn't imagine ever doing that? I would never do it."

"Parts of Dr Kelly's life remained a mystery even to close associates. Still unexplained is his late religious conversion to the Baha'i faith and his friendship with his spiritual mentor, an American linguist, Mai Pederson, who was questioned by Thames Valley Police after his death, but refused to allow her statement to be passed on to Lord Hutton.

Ms Pederson was mentioned only briefly at the Hutton inquiry when Mrs

Kelly testified that she was "quite influential" in bringing Dr Kelly to the new religion and "later became a family friend".

Nicholas Gardiner, the Oxfordshire Coroner, told The Times last night that he will study all relevant material, including Dr Kelly's childhood and his friendship with Ms Pederson, before deciding whether to hold a full inquest."

'Full story:

Hutton was never told about Kelly's anguished youth
<https://www.timesonline.co.uk/article/0,,2-972690,00.html>

---

Coroner ready to open new Kelly inquiry

By Laura Peek, Dominic Kennedy and David Charter

* BBC reporter's four-letter fury at 'outrageous' Panorama claims

A CORONER is considering a full inquest into the death of David Kelly because he believes that the Hutton inquiry was unable to examine key details of his troubled past.

At least five witnesses, including Mai Pederson, the American woman who introduced Dr Kelly to the Baha'i faith, refused to release their statements. Mr Gardiner said: "What their motives might be for not handing over their statements I have no idea but I think I ought to see them.

Full Story:

<https://www.timesonline.co.uk/article/0,,2-972832,00.html>

---

Spiritual mentor to tell of relationship with Dr Kelly
Mai Pederson, 43, has hired a leading lawyer in Washington following reports....

https://www.dailytimes.com.pk/default.asp?page=story\_11-9-2003\_pg10\_5

---

"The Mail on Sunday" (TMOS) 7th September 2003
[Purportedly published there but unconfirmed via Internet]

From Sharon Churcher ( In Monterey, California) PHOTHGRAPH OF MAI PEDERSON ON FRONT PAGE written underneath: QUIZZED: US spy Mai Pederson was close to Kelly.

Article heading:

DOES THIS WOMAN HOLD KEY TO DEATH OF KELLY.

This is the first picture of Seregant Mai Pederson, a twice married American Spy who could hold vital clues to the death
of

Dr David Kelly. Ms Pederson, 43, struck up a close friendship with the Ministry of defense scientist when they were both serving with a UN weapons inspection team in Iraq, and has been questioned by officials investigating his death. She is a veteran of American military intelligence and also a devotee
of the exotic Baha'ireligious sect. She converted Dr Kelly to the Faith in 1999.

Yesterday it was revealed that Sgt Pederson may now be called to give evidence at the Hutton inquiry into the death of 59 year old Dr Kelly.

Page 2) The Mail On Sunday can disclose that she has already been interviewed by British Investigators. The developments have fuelled intense speculation in Whitehall. Observers said Sgt Pederson testimony would open a new line of inquiry into
the tragedy and perhaps supply unique insights into Dr Kelly's frame of mind and his links to international intelligence.

last night Sgt Pederson appeared to be in hiding, with US officials refusing to to discuss the affair or say where she is.
"

This is not a US investagation and it would be innappropriate
for us to discuss the inquiry" said a spokesman at the Maxwell Gunter US Air Force base in Alabama, where Sgt Pederson is stationed. " She is co-operating with the authorities. Asked whether she had been questioned by the British authorities,
the spokeman replied "yes thats my understanding".

Sgt Pederson's ex husband James, told friends last week that she was a 'spook' trained to cultivate anyone who might be able to help her in her intelligence work. She broke the news of Dr kellys death to fellow members of of the bahai sect telling

them
not to believe what they would read about the affair in the press..
A Pentagon spokesman said last night " I can tell you emphatically that we are not hiding her. We do not hide people"

(Page 6) Heading: REVEALED: HOW A MYSTERIOUS AMERICAN SPY BEFRIENDED DR DAVID KELLY, CONVERTER HIM TO AN EXOTIC EASTERN FAITH....AND COULD NOW BE CALLED AS A WITNESS TO THE HUTTON INQUIRY.

MAI IS A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN. PART OF HER MILITARY TRAINING WAS TO ZERO IN ON ANYONE WHO MIGHT BE ABLE TO HELP HER INTELLIGENCE WORK.

She is a flirtatious divorcee, a spy for the American Air Force, and a leading cheerleader for an exotic Eastern religious sect. And now she may hold the key to the lonely, mysterious death of David Kelly.

Petite mai Pederson, exclusively pictured today by TMOS befriended Dr kelly while both were serving with the UN weapons inspectors in Iraq in 1998. Before long, she converted him to the Bahai Faith.

Ms Pederson was in hiding last night, and has been seldom seen since Dr Kelly was found dead on July 18. Indeed, her existence was unknown until last week, when, in a cryptic article that mysteriously failed to appear in its main edition, the Labour-supporting Times newspaper disclosed that she had been the Government scientist's spiritual mentor. Hitherto, almost nothing had been known about the enigmatic Dr Kelly's private life.

Yesterday The Times reported that the Hutton Inquiry into Dr Kelly's death was now considering whether to call Ms Pederson as a witness, a development that could not be confirmed by inquiry officials.

However, TMOS has established that Pederson has been questioned by British authorities. The developments sparked intense speculation in Whitehall last night. A senior source told the TMOS " This would open up a whole new line of Inquiry", which is possibly just what the government wants, the stakes are high indeed".

So what light could Mai Pederson shed on the tragedy of Dr Kelly, who was found dead after being named as a source for a BBC report that the government had sexed up the case for war on Iraq? TMOS has found no evidence to support the Times repeated implication that the self-effacing Government scientist did indeed fall under Pederson's spell - and that she could supply revealing insights into his state of mind.

In addition, it is clear that Pederson would have first hand knowledge immersion in the murky world of international intelligence. It appears that Dr Kelly first met Ms Pederson in Iraq in December 1998. He was part of the UN's weapons inspection team; she was an Arabic inspection USAF sergeant who had graduated from spy school "SHE HAD BEEN WHISKED BY THE MILITARY" and had held various posts in military intelligence.

She was also an energetic advocate of the bahai Faith 0 oddly, perhaps because of its avowed opposition to militarism. They became friends, not long afterwards Dr Kelly began to appear at bahai meetings in Monterey, California. He was sometimes accompanied by Pederson, who was now based at a nearby military spy school. She was introduced as his spiritual mentor, to the puzzlement of some members of the sect. "There are Bahai's all over the world, including England, He didn't have to come all this way", one official said last week. Kristen Calwell who runs a bookstore, added "One of the tenets of the Faith is that you investigate it on your own".

An intelligent expert said last night that the American military had tried - and often failed - to use weapons inspectors as informants. Did Pederson target Dr Kelly for this reason?

The American Airforce was blocking inquiries on the subject last night and is believed to have Pederson under its protection. "The CIA was desperate to get information out of the inspectors" the expert told TMOS "It had a policy of putting spooks alongside some of the more uncooperative inspectors. It is inconceivable that she was one these people. Its an amazing coincidance that she was in the military"

At the time, it does not appear that Dr Kelly smelled any rats. In the autumn of 1999, after the Government scientist travelled to monterey for several tutorials about the Faith he became a formal convert. He declared that he believed Baha'u'llah, the group's 19thcentury founder was sent to earth by God as "The Promised one" -a successor to Jesus and other prophets and signed a membership card promising to abide by Baha'i laws , which prohibit alcohol, drugs, adultery and party politics while advocating "non military resolution of conflicts' and the supremacy of the United Nations.

Bahai officials claim Kelly - an agnostic when they first met him was impressed by the rationality of their belief's. Mai and Dr Kelly came to our house several times', recalls Marilyn Vonberg, the 79 year old Monterey resident who was secretary of the assembly at the time. 'She taught him the Faith. He was really studying'. I was thrilled when he became a Bahai because he was such an exceptional man. I gave him a book and he took it back to England with him and bought another one there and sent it to us. He said the book helped lead him to God' She adds that Dr Kelly was impressed by Sgt Pederson's demeanour, her calmness'

Various men came under the spell of the mysterious sergeant.

(page 6 & 7)

PHOTOGRAPH OF SGT MAI PEDERSON HOME IN MONTGOMERY ALABAMA, IS BEING SHIELDED FROM THE MEDIA BY THE USAF

Her first husband Cameron Dr Hart, a former US Special Forces combat controller, said in an exclusive interview from his home in Indianapolis: "Mai is a charmer. Her eyes are so beautiful that when she looks at a man, she instantly can wrap him around her little finger"

Her second husband, Us Airforce Sergeant Jim Pederson, would concur. He has told friends: mai is a beautiful woman, absolutely stunning. She was very sexy, seductive even, and was always flirting with men. I am not surprised that she became a friend of David Kelly. "Part of her military training was to cultivate anyone who might be able to help her in her intelligence work

"It may well have been why she zeroed in on Dr Kelly. She undoubtedly viewed him as a potential intelligence source. The two things that obsessed her were the military and the Bahai faith"

Born Mai al-Sadat in the Gulf Kingdom of Kuwait, Pederson's fluency in Arabic, German and French impressed her Pentagon bosses. " She was given a top secret clearance, and one of her first jobs was translating military documents', says a US Defence Department insider. " Subsequently, she became a translator and "tour guide" escorting other undercover operatives on assignments in the Middle east'.

Jim Pederson told friends: She has always been a spook of one kind or another'. She is invaluable in this job because she doesn't look as though she's in intelligence. She goes in to interrogate someone and she is tiny and beautiful, and she flirts with them, and just sits down and chats. Before they know it they've told her all sorts of stuff.

'The marriage never stood much of a chance from the start. Mai was always going away for months at a time. She was proficient with a gun and in basic unarmed combat and worked undercover for long periods called TDA for Temporary Duty Attachments - in Egypt and I believe Iran. She was a very complex character'. But he stressed: She took marriage very seriously and was not at all promiscuous - just the opposite'.

Her first husband believes his exwife's adherence to the bahai Faith was an act of rebellion against her strict Muslim father. In 199, after the couple separated Mai became a language instructor at the Defense Language Institute, a spy school

the
USAF runs in Monterey. In her testimony to the Hutton Irguiry last week, Dr Kelly's widow Janice said she knew only a little about her husband's conversion to Baha'i. She added however, that Mai
Pederson had been quite influential in her husband's spiritual quest and had become a family friend.

On the morning that Janice Kelly gave evidence, later editions of the Times newspaper disclosed the existence of Mai Pederson and of her importance in the life of Dr Kelly. The newspaper is an unapologetic supporter of New Labour and along with the Guardian and Financial Times, was responsible for naming Dr Kelly in the first instance. It gave no clue to the provenance
of its story which was printed only in a few thousand copies and not noticed by the rest of the media.

During the week the newspaper ran another item - this time about Dr Kelly and the Bahai Faith - and then yesterday claimed that Mai Pederson could be called as a witness when the Hutton inquiry reconvenes later in the month. The Times quoted a spokesman for the inquiry as saying : It is possible that she may be called to give evidence."

Yesterday the inquiry told TMOS that her summons was indeed possible, but by no means certain, However, yesterday's admission to The Mail on Sunday that Master Sgt Pederson had been interviewed by the British investigating authorities - presumably reporting to the Ministry of Defense - confirmed
that Dr Kelly's superiors were aware of his friendship with the engaging American spy.

Had the Ministry of Defense played any part in its emergence into the press? Perhaps the one woman who knows the truth is Mai
Pederson. She did not respond to repeated requests by TMOS for comment. Intriguingly, however, she was one of the very first people to learn of Dr Kelly's body had been found

"She phoned us and said he had been found" says the Bahai leader Marilyn VonBerg. Pederson then said that her friends "shouldn't believe what we would be reading in the newspapers"

What could that possibly mean? " Its very mysterious to us" admits Mrs VonBerg's husband, John. Mrs Vonbwerg was unable to confirm the exact date of the call from Pederson informing her and her husband of Dr Kelly's death. My husband took the call" she said.

Since that call, Mai Pederson appears to have gone to ground.

Her Baha'i friends will not say where she is , although they have been prepared to pass on telephone requests for interview, which have all been declined. O)ne neighbour at Pederson's most recent address in Montgomery, described her as a very pleasant person who had introduced herself when she moved in about a month ago. Prior to her move, which is believed to have taken place during the Dossier row but before Dr Kelly was named, Pederson appears to have been working at the Pentagon's internal staff directory although her extension is not working.

Her Alabama neighbour said: "She didn't say where she worked and we are not the kind of people to ask. Other neighbours said that they had breifly met Pederson but had not seen her for the past week. Her neat, suburban ranch style bungalow in the leafy suburb of east Montgomery, a 20 minute drive from Maxwell Air Base where she works, stands empty.

The base, in one of the country's poorer regions, is one of the biggest employer in the area and brings about $800 million into the economy of the capatial of the state. At the vast complex early last week, a MOS journalist asking to see Pederson was told :

" We have no one here of that name that I can find.

Subsequent inquires were referred to the base public affairs officials. For several days, base Press Officers repeatedly refused to answer questions related to Pederson, saying only that all such inquiries should be directed to the British Government. Only yesterday did an official confirm that Sgt Pederson worked at the base and had been questioned over her links to Kelly.

---

September 21, 2003

Seven steps of despair that led to Kelly death

David Leppard and Jonathon Carr-Brown

....New details have also emerged of Dr Kelly's friendship with Mai

Pederson, a US military linguist who served with him as a United Nations weapons inspector in 1998 and later introduced him to the

Baha'i religion.

Pederson was his mentor when he converted to the faith in Monterey,

California, in September 1999. This weekend Lee Steinmetz, chairman of the Baha'i chapter in Monterey, recalled conversations that he had held with the couple when he hiked with them in 1999 to Point Lobos, a beauty spot on the Pacific coast.

Steinmetz dismissed suggestions that Pederson's faith was simply a pretext to extract intelligence from Kelly. He said that he saw nothing which suggested that they were involved in a romantic relationship....

<https://www.timesonline.co.uk/article/0,,2087-824676,00.html>

**-----

Barney Leith, Roger Kingdon, Mai Pederson, and now Lee Steinmetz....

Why would anyone believe them? Especially when they contradict one another? And have every reason to lie for the bahai administration:

1. Affair

2. Spook who targeted Kelly, apparently a last minute substitution in 1998

3. Bahai, just by chance....

4. Kingdon.... 30 others at October 5, 2002 meeting, other bahai meetings Kelly spoke at....

An awfully suspicious mess. How uninformed are the media?

Bahai
fundamentalists tell them something and they swallow it, unaware of the actual record of human rights abuse within this religion supposedly devoted to world peace and brotherhood. The Hutton Inquiry
is steering clear of it for political reasons. How could it ever deal with the US Air Force, DOD, the Pentagon, and planted spies? All rolled into a religion fiddling around for its own interests....

---

NOTE WELL: Mai Pederson REFUSED to give testimony. Roger Kingdon has not been heard from since the July 20th article. Surely, his story changed long ago.

Iraq Expert's Death May Be Probed Again
Fri September 26, 2003 10:11 PM ET LONDON (Reuters) - .... But a coroner in Kelly's home county of Oxfordshire said he might reopen his own inquest, which was adjourned at the start of the Hutton
Inquiry, because several witnesses had refused to let judge
Lord
Hutton see their statements to police.

Oxfordshire Coroner Nicholas Gardiner said at least five witness statements were not seen by Lord Hutton, according to the newspaper.

"Why these individuals concerned do not want their evidence to go forward I do not know," he was quoted as saying. "I shall ask police to show them to me if necessary. It depends on my reading of the (Hutton) report, which does not exist yet."

Police interviewed 500 people, took 300 witness statements and passed the 70 most relevant on to Lord Hutton, but only where the witnesses had given their permission, the paper said....

[https://reuters.com/newsArticle.jhtml?
type=worldNews&storyID=3517414](https://reuters.com/newsArticle.jhtml?type=worldNews&storyID=3517414)

---

ESSENTIAL READING - Two introductory articles on Baha'i fundamentalism and censorship

Professor Juan Cole, of the University of Michigan, Department of History, has a website of extensive and disturbing documentation that anyone interested in the Baha'i Faith should be aware of, especially his article "Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community," Religious Studies Review, Vol. 43, no. 3 (March, 2002):195-217:
<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2002/fundbhfn.htm>

In his book Modernity and the Millennium, published by Columbia University Press in 1998, Professor Cole observes the Baha'i administration has increasingly come under the control of fundamentalists, "stressing scriptural literalism . . . theocracy, censorship, intellectual intolerance, and denying key democratic values (196)."

See also Karen Bacquet, "Enemies Within: Conflict and Control in the Baha'i Community." Published in American Family Foundation's Cultic Studies Journal, Volume 18, pp.109-140:

<https://www.angelfire.com/ca3/bigquestions/enemies.html>

For numerous other views, I also recommend the over 50 megabytes of documentation on my own website, especially "The Baha'i Technique" for an introduction to Byzantine Baha'i practice against liberals, ex-bahais, and non-bahais:
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

---

EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly.htm>

---

Roger Kingdon versus Barney Leith's Account
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Kelly100502.htm>

---

To understand the uhj's attempting to appeal to the NGO community, a further instance of its subtle involvement in politics, see its repeated use of Marxist historian Eric Hobsbawm cited in The Century of Light.

---

For further evidence of baha'i involvement in politics, see extensive manipulation of the United Nations

---

NITV in LA broadcasting pro- return-of-the-Shah propaganda into Iran

---

Outside observers should be especially careful and alert to Hikmat & Taqiya, "wisdom" and dissimulation, key Baha'i concepts

For anyone interested, the Wikipedia article on taqqiya (taqiyya or taqiya) cites an outstanding article by Ibrahim, Raymond. "How Taqiyya Alters Islam's Rules of War: Defeating Jihadist Terrorism". Middle East Forum. Winter 2010. Having read a number of articles on taqqiya over the years, I've highly recommend Raymon Ibrahim's piece. It is available online:

<https://www.meforum.org/2538/taqiyya-islam-rules-of-war>

---

Article on David Kelly in De Morgen, Sept. 6, 2003, by Maarten Rabaey
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/DeMorgen.htm>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

See also his "A Modest Proposal" 1987 David Langness

Paul Dodenhoff on Mahmoudi

See Mahmoudi's coercive email to FG

Further details on Hoda Mahmoudi's coercive email

---

>From 72110.2126@compuserve.com Mon Mar 31
08:02:54 1997
Received: by dub-img-4.compuserve.com (8.6.10/5.950515)
id LAA02277; Mon, 31 Mar 1997 11:03:08 -0500 Date: 31 Mar 97 11:01:49 EST
From: David Langness
<72110.2126@CompuServe.COM>
To: <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: Re: Open Letter: UHJ (Universal House of Justice): talk.religion.bahai Message-ID: <970331160148_72110.2126_JHR55-
1@CompuServe.COM>
X-Mozilla-Status: 0014
Content-Length: 2730

Dear Frederick,

Your letter to the House made me want to write to you and tell you that I admire your commitment to expressing the truth as you see it. I, too, have had a very difficult time remaining a Baha'i in the face of administrative campaigns to silence and slander me when I attempted to facilitate open dialogue within a Baha'i context.

I did not hear, perhaps because I've been on vacation, what the final outcome of the vote for talk.religion.bahai turned out to be. I'm assuming from your letter to the House that it was not favorable.

And since I just returned from a visit with my family to Harper's Ferry, where John Brown's revolt on behalf of the slaves was met with scant slave support, that decision resounds with a deep irony for me. The Baha'is at large have no idea about the extent to which speech and writing are coerced and censored within the Faith, so they themselves are able to vote for the status quo without a clue as to how such tactics have hampered the growth of the Faith.
Sad indeed.

But Brown's revolt, while tactically unsuccessful, helped start a process of conflict and awareness that culminated in the Civil War and in the eventual abolishment of slavery. Hopefully those of us who recognize the need for change within the culture of the Faith can accomplish something similar if we only persevere. Accordingly, I hope that your letter to the House, along with the 200 or so I know they have received recently on similar subjects, will help move people in the direction of freedom and open expression.

I would advise you to be careful about any meetings, calls or correspondence with Hoda Mahmoudi, who used to be an ABM here in Southern California. She is quite conservative, and sees herself -- as do many of the appointed branch, sadly -- as a staunch defender of the Faith and the faithful, able and more than willing to marginalize people like you and I to discredit our ideas. This cultlike practice of shunning and casting out any dissidents has unfortunately become the chief tactic of those fundamentalist Baha'is
bent on maintaining the current leadership. My worry is that the more progressive Baha'is like Juan Cole and Steve Scholl and yourself will all leave the Faith and thereby increase the power of the conservatives.

So I hope that your letter to the House doesn't indicate that you are withdrawing from the Faith, although it seems to hint in that direction.

I hope that you can find a way to stay in and help us progressive types in our struggle -- but I will certainly understand if the fascists force yet another one out. My best to you in this difficult and troubled time.

Love,

David Langness

---

Compare Maneck - DRIVING people out of the Bahai Faith

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck9.htm>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Larry Rowe -Observations regarding the tactics of slander, shunning, and so on. No particular order below.

Also see Larry Rowe at <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/shunning2.htm>

Shunning > Menu

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Shunning.htm>

Larry Rowe From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: All for Bahaism, Bahaism for Nothing!
Date: Thursday, December 21, 2006 7:28 PM

Howdy Kent,

One has to ask oneself, or at least should ask oneself for the sake of intellectual integrity, why Baha'u'llah would, in Abdul-Baha's own words, remove a religious practice only to have the UHJ reinstate that self same religious practice:

A fundamental teaching of Bahá'u'lláh is the oneness of the world of humanity. Addressing mankind, He says: "Ye are all leaves of one tree and the fruits of one branch." By this it is meant that the world of humanity is like a tree, the nations or peoples are the different limbs or branches of that tree and the individual human creatures are as the fruits and blossoms thereof. In this way His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh expressed the oneness of humankind whereas in all religious teachings of the past, the human world has been represented as divided into two parts, one known as the people of the Book of God or the pure tree and the other the people of infidelity and error or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel; one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity and this principle is specialized in His teachings for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity. Some are asleep; they need to be awakened. Some are ailing; they need to be healed. Some are immature as children; they need to be trained. But all are recipients of the bounty and bestowals of God.

(Abdul-Baha, Baha'i World Faith - Abdul-Baha Section, p. 246)

The need to protect the Faith from the attacks of its enemies may not be generally appreciated by the friends, particularly in places where attacks have been infrequent. However, it is certain that such opposition will increase, become concerted, and eventually universal. The writings clearly foreshadow not only an intensification of the machinations of internal enemies, but a rise in the hostility and opposition of its external enemies, whether religious or secular, as the Cause pursues its onward march towards ultimate victory. Therefore, in the light of the warnings of the Guardian, the Auxiliary Boards for Protection should keep "constantly" a "watchful eye" on those "who are known to be enemies, or to have been put out of the Faith", discreetly investigate their activities, alert intelligently the friends to the opposition inevitably to come, explain how each crisis in God's Faith has always proved to be a blessing in disguise, and prepare them for the "dire contest which is destined to range the Army of Light against the forces of darkness".

(The Universal House of Justice, The Institution of the Counsellors, p. 16)

One must ask oneself why Baha'u'llah would remove the past religious practice of dividing humanity the "pure tree"-"the faithful", from "the evil tree"-"the irreligious" only to have the Universal House of Justice itself reinstate the very same past religious practice of dividing humanity: "the army of light" from "the forces of darkness"?

Why do Baha'is so easily and conveniently dismiss the universal teachings of the Baha'i faith? Why are the universal teachings within the Baha'i faith in effect eliminated through demoting them to mere: "councils of perfection", as Ian Kluge does?

What is the Baha'i faith without it's universal teachings?

The same old, same old.

A worn, patched, threadbare tent that has already outlived it's usefulness.

A religion whose founders state that the practice of shunning has been abolished and nulified, and that we should see no one as an enemy or draw lines between ourselves and others; and yet state that Baha'is are to practice these very things, shunning, seeing enemies, drawing lines.

These are the actual teachings of the Baha'i faith Kent. If Baha'is ever want to be taken seriously they will have to make a choice between God's universality and the earthly limitations of attempting to adhere to religious beliefs which at best are contradictory and at worse clearly hypocritical.

The belief that you can have your cake and eat it is a delusional one Kent.

If Baha'is truly believe in the oneness of humanity they will have to begin practicing this teaching, instead of practicing its opposite as is counselled by the UHJ in the message of theirs which is quoted above.

Yours

Larry

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: Susan Maneck continues breaching sacred boundaries.
Date: Saturday, December 16, 2006 5:08 PM

Howdy Kent,

That's what we do during holidays Kent and those other times when we are visiting with family; we avoid those controversial topics such as politics and religion. For the sake of family unity.

Perhaps Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi should have done the same thing, for the sake of family unity. This is where true unity begins after all.

As for this hurly burly forum, TRB, if there is a place for controversial Baha'i topics this is it.

Not sure if you know about it yet but there is a new forum on Yahoo Groups called Baha'i Community:

https://groups.yahoo.com/group/Bahai\_Community/

So far it seems to be following in SRB's footsteps with any topics that are difficult being censored.

Still, if you are looking for fellowship and discussion with like-minded people you would do better to do it there than here on TRB.

I may have crossed the line a bit when I said that the Baha'i faith is one of the darkest cults in the world today; but then when I read words such as the following the darkness positively, or more correctly negatively, oozes out of them:

The need to protect the Faith from the attacks of its enemies may not be generally appreciated by the friends, particularly in places where attacks have been infrequent. However, it is certain that such opposition will increase, become concerted, and eventually universal. The writings clearly foreshadow not only an intensification of the machinations of internal enemies, but a rise in the hostility and opposition of its external enemies, whether religious or secular, as the Cause pursues its onward march towards ultimate victory. Therefore, in the light of the warnings of the Guardian, the Auxiliary Boards for Protection should keep "constantly" a "watchful eye" on those "who are known to be enemies, or to have been put out of the Faith", discreetly investigate their activities, alert intelligently the friends to the opposition inevitably to come, explain how each crisis in God's Faith has always proved to be a blessing in disguise, and prepare them for the "dire contest which is destined to range the Army of Light against the forces of darkness".

(The Universal House of Justice, The Institution of the Counsellors, p. 16)

Then again the UHJ can come up with some very insightful words, words such as the following:

More detrimental still to religious understanding has been theological presumption. A persistent feature of religion's sectarian past has been the dominant role played by clergy. In the absence of scriptural texts that established unarguable institutional authority, clerical elites succeeded in arrogating to themselves exclusive control over interpretation of the Divine intent. However diverse the motives, the tragic effects have been to impede the current of inspiration, discourage independent intellectual activity, focus attention on the minutiae of rituals and too often engender hatred and prejudice towards those following a different sectarian path from that of self-appointed spiritual leaders. While nothing could prevent the creative power of Divine intervention from continuing its work of progressively raising consciousness, the scope of what could be achieved, in any age, became increasingly limited by such artificially contrived obstacles.

(Commissioned by The Universal House of Justice, One Common Faith)

Too bad they're too dense too see how these words apply perfectly to themselves and the Hands: "clerical elites", who: "in the absence of scriptural texts that established unarguable institutional authority", arrogate : " to themselves exclusive control over interpretation of the Divine intent."

The fact that each and every replacement to the Universal House of Justice for the past 20 years has come from appointees of the UHJ to the ITC qualifies the members of the UHJ as those very : "self-appointed spiritual leaders", that they themselves refer to it their insightful statement.

To bad that they are too blinded by the myth of their own infallibility that they can not see the wisdom in their own words, nor how those words apply directly to themselves and in turn to the Hands.

Not too surprisingly the Baha'i faith is firm in the grip of those: "effects", which: "have been to impede the current of inspiration, discourage independent intellectual activity, focus attention on the minutiae of rituals and too often engender hatred and prejudice towards those following a different sectarian path from that of self-appointed spiritual leaders."

How ironic, how comic, how true, how sad!

Yours

Larry Rowe

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: Susan Maneck continues breaching sacred boundaries.
Date: Saturday, December 09, 2006 9:35 PM

In any case, the Will and Testament authorizes the House of Justice to > decide all "matters that are not expressly recorded in the Book.
> Whatsoever they decide has the same effect as the Text itself." Since > this is something not clearly revealed in the text it is within the > House's authority to decide what to do.

The problem here Susan is that to decide often requires that interpretations be made and the Universal House of Justice has no more authority to make interpretations than any individual Baha'i, theirs the facts and they are scripturally based. If there were a Guardian as the permanent head of the Universal House of Justice as is stipulated in Abdul-Baha's W&T any decisions which required interpretation would of course be left up to that living hereditary Guardian.

The domain of interpretation is out of bounds for the Universal House of Justice, period. Any mis-use of semantic tools such as the words elucidation etc. are simply ways of attempting to get around the reality that there can be no authoritative interpretations made by any present Baha'i institutions, even if they are gurulike referred to by some Baha'is as "the beloved Universal House of Justice"

It is my opinion the Hands proceeded in the only way they thought was workable but that they should have actually gone to the community of Baha' Itself at that time to ask the opinion of the entire community on what should be done. They were thinking as "clerical elites" typically think: disregard the opinions of the masses.

As it stands they behaved exactly as the Universal House of Justice stated such "clerical elites", "in arrogating to themselves exclusive control over interpretation of the Divine intent.", "In the absence of scriptural texts that established unarguable institutional authority,"

*. Ruhiyyih Khanum openly admitted: "How to assume the reins of authority, with no document to support us, other than the general theological statements about the Hands?"

(Custodians, Ministry of the Custodians, p. 9)

It is little wonder to me that the Baha'i faith is presently suffering from full blown: "tragic effects have been to impede the current of inspiration, discourage independent intellectual activity, focus attention on the minutiae of rituals and too often engender hatred and prejudice towards those following a different sectarian path from that of self-appointed spiritual leaders."

When such fine individuals as Sen McGlinn are shown the door, are erased from Baha'i membership rolls as though they never existed, it is a clear indication that the Baha'i Faith is in deep denial and in deep dysfunction. So deep that Baha'i membership numbers are so grossly exaggerated, manipulated, and so far from reality that only the delusional or uninformed would believe them to be true.

The Baha'i Faith, as an organization, is so far from reality that the "self appointed" members of the Universal House of Justice cannot even see how their own words apply perfectly to themselves, as well as to the Hands:

*More detrimental still to religious understanding has been theological presumption. A persistent feature of religion's sectarian past has been the dominant role played by clergy. In the absence of scriptural texts that established unarguable institutional authority, clerical elites succeeded in arrogating to themselves exclusive control over interpretation of the Divine intent. However diverse the motives, the tragic effects have been to impede the current of inspiration, discourage independent intellectual activity, focus attention on the minutiae of rituals and too often engender hatred and prejudice towards those following a different sectarian path from that of self-appointed spiritual leaders. While nothing could prevent the creative power of Divine intervention from continuing its work of progressively raising consciousness, the scope of what could be achieved, in any age, became increasingly limited by such artificially contrived obstacles.

(Commissioned by The Universal House of Justice, One Common Faith)

Yours

Larry Rowe

From: "HBF Founder" <american_bahai@yahoo.com>

Subject: Re: Why Joel B. Marangella's Claim to be the Guardian is False

Date: Saturday, November 25, 2006 10:18 PM

Which claims are you referring to, that I've made about myself Larry?

Madison

diamondsouled wrote:

Howdy Richard,

When I read Brents's claims, then Joel's, then Mason's, then the Hand's and the UHJ's, then Shoghi's, then Abdul-Baha's, the Baha'u'llah's I see a pattern. Of pattern of claims. A pattern of claims of special divinity, a pattern that is unsubstantiated through any evidence whatsoever of special divinity, special spirituality.

What I see is a dysfunctional family passing their dysfunction down to others who continue to engage in similar dysfunction.

If humanity is indeed one where does that oneness begin? In the family. That the 'holy' family were such abject failures when it came to familial unity is proof that there is nothing especially divine going on amongst the members of the 'holy' family.

The whole story is rife with the same sort of lineage intrieges that have gone on in other similar cults in the past such as the Radha Samja Satsanga Beas.

Whenever any human being claims special spiritual station it inevitably and exhorably sets up such situations of such lineal intriege.

Sure the 'holy' family gave voice to some very fine sentiments but did they live by those sentiments even amongst their own family members, no.

It is easy to give voice to such sentiments, such sentiments are so much hot air until the are put into practice though. Where does a person begin to put such sentiments into practice, in ones own family.

Not even Shoghi parents were spared the dysfunction, in the end his entire family had fallen victim to Shoghi's dysfunction, the dysfunction he had inherited, and he was left all alone. How sad.

Yours

Larry Rowe

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>

Subject: Re: Susan Maneck continues breaching sacred boundaries.

Date: Thursday, December 07, 2006 5:21 PM

Howdy Ross,

I am in complete agreement Ross that there is no body or individual in the Baha'i faith with the authority to declare someone to be a covenant breaker. The fact is there has been no living hereditary Guardian since Shoghi's death in 1957.

The whole issue of declaring individuals to be covenant breakers is that it clearly contradicts Baha'u'llah's abolition and nullification of the practice of shunning:

"Whatsoever hath led the children of men to shun one another, and hath caused dissensions and divisions amongst them, hath, through the revelation of these words, been nullified and abolished."

(Baha'u'llah, Gleanings from the Writings of Baha'u'llah, p. 95)

It as well contradicts Abdul-Baha's teaching that we should see no one as an enemy, that we should draw no lines between ourselves and others:

"Let them see no one as their enemy, or as wishing them ill, but think of all humankind as their friends; regarding the alien as an intimate, the stranger as a companion, staying free of prejudice, drawing no lines."

(Abdul-Baha, Selections from the Writings of Abdul-Baha, p. 1)

That both Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha failed to put these teachings into practice in their own lives is one of the major reasons that the Baha'i faith has been such an abject failure in the promotion of the oneness of humanity.

When exceptions are made to the oneness of humanity, it is no longer true oneness but division in the guise of a compromised oneness. Such division, has been practiced by religionists since the beginning of organized religion.

That which is truly spiritually diseased and contagious is the belief that other human beings are worthy of shunning regardless of the character and integrity of that person. Such spiritual contagion continues to plague Jews, Muslims, Christians as well as Baha'is and all for what? For religious pride and ignorance.

When Baha'u'llah removed the former religious practice of dividing humanity "the pure tree" from the "evil tree" he should have had the integrity to live by this teaching in his own life. That both Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi continued to follow in Baha'u'llah's footsteps and continued to divide humanity is a measure of the dysfunction of such erroneous religious beliefs which justify such of dividing humanity.

The Universal House of Justice follows in the footsteps of their predecessors as well and divides decent, intelligent, people of integrity from their exclusivity for the same erroneous excuses. The oneness of humanity is incompatible with religious beliefs and practices that make excuses for dividing humanity.

Until organized religion leaves such counterproductive, obsolete and antiquated religious beliefs and practices behind them humanity would be far better off without such organized religions, including the Baha'i faith.

Yours

Larry Rowe

-----

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: The Baha'i Covenant used as a weapon
Date: Friday, September 29, 2006 2:40 PM

Hello all,

I don't think you'll find anyone here arguing that the universal principles that are in Baha'i teachings are not laudable.

What I have personally found though, this in the 35 years I was a Baha'i, is that there is a clear disconnect between those laudable universal principles and Baha'i religious practices.

For instance the Baha'i religious practice of shunning.

Although Baha'u'llah supposedly abolished and nullified the practice of shunning:

Whatsoever hath led the children of men to shun one another, and hath caused dissensions and divisions amongst them, hath, through the revelation of these words, been nullified and abolished.

(Baha'u'llah, Gleanings from the Writings of Baha'u'llah, p. 95)

... the leaders of the Baha'i faith, Baha'u'llah included, advocated shunning. Shoghi Effendi was such an avid shunner that not one of his own family members was spared, not even his own parents! Such estrangement from one's entire family is a sign of spiritual and social dysfunction, not of Shoghi's family but of Shoghi himself.

To declare someone to be a Covenant Breaker because they refuse to quit a job, because they take a trip to America without first getting your OK, because they arrange a marriage you don't approve of, because they refuse to disassociate from their family members who were unjustly declared to be Covenant breakers for reasons which have nothing whatsoever to do with spirituality, is evidence of power tripping not wise or spiritual leadership. It's really no wonder Shoghi was abandoned by his entire family!

The Baha'i Covenant has been turned into a bludgeon, a weapon used to threaten and to coerce.

Although the universal house of justice were mummets of such words as these in 2005:

Above all, we expressed our conviction that the time has come when religious leadership must face honestly and without further evasion the implications of the truth that God is one and that, beyond all diversity of cultural expression and human interpretation, religion is likewise one.

(Commissioned by The Universal House of Justice, One Common Faith)

In 2006 they rubbed out, erased, one of their fellow coreligionists, Baha'i scholar Sen McGlinn, simply for expressing his "human interpretation".

Such unjust actions of the universal house of justice are part of a pattern that goes back to the beginning of the Baha'i faith. A religion which purports to believe in the oneness of humanity but which through its religious practices shows that this supposed belief is simply the mouthing of words, without substance.

Yours

Larry Rowe

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Blacklisting at SRB - the total lack of self critique in the Baha'i faith
Date: Wednesday, September 27, 2006 4:16 PM

Hello all,

It appears that I have once again been blacklisted at SRB although it is part of their officially stated policy that such black listing does not occur.

None of my several last posts have been allowed through even though they all clearly pertained to the topic of the thread and the Baha'i faith itself.

So much for the progressiveness and openmindedness of the Baha'i faith.

Critique is not allowed in the Baha'i faith under the false pretense that it will be disunifying when in fact the true reason for not allowing scholarly critique is that no Baha'i interpretations that are diverse from the personal Baha'i doctrines of a select few prominent members of Baha'i institutions are allowed or tolerated.

Pope Benedict is more open minded than Baha'is or Baha'i institutions lol!

Re: "Discord and divergence among the Baha'is"

From: diamondsouled - view profile
Date: Thurs, Nov 16 2006 7:26 pm
Email: "diamondsouled" <r...@northwestel.net> Groups: talk.religion.bahai

" Sometimes you can be a real pain in the ass. Now I have to sit and read and read and read and OH my goodness!! Think."

Lol! My dear wife Heather says the same thing sometimes.

Like a lot of guys of my generation I sometimes bottle things up and when they eventually percolate to the surface it's not always pretty. Otherwise I'm a very gentle and soft hearted person, a friend of cats and dogs, a bit of a sentimentalist actually.

I have profound respect for every individuals inherent right to interpret their own spritual experiences in the manner that they choose. I respect Baha'u'llah, Mirza Husayn Ali's, inherent right to have interpreted his spiritual experiences in the manner that he did. I well recognize the fact that, in his shoes, I may have come to the exact same conclusions. It is what those interpretations do to others that concerns me more.

Conformity to the religious interpretations of others has been one of humanities greatest banes. Ironically though it has also fostered some of humanities greatest thinkers. It is a real mixed bag for sure.

Humanity needs to do away with the negative fallout of the consequences of conformity to religious interpretation. Like I said, a lot of bad shit has gone down in the name of the god of Abraham; as a kind we need to grow out of and get through this negative propensity.

What is needed is not conformity to and uniformity with certain specific ideologies and their attendant world views, what is needed is conformity with universal ethical principles such as nonviolence, the use of peaceful means to work out our differences, principles which will actually foster the oneness of humanity. This of course stands as true for political ideologies as it does for religious or philosophical ideologies.

In order for humanity to progress, as we all desire to see, we have to put aside our differences. We have to loosen the hold that ideologies, whether they are religious or political, have over us and which give us the excuse to go at each others throats.

Although I have nothing but praise for the spirit of the principle teachings of the Baha'i faith such as the oneness of humanity, when that spirit is attempted to be channeled through an organization it inevitably leads to overzealousness. Once people become overzealous, spirit goes out the window, protection of the organization becomes the end all and be all; even at the sacrifice of all those noble principles.

When Abdul-Baha said the following he got it partly right:

"This movement eludes organization -- it is the realization of a new spirit. The foundation of that spirit is the love of God; and its method, the love and service of mankind. Many who have never heard of this revelation teach its laws and spiritual truths. These people are performing what BAHA'O'LLAH hath commanded though they never heard of him. The power of BAHA'O'LLAH'S words is compelling -- therefore, you must know and love them. For instance, in the spring season trees burst forth into verdure, though they are not conscious of the sunshine, of the falling rain or the gentle breeze -- nevertheless, the power of nature urges them on to yield forth their fruits."

(Abdul-Baha, Divine Philosophy, p. 15)

The thing is that he saw the spirit as coming through the persona of his father when in reality that spirit very much transcended the persona of his father.

The spirit transcends the personas of every human being, transcends every interpretation of personal human spiritual experience. The spirit lays in those noble concepts such as the oneness of humanity and when humanity has ever directly associated such noble principles with the person or persona of an individual it has, without exception, had negative consequences.

The spirit truly lays in the concepts themselves and more importantly in the putting into practice of those concepts in ones own life.

We can all get better at putting those concepts into practice.

Yours

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>

Subject: Re: Blacklisting at SRB - the total lack of self critique in the Baha'i faith

Date: Thursday, September 28, 2006 3:14 PM

Howdy Kent,

Is being regressive bad? You decide Kent.

Mmmm. Logic. Baha'is are not the ones to talk about logic.

I could site the many instances where there are clear contradictions between Baha'i teachings and religious practices Kent, but you're already aware of those many contradictions, or at least you should be.

If you can, with intellectual integrity, reconcile those contradictions Kent fine.

Baha'is are not interested in reason or logic, that is why Baha'is as well as their administrative order fear scholarly critique, why such scholarly critique is not allowed and why those who publish any scholarly materials which do not conform to the narrow doctrinal purity allowed by the Baha'i thought police end up threatened, bullied, and or receiveing a letter such as the following from their NSA's: because of opinions which you have expressed it is apparent that you no longer meet the requirements of membership in the Baha'i faith and will be removed from the Baha'i membership rolls". Without even the courage or integrity to mention just what specific opinion is the offending one.

Some appreciation of religious diversity, lol!

Then they have the nerve to mouth words such as the following:

Above all, we expressed our conviction that the time has come when religious leadership must face honestly and without further evasion the implications of the truth that God is one and that, beyond all diversity of cultural expression and human interpretation, religion is likewise one.

(Commissioned by The Universal House of Justice, One Common Faith)

Baha'is need to ask themselves: "why is there this huge disconnect between what we say and what we do?" Of course such open, honest, logical and rational examination of this disconnect requires a degree of intellectual integrity that Baha'is as well as their administrative order have not shown they are willing to engage in.

Yours

Larry Rowe

-----

From: "Heather Carr-Rowe" <rowe@northwestel.net>

Subject: Re: Healthier discussions

Date: Saturday, April 08, 2006 8:12 AM

Howdy Michael,

Religion at its best is about self realization but at its worse it is about mere differences in non essential 'artistic' opinions.

Sometimes we have to humble ourselves, sometimes we even have to humble our opinions of others.

All the blood and fury that religion has visited on humanity Michael has been because people ceased to be humble.

Not only Babis, Bayanis such as Azal and Siyyid Muhammad, but Baha'is, such as Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha'.

Now for some Baha'is even mentioning the names of these people together in the same breath is a sacrilege, and we all know what such religious zealotry can lead to. It can lead to estrangement and yes it can lead to murder.

It was Bayanis that were murdered in Akka by Baha'is Michael not Baha'is that were murdered by Bayanis, and all for what, for a lack of reasoning, because of religious zealotry.

Revelation is a form of art and not all works are equal. Baha'u'llah gave voice to words of beauty and majesty but he also gave voice to words which were diametrically opposed to those words of beauty and majesty. Words which incited certain of his own followers to kill those 3 ( or 7 according to Edward Browne) Bayanis and why? Because their religion was different from their's, because their religion was different than Baha'u'llah's.

Just as artistic choice is personal and subjective, so too is religious choice.

Baha'u'llah made the error that all founders and religionists before him have made, he wrote his personal and subjective choices in stone and expected all to follow. It was Azal's and Siyyid Muhammad's personal and subjective choice to choose to differ.

Were Siyyid Muhammad and those 6 other Bayanis deserving of murder because of the personal and interpretational spiritual and religious choice they had made? Of course not!

This is where religion falters Michael, when individuals absolutize their own world views or the world views of others.

When we absolutize the words of any man, even a man such as Baha'u'llah we are taking what is essentially art and absolutizing it as being free of defect. To do this with any other form of art would be ridiculous, what I've been attempting to say is that it is just as ridiculous to do this when we are considering the words of the founders of religion, when we are considering words which religionists take to be the words of God Himself.

Why is there such a streak of poison in the Baha'i Faith Michael, this contagion of poisonous covenant breaker mentality that has seeped into its very being? Why are fine and beautiful individuals such as Alison Marshall, such as Sen McGlinn, such as yourself, tainted by this poisoning in the Baha'i Faith; where does such poisoning have its origin?

It has its origin in our humanity and in the way that we deal with others who choose to see things differently than ourselves. We let our emotions get the best of us and then the worst of us comes out, hatred.

The poison that contaminates the Baha'i Faith has its origin in the way that Baha'u'llah treated those Babis (and yes those Babis were members of an independent religion) that chose to disagree with his personal religious interpretation. This poisoning continued into the life of Abdul-Baha' and the way that he treated his half brother Muhammad and his family, kids included! It continued into Shoghi Effendi's life as well and not even Shoghi's own parents were spared this poisoning. This poisoning continues to this day to have its effect in the Baha'i faith and this poison is now administered by those "self appointed religious leaders" that Baha'is call the members of the U.H.J.. It has been administered to Alison and to Sen and to you Michael and to me personally (except I refused it) and all for what?

Because the poisoners have forgotten something, they have forgotten to be humble and to accept that the opinions and beliefs of others need to be treated with humility and forbearance. Until humanity finds this humility and forbearance religion will continue to be more of a bane in this world than it is a balm.

This lack of humility and forbearance can be traced right back to the beginning of the Baha'i Faith Michael. No man is a spiritual pariah for making individual religious and subjective interpretational spiritual choices that differ from those of others. Baha'u'llah did a boo boo, a bid boo boo, he let his ego allow him to begin to hate his own brother, and all over a difference in religious interpretation. So much for self realization!

Azal was chosen by the Bab himself to be the inheritor of the Bayani faith the Bab had began, when Baha'u'llah chose to see things differently the war was on. It is my opinion that both sides could have handled it differently, but they didn't and now we are left with the effects of that religious war even until this day. Another religion, just as all other religions, hopelessly fragmenting into ever smaller bits.

Why? Because revelation is art Michael, a high art perhaps but an art none the less; and artistic appreciation has always been subjective.

It is time for religionists to quit killing one another and to quit poisoning one another with words simply because of differences in their artistic appreciation.

Until that happens religion will continue to be just as Abdul-Baha said: "Thus religion which was destined to become the cause of friendship has become the cause of enmity. Religion, which was meant to be sweet honey, is changed into bitter poison. Religion, the function of which was to illumine humanity, has become the factor of obscurity and gloom. Religion, which was to confer the consciousness of everlasting life, has become the fiendish instrument of death. As long as these superstitions are in the hands and these nets of dissimulation and hypocrisy in the fingers, religion will be the most harmful agency on this planet. These superannuated traditions, which are inherited unto the present day, must be abandoned, and thus free from past superstitions we must investigate the original intention. The basis on which they have fabricated the superstructures will be seen to be one, and that one, absolute reality; and as reality is indivisible, complete unity and amity will be instituted and the true religion of God will become unveiled in all its beauty and sublimity in the assemblage of the world."

(Abdul-Baha, Divine Philosophy, p. 161)

I am an investigator of Abdul-Baha's "original intention", from 1960 when I was seven years old until today. I will always be such an investigator. Such human artistic enterprises always are unending.

This investigation has led me to conclude that all that Abdul-Baha' saw about the "superannuated traditions" of his day stands as just as true for those "superannuated traditions" today. Except for one thing, the Baha'i Faith is smack dab right in the middle of those "superannuated traditions", and all for what?

For differences in artistic appreciation.

" Crack the Ark of superficiality "

Yours Larry Rowe

From: "Heather Carr-Rowe" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: Healthier discussions

Date: Sunday, April 09, 2006 2:09 PM

Howdy Kent,

We have a lot in common Kent. My mother became a Baha'i when I was seven years old as well.

Indoctrination has its degrees. It can go from the extreme of the flirty-friendly love bombing of cults such as The Church of Love or Moon's Reunification Church, to the target and befriend people of Chinese ancestry and then use that 'friendship' along with duplicity and dissimulation to indoctrinate those new Chinese 'friends' into signing indoctrination cards to the Baha'i Faith. I had a personal experience of this in Burnaby B.C. Kent and I fled that spiritually sick meeting without even saying goodbye. I felt like I'd wandered into a Krishna Consciousness or a Scientology meeting by mistake! I got a huge dropping feeling in the pit of my stomach when these glazed eyed coreligionists started counselling the people at that meeting to use duplicity and dissimulation to convert the target group of phoney new Chinese friends into the Baha'i cult, "but be careful at first to only say Baha'u'llah was only a social reformer" they counselled. Ewww. It almost made me gag and throw up.

Some cult methodologies are more insidious than others but all have the same goal, to change your world view to their world view.

Now there are some good aspects of the Baha'i world view, I can hardly deny that having had 46 years experience being around Baha'is, but there is a darker underbelly that is hidden from sight to prospective converts. There is the fact that the two-winged aspect of Baha'i teachings has its definite glass ceiling and that even the topic has been made verboten by the 9 men above that glass ceiling. There is the rampant Baha'i triumphalism that has been insinuating itself into the faith that is growing by leaps and bounds while entry by troops fades ever more into a delusional fantasy; and it all becomes quite obvious where such self focused triumphalism has its source when objectively reading the amiable platitudes and outright pontifications that come down from the 'holy' mount, such as The Message to Humanity of a few years ago.

Then there is the sanctimonious patting of oneself on the back for the great service to humanity of spending a quarter of a billion dollars on the Baha'i prestige terrace project. My mother proudly showed off an ad in a local newspaper which bragged about how great the Baha'i faith was for spending these hundreds of millions of dollars building a hanging garden to rival that of ancient Babylon, in a semi arid place for god's sake where many Palestinian people go without a proper source of fresh drinking water! All I felt Kent was a deep sense of embarrassment for Baha'is and for the Baha'i faith that this unnecessary and self glorifying prestige project was the best thing that Baha'is could come up with as a 'service' to humanity. I was polite to my mom of course but I couldn't help but notice the glazed eyed look of pride in her eyes as she proudly showed me those fresh evidences of Baha'i cultdom.

This is what cults do Kent, they blind people. They blind people to reality. To such a reality that a hanging garden to rival that of ancient Babylon is needed in Israel just as much as the 8 meter concrete wall around Nazereth is needed.

What is needed is a viable infrastructure for Palestinians and $250,000,000 dollars could have gone a long way in helping to develop such a reality but Baha'is are such fixated navel gazers they don't get it. They would rather spend tens of thousands of dollars maintaining a useless prestige garden and tens of thousands of gallons of water on keeping it all green than to offer a helping hand to Palestinians who are in dire need of help. These are all hallmarks of a cult Kent, whether you like the reality or can accept the reality doesn't change that reality.

The way that a notice to the entire Canadian Baha'i community was sent warning about John Carre, and his calling his spirituality as person into question by smearing him as one of those 'spiritually corrosive' covenant breakers, these are all hallmarks of a cult Kent. It wouldn't be quite so bad if they didn't include John's children and his grand children under the 'spiritually corrosive' sick Baha'i cult mentality label; but they do Kent and they're too damn blind to see the psychological unwellness that is represented in this sort of cult mentality.

I personally keep up a correspondance with John and he is a fine man who has love for all of humanity foremost in his mind. I don't agree with many of his religious views but to me that is very much beside the point. I appreciate him and love him for the wonderful human being that he is and that Kent is very much the point. The whole point and purpose of spirituality.

I get a Baha'i Canada sent to my home which slurs this fine man and what am I to think? Oh what a wonderful community of spiritually minded people to send me such a warning? Get real. The Baha'i faith is a full blown cult and though there are fine people within it there are many glazed eyed cultists as well who would gladly repeat the Akka throat slitting of the enemies of their faith if they thought they could get away with it.

I have the hands on, mind on, experiences Kent; this is no hobby or pastime for me. I'm warning all who will listen: " Stay away from the cult of the Baha'i Faith, for your own spiritual wellness !".

As for any supposedly hurtful things I said about Baha'u'llah they were only seemingly hurtful because they were true, sometimes the truth hurts. Baha'u'llah was full of himself, his writings are ripe and repleat with self pontifications and the contrary bemoanings of 'this wronged one'. Give me a break! He lived out his life like a king at Bahji all the while bemoaning the fact that the world wasn't knocking down his door to bend its knee to him.

Still those universal teachings of the oneness of humanity and the reconciliation of religion are great and wonderful concepts, in fact they stand on their own, they always have. It's too bad for Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha', and Shoghi Effendi, but especially for Azal, Abdul-Baha's brother Muhammad and Shoghi's entire family that Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha' and Shoghi couldn't practice what they preached, that they couldn't live by those most worthy of universal principles, not even within their own families for God's sake!

Yours Larry

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: Susan Maneck continues breaching sacred boundaries.
Date: Monday, December 11, 2006 1:14 PM

Dear Susan,

"they*are*authorized to make jurisprudential deductions in matters of Baha' law"

They are only authorized to make jurisprudential deduction in matters of Baha' law that have not previously been deduced. To reduce would require reinterpretation of scripture, which is clearly out of bounds of the UHJ's authority.

We have already seen the Universal House of Justice overstep its authority in allowing Hindu's to be registered as Baha'is in India while ignoring Shoghi Effendi's list of requirements for Baha' membership. All they have to do is state that they believe Baha'u'llah was an Avatar among the many of other avatars believed in in India, that Hindu's also believe Buddha was an avatar but this doesn't make them Buddhists. Ironically this same list of Shoghi's has been used here in the West as an excuse to disenfranchise those Baha'is who have the courage to speak conscientiously.

The motive for such gross manipulation in the membership roll is to hide the fact that the Baha'if faith has not been growing here in the West. In fact if all those who have signed declaration cards but have been address unknown for several years were removed from the membership role the true number of Baha'is in Canada and the US would likely be a half or even as little as a quarter of what is claimed. The motive for the Baha'ia administration to falsely inflate actual Baha'ia membership numbers is obvious, they want to hide the fact of their abject failure from the Baha'ia community, they want to hide the fact that the fundamentalist trend that has overtaken the Baha'if faith in the last 40 years is forcing more people to leave the faith than influencing people to join.

The use of terms such as "elucidations" is a transparent attempt to weave around the reality that interpretationally the Baha'if faith is stuck in 1957 for the next 850 years!

I feel no disrespect for Shoghi Effendi, all I truly feel for him is pity. Pity that he got caught up in the same covenant breaker fanaticism of his Grandfather and Great Grandfather. A fanaticism that totally negates any positive influence which the Baha'if faith could potentially have as a force for bringing the people of the world together.

Hypocrites are rarely taken seriously. When you have the words "shun no man, have no enemy, draw no lines, come out on one side of your mouth and the words "shun these people, these people are our enemies, we must draw lines between ourselves and these people" come out the other side of your mouth, people of intelligence and integrity can easily see through such facile contradiction and hypocrisy.

That Shoghi ended up estranged from his entire family is a stark testimony to the negative influence that such contradictory religious beliefs and practices have on the people of Baha'.

Of course Baha'is would like to maintain the fantasy that Shoghi was the only functional one in his family while the entire rest of his family, his own parents included, were the dysfunctional ones.

Such thinking is delusional.

Yours

Larry Rowe

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: The Baha'i Covenant used as a weapon
Date: Sunday, October 01, 2006 4:44 PM

Howdy Kent,

My solution?

Mmmm. Well walking the walk as well as talking the talk is a good place to start.

Talk is easy, as is evidenced in the personal lives of the founders of the Baha'i faith. It is quite easy to say: " I believe in the oneness of humanity, I believe in respect for diversity ". It is quite a bit more difficult in practice though because it requires a level of tolerance, a level of acceptance of diversity of human interpretation that is inclusive, that doesn't make exceptions.

Criminal behavior, is criminal behavior regardless of the professed beliefs of those who engage in that criminal behavior. Holding religious interpretations which are diverse is not criminal in itself; if those beliefs cause a person to engage in criminal behavior then the wisdom of those beliefs should be questioned.

Just as the religious beliefs which led to twelve Baha'is murdering seven Bayanis in Acre should be questioned.

Although Baha'is like to absolve Baha'u'llah of any guilt in these murders which were committed by his followers I would have to say that it is quite apparent that the hatred felt by Baha'is for Bayanis was principally instigated by Baha'u'llah himself. This hatred for Bayanis led to their dehumanization in the eyes of Baha'is and this dehumanization of Covenant Breakers or anyone else who is cast as an enemy of the Baha'i faith continues to this day.

This is what can happen when religionists dehumanize other groups of individuals and is the principle reason why religion continues to be: "the most harmful agency on this planet".

To rid ourselves of this "harmful agency" Kent is not to rid ourselves of Baha'is, Muslims, Christians, or Jews or any other religious group, but to rid ourselves of the religious practice of dividing humanity, the religious practice of dehumanizing fellow human beings simply because their religious views and interpretations differ from our own.

I don't see you or any other member of the Baha'i faith, including the members of the universal house of justice as my enemy Kent; I see those concepts which perpetuate ignorance of the fact the humanity is in reality one, as our common enemy.

Yours

Larry Rowe

-----

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>

Subject: Re: Susan Maneck continues breaching sacred boundaries.

Date: Tuesday, December 12, 2006 11:43 AM

Sorry Susan,

The gross exaggeration of world Baha'i membership numbers is meant to placate all those who have been promised entry by troops for the past 80 years. The gross exaggeration of the number of actual Baha'is in India goes hand in hand with the inclusion of tens of thousands of people who signed declaration cards in North America in the past 20 to 40 years and that was it; they never truly became Baha'is they simply put their name on a card like you would on a Zellers card and never followed it up. Also the many others who signed declaration cards but who have become inactive and no longer believe in the Baha'i faith or have actually joined other religious communities but have never taken the time to resign and have been address unknown for many years.

The Universal House has no power to change existing Baha'i law only to introduce new Baha'i law and then only if that new law does not require any reinterpretation or interpretation of Baha'i scripture at all.

In other words if a Baha'i man chose to marry two women and those two women were agreeable to the marriage the Universal House of Justice could do nothing to prevent the man from being a bigamist if it was allowed in the country in which he lived. These are the facts of your religion Susan.

Bigamy is allowed and it is written right into Baha'i scripture, into Baha'i law:

"You asked about polygamy. According to the text (nass) of the Divine Book the right of having two wives is lawful and legal (ja'iz). This was never (abadan) prohibited, but it is legitimate and allowed (halal wa mubah). You should therefore not be unhappy, but take justice into your consideration so that you may be as just as possible. what has been said was that since justice is very difficult (to achieve), therefore tranquillity (calls for) one wife. But in your case, you should not be unhappy." ['Abdul-Baha, cited in Amr wa Khalq 4: 174]

And the confirmation of bigamy seems to be still more clearly formulated in yet another passage:

"Concerning bigamy, this has been promulgated, and must abrogate it (mansusast nasikhi nadarad). 'Abdu'l Baha has not abrogated this law. These are false accusations and lies (muftarag....) (spread by) the friends. What I have said is that He [is that Baha'u'llah, or Muhammad?] has made bigamy bound on a precondition. As long as someone does not attain certitude regarding the capability to practice justice and his heart is not at rest that he can practice justice, he should not be intent upon a second marriage. But if he should be sure and attain certitude that he would practice justice on all levels (and conditions) (dar jami' i maratib), then a second marriage is lawful. Just as has been the case in the Holy Land (Ardi i Maqsud): the Baha'i friends wished to marry a second wife, accepting this precondition, and this servant (i.e., 'Abdu'l Baha) never abstained (from giving permission), but insisted that justice should be considered, and justice actually means here self restraint (daraji i imtina'); but they said, that they will practice justice and wished to marry a second wife. Such false accusations (concerning 'Abdu'l Baha's prohibition of bigamy) are the slanderous whisperings (zamzami) of those who wish to spread doubts (in people's hearts) and to what degree they already succeed in making matters ambiguous! (Our) purpose was to state that bigamy without justice is not lawful and that justice is very difficult (to achieve)." [Amr wa Khalq 4:174f]

So much for the true and full equality of women with men that is only given lip service in the Baha'i Faith!

In spite of the fact that the full equality of women with men is preached in the Baha'i Faith: bigamy is allowed for men only, women are excluded from the highest Baha'i religious body the UHJ, are grossly under represented on the ITC and among Continental Councillors and if the word of Baha'u'llah was taken at it's actual literal word women would not even be allowed on local and national spiritual assemblies-houses of justice! The Baha'i faith is so rife with contradiction and hypocrisy it is a right off; just another of the many other such minor religious cults that has arisen in the past two hundred years.

Every week I read the actual stories of real individuals Susan, many stories of actual life experiences which have striking similarities. People who have joined the Baha'i Faith because of all the talk about the oneness of humanity and the equality of women with men only to find that all the pretty talk is just that: talk; a facade that an increasingly authoritarian cult uses to hide behind. To hide the paranoia of covenant breaker and enemy seeking mentality which comes directly from the UHJ itself and is enforced by their own private army of religious zealots, the protection branch, the Baha'i Stasi. Such people are leaving the Baha'i faith in droves, in troops Susan. I don't have to make such facts up because I read them every week from different individuals who have experienced the same narrow mindedness, the same over zealous triumphalism, the same rampant paranoia and suspicious thinking in Baha'i communities all over the US and Canada.

These problems are endemic to the Baha'i faith Susan and they are being actively cultivated by a Baha'i Administrative Order which has delusionally bought into the myth of its own infallibility.

It doesn't anger me Susan, it saddens me. My only motive is to help people deprogram themselves so they can escape from what has become a spiritually unhealthy and emotionally dysfunctional cult. My only motive is to inform people as to the facts. Facts that they can easily check out for themselves with a few hours of on line research.

Yours

Larry Rowe

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: The Baha'i Covenant used as a weapon
Date: Wednesday, October 04, 2006 4:51 PM

Howdy Kent,

I've heard you Kent:

"So the Faith cannot change, it must remain the way it is."

Funny, sounds just like the excuses Muslims, Christians, Jews and all other religionists and cultists use to justify unjust and inequitable religious practices!

So much for the Baha'i faith's supposed progressiveness!

There's nothing wrong with having heroes Kent, no matter if those heroes are rock stars, actors, guru-prophets, politicians, or athletes.

The wrongness arises when the words or actions of those heroes are used as an excuse to perpetuate unenlightened behaviors such as dividing humanity, such as the antiquated and obsolete religious practice of shunning.

When Baha'u'llah removed the past religious practice of dividing humanity*: "the evil tree" - "the irreligious", from "the pure tree" - the chosen, it was a good idea, a step forward. When he, Abdul-Baha', Shoghi Effendi and the universal house of justice divide humanity: "the Army of Light" from the "forces of darkness", it is a bad idea, a step backwards.

Why does religion continue to be: "the most harmful agency on this planet." Kent? Because religionists continue to use the words of their guru-prophets as an excuse to engage in obsolete, antiquated, unjust and or inequitable religious practices.

You're right Kent it is your choice to unquestioningly support the regressive religious practices of those who are your gurus and religious leaders. Don't be too surprised though when you make that decision that you end up on the wrong side of justice and equity.

Baha'is have to decide whether or not to truly embrace such words of Abdul-Baha's:

Let them see no one as their enemy, or as wishing them ill, but think of all humankind as their friends; regarding the alien as an intimate, the stranger as a companion, staying free of prejudice, drawing no lines.

(Abdul-Baha, Selections from the Writings of Abdul-Baha, p. 1)

... or to embrace the Baha'i religious practice of drawing lines, of seeing people as enemies, of shunning. You can't do both Kent, not with intellectual integrity at least.

When the train runs you over Kent, with Rumsfeld as the engineer, Bush shoveling coal, and Glenford Mitchell and the rest of the uhj as the conductors ( waving to your remains from the caboose ), don't be too surprised.

Yours

Larry Rowe

*His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh expressed the oneness of humankind whereas in all religious teachings of the past, the human world has been represented as divided into two parts, one known as the people of the Book of God or the pure tree and the other the people of infidelity and error or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel; one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity and this principle is specialized in His teachings for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity. Some are asleep; they need to be awakened. Some are ailing; they need to be healed. Some are immature as children; they need to be trained. But all are recipients of the bounty and bestowals of God.

(Abdul-Baha, Baha'i World Faith - Abdul-Baha Section, p. 246)

The need to protect the Faith from the attacks of its enemies may not be generally appreciated by the friends, particularly in places where attacks have been infrequent. However, it is certain that such opposition will increase, become concerted, and eventually universal. The writings clearly foreshadow not only an intensification of the machinations of internal enemies, but a rise in the hostility and opposition of its external enemies, whether religious or secular, as the Cause pursues its onward march towards ultimate victory. Therefore, in the light of the warnings of the Guardian, the Auxiliary Boards for Protection should keep "constantly" a "watchful eye" on those "who are known to be enemies, or to have been put out of the Faith", discreetly investigate their activities, alert intelligently the friends to the opposition inevitably to come, explain how each crisis in God's Faith has always proved to be a blessing in disguise, and prepare them for the "dire contest which is destined to range the Army of Light against the forces of darkness".

(The Universal House of Justice, The Institution of the Counsellors, p. 16)

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>

Subject: Re: The Baha'i Covenant used as a weapon

Date: Friday, September 29, 2006 5:57 PM

Hello Kent,

Check it out for yourself Kent.

That is if you care to be informed.

Oh no, all of Shoghi's family was in the wrong, each and every one them, except for him. All of them, including his own parents had a contagious spiritual disease and deserved to be treated like lepers, all except for him of course.

When Shoghi passed the Baha'i Covenant Breaker curse on each and every one of his own family members, his parents included, it was all for the sake of the oneness of humanity.

Give me break Kent, lol!

One doesn't cultivate the oneness of humanity Kent by alienating one's entire family: for quitting a job, for taking a trip to America, for arranging a wedding, for refusing to disassociate from those who have unjustly had the Baha'i Covenant curse declared against them.

Like I said before Kent if you want to make a pretense of being a Baha'i apologist you had better research the things that you say are untrue.

The truth is Kent that Baha'u'llah said one thing:

Whatsoever hath led the children of men to shun one another, and hath caused dissensions and divisions amongst them, hath, through the revelation of these words, been nullified and abolished.

(Baha'u'llah, Gleanings from the Writings of Baha'u'llah, p. 95)

.. and did another. Shunned his half brother Azal and his children and their children.

As well Abdul-Baha said one thing:

Let them see no one as their enemy, or as wishing them ill, but think of all humankind as their friends; regarding the alien as an intimate, the stranger as a companion, staying free of prejudice, drawing no lines.

(Abdul-Baha, Selections from the Writings of Abdul-Baha, p. 1)

.. and did another. Shunned his own half brother Muhammad and his children and their children, calling them enemies, treating them as enemies.

And Shoghi, well Shoghi ended up shunning his entire family his parents included!

And all this in spite of the fact that shunning had supposedly been: "nullified and abolished" by none other than Baha'u'llah himself!

Do you dispute any of those facts Kent?

Thing is Kent Baha'is are not interested in the facts, in the truth. The truth that the Baha'i faith is a cult no different that the Unification Church or Scientology, that their personal guru Baha'u'llah was no more spiritually superior than L Ron Hubbard or Reverend Moon are spiritually superior.

Baha'u'llah is a man who said one thing and did another. Far from being the most great infallibility he was infact, in reality, a man like any other man: a man with foibles, with faults, with flaws, a man who said one thing and dids another. The type of men that sit on the universal house of justice.

Yours

Larry Rowe

-----

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>
Subject: Re: The Baha'i Covenant used as a weapon
Date: Saturday, September 30, 2006 3:42 PM

Howdy Hasley,

Mmmm.

Sounds like the regular excuse of all religionists and cultists: how to reconcile the irreconcilable, how to gloss over the contradictory.

When religionists make exceptions to universal principles what making those exceptions proves is that those universal principles are secondary to their religious practices which contradict those universal principles. Thus what is truly most important to Baha'is is their religious practice of shunning and not the oneness of humanity.

So although Baha'is mouth the words: the oneness of humanity, their religious practices in regards to those they cast as spiritual lepers shows that those words in their mouths: the oneness of humanity, are empty, without substance.

Actually Hasley it is through the actual statements of Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha, Shoghi Effendi and the universal house of justice that the contradictory nature of Baha'i teachings and religious practices can be shown without a shadow of a doubt.

Universal principles such as equality, justice, peace, the harmony of science with religion, and reconciliation between the peoples of the world all make great sense, this is if you actually put those principles into practice. When religionists start making exceptions to those principles, as Baha'is have done and continue to do, then religion continues to be: "the most harmful agency on this planet" *.

Ironically Shoghi put his finger on the issue:

"Where and how does this Order established by Bahá'u'lláh, which to outward seeming is but a replica of the institutions established in Christianity and Islam, differ from them? Are not the twin institutions of the House of Justice and of the Guardianship, the institution of the Hands of the Cause of God, the institution of the national and local Assemblies, the institution of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, but different names for the institutions of the Papacy and the Caliphate, with all their attending ecclesiastical orders which the Christians and Moslems uphold and advocate? What can possibly be the agency that can safeguard these Bahá'í institutions, so strikingly resemblant, in some of their features, to those which have been reared by the Fathers of the Church and the Apostles of Muhammad, from witnessing the deterioration in character, the breach of unity, and the extinction of influence, which have befallen all organized religious hierarchies? Why should they not eventually suffer the self-same fate that has overtaken the institutions which the successors of Christ and Muhammad have reared?"

(Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Baha'u'llah, p. 18)

... only thing is he couldn't see how his own actions in regards to his own family; his entire family, parents included, made his behavior as a religious leader indistinguishable from the behaviors of religious leaders of the past: disenfranchise those whose human interpretations differ from your own, cast those individuals as enemies, as spiritually diseased, and through this process dehumanize them.

Baha'u'llah engaged in this practice, Abdul-Baha' engaged in this practice, Shoghi engaged in this practice, is it really any wonder that to this day the universal house of justice engages in this practice?

A religious practice which makes the Baha'i faith: " but a replica", a replica of all those previous: " organized religious hierarchies ".

Yours

Larry Rowe

*Abdul-Baha'

-----

Hasley9@aol.com wrote:

> > Baha'u'llah is a man who said one thing and did another.

>

> No, He is a man who said more than one thing. And rather than attempt > to understanding how His various statements fit together you prefer to > pick and choose between them.
>
> That's fine, when you are not a Baha'i.

From: "diamondsouled" <rowe@northwestel.net>

Subject: Re: The Baha'i Covenant used as a weapon

Date: Sunday, October 01, 2006 8:16 PM

Hi Kent,

Until Baha'is can freely express their consciences without the fear of their more conservative coreligionists hanging the Baha'i Covenant over their necks like an executioners axe it will be impossible for Baha'is and thus the Baha'i faith to do anything to end the Baha'i religious practice of shunning, of the drawing of lines between friends and enemies based on diversity of religious interpretation while ignoring the reality of individual character.

During the many years I was a Baha'i I would thrill to those words in the writings that enjoin humanity to embrace brotherhood, friendship and unity. Then when I would read those words in the writings which directly contradict this stated goal of friendship, brotherhood and unity I would despair. I would think: "Perhaps I'm missing something, perhaps there is something wrong with me that I cannot see the sense in these many clear contradictions."

Why state in one breath that shunning has been abolished and nullified and in the next breath council the shunning of certain individuals? Why state in one breath that humanity is a two winged bird that will not fly until both wings are equally developed and then in the next breath state that women are not allowed and will never be allowed to be fully equal in the Baha'i faith? Why state in one breath that humanity is one, that we should draw no lines and treat all peoples as our friends and in the next breath cast certain individuals and their children as our inveterate enemies, as spiritually contagious, as only being worthy of shunning?

At a certain point I could no longer reconcile all these clear contradictions Kent. The many contractions between the words of Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha' and Shoghi Effendi as well as the many clear contradictions between the universal, principle Baha'i teachings and the actual actions in the lives of Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi in regards to their decision to shun many of their own family members. In Shoghi's case the decision to shun his entire family, his own parents included.

It was then that I began the process of deprogramming. Having been indoctrinated as a child greatly complicated this process. This process has been ongoing for the past thirty years.

Yours

Larry Rowe

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Vinson Jamir <joy238@bellsouth.net>
Subject: Re: Netabuse - Update 6/26/99
Date: Saturday, June 26, 1999 10:58 AM

Saman,

I was under the impression that the Central Figures of the Baha'i Faith and also Shoghi Effendi very much discouraged litigation or even the attitude of readiness to consider litigation as a solution to problems, real or perceived.

Even in personal family matters not directly connected with public issues or religious questions, 'Abdul-Baha went on record more than once as being very much against litigation as a problem-solving tool. I have over the years seen a willingness on the part of Baha'is and Baha'i institutions to defend themselves with counter-suits after having been served with legal process.

It would seem to me to be especially inadvisable to pursue a legal course for which damages would be almost impossible to ascertain and the public impact unpredictable. Lawyers have only self-interest at heart to recommend the viability of litigation.

At the very least, it seems an unworthy use of precious time and money to pursue legal action or even mention the possibility in a forum such as this. Internet-related litigation is of course a new branch of the legal profession, but it seems lawyers are pursuing these new possibilities with an excess of enthusiasm.

By the way, this post by you provides Mr. Glaysher with grounds for counter-suit, should he ever be served with legal process by you or anyone else for the torts you have suggested. Fitness to stand trial is a particularly low standard of mental competence, requiring only that one be capable of understanding the nature of one's actions and the nature of the proceedings. Show your lawyer a copy of your post below and see if you can squeeze out of that practitioner an "honest" legal opinion as to the viability of Frederick's case against you.

"... Live ye one with another, O people, in radiance and joy. By My life! All that are on earth shall pass away, while good deeds alone shall endure; to the truth of My words God doth Himself bear witness. Compose your differences, O My servants; then heed ye the admonition of Our Pen of Glory and follow not the arrogant and wayward."
(Baha'u'llah: The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Pages: 44-45)

vinson

Saman Ahmadi wrote:

- > This is what I have been able to do so far:
- >
- > 1. I have consulted with a lawyer and there is definitely a
- > viable libel case to be made of FG's calumny against
- > "Baha'is" and the "Universal House of Justice".
- >
- > 2. I have contacted Bigfoot.com and ReMarq (sp?) and I should
- > hear back from them regarding FG's posting of repetitive
- > messages and his slanderous comments regarding "Baha'is" and
- > the "Universal House of Justice".
- >
- > Regarding the potential lawsuit, two things will have to be hashed out:
- >
- > 1. My legal standing as the person bring the suit.
- >
- > 2. FG's fitness to stand trial.
- >

> I'll keep you posted (pun intended),
> -saman

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Fred Glaysher - A Response to Dr. X's "Summary of Evaluation Conference January 31, 1994"

---

PART I: GENERAL

I met with Dr. X on 31 January 1994 in her office. Mr. Y, Associate Dean of Liberal Arts, was present. Dr. X began by citing what she referred to as the Illinois Community College Act law and stating she had decided not to put my name forward for a third year toward tenure at Lewis & Clark. She mentioned that in her opinion there was not sufficient evidence that I was an exemplary candidate.

I listened very carefully and heard her repeat three times other reasons were she believes I am diffident and aloof, students feel they can not come to talk to me, they don't feel they stand a chance of meeting my expectations in order to pass my classes, and I do not provide enough encouragement to them. Other concerns were that I had not done enough with the composition program and I was not happy and excited about coming into Lewis & Clark. One of her closing comments was that we must get rid of this adversarial relationship.

I expressed perhaps three times or so that I understood what she was telling me though I did not agree with nor accept her evaluation of me as an educator. I pointed out a number of shortcomings in the portrait she painted of me. Some of those include the following.

The first stated goal of my Faculty Performance Objectives of 30 April 1993 was to "Retain more students." I pointed out that I had achieved greater retention, and, in the case of two tenured English faculty last fall who each had a class in which only five to six students finished, I had three times as many students (18) finish my 131 class, the same one which Mr. Y had observed and his former student had dropped out of (discussed later).

I pointed out that my evaluations for all of my fall 1993 courses were stronger and markedly so in some classes. My strong evaluations were ignored.

I pointed out that she had made no effort to inform me of the seriousness of her concern about my teaching, had made no effort to work with me, and there had been no due process.

I pointed out that Mr. Y had accused me of being "aloof" in early September of 1993, three weeks or so after having become Associate-Dean. He said to me that that is the impression he keeps getting of me. How, after only a few weeks, was left unexplained. The occasion for his comments was over a former student of his in the same earlier mentioned 131 class. She had taken 131 in the past with Dr. Z and received a D. She was therefore repeating the class with me. She was consistently late and seemed to have an attitude problem. I made a general appeal to the entire class that we all arrive on time, asked her twice after class to come on time, and then, as a last resort, asked her in front of her peers to please have enough respect for other students not to walk in ten to fifteen minutes late and disturb them. She complained to Mr. Y. Other than attacking my character as "aloof," he told me I was not "student-centered." I pointed out to both Dr. X and Mr. Y the injustice and inadequacy of such a reason for my dismissal. I might add I'm quite happy teaching at Lewis & Clark and believe there is nothing wrong with my character. Students will have to live and work in the real world where not everyone is the same as themselves.

Dr. X had mentioned an incident that occurred in a 111 class I had last Summer I. She cited it as an example of my students not coming to talk to me. At the time I had asked her if she or anyone had advised them to come to me. No one had done so, including her. Two students, as far as I know from them, complained a reading was too difficult. At the time that I was teaching the reading, I had in class realized it was too hard. Because the next reading I had already given them, by the time Dr. X called me, was from The Readers' Digest, I had self-corrected. She said that in fact several of my students had complained about the reading and she wanted me to meet with Ms. C and Ms. D, neither of whom are members of the English Department, on how to choose readings. I consulted Mr. T, then Chairperson of the Liberal Arts Division. I expressed to him my concern about going outside the English Department for such a meeting, especially since Mr. W was teaching a 111 that semester too. Mr. T suggested I discuss the choice of readings with Mrs. A, which I did. He also offered to go with me to the meeting, essentially on my behalf as representation, and other English faculty members expressed concern (cf. phone message transcription). Dr. X was quite annoyed and emotional when she heard this suggestion of my being accompanied and represented by Mr. T and said something to the effect that a meeting was pointless. I recall saying that the issue (over closing the Writing Center) was bigger than I was and I did not want to get in the middle.

In retrospect I believe Dr. X's anger over the 111 incident suggests perhaps an inability to have anyone stand up to her and even respectfully express a point of view contrary to her own. She seemed at the end of the 31 January meeting to accuse me of furthering an adversarial relationship between the faculty and administration. I quietly stated I do not believe I am adversarial. If disagreeing with Dr. X in any way whatsoever constitutes contentiousness, I then fear for the survival of Freedom of Speech and academic integrity here at Lewis & Clark. Her mentioning this 111 incident to me in the meeting in which she abruptly dismissed me leads me to wonder if I am being let go partly out of revenge.

Dr. X also mentioned three students dropping out of a 131 early in Spring 1993 as an example of students not coming to me. They had gone to Dr. Z and asked him to allow them into his class. Dr. Z had gone to Dr. X, and she permitted him to take them. Mr. T told me that Z should have come to him and was undermining his own authority by going to Dr. X. In retrospect I believe Mr. T would have supported me against Dr. Z's action. At the time no one had encouraged my students to come back to me, the instructor, and discuss the situation. I pointed out to Dr. X at the time that she had failed to support me as an educator and should have sent the students to me first. I told her the same thing during the 111 incident because Ms. E, Ms. C, and Ms. D in the Support Services failed to send my students directly to me in order that I myself might benefit from their criticism and make any necessary corrections.

In terms of students not coming into my office to talk with me or their feeling that they can't meet my expectations, I pointed out that I have plenty of students who come into my office all the time, surely as many as any other English faculty member, and definitely more than some. Since Dr. X's office is on the second floor and mine on the fifth, I can only assume she has failed to observe students routinely in my office. I mentioned that, given the fact some full- and part-timers give out A's and B's in bucketfuls, some students may be surprised in my classes by the fact that I actually expect anything whatsoever of them. Dr. X had herself once shown me during the first few months I was here the computer grading sheet for a part-timer named Ms. U who had handed out 17 A's in a 131 English class. I respectfully submit that in the entire history of the community college no educator of integrity has ever had 17 students who all merited A's in an English 131 composition course.

I also pointed out that I had done a great deal in my opinion in regard to composition given the lack of interest among some of the English faculty for newer developments. I mentioned I was responsible for initiating discussion that led to the adoption of a required dictionary in all 131 and 132 sections, debate about new composition textbooks, grading standards, and a computer grammar program. I emphasized that a number of faculty at times showed no interest in looking at composition articles or textbooks I gave them. Because of a number of incidents, I pointed out I have had to minimize attempts to improve the composition program so that reasonable working relations might be maintained between myself and some of my colleagues whom I nevertheless respect.

I believe the exemplary criterion is a mere excuse to dismiss me. Most of my colleagues do not believe there is any validity to the charge. Under such a broad expectation of perfection, Dr. X herself and everyone else at Lewis & Clark could be replaced. Numerous colleagues in and out of the English Department have pointed this out to me.

Dr. X partly hired me to develop a new course in Non-Western Literature which has been an outstanding success with full enrollment this semester. My composition courses last semester and this semester have been going very well.

Dr. X has repeatedly sent me mixed signals. In the fall of 1993, I asked her once about grading standards and expressed my concern about them. I mentioned I had heard Dr. V had a class in which only four students finished. She emphasized that she was interested in students truly possessing the academic ability they should have and not merely passing through the system. She went on to say that SIUE wants people who are the best and high standards ensure that only the best are going forward. Dr. X also mentioned once that many of our students are neurotic and that she herself could never teach them English. She mentioned sometimes trying to take their heads in her hands to talk some sense into them. This type of remark led me to think that she realized how difficult teaching community college students can be and that many drop out for emotional and social reasons that have nothing to do with the instructor. I've never had a class finish with fewer than nine or ten students. Many tenured faculty members, including English, finish some classes with low enrollment.

Dr. X repeatedly approved my attendance at four different ICISP Asian Workshops, which led me to believe she saw me as continuing with Lewis & Clark. As recently as late September and November of 1993, she wrote a letter of recommendation for me to apply for a Fulbright-Hays Group Project Abroad Grant to China for the summer of 1994 and approved my attendance at another conference on Asia. Neither her evaluations of me nor Mr. Y's express the slightest trace of the justifications for dismissal they gave me on the 31st of January, 1994. Mr. Y also gave me the mixed signal of signing for my attendance at the fall conference and told me in October, when the institutional fee for China was raised from $250.00 to $500.00 that it was no problem. Dr. X's husband, Dr. XX, President of Lewis & Clark, also signed a letter on my behalf for the Fulbright-Hays grant in October.

Nothing has ever been unambiguously conveyed to me in or out of writing to lead me to believe that there were issues serious enough that tenure might be denied. My colleagues and former supervisor Mr. T consistently suggested the opposite would be the case.

I stated at one point that I was afraid I would be caught between two administrations, that of T and a new and inexperienced Y, for no fault of my own. Every English faculty member, except apparently Dr. Z, felt the scheduling of a meeting with them at 2:00pm on the 31st and then a meeting the same afternoon with me at 4:00pm showed the decision to let me go had already been made and they were just called together for the sake of appearances.

As a former Oakland Community College student in Michigan for two years, one who studied hard, I do not believe I am expecting my students to do the impossible.

PART II: DETAILED

Dr. X's criteria of "exemplary" and the idea of advertising for someone better qualified are not in the Illinois Community College Act. In general, Dr. X attempts to characterize me as angry, embittered, and uncivil. My colleagues, who have known me for nearly two years, can vouch such qualities are not part of my character, though I was surprised. It is to be noted that there was no representation present for me.

If we use retention of students as a measurement, my "general teaching effectiveness" is as good as any member of the English faculty and, I respectfully submit, better than some.

My "institutional contributions" have been highly regarded by my colleagues, both this year and last. The first year at Lewis & Clark I served on two committees instead of the minimum requirement of one. They were the Minority Affairs Committee and the Learning Resources Center Committee. For reasons that had nothing to do with me, my involvement with the first committee was not as active as the latter, but I attended meetings when notified and attempted to develop genuine relations with other committee members, relations that have born more fruit perhaps only during this year. On the LRC committee, I was an outspoken advocate of increasing the holdings of the library from 17,000 to a goal of approximately 60,000 volumes. I worked closely with the Director of the LRC and her assistant who compiled an impressive array of statistics to document the need for augmentation of the holdings. Many faculty members, in and out of English, applauded our efforts.

In terms of "Inter- and intra-divisional cooperation," I have bent over backwards ever since I first arrived at Lewis & Clark to cultivate human relationships with colleagues in and out of the Liberal Arts. My colleagues in English can especially attest that I have not been a prima donna, adolescently stamping my feet in furor every time someone doesn't agree with me or adopt my point of view. Cooperation is one of my highest democratic ideals.

My "Contributions to curriculum development" were initiated by Dr. X herself and, by her own admission, are outstanding. I, the very same person, have devoted the self-same energy and ability to the teaching of composition in my classrooms and achieved the self-same success there that I have in curriculum development.

My "Contributions to community service" have involved my patient cultivating of a relationship with the Elijah P. Lovejoy Memorial Society. During the last year and a half I have attended several annual public functions of the Lovejoy Memorial. As someone who has edited the poetry and prose of a leading African-American poet, lived in Japan and on an Indian reservation for two years, I sincerely respect the praiseworthy efforts of the Lovejoy Memorial to develop understanding and cooperation among people of different races. My own good intentions have been sufficiently recognized that Mrs. C. C., Trustee, invited me at the 10th of February 1994 Board Meeting to become a member of the Advisory Board.

When it comes to "faculty advisement," I have always tried to share my advice and perspective with colleagues as candidly and straight-forwardly as possible though respectfully listening to the views of others and realizing others might know more than I do. While basically a humble, self-effacing, unassuming person, I am not afraid to speak out with colleagues and say what I think. It is the very essence of democracy and real education that the viewpoints of people of goodwill shall at times differ. I respect the ideas of my colleagues and relish the free exchange of ideas.

Dr. X attempts to create the image of me as a scholar in non-Western literature but one therefore who knows nothing and has done nothing about composition. Such an image is utterly false. The allegation that I have done nothing in composition fails to acknowledge that I initiated after my first few weeks at Lewis & Clark the discussion that led to a required dictionary for all 131 and 132 classes beginning my second semester here; it fails to acknowledge that I created the discussion about using a new 131 multicultural textbook and showed various copies to every member of the English faculty, some of whom barely glanced at the titles before scorning them and handing them back to me; it fails to credit me with sharing current composition articles with English colleagues, some of whom also dismissed them as trash; it fails to recognize that I requested the Director of the LRC early upon my arrival here to take out a subscription to Composition and Computers, the leading composition journal on the use of computers; it fails to recognize that I contributed to the efforts to replace the old inefficient and unusable LAN network in the computer rooms and that I made numerous suggestions regarding what was desirable in a new one; it fails to note I repeatedly, gently, tactfully kept asking English colleagues to use the computers for a CAI grammar program since I believe computers are ideal for such remediation and yet only after more than a year of begging and persuading was something done last fall and then the computer support person incorrectly installed the program and failed upon my request to get the thing to run properly; it further neglects to notice that I attended the part-timer conference this January at which I sought along with my colleagues to improve the current composition standards; it fails to pay recognition to the fact that I spoke with Dr. X herself on a number of occasions about my desire to have grading sessions of sample student papers for both tenured and part-time faculty, an idea she always seemed to agree with while encouraging me not to give up on doing so despite the lack of enthusiasm on the part of some members of the English faculty. These are only the most obvious of my efforts to improve on the teaching of composition at Lewis & Clark.

Dr. X's account of the February 1993 meeting between her and me prior to her meeting with the English faculty fails to recall that she stated to me in that meeting that she believed anyone coming into an English Department that had been together for twenty years without a new person would have had the trouble I had been experiencing. Far from expressing to me her belief that I had failed in terms of composition, she conveyed that I was doing well and should not give up because she understood the situation and supported me.

I myself am a former community college student, and I am as successful with community college students as anyone else in the English Department. Just this week before the Spring break I walked the halls during class time and noticed many classes taught by both tenured faculty and part-timers had ten students or fewer in them. My composition classes all still have at least a dozen to eighteen people in them. My classes are not out of line with my colleagues' classes. In some cases, with all respect, I believe I'm doing better. At the beginning of this Spring semester I had a former student of mine come to me from Mrs. B's English 132 and ask me to allow her into one of my classes of English 132. She felt Mrs. B was too hard and that she could not pass the course. I assured her that she could and told her to stay in the class and study hard. I did not permit her to enter my class. I also had two other students who came to me early this semester who told me they were dropping out of Mr. K's English 132. I urged them to stay in his class but they insisted they would drop even if I refused to let them into mine. I therefore allowed them into my class. I do not believe either Mrs. B or Mr. K is less of an educator because a student or two has left their courses and come to me. Yet it is precisely on the basis of a few such commonly experienced student complaints, in required English courses, that Dr. X has decided to dismiss me.

Dr. X's characterization of me as responding "bitterly" is false and the words she attributes to me are not mine. I did point out as quietly and objectively as I could that the situation has not always improved but that what has changed has been my approach to my colleagues. Because there was little interest at times in "firing up" the composition program and hostility to me and whatever efforts I did make I had changed my approach in order to attempt to maintain good working relations with them while hoping that in the long run things would slowly change for the better. Dr. X was visibly surprised to hear this from me and was obviously struck by the news that I had changed my behavior by making fewer requests to improve the composition program. I might add here that one of the reasons I became involved in the non-Western course was because it seemed I could do something new and worthwhile there while waiting for people to come around in terms of composition.

In the 31st meeting, as far as I can recall, Dr. X did not make the following statement: "I have given you more hours of support than I have other probationary faculty." If she has given me support, it has often been vague and ambiguous. As I mention in "PART I," I twice have told her on different occasions, once in regard to the same February meeting she refers to, that she as a dean had failed to support me by referring my students directly to me. Since she also failed to work with me in regard to my Faculty Performance Objectives last April, I further feel this claim of hers is not true. If she has "not seen the improvements" in my performance, it is because she has not been looking for them and is not dealing fairly with me. Her continually unsubstantiated claim that she has huge numbers of complaints about my teaching rests on nothing but her groundless accusations. The Division Chairperson of Liberal Arts once allowed to me that she is encouraging students to make all kinds of charges against faculty members by the way in which she always automatically and uncritically takes their side. He further stated a number of times to me, as have many faculty members, that the reason for Dr. X's unprofessional handling of student complaints is that she has never spent a single day as a classroom instructor. Given my eight years of classroom experience, I believe that that may be the case.

Her claim of a "pattern of complaint" appears to be merely a stratagem since she can not produce credible evidence against me as an educator. Her claim that students have characterized me as "diffident" is obviously false to anyone who actually teaches at Lewis & Clark and realizes at what a low level the usual student vocabulary is.

She herself had suggested to me after her second observation of me last Spring 1993 that I ought to play students off against one another more. I had told her I felt community college students could not bear up under the pressure of being pitted against one another in class and was reluctant to do so. Far from "belittling" students, I respect them and even a cursory reading of my student evaluations irrefutably demonstrates that. I can only assume she has not read all of my student evaluations or has read them with only a predisposed notion in mind.

The failure to allow a faculty member to know the identity of his accuser is a violation of democratic right and due-process procedure. Again, I have repeatedly told her this. Dr. X's approach is typified in her unsubstantiated anecdote about some unnamed "adult man" who went to her early this semester after receiving a passing grade. Her quoting him as describing me as "diffident" is once again suspect and unproven. The claim that I told them to "look it up" in the book fails to note that probably I had assigned the relevant chapter for reading, gone over it on the board, gone over it in the book, and marked it on their papers. I always emphasize to my students that if they don't understand something they should ask and we can go over whatever it is again. If Dr. X would pay me the professional courtesy of sending my students to me, I would patiently go over the same thing for even a fourth or fifth or tenth time. At some stage, though, there must be consequences for students and either they have been studying and listening or they have not. Dr. X appears to want to remove from student life and experience that reality.

The allegation that I "duck out" of the classroom so that students can't ask questions is so absurd I am appalled. I can only suggest that Dr. X visit the second and third floors when I am teaching so that she may observe for herself that I do not "duck out" of my classes instead of believing every disgruntled student who makes his way into her office looking for consolation. I might add that during the nearly two years I have taught at Lewis & Clark I have never once seen her near my classrooms to observe for herself my so-called "ducking out." Although Dr. X states this "adult man" is "earning good grades," her concealing his identity suggests otherwise and all his commitment to "learning and achieving" is mere hearsay without asking me precisely what has been his performance in my classroom. Whatever his grades might be in other classes, the crucial point is his performance in my class. It is intolerably unethical and unprofessional that she should be allowed to dismiss my professional evaluation of any student simply on the basis of his whining and complaining to her.

Dr. X misquotes me and attributes words to me that I never uttered when she alleges I said, "I didn't have any idea about these problems. You never talked to me about them before." The long conversation she had with me before her conversation with the full-time faculty last February, 1993, was largely supportive of me and left me with the impression that she understood what I was up against with a faculty who had been together for so very long without anyone new entering the circle. She did not convey to me then the seriousness of the situation and appeared to be my ally in navigating through some stormy water that she seemed to suggest she would get me through. Her characterization of the February 1993 meeting with me is entirely rewriting events to fit in with what she now wants to happen.

In terms of the "particularly difficult period" she refers to last May 28 to June 2, it should be noted that it was apparently "particularly difficult" for her, not me. The following is a transcription of the phone message from Dr. X which began the incident:

"Message one from X at extension 4010 was received at 8:40am May 27th":

Good morning, Fred, it's X calling. In the last two days, ahm, well, three days, actually, Monday Tuesday,

Wednesday, ahm, about eight of your students have brought their complaints about the class to the writing center and to a counselor ahm down here in, ah, student support services. The two people who have heard these complaints are Ms. C and Ms. D. Both of them have taught [emphasis on taught] English 111 before. I would like to try, ahm, if it's all right with you, a conversation with you and the two of them so that we can talk about the nature of the complaints. Ahm mostly it has to do with the level of the readings that are being presented to them.

The

readings appear to be more appropriate to an English 131 group than to this 111 group. What I'd like to do is make this a more collegial conversation and ah, and ah, take a look at what you're doing in terms of giving students something to read and then asking them to respond to it in writing, which strikes me as a very good idea for, ah,

all levels of writing students but that perhaps the writing/the reading material itself is too high a level for developmental writers. Ahm, do you want to give me a call and we'll set up some time to get with you and me and

D and C which may be more, ahm, helpful. Thanks.

"Message two was received at 11:10am June 2nd":

Hi Fred, this is A. I talked to B yesterday about the incident and she thinks too you should not be in

that meeting alone. Ah she thinks if it gets serious the whole

English Department ought to be there. That ah, really, well

you just should not be there. First place the whole meeting should not take place. The students should come and whine to you if they don't understand the assignment and you should explain it to them until they do. It is not for C to explain your assignment to them. Ah, nor worse yet, for her to say "Oh poor baby, poor baby, let me go beat up that teacher for you," which is what seems to be happening. But at least ah beg T to go. So I talked to T too and said if that you think, if T thinks, he thinks the English Department needs to be there, that ah, he should just call us up and some of us will be there. Nobody leaves town we're too poor for that. These people are all scattered around. Most of them would come to a meeting if they thought they needed to be there. So ah, anyway, he says he's not even sure a meeting is scheduled. Ah, so he didn't know the time or anything, but he is willing to go and willing to explain for probably the upteenth time, the purpose of 111, the purpose of English 131, etc., etc. Bye.

The blatant fact that Dr. X's message fails to note is that she as well as the "Support Services" never followed proper academic procedure by advising my students to come to me and discuss whatever might be a problem for them. Since I have been a faculty member at Lewis & Clark, she has never once, that I can recall, told me the name of a student who had gone to her to complain about something. Again, in my opinion, this violates my constitutional right to confront my accuser, especially if my livelihood and career hang in the balance.

Despite Dr. X's claim of "about eight" of my students complaining, as far as I know, there was only one student who complained in the Support Services office. The one student had established herself among the other students as an irascible, confrontational, unstable personality whom they themselves clearly felt uneasy about. By chance, my wife, who was teaching ESL that semester, was at the copy machine on Wednesday, May 26th, in the Support Services office unbeknownst to either the student or the secretary. She heard the student say, "I've got to get out of that class. We all think he's anemic." Not a single word was spoken on my behalf by S, the secretary, who's unqualified to advise students in terms of their writing. Rather the secretary told the student her son had taken 111 with H at night and had liked her and had gotten a good grade. Not a single academic reason was given by the student for wanting out of my class-- nothing but character assassination. I complained at the time to Dr. X about the secretary's improperly advising this student and failing to send the student to me. I further pointed out to Dr. X that Ms. C, Ms. D, and she herself had each failed to support me properly. While student complaints readily find a hearing with Dr. X, I find it perplexing that my valid, politely phrased complaints are summarily swept aside.

If there were complaints in the Writing Center, no one ever presented me with evidence of them or had the professional courtesy to send my students to me. I pointed out the fact to Dr. X that Ms. C in the Writing Center had not sent me the requisite follow-up form stating the nature of the consultation with any student. This procedure was mandatory at the time. It had not been done. Dr. X assured me she would discuss the matter with Mrs. C and see to it that she would send me a form on each student who had complained. Ms. C never sent me a single one. I doubt now whether there ever were eight students who had complained in the first place. At one point I had told her I felt the real issue was about the Writing Center and bigger than I was and I therefore didn't want to get in the middle of it. It was at that time that she angrily hung up the phone on me upon learning that I preferred attending the proposed meeting with Mr. T present.

Upon receiving the above (transcribed) message from Dr. X, I had immediately gone to Mr. T for his advice. I told him I thought there was more to the situation than met the eye. It did not make sense to me that I should be called upon to meet with two individuals who are not even members of the English faculty. Clearly it was really about the Writing Center or some other political battle of sorts. Although the words Dr. X attributes to me are not recognizable as mine, the idea is true: T seemed surprised and suspicious at her suggestion that persons outside English should advise me. Mr. T, however, told me I could not refuse to meet with Dr. X and therefore I never did refuse to meet with her. If memory serves, I do believe he stated or suggested that I had the right to have someone else accompany me. He advised me to speak with Mrs. As, who is a member of the English faculty and teaches reading. She and I discussed, as Mr. T and I had, the readings I had assigned. Mrs. A made several useful suggestions for which I was grateful.

The Writing Center, it should be noted, was not part of the English Department. It was separately funded and staffed at the time. The reference to Mrs. C as my colleague by Dr. X is one that exists only in her mind, not in any formal, professional relationship. As a non-tenured staff person, paid through grant money, Mrs. C was neither my colleague nor sufficiently competent as judged by my true colleagues to advise me on the selection of material for my classes. The proper procedure for my receiving communications from the Writing Center was the earlier mentioned reports on student consultations, which Mrs. C never sent me even after Dr. X herself had assured me she would. Dr. X writes: "he raised his voice saying: 'They are not my colleagues. I don't even know them.'" During the 31st January meeting I never uttered these words, and especially not angrily, though I do readily own the ideas they express. At the time I knew Mrs. C but was not even sure who Ms. D was. After my teaching then at Lewis & Clark for a full year, Dr. X was insistent on my meeting with a stranger who could not even properly advise my students to come and speak with me when necessary. It should be noted that my colleagues in English were all perplexed at why Dr. X would ever have requested me to meet with Mrs. C and Mrs. D, as Mrs. A put it, in the "first place."

Dr. X's "pattern of student complaint" is an undocumented one. It rests solely on her claim that such a pattern exists. One of the most numerous, favorable comments on my student evaluations is that I treat students fairly and equally. For some reason, Dr. X appears to choose to distort the image of me as an educator. I am "first and foremost" a teacher, and my students, as evidenced on their evaluations of me, have high and consistent praise for me.

It appears to me that Mr. Y is only echoing the opinions of Dr. X and is not evaluating me fairly and objectively. The words Dr. X reports as mine were never spoken during that meeting by me: "Teaching effectiveness?" queried Fred. "How can you measure my teaching effectiveness?" I never said these words to Mr. Y. I did say he had been on the job for no more than a few weeks and was already telling me that the impression he kept getting of me was that I was "aloof" and not "student-centered." If not from Dr. X, from where did he get this "impression"? I further feel Dr. Z may have contributed to this "impression" by, in my opinion, unjustly attacking me on a number of occasions for reasons of his own.

The words as reported by Dr. X are not mine but the ideas essentially are in regard to my feeling very concerned when Mr. Y was appointed Associate-Dean because I did fear his lack of experience and possible lack of self-restraint in the use of his new power as it might affect me. I believe events justify my concern.

I do not recall Dr. X ever saying that she thought I "had received guidance and advice." I know that I do not believe I received proper professional guidance and advice as a non-tenured member of the faculty. Last Spring, for instance, I went to T with a rough draft of my Faculty Performance Objectives seeking further guidance and advice because I felt I had not received sufficient feedback from the administration to complete the form. He made several suggestions for improvements which I added to my Faculty Performance Objectives before sending Dr. X the final copy. It was during this meeting with Mr. T that he assured me that he thought I would have to mess up in a big way in order not to get tenure.

I pointed out to Dr. X that she and Mr. Y were ignoring my having fulfilled the teaching objectives of my Faculty Performance Objectives. I mentioned my numerous outstanding student evaluations from the fall semester of 1993; I mentioned the favorable to highly favorable observations of my teaching by both her and Mr. Y; I mentioned the support of my colleagues, many of whom have been reassuring me that I'd get tenure for quite some time. I must emphasize that Dr. X's approach appears to be vague accusation: ". . . our own interactions with students and faculty many of whom were critical." Who are these students? Who are these faculty members? My student evaluations paint a very different picture of me as an educator. All of my colleagues with only one exception also paint a very different picture of me. Everyone of my colleagues in English has signed the Petition supporting me and calling upon the Board of Trustees to reconsider and rescind its February 8, 1994 decision to dismiss me.

Dr. X states that my colleagues "offered no comments on teaching effectiveness." Many of them have stated to me that that was because they had never observed me in the classroom, which only stands to reason, since it is not their role at all to observe me in the classroom. Dr. X essentially asked them a question which they could not have possibly answered. A number of faculty members have pointed this out to me. Then, when she had apparently received the desired response, she seems to have interpreted it by giving it a meaning that they did not intend. It is now this reinterpreted meaning that she is using as "evidence" against me. This "evidence" is used while sweeping aside any real evidence to the contrary. Her own classroom evaluation of me on February 17, 1993, which may be found in my Personnel File, suggests, if anything, that I am an "exemplary" educator. I quote the closing paragraph in which she sums up her observation of my English 132 class in COMPOSITION:

This class involved most students in discussion.

Students felt free to express ideas, even when the ideas were not fully formed. There was laughter in the classroom and in the exchanges with Fred. There seemed real pleasure on the parts of teacher and students. The four or five adult students tended to begin most discussions but four younger students were almost as active in their participation.

Such words of evaluation from Dr. X herself never led me to believe that there was anything so seriously wrong with my teaching of COMPOSITION that less than a year later she would have felt a just cause existed for my dismissal.

What am I to make of her statement that there were "moments of silence and staring"? Is one not allowed to sit silently before his accuser and contemplate what might be the true motivations behind one's arbitrary and capricious dismissal? "Staring" also seems pejorative as Dr. X uses the word. I would describe my reaction at times as merely waiting for Dr. X to empty herself out in hope that she might eventually tell me the truth.

As provided for, at the very least, in 1993-1994 Catalog, under student grievances, in the Faculty Association Agreement, Section 6.2, and in the Illinois Community College Act, Section 103B-3, I believe that, whatever few and normal student complaints there may have been about my teaching in required English courses, they have not been handled properly; that I have not been evaluated properly; and that I have been treated in an arbitrary and capricious manner.

Fred Glaysher

---

Dr. Z:

The night of 1 February 1994 a tenured member of the English faculty called me at home to express his concern that I was being let go. Among other things, he told me that approximately a year ago Dr. Z had said "Fred Glaysher's days are numbered," had put together a position paper against me, and had tried to recruit him. Apparently, this occurred after three students had dropped out of my 131 class and Dr. X had allowed him to take over my students, one of which eventually also dropped out of his class. This faculty member asked me if I knew why Dr. Z was after me and if anything had ever happened between Dr. Z and me, perhaps during the night I had dinner at his house. Until that moment I had never known for certain that he was after me. Such a question came as quite a shock to me and confirmed my worst fears.

I was interviewed on 3 August 1992. The night of the interview Dr. Z graciously took me home for dinner and showed me that evening his Bible and Book of Common Prayer. He later drove me past a couple of churches for which he plays the organ. I felt I was repeatedly being given a religious test.

Early in September, 1992, I borrowed his computer. I copied a wordprocessor on to the hard drive. At the time I didn't think about the word "Baha'i" being in a few of my address files.

Late in September, 1992, someone placed a poster announcing a Baha'i meeting in Alton outside the Liberal Arts Office. It was there for about a week. I had nothing to do with it. Mrs. B told me on 3 February 1994, "We assumed you put it up." Mr. Z asked her what Baha'i was.

In early October, after the poster had been up for a while, I recalled that Baha'i was in some of my computer files. Given the religious test I felt I have been put to, I eventually figured out an excuse to borrow the computer back from Mr. Z and deleted them.

Dr. Z informed me very early on that he had invested a great deal of energy in selecting me. He told me he had personally read every single one of the 188 applications. Because several of my published articles appeared in Christian intellectual journals, I became concerned that he may have assumed I was a Christian and therefore put my application further ahead. I was very worried that there might be a backlash if he discovered I was a Baha'i. Without Mr. J yet knowing I was a Baha'i, I cautiously asked him early on if my publications in Christian journals had anything to do with my having been hired.

In October I met for the first time local Alton Baha'is, good, simple, decent people, as in any religion. I soon learnt that they had begun placing ads in the religious section of The Telegraph for the first time in late August. Again, given what I felt was a religious test and after the poster appearing outside the Liberal Arts Office, I was further concerned that I might be connected with the ads and it would lead to repercussions. In retrospect I wonder if Dr. Z might have noticed the ads with displeasure. Having lived in a large Baha'i community of intelligent people, at The University of Michigan, I know I viewed the ads with displeasure. If I've been judged through guilt by association, I then resent it deeply. Like any religion, the Baha'i Faith embraces people from all walks of life.

At the 31 January 1994 2:00pm meeting with the English faculty, A mentioned that I was a Baha'i. Some discussion took place regarding whether or not I am involved with the local Alton Baha'i community, which I am. Under the Constitution of the United States I am supposed to have the right to Religious Freedom.

Dr. Z spoke out against me and stated that I had not done anything to fire up the composition program since I've been at Lewis & Clark. Yet he himself was not always receptive to doing anything, and he never showed any interest in getting to know me as either a person or colleague. In my meeting with Dr. X, she herself repeated Dr. Z's allegation that I had failed to do anything significant in terms of composition. Apparently, previous to the 31 January meeting, Dr. Z had looked up the tenure law stating that a non-tenured faculty member could be dismissed at any time and stated so. In my meeting with Dr. X, she herself had begun by quoting the tenure law as justification of what was to follow. I believe these two facts, composition and tenure law, clearly show his influencing her decisions and actions in regard to me.

That I am a Baha'i is the only reason I can think of to explain Dr. Z's enmity.

Further, I believe Dr. Z's religious discrimination against me has negatively affected Dr. X's perception of me as an educator and influenced her decision not to recommend me for a third year.

copyright (c) 1994 FG

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Letters from the American Desert: 1989 to 1994
PDF: *Letters from the American Desert: 1989 to 1994

Copyright (c) 2000 by FG. www.FG.com

A Response to Dr. X's "Summary of Evaluation Conference January 31, 1994"

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

The Statue of Liberty

Photo by FG, May 25, 2000

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

See also:

Making the Crooked Straight - Reviewed by Denis MacEoin posted on H-Bahai, 2001

Cole's Further Comments on Dennis MacEoin

---

Denis MacEoin, Crisis in Babi and Baha'i Studies Bulletin, (British Society for Middle Eastern Studies), Vol. 17, No. 1 (1990), pp. 55-61.

Denis MacEoin, A Few Words in Response to Cole's 'Reply to MacEoin.' British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies, Vol. 18, No. 1 (1991), pp. 86-87.

---

From: "Juan R. Cole" <jrcole@u...>

Date: Sat Nov 1, 2003 5:09 pm

Subject: Re: [talisman9] Denis MacEoin

Denis MacEoin did not withdraw from the faith, he was chased out by powerful Baha'i fundamentalists who were deeply threatened by the implications of his historical work. Denis became a Baha'i in North Ireland around 1965 and quickly emerged as a Baha'i youth leader. He was chosen to come to Haifa to commemorate the 1968 anniversary of Baha'u'llah's Letters to the Kings.

He then wrote the House saying he did not know whether to serve the Faith by becoming an academic scholar of the Middle East or by going pioneering. They wrote back that either path would be praiseworthy. (They later stabbed him in the back about this). He therefore entered graduate school at Edinburgh in Middle East Studies, then went on to Cambridge University for his Ph.D. He was the first academic to study the Babi movement with all the tools of modern scholarship, and his findings were groundbreaking.

Denis made the mistake of continuing to be an active Baha'i. Since the community is so heavily dominated by aggressive fundamentalist fanatics, if a genuine academic wants to be a Baha'i s/he has to keep a low profile. Denis did not. He gave summer school talks. He was once viciously attacked by Abu al-Qasim Faizi. His new ideas were upsetting the conservative British community. He objected when the Baha'i authorities supported dictators like Pinochet and Bokassa. He corresponded with the Los Angeles Study Class and some of his letters were published in their newsletter (a newsletter that the Baha'i authorities later closed down, for all the world like Tehran ayatollahs pulling a publishing license).

Around 1980, fundamentalist UHJ members Ian Semple and David Hoffman called Denis to a meeting and told him he would have to fall silent (rather as the Vatican did to Leonardo Boff). Hoffman was especially harsh. Denis declined to fall silent, and ultimately withdrew from the Faith. He was pushed out by anti-intellectual bigots who had risen high in the Baha'i hierarchy and become Infallible. Denis's works on the Babi and Baha'i movements are some of the few pieces of solid scholarship that exist. Instead of being grateful to him for sacrificing all those years living in penury as a graduate student, studying Arabic and Persian, traveling to a dangerous Middle East, all for the service of Baha'u'llah, the community could think of nothing better to do than viciously attack him and throw him in the gutter of infamy.

Denis's story is the story of most thinking people who have anything serious to do with the Baha'i faith. Either they adopt a cult-like mindset of true believers and covenant breakers, in which case they gradually cease being thinking persons, or they get chased out by the wild-eyed. A few people manage to avoid either fate by not drawing attention to themselves.

The Baha'i Extreme Orthodox are like the Borg in Star Trek. They want to assimilate you, but might leave you alone if you stay quiet.

cheers

Juan Cole

<https://www.juancole.com/>

From: "Juan R. Cole" <jrcole@u...>
Date: Sun Nov 2, 2003 2:23 pm
Subject: Re: [talisman9] Re: Denis MacEoin

He wasn't saying anything polemic. He was just discovering who the Babis really were from solid historical sources. The powerful Baha'is, who have all the open-mindedness of Wahhabis, did not like it. It did not look like the fireside talks everyone grew up with, so they shoved Denis out of the community with threats of sanctions echoing about his ears.

cheers Juan

From: "Juan R. Cole" <jrcole@u...>
Date: Tue Nov 4, 2003 12:59 am Subject: Re: [talisman9] To what did the Baha'i authorities object?

Denis's works were mostly published in Middle East or

Religion journals or as academic books, and most could be gotten on interlibrary loan. There may be some things at www.bahai-library.org , and there certainly is a bibliography there.

I apologize that I am off to a conference, so cannot go into depth but there are others here who can discuss Denis's findings.

As to why they should have angered anyone, I suppose you'd have to pass them by a Baha'i fundamentalist and they would tell you. You could just ask about MacEoin at e.g. soc.religion.bahai or about his ideas on Babis.
Or at beliefnet. I presume you will get an earful. One of them once more or less threatened to cut my head off with a sword, so they can be an irritable bunch.

cheers Juan
<https://www.juancole.com/>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Dear Mr Glaysher,

What a puzzle. If my memory serves me right, I originally wrote this review at the request of Tony Lee, and I understood that it would appear on H-Baha'i; since I no longer subscribe to H-Baha'i, I've no knowledge of where or when it was 'published', and I had no idea it had been 'targeted' as you say.

Maybe the simplest thing is for me to attach an original to this e-mail. I hope you enjoy it.

Best wishes,

Denis MacEoin

[29/11/03]

---

To understand how fundamentalists and fanatics are using Mr. MacEoin's review in order to target and discredit it, tactics common among my fellow bahais, see the responses at <https://bahai-library.org/reviews/maceoin.mtcs.html>

---

Juan Cole's comments regarding Denis MacEoin

---

Denis MacEoin reviews Juan Cole's Modernity and the Millennium: The Genesis of the Baha'i Faith in the Nineteenth-Century Middle East

---

Denis MacEoin, Crisis in Babi and Baha'i Studies Bulletin, (British Society for Middle Eastern Studies), Vol. 17, No. 1 (1990), pp. 55-61.

Denis MacEoin, A Few Words in Response to Cole's 'Reply to MacEoin.' British Journal of Middle Eastern Studies, Vol. 18, No. 1 (1991), pp. 86-87.

---

Incomplete Bibliography:

Baha'i fundamentalism and the academic study of the Babi movement Religion Volume 16, Issue 1, January 1986, Pages 57-84

Afnán, hatcher and an old bone Religion, Volume 16, Issue 2, April 1986, Pages 193-195

Challenging apostasy: Responses to Moojan Momen's 'Marginality and Apostasy in the Baha'i Community' 2008

Rituals in Babism and Baha'ism (Pembroke Persian Papers Series) by Denis MacEoin (Hardcover - 31 Dec 1994)

The Sources for Early Babi Doctrine and History: A Survey by Denis MacEoin (Hardcover - 1 Feb 1992)

dissertation, 1979: FROM SHAYKHISM TO BABISM: A STUDY IN CHARISMATIC RENEWAL IN SHI I ISLAM, DENIS MARTIN MACEOIN

---

Udo Schaefer, Nicola Towfigh, and Ulrich Gollmer (contribs.), Making the Crooked Straight: A Contribution to Bahá'í Apologetics, trans. from German by Dr. Geraldine Schuckelt, 2000, George Ronald, Oxford, 863 pp. Reviewed by Denis MacEoin, Dursley, Newcastle. June 2001

"The Baha'i arguments on every topic are the same old fossils that are trotted out every time their version of doctrines or events is called in question." --Denis MacEoin

I ask myself, when have I ever had to trudge through such a dreary text or plough my path through so many heavy-handed footnotes, and all to such little purpose? I have read worse books: the medieval English biography of Margory Kempe springs limply to mind, not to mention Memorials of the Faithful, The Priceless Pearl, and some of the less inspired writings of the Bab;[\[1\]](#) but seldom have I met anything quite as indigestible, as pompous, or as gradgrindish as this.

One question stabs at me repeatedly, like an angry bee, and that is: why on earth should anyone in their right mind take the trouble to have had so many trees cut down, and such a massive tome translated at some expense into English and published for an English-speaking audience, given that no-one (Baha'is included) in that audience had ever heard of Francesco 'Il Fallace' Ficicchia or his rotten book before this?

The Ficicchia fiasco was a purely German phenomenon with little or no visible impact outside Germany or Switzerland, where it did indeed do a lot of damage to the public image of the Baha'is (I'm tempted to write 'the Baha'i Church', but that is WRONG, and Schaefer and his pals may write another epic proving it, so better not). Why, then, did somebody think there was anything to be gained by translating a thoroughly bad rebuttal into the most widely spoken of the world's languages? To make Ficicchia better known and the Baha'is faintly ridiculous? The old adage of leaving well enough alone springs to mind.

I am perfectly happy to accept that Ficicchia's book, Der Baha'ismus: Weltreligion der Zukunft? (Baha'ism, World Religion of the Future?), itself a weighty enough indulgence at well over 800 pages, damaged the Baha'is and distorted their cause in certain quarters, mainly within the Catholic and Protestant churches. That said, I am shocked that so many German readers, from theologians to academics, were taken in by it for more than a few moments. The book looks good, of course — Ficicchia, though not an academic, knew enough to give his writing an academic appearance, and it has to be said that, for someone who'd been a Baha'i for only three years, he really did know a lot about the subject and its literature.<sup>[2]</sup> But the bias, indeed, the animus that lie behind the whole thing, not to mention the constant signs of Ficicchia's real ignorance, are so apparent that any honest reader should have seen them jumping off the page and running straight for him. Remember what Bertie Wooster used to say about aunts, and the need for rapid evasive action.

Baha'is were, I can see, quite justified in feeling upset about Ficicchia and his work, bearing in mind the very considerable attention they received in circles that mattered. And I don't blame Schaefer et al for wanting to pen a rebuttal. But 862 pages? 3860 footnotes? A 32-page bibliography?

What normal person is going to read a book like this? Few if any of those who first read and liked Ficicchia, if only because the rebuttal is so monumentally dull. I could have written an adequate dismissal of Ficicchia in ten pages. So could a lot of people I know. What more was needed?

Some academics may have bought copies, who knows?, And some theologians for that matter, since they seem to be the boys Schaefer and his gang are most concerned about. But it won't have taken long to spot what is going on in the Schaefer volume. If Ficicchia was a non-academic pretending to erudition he did not possess, so Schaefer and Gollmer are well-educated non-academics (Towfigh counts as a professional) who seek to 'correct' Ficicchia, not by addressing him academically, as they pretend,[\[3\]](#) but as adherents and proponents of the religion he criticized. The Baha'i arguments on every topic are the same old fossils that are trotted out every time their version of doctrines or events is called in question.

This is most obvious in the sections devoted to history — chapters 7 through 10, by Nicola Towfigh and Ulrich Gollmer. I could not work out, incidentally, how Gollmer, who is not a historian and is not, as far as I know, able to read either Persian or Arabic, came to be qualified to write about some very difficult issues requiring an expertise in all three areas. You can't complain about Ficicchia's lack of scholarship if your own team is not, as Benjamin Braddock might have put it, not fully baked itself. In this area, you need to be completely baked.

The beginning of confusion in this matter lies in Gollmer's little essay on 'Problems of Research in the Field of Religious History', where, inter alia, he says 'it is important to correct a persistent misconception: there is no "official", doctrinaire, sacrosanct Baha'i historiography.' But if Gollmer had taken the trouble to read his own contributions and those of Towfigh, he surely would have noticed that their version of Babi and Baha'i history corresponds down to fine detail with any other version ever produced by Baha'i writers since round about 1944.[\[4\]](#)

It is one of my great stumbling blocks with the Baha'is — and I guarantee it will continue to be a stumbling block for future historians — that they do, in fact, go to such lengths to 'correct' any account of their history that does not fit with God Passes By or Dawn-Breakers or other approved sources. Now, history just doesn't work like that. I know of absolutely no other area of historical studies where modern writers routinely provide a version of events that corresponds to a secondary source written as far back as the 1940s.

And why do modern Baha'is (as we shall see) remain so obsessed with Subh-i Azal and his dispute with Baha' Allah, yet so utterly lacking in curiosity about, say, the circumstances of Shoghi Effendi's death and the events that followed it, an episode of considerably greater relevance to contemporary Baha'ism than an old split within the Babi community of Baghdad?[\[5\]](#)

Gollmer may well point out that neither Abd al-Baha' nor Shoghi Effendi was infallible in matters of history (p. 485). How come, then, that I have never come across a Baha'i writer willing to disagree with one or the other of them on a substantial matter in public? Gollmer doesn't do it, Towfigh doesn't do it. Momen has never done it. Smith has never done it. In the last analysis they provide us with just another take on the tired old official version.

Official versions are, after all, what this whole enterprise is about. Does the book not, after all, go all out, not only to say that Ficicchia is wrong on this point or that, but to delineate in loving detail the 'true' teaching, interpretation, or fact. I don't think I once came across that classic hallmark of the academic treatise, an admission that 'I may be mistaken' or 'there is more than one opinion about this'.[\[6\]](#) Schaefer et al are keen to portray their book as a work of proper scholarship, but the truth is, it isn't, and saying so won't make it so. I don't propose to treat it as an academic work, but as what it is, a Western-Baha'i radiyya designed to refute all bearers of falsity, and to proclaim the true faith in fine detail.

Mind you, it's not as though anyone outside of a hard core of dedicated Baha'i big book groupies is likely to read it at any length. Oprah won't talk it up, and the book clubs won't make it Editor's Choice. Not that that will stop it gaining a solid reputation within the community as a work of deep insight and true erudition, to grace the shelves alongside Balyuzi and Taherzadeh, or the editions of Ishraq Khavari.[\[7\]](#) Until Baha'i writers are willing to admit to the scholarly shortcomings of these and other central authors, the chances of anyone ever challenging the official version of anything are zero.

I was one of the first to learn how determined the Baha'is can be, both to rely on hack scholarship, and to defend the 'correct' version of historical events down to the last detail. The dispute that followed the publication of my article 'The Babi Concept of Holy War'[\[8\]](#), involving a lengthy rebuttal by two amateur scholars, Muhammad Afnan and William Hatcher, cheapened the field for a long time. It was bad enough that the Baha'is putting me right had no real expertise in this area. What made it worse was the mindless way in which each and every 'mistake' from my pen was corrected by direct reference to 'authoritative' Baha'i texts. If anyone wanted an object lesson in the zeal with which fundamentalist Baha'is treat historical accounts that deviate from the official, that was it.

That this attitude is still alive and well anyone can see by reading through this book. Schaefer et al aren't just content to make a general case against Ficicchia, they seem compelled to pick their way through his text almost sentence by sentence, correcting, correcting, correcting like neurotics fixed on a single topic. I defy anyone to show me where, amid all this verbiage, any of our three authors has mounted so much as a weak contradiction of the tried and tested positions that we all know and love so well.

This could be put down to simple ignorance, but I don't think Schaefer or either of his chums can have missed any of the controversies that have dogged the emergence of serious academic scholarship on Babism and Baha'ism. Schaefer, for instance, makes it clear again and again that the faith-inspired scholarship of believers is the equal or superior of the work of independent scholars.

'There is no valid reason,' he writes, 'why a presentation of a religion prefaced by the term "critical" is constantly given preference over presentations written by believers themselves. The one is no more "scientific" than the other' (p. 18).

And again, 'That the self-image of a religion must be the point of orientation for any portrayal of that religion by non-believers, that a religion must be able to recognize itself in a portrait, is an accepted methodological standard today' (pp. 20-21).

It's hard to know where to start with this. Perhaps the best place would be to point out the double standard employed by Schaefer. Let me ask him if he thinks the Baha'i portrait of Christianity, something he has done much to paint in his own writings, would pass muster in any Christian church. Christianity stripped of the Trinity, the Incarnation, the Ascension, the Resurrection, exclusive salvation through Jesus Christ, a Virgin Mother of God, confession, saints, wine that is truly blood, and so on, would not be Christianity to any of the millions who profess that faith.

Nor would it be recognizable to Muslims, who, in their turn, deny the crucifixion and reduce Christ to the role of prophet. Nor would the Baha'i portrait of Islam (which is derived essentially from one sectarian version of the religion) be recognizable to a majority of Muslims. The same problem applies in the cases of Hinduism (Krishna a Manifestation of a single God? Two religious cycles in all history? No multiplicity of gods? No reincarnation? No Tantric sex?) or Buddhism (just one Buddha? No celibacy? No Tibetan gods? No Buddha representations [don't forget Bamiyan!]? No Dalai Lama?).

It gets worse as one moves through the narrower sectarian or national forms of each religion, or to smaller religions and cults (Mormonism, the Unification Church, etc.). None of these people will for a moment see themselves in the pictures painted by Baha'i writers. But I don't doubt that Mr Schaefer thinks the Baha'i version is correct or the Christian or Jewish or Zoroastrian self-image a distortion. I wish him good luck.

So why, if he's doing it himself, [\[9\]](#) is he so critical of academics for producing portrayals of religions that diverge from the orthodox? Maybe they do it for the same reason (though, I would argue, with much better arguments) as he, that they think their versions, based on their own and others' research to be closer to the truth. If it works with Christianity, why shouldn't it work with Babism or Baha'ism? Why the special pleading, Udo?

What's wrong with accounts by believers of their own faith, indeed, what's wrong with 'official', 'sanctioned', or 'authoritative' accounts? Not a great deal, as long as we recognize them for what they are: one-sided versions with a particular slant. They are insider accounts, and, as such, must be treated with caution.

Tell me just where on earth other than in religious matters are we expected to trust official insider versions? Scientific reports from within the tobacco, GM foods, and pharmaceutical industries? Modern histories of Iraq published in Baghdad with the imprimatur of the Iraqi Ministry of Information? The manifestos of political parties? The PR releases of any major company you care to name? A film star's autobiography?

But suddenly, here we are, Baha'i accounts of Baha'ism, all subjected to the approval of national reviewing committees. These we have to prefer, or at least recognize as just as scientific as an account by a neutral academic. Take this to its logical conclusion and we may as well give up any effort to be objective. Why bother to have academics at all, when men and women with vested interests will do the job for free? Think of the savings, think of the leap in standards, think of the gratitude of a thousand patrons worldwide.

I lost my teaching post at Newcastle University because my version of Islam differed from that of my Saudi sponsors. I taught subjects like Sufism, Shi'ism, Babism, and Baha'ism, all of which must have alarmed some of the bearded fraternity in Riyadh. I presume that Dr. Schaefer approved of this, since I was clearly going against the rule that you must present a religion in a manner recognizable to its adherents.

There are differences between the committed and academic styles of presentation. Take ten accounts of Babism by Baha'i writers, and they will all, as though given the David Blaine treatment, seem magically the same. Not only that, but they will bear a magical resemblance to books by Shoghi

Effendi, Abd al-Baha', Nabil-i Zarandi, and other approved texts. On the other hand, take ten such accounts by non-Baha'i academics, and no two will be quite alike. I would expect there to be more and more divergence between the academic versions as different documents are brought to light and fresh theories debated. But I predict that ten Baha'i accounts in the year 2101 will still stick with the approved version.

And while I'm at it, what's with the endless bons mots in Latin? I know Schaefer was a German judge and big with Church Law; but I'm a British magistrate, and I don't pepper my texts with Latin tags. It's simply showing off, of course, and should have been spanked out of him by a decent editor. But I think it reveals something more substantial than that.

Schaefer's models are German and Roman law, Christianity in general, and the Catholic Church (and church law) in particular. There's nothing much wrong with that, I suppose; it's what he knows. But it does distort his judgement. He spends much of his time trying to fit Babism and Baha'ism, religions which have their origins in Shi'ite Islam (and, to some extent, in Sufism), into the framework of something quite alien to them.

When they do deal with matters Islamic, or, for that matter, with Babism or early Baha'ism, both Schaefer and Gollmer show themselves well read in the secondary literature, and I congratulate them for that. However, again and again they bite off more than they are qualified to chew, and enter into discussions where a good knowledge of Arabic or Persian might be useful.

On page 715, for example, Gollmer writes, keeping alive an old solecism: 'The Kitab-i-'Ahd unequivocally affirms the superior station of 'Abdu'l-Baha over Mirza Muhammad 'Ali: "Verily God hath ordained the station of the Greater Branch [Ghusn-i Akbar = Mirza Muhammad-'Ali] to be beneath that of the Most Great Branch [Ghusn-i A'zam = 'Abdu'l-Baha]'" (f.n. 170). The Arabic words akbar and a'zam do not mean, respectively, 'greater' and 'most great'. For one thing, they are from totally different roots (kbr and zm). For another, there is no simple distinction in Arabic between comparative and superlative. Akbar could mean either 'greater' or 'greatest', a'zam could be read as 'mightier' or 'mightiest'. It's a tiny mistake, but an Arabist would have put it right, rather than just repeating something found in a secondary source.

Now, I'm not criticizing people for not being Arabists. But I'm afraid that the boundaries between academic and amateur scholarship do get regularly blurred in the Baha'i context. I think it's commendable that so many Baha'is want to do some sort of research into their history or scriptures or whatever, and I'd like to think I helped foster that development in the days when I was persona grata. (Oops, sorry about that: mea culpa).

But you only have to look at the Database of Baha'i Scholars on the web to see how many people are dabbling in areas for which they're really not at all prepared. If you think I'm being judgmental in this, let me cite an episode that occurred many years ago in a British Summer School.

An American Baha'i woman had heard that I was writing a biography of Qurrat al-'Ayn. She introduced herself and told me of her deep interest in this area; she was effusive and fluffy, but I just answered her questions and hoped she would learn some new things. At one point, however, I tried to explain how Qurrat al-'Ayn had broken with the shari'a at a very early date, and so on.

Well, this woman hit the roof. 'Are you calling the Blessed Tahira a law-breaker?' she demanded, and nothing I could say would make her understand anything about the Babi transition from shari'a-mindedness to abandonment of the law, followed by the construction of a new shari'a.

This was the equivalent of someone who knows nothing about medicine having a stand-up row with a physician because their treatment is 'all wrong'. 'What's with the angina tablets, it's his heart, you dummy!' Of course, most Baha'i 'scholars' are more intelligent and more polite than Mrs Agitated of Arizona, but that doesn't improve matters too much.

To use the same analogy, but in a real-life example: I have for years been chairman (and before that, council member) of a consumer body called the Natural Medicines Society. I've published articles on medicine, I currently lecture medical students at Newcastle University, I've delivered papers at, among other things, a conference of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, last year I presented a detailed report to the Science and Technology Committee of the House of Lords, I shall be delivering a paper at a seminar at Salford University in a few months, and this year I shall be publishing a compilation on health care problems. I know quite a lot about certain areas in the history and sociology of medicine.

But I would never dream of considering myself even a quasi-academic in this field. My papers and articles are those of an informed amateur, and I would never attempt to write the sort of article that could be submitted to a medical journal, or one in the sociology of medicine. My academic expertise is in Islamic Studies.

This is why I feel uneasy when Schaefer and Gollmer, each of whom certainly has his own areas of expertise, take it upon themselves to write to what they evidently see as an academic level. Their bibliography is out of date, their citations omit obvious items, they perpetuate errors that I had thought corrected long ago, they pour energy into subjects that really aren't that important (e.g. Gollmer's ridiculously overlong and overstated section on Römer, pp. 546 ff.). For goodness sake, they keep citing my dissertation 'A Revised Survey', when my book Sources for Early Babi Doctrine and History (which is in their bibliography, and sometimes in their notes) is clearly known to be an updated version of the former. Sloppy.

This over-energetic, unfocussed approach is characteristic of all amateur 'scholarship'. You can see it on every website where some nerd has devoted years of his life to assembling every last imaginable fact about some obscure movie actress; in every fanzine ever published; in all those Baha'i lists of pages in books, magazines, and postage stamps where the word 'Baha'i' is mentioned or (my favourite) the article in which 'Shoghi Effendi and Charles Mason Remey are barely visible in a funeral photograph'.[\[10\]](#)

This is less of a problem with Nicola Towfigh. She has at least studied 'oriental studies', though I'm not quite sure what that means, and 'islamology', and she has a doctorate in 'Creation and Manifestation from the Viewpoint of the Baha'i Religion'. I presume she knows Persian and possibly some Arabic, though I'm not sure about the latter.[\[11\]](#) Since these are important things to know about an author, I was disappointed that her bibliographical details were so sparse. That she is also a member of the German National Baha'i Assembly is mentioned only in passing on p. 782.

Nevertheless, the passages by her did show a grasp of secondary and primary sources. She has read around the subject of Babi history and writes about it intelligently. But, let's say it again, she is not an expert in Babi history — as far as I know, she has published nothing on the subject — and this shows in many different ways.

Above all, it shows in her strategy (one already referred to above) of bringing it all back home. She does not correct Ficicchia on the basis of current academic knowledge, but instead replaces his 'facts' with a series of her own 'facts' as presented in standard Baha'i literature. She is critical of some of Ficicchia's sources (the Nuqtatu'l-Kaf, Tarikh-i Jadid, Hasht Bihisht, Browne, and Römer, but never says a word questioning the accuracy of his Baha'i sources (which include Balyuzi, The Bab, Baha'u'llah, Edward Granville Browne and the Baha'i Faith, Nabil's Narrative, God Passes By — all books about which I would have strong reservations. This is known as applying a double standard, and it gets us nowhere, and makes for very bad history writing.

Much of her discussion of sources concerns two texts, the Nuqtat al-kaf and the Tarikh-i jadid, both of which have long been bugbears of the Baha'is, though I don't really understand why. I find it curious (though others may politely tell me why) that she does not engage with my arguments concerning these two works, as presented in my Sources for the Doctrine and History of Early Babism. To my knowledge, this represents the latest and fullest (and, to date, the only academic) discussion of these texts. It is customary in academic circles to engage with the most recent authority, not proceed as though ignorant of it. Towfigh does refer to Sources several times, but only on points of information.[\[12\]](#)

The result is that her discussion feels very dated, with conclusions that are no more advanced than those of Balyuzi, who more or less started this whole business in his book about E. G. Browne. I won't rehearse my own arguments here: anyone can go out and get hold of a copy of my book (a snip at Amazon). It may be that Dr. Towfigh's analysis is correct (though I think not); but that does not alter the unscholarly way in which she has carried it out.

And it is worth saying that her conclusions are, I think, seriously mistaken. The idea that the Nuqtat al-kaf is an Azali forgery palmed off on Gobineau (pp. 511-12) just does not hold water.[\[13\]](#) But it seems that the mere mention of Azal in an approving manner in the text is enough to give Baha'is even today a mild form of apoplexy, even though the text also refers with admiration to Baha' Allah as well. And even though plenty of other texts indicate that admiration for Azal was at this stage practically universal and therefore not at all egregious.

The fact is that Dr. Towfigh insists on presenting a black-and-white world, with good guys and bad guys, saints and antichrists, as it occurs in official Baha'i histories. But scholarship has moved on from the simplistic world views of 'Abd al-Baha', Shoghi Effendi, or Hasan Balyuzi. The world of middle Babism was more complex and possibly less ridden with factionalism than Baha'i historians would have us suppose. It's time all this nonsense about 'If it's favourable to Azal it must be a sinister conspiracy and forgery' was put behind us.

What sort of historian can write the following with a straight face? '... because Browne was not an objective, non-partisan researcher and therefore committed some serious errors, it is important for the reader to examine his work critically....' (p. 544). Try replacing Browne with 'Shoghi Effendi, Balyuzi, Taherzadeh, Momen', or whomsoever you will, and you'll see right away how very peculiar all this is. But I can't imagine a Baha'i writer publicly disputing the objectivity and accuracy of a Baha'i historian, especially one that comes with knobs on, such as a Guardian or a Hand of the Cause.

No doubt Dr Towfigh and Herr Gollmer will object that I am wrong to claim there is such a thing as an official Baha'i historiography. As Gollmer puts it: '... it is important to correct a persistent misconception: there is no "official", doctrinaire, sacrosanct Baha'i historiography' (p. 484). That will come as news to any Baha'i who has tried to publish a version of one or more events that contradicts the official line.

I still have a vivid memory of something that happened to Moojan Momen and myself at a Baha'i summer school in, I would guess, 1978. I had given a number of talks on Babi history, and a couple of 'Hands of the Cause' who were present expressed disquiet about the contents. Moojan and I were summoned to see Abu'l-Qasim Faizi, and roundly treated to a severe lecture on contradicting the official line and the possible consequences of doing so.

That wasn't the first or the last such encounter. I'd already had David Hoffman and Ian Semple playing good cop/bad cop with me one sunny afternoon in London, in one of the most unpleasant encounters of my 52 years, so I don't need Mr Gollmer telling me there is no official version.

Try criticizing God Passes By or Zarandi. Shoghi Effendi describes the latter as 'an unchallengeable textbook' ('unchallengeable'?!); others call it 'authentic', 'authorized', even 'a Gospel'. And Gollmer thinks there is no sacrosanct Baha'i historiography?

Not many lines later (p. 485), he writes 'Although, as a Baha'i one trusts that the main sequence of events is recorded correctly....'. Frankly, being a Baha'i doesn't come into it, Ulrich. Facts are facts, and pious trusting has no place in historical analysis. But Mr Gollmer isn't content with trusting in the texts: he actually believes that the lives of their authors make a difference.

Referring to Abd al-Baha' and Shoghi Effendi, he writes: 'The lives of these two chroniclers testify to this, embodying as they do the ethical principles of their faith'. I've no doubt Shoghi Effendi was the best of men (though I know less about him than I do about, oh, let's say, Ann Frank) , but the fact is that, when he wrote God Passes By, he hung his 'facts' on a preconceived framework. Just as I might distort historical characters or events in writing a novel, so he told his tale in order to meet the demands of a grand scheme, a divine drama played out in Shiraz, Baghdad, or Acre. It's a work of genius, but I don't think it's a reliable historical source, if for no other reason than that there isn't a single reference from beginning to end. We're meant to take everything on Shoghi Effendi's say-so. Whereas academic books are open and transparent, displaying their origins in the form of citations and bibliographies, God Passes By is wholly opaque, cramming primary and secondary materials in together without rhyme or reason, and leaving the reader in the dark throughout. So just what Shoghi Effendi's rather pale life has to do with the veracity of his text is quite beyond me.

One particularly lengthy historical section, written by Towfigh, runs from page 599 to page 673, and deals, in the main, with the break between Baha' Allah and Subh-i Azal. I found this a very frustrating sequence to read, because I sensed throughout that Towfigh was only marginally familiar with the original texts, but brazened things out by judicious use of secondary materials, most of them from Baha'i sources. Since this is still a controversial area, it requires well-honed historical and linguistic skills, without which it is easy to slip into error, as Towfigh does.

As before, I am aware that the only detailed discussions of Babism in this period are to be found in Chris Buck's Symbol and Secret and in two articles by myself, 'Hierarchy and Authority' and 'Divisions and Authority Claims', along with Juan Cole's translation of the Risala-yi shathiyya and some discussion that has emerged from it. Yet, apart from a passing reference to Buck's work, none of these is brought into Towfigh's analysis.

In other words, she is choosing which sources to cite, and which to engage with (if any), whereas in proper academic discourse a salient book or paper demands to be accounted for. In other words, you don't have the freedom to ignore anything that gets in the way of your argument.[\[14\]](#) Unless, of course, you don't actually know such materials exist, in which case you should not be writing on the subject.

Towfigh is constantly out of tune with what seems to have been happening. She shows no understanding of the Shi'ite concept of ghayba as an element in Azal's behaviour (it was certainly referred to by his contemporaries in explanation of his absence), she persists in accepting 'Mystic Source' as an adequate translation for the phrase masdar-i amr,<sup>[15]</sup> she believes (incorrectly) that there is no document in the Bab's hand which legitimizes Azal's position, and she does not know why Azal was chosen as the Bab's successor (on account of his 'inspired' writings, apparently).

In one place she states that 'the early Babis, too, clearly expected the Promised One to arrive soon', which is debatable at the very least. And she goes on to say: 'Only this can explain the fact that during the years immediately following the martyrdom of the Bab so many proclaimed themselves to be the Promised One.' If she had read the second of my articles, she would have seen adequate evidence that probably no-one made that claim at that point, and that all these matters require a much more sophisticated understanding of events and terminology than Towfigh brings to them.

Since the range of claims open to the Babis of that period was fairly large, a researcher in this field ought to be able to access the sort of texts in which they are laid out. I see no mention at all in Towfigh's copious footnotes of Naraqi, Dahaji, the Azali compilation Qismati az alwah, the original texts of Baha' Allah's Baghdad writings, or the relevant later works of the Bab. The work is being done largely from secondary texts: God Passes By is cited no fewer than twenty-one times, A Traveller's Narrative thirty-one, and other articles by Browne thirty-nine times.

Elsewhere, ideology leads to contradictions. On p. 665, we are assured that, when Browne was writing, 'a single, united Babi community had long since ceased to exist', whereas on pages 672-3, we are informed that 'the term schism is inappropriate in connection with the conflict between Mirza Yahya Azal and Baha'u'llah, since no division within a religion occurred'.

There are numerous other points that arise from this section, but I'll restrict myself to just one here, which is an ethical, not an historical one. On p. 636, Towfigh quotes a statement from 'Abd al-Baha' to the effect that the Bab and Baha' Allah agreed to have Subh-i Azal appointed nominal head of the faith in order to preserve his older brother from danger. She is not the first Baha'i writer to cite this with approval, and I'm sure she will not be the last. Let me only comment here that, if the aim of this book is to win friends and influence people in the non-Baha'i world, this citation alone would undermine the whole enterprise. Imagine how Christians would react to the suggestion that Jesus conspired to have Judas substituted for him so he could escape the cross (an idea actually mooted by some Muslim writers). Or that a French resistance fighter handed a Jew over to the Gestapo, knowing that doing so would save his life. Or that John Kennedy, fearing assassination, had placed a double to ride in his open-top car.

This is something the Baha'is have to think about hard. Fortunately, the solution is historical rather than ethical. We can't prove there wasn't some sort of conspiracy, but Azal's appointment does seem genuine, we know that the Bab gave Azal specific instructions to 'preserve himself',<sup>[16]</sup> that he issued instructions to others to take care of Azal,<sup>[17]</sup> and that Baha' Allah was in the public eye from quite an early period.<sup>[18]</sup> What Abd al-Baha' was trying to do was to find a plausible explanation for what was to him an unpalatable fact: that the Bab had appointed as the guardian of his faith and writings a man considered by Baha'is to be a primary source of spiritual evil.

That's enough history for the moment. To be honest, the historical gaffes and distortions gave me less grief than some early sections in Schaefer's main contribution, and in parts of Gollmer's section on politics. This isn't easy to convey, but it matters, so please be patient while I try to develop this point.

My problem is this. With one important exception, which I shall come to later, the tone and content of much of the book seemed to me deeply conservative and self-righteous. What is worse is that Schaefer clearly seems to want his voice, with its illiberal overtones, to be taken for the voice of the Baha'i faith as a whole. To be honest, this doesn't surprise me, since a rather puritan conservatism was the atmosphere within the Baha'i movement when I was a member and had much to do with driving me and others out. What does surprise me is that, after so much worthwhile debate, promoted by organs like Dialogue magazine, the liberal voice of Baha'ism has not convinced men like Schaefer that they are dinosaurs who need to modify their views in some respects if they are not to cause the Baha'i faith to petrify in a mode that will become more and more out of touch with the reality lived by most thoughtful, caring people.

Let's take a look. After a lengthy section on Baha'i political ideas, to which I'll return in a moment, Schaefer really gets going on pp. 301 ff., where he discusses 'the concept of liberty'. At first he seems quite reasonable, arguing, for example, that the liberty of which Baha' Allah disapproved was not democratic liberty but anarchy, immorality, and so forth. From there, he works his way round to a popular Baha'i theme, namely that true liberty is obedience to God's law. This too, he stresses, does not contradict democratic liberties.

But this liberal mask starts to slip not much later. Ficicchia, he says (p. 318), argues against Baha' Allah's legislation 'purely on the basis of the modernist attitude held by the sceptical and irreligious person who lacks any concept or understanding of religious obligations and — horribile dictu — faithful obedience, who rejects any possibility of absolute authority, accepting no authority but his own self according to the principle: "I am the Law!"'

There's nothing like a stereotype to waken certain forms of bigotry, in this case the notion that non-believers do not understand religious matters, and that they are anarchists and libertines at heart.

But he goes further. It isn't just non-believers whom we can't trust, it's people in general:<sup>[19]</sup> 'people today value nothing more dearly than their sovereign liberty in decision-making, their individual right to shape their own lives, their freedom to decide for themselves what is and what is not permissible as defined by their sense of moral autonomy' (p. 320).

In the last century, thousands upon thousands of men and women gave their lives to establish just such a freedom, very rightly rejecting the 'absolute authority' of fascism and communism. Many of these were religious people of upstanding morals. Others, perhaps the majority, were agnostics or atheists, also of high moral standards. Many of Schaefer's own countrymen and women joined the widerstand, the internal opposition to Hitler, just as many Russians resisted Stalinism, denying that the authority of the state is absolute and that individuals have no rights.

Other men and women fought — as many round the world today still fight — for human rights, for the right of the individual to believe and speak and write and act within very broad limits. This sometimes results in speech or behaviour that you or I may find offensive. But I — and millions of others — would always prefer to be offended than to be straitjacketed by a Hitler or a Khomeini, a Pope or an 'infallible' religious body. If Schaefer sees (as I think he does) something ignoble in this, what a very blinkered man he must be.

One of the things that originally attracted me to the Baha'i faith was its modernity, its concern with contemporary issues, the belief that it had passed beyond traditional religions to a new dimension of belief and action. All I see now, when I look at it, is a religion led by deeply conservative men and women whose beliefs chime only too well with those of the conservative wing of all the old faiths. Baha'is have more in common with haredi than Reform Jews, with the present Pope than liberation theologians, with Southern Baptists and fundamentalist Muslims than Unitarians and reformist Shi'a.

Much of this neo-conservatism has its roots in just the same fears that prompted Pius IX to declare war on the liberalism of his day. It's a deep-seated fear of people, a distrust of anyone who dares to think for himself, to publish a book without having to ask anyone else's approval, to stand up in meetings and tell those in charge they are talking nonsense, to tell obscene jokes like Lenny Bruce, as a weapon against racism and sexism.

It's a fear of that young man with his shopping bags standing his ground in front of tanks on Tianenmen Square, of the Catholic women who stand up in church to demand the right to contraception, abortion, and women priests, of the Muslim women who jeered at the fundamentalists marching in support of the fatwa against Salman Rushdie, of the angry rabbis who dared take God to task for allowing the Holocaust to happen, of a writer daring to satirize a religion that has the temerity to condemn him and others to death. It's a fear of change, of questions, of the laughter that punctures the pride of the man on the platform, of satire; a fear of the power of sex, of the power of words, of the power of people who are willing to make their own decisions and their own mistakes, people who have eyes that can see through the Emperor's new clothes.

Schaefer is on the wrong side of history. We atheists and agnostics out here are not a gang of depraved, self-interested libertarian anarchist no-gooders. If you want depravity and self-interest, better look in almost any religious group around. Religious people have been responsible for an outrageous amount of suffering in this world, and they still have the gall to tell us: 'It was bad then, but that was a mistake, just trust us, we've got it right this time round.' Rationalists believe in the dignity of man, the value of reason, the worth of ordinary human wisdom, the power of disobedience to irrational authorities.

Was the Enlightenment a denial or affirmation of the worth of humanity? Was science hindered or helped by its separation from religion?<sup>[20]</sup> Ditto medicine. Which is the less violent culture, that of largely secular Europe, or that of the highly religious USA, with its craze for guns, its murders, drug-related crime, capital punishment, and Star Wars? Is secular England, where churches are demolished or turned into bingo halls, a worse place to live than my native Northern Ireland, which has churches on almost every street corner? Which developing countries have made the most progress economically and socially: the lightly religious nations of Asia, or the fervently religious countries of the Islamic world? Are practices like female genital mutilation, honour killings, forced marriages, and the like more common in religious (mainly, Islamic) countries or in secular states?

I could go on here for pages. In case anyone thinks this has just been a digression, may I point out that my reason for going into all this is simply to draw full attention to an extraordinary refusal on Schaefer's part to come face to face with arguments like these which contradict his self-assertive and, frankly, pompous pronouncements on the frivolity and danger of the non-religious world.

The fact is that Schaefer and pals are writing an extended polemic, not just against Ficicchia, but against a host of Baha'i bugbears, from free speech to balanced academic enquiry.

On pages 209 ff, Schaefer addresses the questions of pre-publication review, restrictions on free expression, and so on. I don't intend to pursue the topic here, since a lot could be said on the matter. But I will comment that the arguments employed by Schaefer reminded me vividly of a debate that is currently raging in several Asian countries, notably Singapore and Malaysia, over the role of the press vis-à-vis the government. Inevitably, the more authoritarian states take much the view that Schaefer does here, arguing that the state (for which read Schaefer's religious institutions) must be above all criticism.

In similar vein, Schaefer writes, refuting Ficicchia's claim that Baha'ism is anti-democratic, 'On no account is [the Baha'i order] "anti-democratic", since the democratic elements, along with the theocratic traits, are dominant' (p.246). The overall impression (and Schaefer is not alone in giving it) is that the proposed (and, indeed, the current) Baha'i system of government is dominantly democratic. I imagine many of my readers will concur in this understanding. I, however, beg to differ, as, I think, will most democrats.

The trouble is that you cannot, in reality, just mix monarchy/aristocracy, democracy, and theocracy (with absolute authority). The result is a denaturing of each of the elements to no useful purpose. We in Britain have a monarchy, but the monarch cannot override the will of the people: if she could, we would no longer have a democracy, and might as well dissolve parliament. Theocracy, as in Iran and Afghanistan, tends to demand precedence over democratic norms (such as the right of the people to enact laws according to their will). Democracy, where it flourishes, tends to make other systems redundant.

This is not to say that democracy does not have its problems. But those problems will not be solved by introducing incompatible notions such as absolutism or infallibility.

Throughout this section, Schaefer selects his targets so that he does not have to confront the real issues. The main objections are as follows: 1) the fact, referred to above, that believers can have their voting rights and their right to vote suspended should they infringe the Baha'i moral code (including, I would argue, improper questioning of the authorities); 2) the fact that heresy/disobedience to divinely-constituted authority leads to automatic exclusion from the community; 3) the fact that, however democratically elected, no Baha'i government can introduce major legislation in its own right or abrogate laws set by Baha' Allah or the UHJ (democratic parliaments make and rescind their own laws); 4) the fact that women cannot serve on the UHJ; 5) the fact that a Baha'i state would be a one-party state (try setting up in opposition to the official 'divinely-appointed' line even now); 6) the fact that there can never be open debate about certain basic issues, such as gay rights, capital punishment, or any number of matters from contraception to the running of the police, that have yet to be decided by the Universal House of Justice.

I know that Baha'is don't actually want a democracy, but that leaves the rest of us justifiably concerned. It's not enough to try to reassure us by saying democracy is dominant alongside theocracy. Democracy is not divisible, and is only mocked when autocratic states use it as a mask to conceal their true nature.

Finally, what was the exception referred to above? On pages 256-7 and page 742, Schaefer and Gollmer mention something that they do not, surprisingly, make much more of. The second reference is to two texts, one by 'Abd al-Baha', the other by Shoghi Effendi, both writing about the need to accord human rights to covenant breakers.

To be honest, this flabbergasted me. I had never seen the passages in question before, and they caught me unawares. Anything, whether scriptural or otherwise, I had ever read previously on covenant-breakers, had been extremely negative: reading their words is like eating vomit (from a 'Hand of the Cause'), they are utterly despicable, they are to be shunned absolutely, even by their families, and so on. All of those vitriolic passages in God Passes By about Azal and Mirza Muhammad 'Ali, and Ruth White, and Ahmad Sohrab, and every 'enemy of the Faith' from Hajj Mirza Aqasi on. So to learn that even Covenant-Breakers have rights turns a lot of my assumptions upside down.

The biggest puzzle, of course, is why there aren't more passages displaying this degree of humanity, and why the Baha'is haven't made greater efforts to present this side of their faith, instead of the heavy-handed conservatism to be found in the work of so many eminent exponents.

There are also, of course, obvious contradictions between these texts and others. 'Abd al-Baha' instructs some believers not to obstruct a covenant-breaker in seeking employment as a teacher, since even such a person has to earn a living. That's terrific, and much more sensitive than I'm used to in Baha'i texts; but if we move forward a bit in time, to a large village or small town where most of the inhabitants are Baha'is, what happens at the school? I can't imagine the Baha'i authorities or the other teachers or the parents letting a covenant-breaker loose on their children just because 'Abd al-Baha' says he should have job. Can you?

I also have trouble with the Shoghi Effendi passage. Not with the statement itself, which is admirable, but with how it squares with other things. If covenant-breakers are not to be deprived of their civil rights in a free society, then how come the mere act of drinking alcohol, or having sex outside marriage, or even, for a man to let his hair grow below the earlobes, will lead to the loss of voting rights, the most basic civil rights of all? How humanitarian is it to demand that a man's wife and children should shun him merely because he has changed his beliefs?

All of this needs to be addressed, and I was disappointed that neither Schaefer nor Gollmer chose to do so.

I'm left with a list of items that I'd love to take up, but I realize this has also become one of the longest book reviews on record. Given time, I could probably get to 900 or even 1000 pages, but I doubt very much if anyone would want to publish the resulting book in German.

Why have I been so hard on Dr. Schaefer and his chums? Basically, it's because Schaefer himself goes to some trouble to point out how much Ficicchia's book damaged understanding of the Baha'i faith within German-speaking academic and ecclesiastical circles, and even civil authorities (pp. 1-12). I don't disagree with that, but when I then find that the volume seeking to correct Ficicchia's misrepresentations is itself replete with factual errors, academic sloppiness, and apologetics dressed as scholarship — in other words, many of the things Ficicchia stands accused of — I find myself obliged to try to set the balance as straight as a simple man can.

The fact is that Making the Crooked Straight will sell more copies to Baha'is than to the great unwashed beyond their gates. Most people aren't sufficiently interested in Baha'ism as yet that they will sit down and read over 800 pages of apologetics. So, I suppose the book is aimed more at believers than anyone else. If that's so, it means that Schaefer et al have produced a major contribution to a process that has been going on since Shoghi Effendi's days, but particularly over the past fifteen years or so. At some point in that period, while expansion remained a priority, the Baha'i authorities seem to have woken up to the fact that most believers had a limited grasp on the basics of their faith. Making the Crooked Straight may not be the most systematic presentation of where Baha'is stand on most crucial issues, but it is certainly the largest, and has the appearance of being the most authoritative.

That's why I've spent so long niggling away at the text, and why I could go on longer if I thought anybody was still reading. Major statements require greater care than has been devoted to this volume. Not only that, but it disturbs me to find that fundamentalist Baha'is have seized the high ground in this way. Why shouldn't some liberal Baha'is tell it like it is for once? If my criticisms nudge things further in those two directions — accuracy and liberality of mind and heart — they will have been worthwhile. Thank you for reading this far.

Denis MacEoin

Dursley

Newcastle

June 2001

---

[1] I don't wish to appear facetious about the Bab's writing. There are numerous lengthy passages which consist of variants (few of them genuine) on Arabic verbal roots. Even if we take these as a post-modern take on the Arabisms of the Iranian ulama, they are still unreadable, and utterly untranslatable.

[2] I remain unimpressed by Schaefer's curious claim that Ficicchia's book was really written by someone else: 'I doubt if the author, Francesco Ficicchia, who has certainly contributed a lot of material, was able to write the book himself in the style of a methodical, scholarly work, using the terminology of theology and religious studies and Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, Greek and Latin terms — languages of which the author, himself a social worker, has no knowledge. It is very probable then that the book was written by an expert of religious studies and that Ficicchia contributed some material and his name' (Baha'i Studies Review, 2:1 (1992)).

[3] The first sentence of chapter one, part one reads: 'The goal of all academic research is to find truth....', with the rest of the chapter proceeding along the same lines.

[4] That making academic work conform with Baha'i mass opinion is an obligation on Baha'i scholars is made clear by Moojan Momen: 'Secondly, you have to satisfy the Bahá'í community that your scholarship is a true representation of the Faith, one that most Bahá'ís would agree is a presentation of the Faith that is consistent with the texts and being interpreted in ways to which most Bahá'ís would not object' (Baha'i Studies Review, 3:2 [1994]).

[5] This episode is cursorily dealt with in a reference on p. 101, and a footnote on p. 703.

[6] Baha'is seem to have a problem with this. Many years ago, I met with the editor of the Penguin Handbook of Living Religions and two members of the British NSA, who were there to persuade him to drop my commissioned article on the Baha'is and replace it with one they would have written by a Baha'i author. Like any sensible academic, I admitted during the meeting that I had my biases and assumptions. The Baha'is seized on this, arguing that this alone disqualified me from writing the piece. Not once did they accept the possibility that their Baha'i author might be biased in his own way. The editor, John Hinnells, admitted to me later that he had been quite sympathetic to the Baha'is until he actually sat through that meeting.

[7] I'm referring specifically to the many volumes of scripture edited by him, all of them sloppy, filled with mistakes and misattributions.

[8] Religion, 12 (1982): 93-129. See also 'Bahá'í Fundamentalism and the Academic Study of the Bábí Movement', Religion 16 (1986): 57-84, and 'Afnan, Hatcher, and an Old Bone', Religion 16 (1986): 193-195. It's interesting that none of these articles, which represented one of the first debates between the old-style Baha'i scholarship and the new, academic approach, is referred to in the present work.

[9] Gollmer does it too. On p. 464, he quotes approvingly a statement by the World Council of Churches: 'A second danger is that of interpreting a living faith not in its own terms but in terms of another faith or ideology. This is illegitimate on the principles of both scholarship and dialogue'.

[10] W. Collins, Bibliography of English-language Works on the Babi and Baha'i Faiths, p. 281

[11] In footnote 20, p. 498, she complains that 'Even within Ficicchia's own transcription system, the transcription Ta'rih (sic) is incorrect, since Tárikh is written with alif and not with hamza. Since when? Ta'rikh is an Arabic word and is written with hamza in that language, whatever the Persian pronunciation might be. Of course, it would be pointless to object if someone left the hamza out, but it seems most irregular to correct someone for putting it in. And, by the way, it is not Ficicchia's 'own transcription system', but a standard one used widely by Arabists and Persianists in Germany and elsewhere.

[12] Gollmer too shows a reluctance to engage with current scholarship, and even appears to be unaware of what is happening in the wider world. On p. 778, for example, he states magisterially: 'no systematic presentation of the Baha'i Faith has yet been published that satisfies academic criteria'. Says who? Peter Smith's excellent volume for Cambridge University Press springs immediately to mind. And what about the numerous encyclopaedia articles by Juan Cole, Smith, Moojan Momen, Todd Lawson, and myself?

[13] Gollmer reiterates this position on pp. 558 and 559.

[14]

[15] He gets into greater trouble on the next page, when he asserts that there are plenty of scriptural texts in which the phrase masdar-i amr refers to God. I have gone over most of these texts with Steve Lambden, and I don't think there was one where the phrase might not as easily have referred to the Manifestation. For examples, see my 'Divisions and Authority Claims', pp. 118-19. I am dismayed that Gollmer did not even attempt to engage with these references.

[16] See MacEoin, 'Divisions and Authority Claims', p. 109.

[17] Ibid

[18] See ibid', p. 117.

[19] There's more of this on the next page, p. 321: 'most people at present', 'modern people'. On the next page, p. 322, he expresses his impatience with 'a critical and sceptical public'.

[20] On this, see an excellent new study by Stephen Jay Gould, Rock of Ages.

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

See also David Langness on Hoda Mahmoudi.

Paul Dodenhoff on Mahmoudi

See Mahmoudi's coercive email to FG

Nima Hazini on Hoda Mahmoudi's program on the Iranian TV network

Search talk.religion.bahai for Mahmoudi:
[https://groups.google.com/groups?
q=Mahmoudi&hl=en&group=talk.religion.bahai&filter=0](https://groups.google.com/groups?q=Mahmoudi&hl=en&group=talk.religion.bahai&filter=0)

Re: Letter to Mahmoudi: The Old Lie

---

----- Original Message -----

From: BIGS - Bahai in *Perfectly* Good Standing
Newsgroups: alt.religion.bahai,talk.religion.bahai,talk.religion.misc
Sent: Friday, December 07, 2001 8:12 AM
Subject: Re: bahai - "Please remove my name and address from your mailing list."

Well, Dermod,

Much heat, little light....

Notice first Dave Fiorito's distortions didn't work so enter Maneck....
To whose claims I ask, if a letter or message had been sent to Hoda Mahmoudi, auxiliary board member, why and how would Maneck know anything about it? The Mahmoudi message was sent to me the very morning of the day that the first voting period for talk.religion.bahai ended and the RESULTS was posted, when over 600 fundamentalists followed the advice of fanatic Mark Towfiq and others to oppose free speech and open discussion.
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Towfiq.htm>
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/1stRESULT.htm>

If a letter was sent to Mahoudi, it addressed only that context.
It's a well known fact that Maneck is Gharidian's sycophant.

If she has been given a letter intended for the context of Hoda Mahmoudi's interfering in the free and unfettered voting for talk.religion.bahai, thereby violating the very Words of Abdul-Baha extolling freedom of speech and conscience and which led me to appeal to the uhj for an explanation of Mahmoudi's deceitful interference, let her post a copy of it on talk.religion.bahai, though it is tantamount to backbiting and further slander, in my opinion, to distort a communication in one context to fit the evil designs of a corrupted fundamentalist administration in another. See Mahmoudi's deceitfully sugarcoated, intimidating letter at the bottom of the link below. Note that Mahmoudi never asked to meet with me but to telephone her. The other claims along these lines are false. Further note that the administration is definitely interfering in free speech and conscience here on talk.religion.bahai and other online venues through their various sycophants in contradistinction to Abdul-Baha's elevating vision. To the Universal House of Justice - March 31, 1997 <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/To-UHJ1.htm> To the Universal House of Justice - July 24, 1998 <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/UHJ72498.htm> <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/uhj12-10-99.htm>

I reiterate that I am under no obligation to believe the claims of vulgar liars and slanderous pseudo-academicians distorting past events and communications to fit a now different agenda.

I notified the nsa of my declaration of belief in Baha'u'llah in 1976. They acknowledged my declaration by sending me back the ID card available for viewing on my homepage and by accepting monetary contributions from me for years, not to mention many personal sacrifices. Further details of my participation in the bahai faith, in sundry ways, may be found in my uhj letters also accessible from my homepage. If the nsa has unilaterally changed my status as a member of the bahai faith, the obligation resides with them to notify me to that effect, which they have never done....

I urge the non-bahai looking in on this exchange to investigate and reflect carefully on the issues involved and on what they reveal about the bahai faith in practice versus theory.... Consider too that the real target of the fundamentalist attack on me may actually be the bahai community at large, to strike fear and obedience in their hearts in order to control them and to insure their submission, lest they too become the object of such a ferocious, incessant onslaught of slander and abuse....

Other relevant messages and details at <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/nsa1996.htm>
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/images/Bahai-IDgif.gif>

For those who think this smear campaign is something new, Google archives my being hounding by the fundamentalists along these lines for years:
<https://groups.google.com/groups?q=Mahmoudi&hl=en&group=talk.religion.bahai&filter=0>

I place my trust in Baha'u'llah.

**--

FG

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://members.fortunecity.com/bahaicensorship>

"Dermod Ryder" <Grim_Reaper_Mk2@btinternet.com> wrote in message news:9uq94b$a6afs$2@ID-84503.news.dfncis.de...

> "Dave Fiorito" <bighappymonkey@yahoo.com> wrote in message

**>

news:f0853486.0112060757.14da7eef@posting.google.com...

> Dave,

**> >

> > > Fred claims to STILL be on the rolls. He states that National has > > > never told him that he has been removed. It seems to have told > > > everybody else but him.

**> > >

> > > Frankly in such circumstances I don't think it is up to Fred to > write > > > to them - enough of them read the posts here. If it is a genuine > > > misunderstanding then National should contact him - if he has been > > > disenrolled, National should write and tell him this, not tell > Dave F

> > > but tell
> > > Fred G.
> >
> > Dermot - come on. Stop letting your anti-AO bias blind you like > this.
>
> I have no bias against the AO - I have formed an opinion as to its > competence or lack thereof based on research and experience!
>
> > If National read Fred's request as a request to be disenrolled and > > they honestly feel that they have done exactly what he wanted them
> to > > do, then why the hell should they contact him? Dude, think for a > > minute. You jump all over the AO for doing what Fred asked them to > > do. Why should they contact him?
>
> You really need to be told this!
>
> You have people spouting about "protection" of the good name and > reputation of the BF and here is a situation which periodically is > rehashed all over the newsgroups and does nothing for that good name > and reputation. And why is it rehashed? Because of the ambivalence > about Fred's status! And what is the way to remove that?
National
> writes to Fred and tells him he has been disenrolled in light of his > refusal to meet with an ABM to consult on the matters which have > perturbed him, his E-mail messages have not been consistent with his > duties to protect and uphold the BF and, in any case, he asked for his > membership to be cancelled.
>
> Net result - end of ambivalence, end of any doubt as to Fred's status > and no more opportunity for me (or others) to lambast the continuing > idiocy. Fred is no fool - he knows damn well that National wants rid > of him and has effectively expelled him! But until National gets the > guts together to get the act right - Fred will continue to exploit the > situation for his own purposes and people like me, who actually know > how to kill this controversy, will continue to have fun!

>
> >
> > HE ASKED FOR IT!
>
> So damn well give it to him instead of farting about like a beached > porpoise! Would you like me to draft a suitable letter for National > to send to Fred to put a stop to his antics?
>
> > > All I want is PROOF.
> > >
> > > I agree with you - I think that if National has disenrolled Fred
> it > > > ought to have the decency to write and tell him that. I also > think it > > > was very wrong of it to communicate, in the first instance, a > > > disenrollment to other than the person disenrolled, for quite > frankly,
> >
> > WHAT? I did what any Baha'i has the right to do - I wrote to > National
> > to find out if Fred's claim was legit. If I had not asked, they > would > > never have said anything.
>
> I'm not criticising you for writing - I'm criticising National for > telling you before it actually told Fred that it had acted in > accordance with his wishes or had simply removed him!
>
>
> > > I'd take Fred's word on it that he has received no communication > from > > > National telling him he has officially been disenrolled. If he > has > > > why does he have to learn this from Dave F. and not from the folk > who > > > actually removed his name from the rolls - whether he requested it

> or > > > not? If National feels Fred disenrolled himself why has it not > > > confirmed to him the fact that it has carried out his > instructions?
> >
> > Oh puh-leez. Why should they confirm anything that someone > requests.
> > When a magazine subscription runs out you get a renewal notice. If > > you do not answer it you stop getting the magazine.
>
> Because when you're dealing with somebody like Fred you have to use > your intelligence to anticipate what his reaction will be and take > measures to counteract that.
>
> > Tell you what - let's say that the disenrollment was a > > misunderstanding and Fred wanted to be a Baha'i but stop the > American
> > Baha'i. If the AO misread his request and his lack of clarification > > to their query as a withdrawal request and Fred found out later that > > he was disenrolled by mistake - why doesn't he call them to > straighten > > it out?
>
> Why should he? National has made a stick for him to beat it! Like I > said - Fred is no fool!
>
> >
> > I would call in a heartbeat. If it is that important to him why > > doesn't he just go complain to the AO that they did not follow his > > instructions and clarify to them that he does indeed want to be a > > Baha'i?
> >
> > I will tell you why. He would rather be an anti-AO martyr, and give > > folks like you an excuse to beat up on the AO.
>
> You got it .... eventually! Mind you, National still hasn't grasped > it! But then it rarely does! And you're the folk who elect it and > I'm only one of those who laugh at it!

>
> > Sorry but this problem is Fred's to solve. Until he does he will > > remain outside of the Baha'i Faith looking in.
>
> A most splendid place to be!
>
> As ever,
>
> Dermod.
>
>
>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Nima Hazini on Homa Mahmoudi's program on Iranian TV network

See other messages regarding Hoda Mahmoudi

Btw, it is not Hoda Mahmudi who hosts the NITV program but her elder sister HOMA Mahmudi. This was confirmed by NITV itself. I was mistaken as to which of the Mahmudi's it was. But, all the same, the points stand as before and makes not the slightest difference. Nima Hazini

---

NITV further details

---

Fri, 30 Aug 2002

I would like to draw the attention of my fellow compatriots as well as average rank-and-file Baha'is to an issue which I believe beautifully underscores the blatant public hypocrisy and power mongering of Baha'i officials and those who are connected to them, and why especially non-aligned Iranians should be ever heedful of wools being pulled over their eyes by the PR machine of the Baha'i administration. To begin with, it is a well known (or, rather, well claimed) principle of the Baha'i faith that sectarian political involvement of any sort is to be shunned and is therefore categorically prohibited to Baha'is. While this principle has not always been meticulously adhered to either by officials or those connected to them (i.e. Sabet, Yazdani, Ayadi, et al), nevertheless it is an issue which has been used repeatedly to either sanction or strong-arm less well connected (and average) Baha'is by the Baha'i leadership into submission and thus compliance with its dictates.

Recently Ms Hoda Mahmudi, who formerly served in an official administrative capacity as an Auxiliary Board Member for Protection (and the person sent on the failed mission to interrogate Frederick Glaysher for his views and then briefly Terry Culhane), has been a regular commentator on and contributor to the satellite opposition Iranian Television broadcasting station NITV. The station itself, its broadcasts or its specific slant or political views are not an issue for me, as I avidly watch it myself as well as include myself firmly within the camp of opposition to the illegitimate fascist totalitarian Islamist regime in Tehran which I hope will be toppled in short order. However, I am not a Baha'i, but Hoda Mahmudi is! The specific issue in question relates to --and one which in due time I will disclose the full details relating thereunto to SCI, TRB and other Iranian groups and boards on the internet -- the double standards regularly employed by Baha'i officials to dupe a non-Baha'i public audience, on the one hand; and the authoritarian bullying of average individual Baha'is internally who sincerely engage in association and fellowship with other Iranians who are non-aligned, locally and on a smaller scale, in no different terms than what Ms Mahmudi is doing herself in LA, on the other. Baha'i officials regularly admonish rank-and-file Baha'is to keep far and away from their compatriots, but then actively seek celebrity status in the name of the Baha'i faith to advance some dubious agenda of their own with the larger Iranian community.

That said, it has been claimed for two decades now by Baha'i officials that any overt acts of alignment or fellowship with various non-Baha'i groups with stated political platforms will have adverse repercussions for the Baha'is of Iran. To any unbiased observer, Hoda Mahmudi's activities in any capacity on the NITV network do just that -- it also gives the lie away and a useful weapon to the IR itself to use against the Baha'is inside Iran --and as such it is highly irresponsible of the Baha'i leadership at this time to be foisting Ms Mahmudi on the INTV network and upon the larger Iranian community, given the potential fallout such activities will most definitely have for their co-religionists back home. Rank-and-file Baha'is have been sanctioned and thus humiliated by the Baha'i leadership for far less than what Ms Mahmudi is being led to do right now representing the Baha'i leadership as she is on NITV.

Nima Hazini

---

This is my last group email. But I would also like to draw your attention to the following: NITV's charter explicitly calls for the overthrow of the Islamic regime in Iran and the securing of freedom, independence and equality of all Iranians. This is a sentiment shared by all of us Iranians, young, old, expatriate and non-expatriate alike, but a sentiment that is overtly political as far as the Baha'is are concerned and one which in the short term, at least, directly imperils the lives of rank-and-file Baha'is inside Iran when their representatives are openly taking a political stance on a political network such as this. The question is why NITV, when there are a host of local Iranian broadcasting stations in LA and elsewhere with cultural programs which can just as easily cater for and thus be utilized for discussions of the Baha'i religion? The answer is obvious and need not even be stated. However, I find it even more hypocritical of the Baha'i leadership when Baha'is without connections to the Baha'i officioocracy are threatened with administrative sanctions and then their family lives disrupted for merely reading poetry in Iranian but non-political oriented local television broadcasts.

The NITV station itself is funded ostensibly by one Zia Atabai a former entertainer/singer-songwriter from the Pahlavi era. Zia's father was a Baha'i and his mother a Muslim. Like myself he has no religious affiliations to speak of, but is sympathetic to the plight of the Baha'is in Iran -- as we all are.

However, you might wish to note that Zia is related to Farah Diba (the former Empress) and openly supports Reza Pahlavi as the future monarch of Iran. He has conducted many interviews with Farah and Reza Pahlavi on NITV since its very inception. The station is marred by the lack of financial resources and many volunteers assist Zia in keeping it going.

It broadcasts through the Telstar satellite network and is broadcast into Iran itself 24/7 and many of those who can pick up through their bootleg satellitte dishes inside Iran call in to the show regularly. Most Iranian companies and businesses do not advertise on NITV because they feel it might jeopardise their trade relations with the Islamic Republic. So Zia draws on private donations and subscriptions to keep the show going (a desperate, last minute fund raising effort earlier this year raised close to a million US dollars). Therefore, if you pay enough, you can have your own show on NITV on virtually any subject of your choosing. I suspect this is what has happened and that Mahmudi's program would therefore be bankrolled by the Baha'i administration. If this is the case, the Baha'i leadership and the LA monarchists both are playing with fire, and the Baha'i leadership is inserting itself into the political process of Iran in a manner very much reminiscent of the days of old when Habib Sabet, Dr. Ayadi and Hojabr Yazdani where in the 'in' with the previous regime. These relations of high ranking Baha'is, more than any other factor, where what was ultimately responsible for the wholesale persecution of the many innocent, average rank-and-file Baha'is who stayed behind under the Khomeinists. It would seem therefore, and arguably so, that the Baha'i leadership really doesn't care a fig for the safety of its own people inside Iran and has used them as a pawn for its own nefarious agendas for decades now -- and this now is solid proof! How incredibly sad that the Iranian Baha'is should be betrayed by their own like this and deemed expendable no less by their own leadership!

Nima Hazini

---

Dear Roya Parsay:

Dorud bar shomaa! If my data is incorrect, kindly provide the correct data and I would be more than happy to amend the information accordingly and publically retract if I have made a gross misstatement.

As to your claim that the Baha'is are participating in your network for pure humanitarian purposes, that is an empty and bogus claim all around, especially where the Baha'is are concerned. I am an ex-Baha'i and I know the gratuitous opportunism of the Baha'i officioocracy all too well. Baha'i officials have recently threatened with sanctions and split up the families of certain Baha'is for participating in Persian cultural programs locally, accusing them of partisan political involvement, merely for reading the poetry of Rumi and Hafiz! If the participation of the Baha'is is humanitarian in this case, as you say, then why isn't this humanitarianism also extended to those who are unconnected to the Baha'i leadership as Ms Mahmudi is? I fail to see the consistency here. Unfortunately I believe the Baha'i leadership as represented on your network by Ms Mahmudi have also managed to pull the wool over the eyes of yourself as well as Mr Atabay as to their underlying motivations. Furthermore, there is absolutely nothing spotlessly 'humanitarian' in motivation or origin about Baha'is participating on an overtly pro-monarchist network such as NITV.

That said, you might wish to appraise yourself of what is truly happening inside the Baha'i community (which on a smaller scale mirrors the sort of abuses descriptive of the Khomeinists in Iran) by perusing the following sites as well as the articles by University of Michigan Professor Juan R.I Cole (History):

The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/>

Juna R.I Cole "The Baha'i Faith in America as Panopticon, 1963-1997" Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, Vol. 37, No. 2 (June 1998): 234-248
<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/1999/jssr/bhjssr.htm>

Juan R.I Cole "Fundamentalism in the Contemporary U.S. Baha'i Community." Religious Studies Review, Vol. 43, no. 3 (March, 2002):195-217
<https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2002/fundbhfn.htm>

eraadatmand, Nima Hazini

---

Of course I am most delighted that this revelation about Baha'i AO officiocratic involvement with the pro-monarchist NITV has now come out into the full light of day. This places the Baha'i AO's cards, at least, firmly on the table on where they actually stand regarding the future of my homeland. So now let me ask them the following:

1) Who negotiated with NITV to have this program? Such programs do not appear out of thin air. There are always legal/contractual processes involved in the finalization of such things long before they are aired.

2) Who decided that the monarchists should be given preferential treatment over other opposition groups?

3) On what grounds did Zia Atabai grant them permission to air a program on the Baha'i faith on their station, and what are the trade offs?

4) Given this, is it not therefore plausible to speculate (as it has been by Islamists and as once dismissed by myself and others), that since the Radio Voice of Israel has openly come out in support of Reza Pahlavi, that there are now ties between the Israeli government, Iranian Jews in LA with stated pro-Israeli views, the Jewish producers of NITV and the AO mob obviously in charge of promoting this program?

Arguably the people who made this decision are the old time moneyed Nouveau Riche Baha'is of the Pahlavi era who enjoyed unlimited privileges under that regime (namely Shapour Rassekh, Iraj Ayman, Farhang Halaaku'i, and others). At this time from the numerous letters of feedback I and others have recieved privately over this there are clear signs of discomfort and disenchantment amongst many Iranian Baha'is of an even conservative bent over this program and its choice of forum. This shows that the AO is not only out on left field, as usual, but also completely out of touch with many among its own core political constituents.

Clearly, at this point, it seems the dominant clique inside the Baha'i religion who are pulling the strings are longing for a repeat performance of the good old days under Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlavi: a performance the actions and repercussions of which ultimately cost the Iranian Baha'i community quite heavily and dearly under the Khomeinists and was the basis upon which many innocent, average Baha'is suffered persecution by that regime. At this time, there doesn't seem to be any guarantees that should Reza Pahlavi be installed as monarch (constitutional or otherwise) the Baha'i AO would not support another Hojabr Yazdani, Dr Ayadi or Habib Sabet from once again cooperating self-servingly with the Pahlavi mob. Their current behavior and particularly their relationship with NITV currently demonstrates otherwise. So I frankly ask the Baha'i leadership the following:

- 1) Do you believe in the democratic form of government?
- 2) Do you believe in the separation of religion and state?
- 3) Do you believe in self-determination and independence for Iran?
- 4) What lessons have you learnt from the last Revolution?
- 5) What do you truly think of the activities of Habib Sabet, Hojabr Yazdani and Dr Ayadi and co under the last Pahlavi regime before the Revolution?
- 6) What is your attitude to an individual Baha'i having a program on, let us say for the sake of argument, a network run by the Iranian Communist Party, the National Front or even the MKO?

I look forward to your official response regarding all (not some, but ALL) of these questions.

Regards,
Nima Hazini

---

Mon, 2 Sep 2002

Another aspect of this sorry saga relates to the pre-publication review process. The Baha'i leadership maintains strict censorship on what is acceptable for publication by Baha'is and have managed to silence prominent liberal Baha'i scholars and ruin the careers of many Baha'i intellectuals who have dared to research the history and origins of their Faith -- all in the name of maintaining the "good impression of the Faith in the eyes of the public".

From the vast array of Iranian Bahai writers and intellectuals, only a handful, like Dr. Maneck for example, are given the "privilege" of publishing their works and speak at various Baha'i studies conferences around the globe. Only a couple of Iranian Baha'is are allowed to publish journals and monthly periodicals. For far too long, the scene of Baha'i studies in Persian has been dominated by senior citizen Pahlavi era hacks such as Muhammad- Hosseini, Rassekh and Ayman. The tight censorship is such that even Shapour Rassekh writes his articles in his Journal 'Payam-e Baha'i' under the pseudonym of 'Pazhoohesh-Gar' or 'Pazhoohandeh'.

In the days when prominent (but not well connected) Baha'i liberal intellectuals are intimidated and sanctioned by the AO for voicing their conscience; in the days when a harmless newsletter in LA is placed under official sanctions because it "could reflect negatively on the plight of the Baha'is in Iran"; in the days when the official history of the Faith (Nabil's account) is not fully made available because "it might reflect negatively on the faith;" in the days when the editors of an independent Baha'i magazine, "Dialogue," are forced out of business and tossed out off the rolls for "misrepresenting the faith" and "negative campaigning", in the days where the Review process is enforced on practically all printed forms of communications by the AO; in the days when Raassekh's 'Payam-e Baha'i' refuses to print poems and articles sent by Iranian Baha'is from around the globe on the grounds that "they may be preceived to the contrary by the enemies of the faith", how can Mahmoudi's program be portrayed as anything but an instrument in the hands of the AO?

In order to set the record straight, I ask the UHJ specifically to:

- a) Renounce any links with the program, presenters and policies of NITV
- b) Distance itself from the contents of Ms Mahmoudi's program
- c) Come forward and explain why they have allowed such a program to be aired on NITV

Failure to do so effectively means that the whole enterprise has been supported and guided by the Baha'i World Centre from the begining and they must accept the full responsibility of the consequences of this decision on the Baha'is of Iran.

In the interest of fairness, I ask the UHJ to make available the results of their "review" on the contents of Ms Mahmoudi's program. Failure to do so, would once again highlight the fact that within the Iranian Baha'i community, as long maintained by myself and others, "some are more equal than others".

Nima Hazini

Search talk.religion.bahai for further discussion of Mahmoudi:

<https://groups.google.com/groups?q=Mahmoudi&hl=en&group=talk.religion.bahai&filter=0>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

The "Majnun" post represents quite probably the first concerted attempt by Bahai officials to suppress freedom of conscience on the Internet.

Majnun post John Walbridge 2/7/1996

Re: Majnun post Juan Cole 2/11/99

Re: Majnun post Steve Marshall 2/12/99 (Includes Stephen Birkland's message)

Re: Majnun post Steve Marshall 2/14/99

Re: Majnun post Juan Cole 2/17/99

Re: Majnun post Melissa McKafes 2/17/99

Majnun \(Re: Letter of resignation\) Berekiah 8/4/99

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Milissa Boyer Kafes <mbkafes@bestweb.net>
Subject: Re: Majnun post
Date: Wednesday, February 17, 1999 8:29 PM

Hi Donald--

As someone who was on Talisman at the time, I certainly remember the post, too. It, however, had a more positive effect on me. People were pretty pissed and hurt at the time, and I guess that shows. What I appreciated was the poster's desire to calm things down and try to resolve things in a more Baha'i way.

Its very unfortunate, and ironic, that this post is now used as evidence for something the poster was trying hard to prevent from happening. This post was a *good* example of a group of Baha'is consulting together and trying to right themselves. Its also very unfortunate, and ironic, that almost everyone involved in that list or with that particular post is no longer Baha'i. Score another one for the AO I guess.

So, I don't think it would be productive to discuss the post. It will only upset people who are having difficulties with the AO and it will give those who are glad the Majnun people are now gone another chance to be smug.
Thanks

Peace
Milissa Boyer Kafes
mbkafes@bestweb.net

-----== Posted via Deja News, The Discussion Network =====
<https://www.dejanews.com/> Search, Read, Discuss, or Start Your Own

Majnun

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Steve Marshall <forumbahai@es.co.nz>
Subject: Re: Majnun post
Date: Friday, February 12, 1999 3:32 AM

[Juan]

>>Moreover, it was clear that Birkland was going to >>try to use the 'covenant' as a pretext to close talisman@indiana.edu down, >>and he had already made one feint in that direction.

[Susan]

>Because he expressed alarm at the presence of a Covenant-breaker? Come, on. It >was a new forum and no one was yet aware that you can't exclude CBs from this >kind of thing.

[Me]

Yes, he expressed alarm, but not at the presence of a "covenant breaker":

At 12:30 PM 22/1/96 -0500, Steve Birkland wrote to Talisman:

>I have become aware of the presence on Talisman of one of the National >Directors of a group of Covenant-breakers. Apparently he has not posted >anything; however, he has told someone known to me that he is archiving all >the Talisman messages. I am providing the list owner with his name.
> Although he has never been a member of our Baha'i community and therefore >has not been declared a Covenant-breaker, he is part of a body bent on >undermining the unity of the Baha'i Faith. This creates a serious concern >for Baha'i participants on the list in the light of the explicit Baha'i >Teachings on the Covenant.
>
>Stephen Birkland

I responded direct to Stephen Birkland, and sent repeated follow-ups but didn't get a response from him for nine months. In the meantime, Talisman One closed down, and Talisman Two started up.

I'll leave it to the readers to decide what Steve Birkland was trying to say in his message to Talisman.

ka kite,
Steve

-----
Alison & Steve Marshall, Aotearoa | "Fanaticism consists in redoubling
forumbahai@es.co.nz (New Zealand) | your efforts when you have forgotten
Try: <https://www.rightwords.co.nz/> | your aim." - George Santayana

Majnun

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Steve Marshall <forumbahai@es.co.nz>
Subject: Re: Majnun post
Date: Sunday, February 14, 1999 2:07 PM

>No. It was, however, completely appropriate for someone to appraise the >members of the list of the facts of the situation, and that is all that >Counselor Birkland did.

Steve Birkland's statement - "this creates a serious concern for Baha'i participants on the list in the light of the explicit Baha'i Teachings on the Covenant" went beyond the facts and gave a warning, although that warning is so vague and contextless as to be meaningless. Steve admitted that the person he appraised Baha'is of is not a "covenant breaker", so I'm at a loss to know what I should have been seriously concerned about.

If Steve was so concerned about Baha'is reading messages from the person, he could have given out the person's name to the list so that people could choose whether to filter out messages from him. I asked Steve for the person's name, and he took 9 months to provide it.

If Steve was simply concerned about Baha'is having their messages read and archived by the person, then where does that lead to, and why isn't Steve repeating his message here, since this stuff is being read and archived by all and sundry.

-----
Alison & Steve Marshall, Aotearoa | "Fanaticism consists in redoubling
forumbahai@es.co.nz (New Zealand) | your efforts when you have forgotten
Try: <https://www.rightwords.co.nz/> | your aim." - George Santayana

Majnun

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: <berekiah1@my-deja.com>
Subject: Majnun (Re: Letter of resignation)
Date: Wednesday, August 04, 1999 11:54 PM

Just for the record I might also add that there was never an attempt to create an organization by anyone on Majnun, and there definitely was no conspiracy (this is a figmet of the paranoid minds within the Baha'i administration which demonstrates the Nixonian manner in which these people think). In the vetting process one person insinuated its consideration - which prompted John Walbridge to respond to the group - but that person was certainly not me and it was not an option anyone took very seriously, anyway. Yes, indeed, I was a hothead but a hothead who called for going public about the apparent misdeeds of certain individuals within the US administration rather than circulating the conversation among a small group of people.

Fred/Patrick feel free to post this and my preceding post on this thread on your website on the truth about Majnun.

Berekiah

Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
Share what you know. Learn what you don't.

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Other posts relating to this one may be found at Majnun

---

To: Talisman@indiana.edu

*****

Subject: Majnun: Reality checks

Date: Wed, 7 Feb 1996 22:11:29 -0500 (EST)

Gentlemen and lady:

I really must--uncharacteristically--agree with my good wife.

1. *Any* sort of an organization is an absolute nonstarter at this point. That is the one thing that will not in any way be tolerated. There is a clear precedent in the Guardian's handling of the New History Society. It will just get us all thrown out on our ears, force the decent people to back the scoundrels, and in all likely push the Faith back into the intellectual ghetto, much like happened after the expulsion of Sohrab.

Let's forget it and erase the messages suggesting it.

2. Ditto *Modest Proposal II*. It didn't work last time and it won't work this time. It will just polarize the situation.

3. Ditto direct attacks on individuals. Leave them to dig their own graves; they have, after all, staff to help them. Attacks on members of the NSA by organized or perceived-to-be-organized agitators, particularly members of the notorious ex-West LA crowd, will force the House to rally to the defence of the NSA.

4. Let us remember that we have won three rounds recently: Talisman was not strangled in its cradle; the NSA seems to have backed down on attacking ****--according to rumor because they feared that ***** would sue them, I am gratified to say; and the NSA is standing its ground against the House on the issue of the Baha'i encyclopedia.

5. We have hit on a winning strategy, I think:

- a) Avoid direct confrontations whenever possible.
- b) If attacked, as in ****'s case, indicate that we are prepared to stand our ground and make trouble.

- c) Get information and ideas into circulation.
- d) Keep the heat on whenever it can be done without direct confrontations.
- e) Do not allow ourselves to be painted as bad Baha's.
- f) Give the powers-that-be a graceful way out of their problems.

They're starting to eat their horses inside the fortress; let's stay safely in the trenches and not jump up and charge the cannons. This means that we need to keep doing what we are doing: no committees, manifestos, or unnecessary martyrs. In particular, now is the time to lay on earnest charm.

And, ****, as for you, I do not want any more of these inflammatory statements. You have no independent clout yet apart from whatever your family connections might be, and we will need you for the next generation's fights. There is no point in your getting thrown out now.

So lay off the manifesto-making and work on your Arabic verb tables, or I will drop you from Talisman. What is the 8th form feminine plural imperative of Q-R-B?

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

"According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." --Abdul-Baha

"Unmeasured vituperation employed on the side of the prevailing opinion really does deter people from professing contrary opinions and from listening to those who profess them." --John Stuart Mill, On Liberty (51-52).

Compare bahai tactics to the communist cadre or The Modern Inquisition of Catholicism.

---

Susan Maneck, Baha'i scholar
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck1.htm>

See also Susan Maneck, Baha'i scholar:
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck8.htm>

---

Susan Maneck - The Video: Shiite Ideology of Baha'i Fanaticism

Baha'i - Dr Susan Maneck - Islamic History Class at the 2007 Royal Falcon Baha'i School - Pensacola Beach, Florida
<https://video.google.com/videoplay?docid=3972066750708797426>

Friends,

I realize that most people here on talk.religion.bahai have figured much of this out long ago, but the underlying Shiite ideology of Baha'i fanaticism is so clear in Susan Maneck's video that I urge you to consider watching it, not merely for what it demonstrates about her own thinking, but also that of Iranian and "administrative" Baha'is, and what has gone so terribly wrong with the Haifan interpretation of Baha'u'llah's religion, under the counterfeit will and testament of Abdul-Baha.

---

Susan Maneck has a very long and complicated history of censorship and coercion on behalf of her fundamentalist interpretations of the bahai writings. Please see Professor Juan Cole's extensive comments below on her along with Paul Dodenhoff, revealing her calculating obsequiousness and lack of integrity. Many other insights into her behavior may be found around this website written by many other people.

Especially noteworthy are the comments regarding Maneck by Steven Scholl:
Steven Scholl re: Article in American Family Foundation's Cultic Studies Journal by Karen Bacquet

Professor Juan Cole's comments on Maneck at misrepresentations and bites on my back

Cole's more general comments on Susan Maneck: Re: Ms Maneck, Dr Cole 2/21/99 .

Rod Wicks, January 22, 2004: See especially his insightful remarks at <https://groups.google.com/groups?selm=8ccded73.0401212239.6e99f512%40posting.google.com&output=gplain>

Susan Maneck advocates fraudulently clicking on a google advertisement I had for some months on their Adwords system, apparently in the hope of driving up the cost so much that I'd discontinue it. Such are her tactics and those of the fundamentalists among my fellow bahais.

---

In an attempt to defeat the 3rd interest poll for talk.religion.bahai, the Bahai scholar Susan Maneck called for a NO vote on AOL and alt.religion.bahai, accusing me of "slander" while referring to my opinions as "garbage." When I asked her to present the evidence of such "slander," she was never able to identify anything significant other than my views which are widely known. The similarity of her strategy of demagoguery to that of Mark Towfig, a member of the BCCA, during the first interest poll, should be noted. Maneck made similar charges against Dr. Juan Cole in early October 1998 on AOL and elsewhere.

Related messages given below:

Re: fw KevinEco Reconsider the NO votes, please. 12/14/98 Maneck
Re: REPOST - alt.religion.bahai - FAQ 12/9/1998 Maneck (One of her many uses of the word "garbage")
fw KevinEco Reconsider the NO votes, please. 12/14/98 Kevin Eco asks AOL Bahais not to censor
Re: fw KevinEco Reconsider the NO votes, please. 12/14/98 Maneck calls for NO vote on AOL
Re: MEDIA RELEASE Baha'is Debate Freedom of Speech and Conscience FG 12/15/98
Maneck refers to my opinions as "litter" Maneck 2/15/99

Juan Cole's comments, given above, misrepresentations and ***bites on my back***, are essential to understanding this entire incident. Further, some might find helpful Cole's more general comments on Susan Maneck: Re: Ms Maneck, Dr Cole 2/21/99.

---

Susan Maneck is the current "community leader" on the AOL bahai message boards. See the over four-year record of her activities to suppress free speech and conscience at AOL.

NOTICE 10-6-03 - AOL Message Boards expire into oblivion

---

Hikmat & Taqiya

In addition to below, see HikmatMENU

For what Bahais call "hikmat" or wisdom or dissimulation, see Susan Maneck's :"Wisdom and Dissimulation: The Use and Meaning of Hikmat in the Baha'i Writings and History." Baha'i scholar Susan Maneck has a particularly notorious reputation for practicing hikmat.

For anyone interested, the Wikipedia article on taqqiya (taqiyya or taqiya) cites an outstanding article by Ibrahim, Raymond. "How Taqiyya Alters Islam's Rules of War: Defeating Jihadist Terrorism". Middle East Forum. Winter 2010. Having read a number of articles on taqqiya over the years, I've highly recommend Raymon Ibrahim's piece. It is available online: <https://www.meforum.org/2538/taqiyya-islam-rules-of-war>

For a Muslim perspective on Bahai dissimulation, see Amir Butler on ""Taqqaiya"

On H-Bahai: The Practice of Taqiyyah \(Dissimulation\) in the Babi and Bahai Religions by Sepehr Manuchehri

---

Maneck - DRIVING people out of the Bahai Faith
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck9.htm>

[In this context, for how bahai institutions operate and why, see Juan Cole in "The Baha'i Technique":
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm> ]

---

Maneck displaying her 'healthy' Baha'i patriotism > it was the US that bombed a mosque....

---

From: Fran Baker <fran@crhc.uiuc.edu>
To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>; fbaker@ncsa.uiuc.edu <fbaker@ncsa.uiuc.edu>; house@usq.edu.au <house@usq.edu.au>; johnwalker@ozemail.com.au <johnwalker@ozemail.com.au>; fran@amber.crhc.uiuc.edu <fran@amber.crhc.uiuc.edu>; smaneck@stetson.edu <smaneck@stetson.edu>; rdsteph@ibm.net <rdsteph@ibm.net>
Subject: Re: [Fwd: talk.religion.bahai]
Date: Monday, December 07, 1998 5:03 AM

Resending this to all due to a typo I made in Susan's email address.
--Fran

Fran Baker wrote:

>
> Sorry, Susan, but sometimes an appeal to courtesy is not appropriate.
> I have to let my coproponents know what you are planning to do.
> I can't believe you are letting a personality conflict resulting > from a passionate disagreement color your judgment in what is > essentially a human rights issue. You have crossed a line here.
>
> --Fran
>
> PS Who is rdsteph@ibm.net? Hi, whoever you are!
>
> -----
>
> Subject: talk.religion.bahai
> Date: Mon, 7 Dec 1998 12:31:28 -0500
> From: "Susan Maneck " <smaneck@stetson.edu>
> To: rdsteph@ibm.net
> CC: Fran Baker <fran@crhc.uiuc.edu>
>
> Dear Ron and Fran,
>

> I am seriously contemplating calling for a "no" vote on > talk.religion.bahai. I wanted to contact you first and explain to you > my rationale because I know this is something you have both > worked hard for. In the past I have not participated in the votes at > all. I wouldn't vote for it because I wanted nothing to do with a list > promoted by Fred and I felt that there ought to be the requisite > number of 150 truly interested individuals to form it. On the other > hand, I would not vote now because I thought it wrong because I > did not think that an unmoderated list should be opposed in > principle. Now, however, I find the manner in which Fred is going > about seeking to establish this list to be more than I can stomach > and publicly calling for a "no" vote appears to be the only way to > register the extent of our outrage against this kind of behaviour.
> What I refer to specifically is the campaign of slander and calumny > against not only the Institutions, but against myself and the Bahai > Studies list. As you know, he accuses this list and me of > censorship, which you yourself know is not true. He is also trying > to prevent my managing the Baha'i Message Board of AOL for the > same reason. He constantly spams that Board making any > genuine discussions virtually impossible.
>
> I'm going to sit on this a couple of days and give myself a cooling > off period before taking any action, but I've really had it "up to here" > with this jerk.
>
> Please do me the courtesy of not forwarding this message to Fred > (although you may convey my sentiments and my intentions). I do > not care to see it up in his website tomorrow.
>
> warmest, Susan

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Susan Maneck, Bahai scholar, displaying her 'healthy' Baha'i patriotism

---

> Actually, it was the US who carried out the act of terrorism on a mosque during > Friday service.

----- Original Message -----

From: "Susan Maneck " <smaneck@aol.com>

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Thursday, September 11, 2003 3:31 PM

Subject: Re: Moral Equivalence, Evil, and the Baha'i Worldview

> >You might pick an example here and there of a targetted killing (of a > >specific killer by Israel)that did indeed result in a number of > >collateral deaths.

>

> Actually, it was the US who carried out the act of terrorism on a mosque during > Friday service.

>

> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>

> Baha'i Studies is available through the following:

> <https://list.jccc.net/cgi-bin/lyris.pl?enter=bahai-st>

>

>

----- Original Message -----

From: "Susan Maneck " <smaneck@aol.com>

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Thursday, September 11, 2003 11:15 PM

Subject: Re: Moral Equivalence, Evil, and the Baha'i Worldview

>

> To my comment:

>

> >> Actually, it was the US who carried out the act of terrorism on a mosque > >during

> >> Friday service.

>

> Freddie writes:

>

> >

> >Of all the many, many reprehensible libels I've read > >by Maneck during the last several years, I believe > >this is really one of the most despicable..

>

> <sigh>

>

> See for yourself: https://www.shwa.org/topic/iraqwar/truck\_bomb.htm

>

> Friday 29th August 2003, Ayatollah Mohammed Baqir al-Hakim an influential shia

> cleric and leader of the Iranian backed Supreme Council for Islamic Revolution > was killed by a truck bomb together with over 100 other civilians in attendance > at the holiest site for Shia muslims in Iraq, the Imam Ali mosque in Najaf.

>
> This however is not the first time a mosque was hit by a truck bomb.
>
> Long forgotten by Americans, but still alive in the minds of thousands of > Middle-East people, our CIA's William Casey, attempting to murder Sheik > Muhammed Fedlallah (spiritual leader of Lebanese Shiites), which a truck bomb > placed outside a Beirut mosque killed 81 innocent bystanders and injured > hundreds.
>
> _____
>
> The Coastal Post - August, 1996: A dangerous attitude pervasive in Washington > is that acting as Israel's errand boy in the Mideast carries little or no risk.
> Experience suggests otherwise.
>
> During Israel's 1982 genocidal War in Lebanon, while she was butchering some > 30,000 Palestinian refugees, destroying Beirut and forcing that city's half a > million citizens to flee to the suburbs, Israel's Washington lobbyist talked > President Reagan into joining the slaughter. Reagan obliged by ordering his > battleship, the USS New Jersey, sitting off Lebanon's coast, to hurl shells > into those towns around Beirut to which the refugees were fleeing. The Lebanese > did not forget this little gesture and not long after, on October 23, 1983, 264 > US Marines in our security force paid with their lives for Reagan's act when a > car bomb exploded next to their barracks.
>
> In another little episode, just ten years go this month, long forgotten by > Americans, but still alive in the minds of thousands of Mideast peoples, our > CIA's William Casey, attempting to murder Sheik Muhammed Fedlallah (spiritual > leader of Lebanese Shiites), which a truck bomb placed outside a Beirut mosque, > killed 81 innocent bystanders and injured hundreds. The Sheik escaped. Bob > Woodward in his carefully-researched 1987 book Veil reported Israeli agents had > manufactured and set off that bomb for our CIA. The well-laundered funding for > the disaster had been deposited in Casey's secret account by none other than > the Saudi's Prince Bandar. (Spotlight, July 15)
>
> Now, in a repetition of the 1980s, 19 U.S. Marine have just been killed and > another 30 injured by a bomb in their barracks in Dhahran. Washington is > frantically pointing fingers in all the wrong directions. While we are still > starving thousands of Iraqi children and Clinton with his friend Peres on the > Whitehouse lawn has just celebrated Israel's recent slaughter of 208 Lebanese > while driving 400,000 from their homes, has it occurred to Washington that > someone in the Mideast might take offense?
>
> On March 26th, 1989, Ex-President Jimmie Carter, in an interview for The New > York Times, said: "You have only to go to Lebanon, to Syria, to Jordan to > witness first-hand the intense hatred among many peoples for the United States, > because we bombed and shelled and unmercifully killed totally innocent > villagers, women and children and farmers and housewives, in those villages > around Beirut...as a result, we have become a kind of Satan in the minds of > those who are deeply resentful. That is what precipitated the taking of > hostages and that is what has precipitated some of the terrorist attacks."
>
> "International terrorism," a term carelessly bandied about in our Capital these > days has always been in response to either our own or Israel's barbarism. Those > U.S. Marines were killed, neither in Lebanon nor in Saudi Arabia but in Tel > Aviv and Washington.
>
> _____
> From BBC:
>
> https://news.bbc.co.uk/onthisday/hi/dates/stories/march/8/newsid\_2516000/2516407.stm
>
> "Some American press reports said the CIA was behind the attack, which was > meant to kill Sheikh Fadlallah. He had been accused of supporting the suicide > bombers who killed hundreds of US and French troops in attacks on military > headquarters in Beirut in 1983 - a charge he has always denied."
>
> _____
>

> The important precedent here is that the CIA & Mossad have in the past blown up > mosques and innocent bystanders and those in prayer to accomplish their > political objectives.
>
> "One knowledgeable Australian official says privately that US efforts to > control Iraq include recruiting agents to create divisions among Islamic > clerics who have growing political power."
> https://www.iraqwar.ru/iraq-read\_article.php?articleId=17702&lang=en
>
> Over 300,000 mourners marched in the funeral procession
>
>
>
>
>
>
> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
> Baha'i Studies is available through the following:
> <https://list.jccc.net/cgi-bin/lyris.pl?enter=bahai-st>
>
>

----- Original Message -----

From: "Susan Maneck " <smaneck@aol.com>

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

Sent: Friday, September 12, 2003 1:10 PM

Subject: Re: ATTN ** Investigators, Journalists ** > Re: Moral Equivalence, Evil, and the Baha'i Worldview > Kelly & Baha

>
> >
> > Susan Maneck, Bahai scholar, typifies the concealed anti-Western hatred > > behind the veneer of brotherly love and peace routinely publicized by > > the fundamentalists among my fellow bahais.
>
> LOL. And you say this while at the same time arguing that the Baha'i > institutions support the war in Iraq? You're going to have to make up your > mind, Freddie. Never mind, you use whatever sounds bad whether there is any > truth behind it as well.
>
> > Her allegation that the US > > bombed a mosque during Friday Muslim prayers reveals a great deal > > about both her and the Baha'i Faith,
>
> Mmmm. I guess it reveals a good deal about Bill Moyer and PBS who ran this > story soon after 9-11. But I've already sufficiently documented it.
>
>
>
> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
> Baha'i Studies is available through the following:
> <https://list.jccc.net/cgi-bin/lyris.pl?enter=bahai-st>
>
>

---

More on Susan Maneck, Bahai scholar

Maneck - DRIVING people out of the Bahai Faith

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck9.htm>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Smaneck <smaneck@aol.com>
Subject: Re: fw KevinEco Reconsider the NO votes, please.
Date: Monday, December 14, 1998 10:31 PM

Dear friends,

I had deliberately confined my call for a no vote to the AOL Message Board where I found the disruptive behaviour and slanderous accusations of censorship against the Baha'i Board which Mr. Glaysher was using to promote his newsgroup more than I could stomach. Since the participants on the Message Board were in the best position to judge the falseness of Glaysher's statements I asked them to express their outrage by voting at the use of this kind of tactic by voting no. I had not intended for the call for a "no vote" to go beyond that list, but it seems Glaysher himself wishes to do this by posting references to this here on the alt. list. So be it. I am therefore reposting below the original messages I had placed on the AOL Message Board regarding this matter. The members of this list can decide for themselves whether this call was justified. It is up to Mr. Glaysher himself to decide how far this will go. If he ceases to use calmuny to promote his newsgroup then I will withdraw my call for a "no" vote. If he continues then those who are properly informed of the truth of these matters should vote their conscience.

warmest, Susan

Subject: Re: MEDIA RELEASE Baha'is Debate Freedom of Speech and Conscience

Date: 12/12/98 1:29 AM Eastern Standard Time
From: Smaneck
Message-id: <19981212012948.21483.00001810@ng-ch1.aol.com>

Dear friends,

Under normal circumstances I would be the first to support the notion of an unmoderated newsgroup. In the past I abstained from voting solely because I was aware of the destructive motives of the person behind the proposed newsgroup. Abstention may not however, be a strong enough measure to take against this constant campaign of slander being used to promote this list. I therefore urge anyone who objects to Fred's tactics to register their objections by voting "no" in the interest poll.

warmest, Susan

Subject: Re: Reconsider the NO votes, please.
Date: 12/13/98 11:11 PM Eastern Standard Time
From: Smaneck
Message-id: <19981213231106.21480.00002792@ng-ch1.aol.com>

Dear Kevin,

Thanks for your considered opinion. You wrote:

>3. If you must vote no, please refrain from publicly stating your intention >to do so, and please refrain from campaigning for others to vote no. Both >actions violate Usenet etiquette and will be interpreted as attempted >ensorship by many neutral observers.

I am urging only those people on AOL who are offended by the slander Fred has used against this Message Board to promote his own news group to vote "no." Had I wished to mount a full-scale campaign against TRB I would also urge the participants in Bahai Studies and the other lists I am involved to vote "no" as well. I am not doing this. When the TRB announcement

was placed on Baha'i Studies it was done by Ron House in a dignified manner
without attacking or distorting the activities of other lists. I therefore see no reason to oppose it there. But the tactics which are being used to promote the newsgroup here are unconscionable and a clear message needs to be delivered that such methods will backfire.

warmest, Susan

Subject: Re: Message to Mark Foster
Date: 12/14/98 11:36 AM Eastern Standard Time
From: Smaneck
Message-id: <19981214113637.00888.00003268@ng-bw1.aol.com>

Fred writes:

>I quote here too Kevin's rebuttal of her scurrilous attack:

Kevin did not at all suggest that what I had written about you was scurrilous.
He was simply arguing that whatever tactics you are using to promote the list do not justify a "no" vote. I disagree. There are other supporters of trb that have made the even stronger point that they do not support what you are doing and it is unfair to scuttle the newsgroup because of your actions. They have even accused me of descending to your level (what a scathing criticism that is!). They have a point, and that is why I have not broaden my call for a "no" vote to involve all the lists I participate on. But newsgroups ought not to be approved as a result of campaigns of slander, therefore on the forums where such slander is obvious to everyone, I urge those seeing it to register their protest and call "foul" by voting no.

Susan

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Smaneck <smaneck@aol.com>
Subject: Re: REPOST - alt.religion.bahai - FAQ
Date: Wednesday, December 09, 1998 10:51 PM

Christian writes:

>Fred, you and I and Susan and all of us should all shut up about throwing >stones and glass houses and flame wars.

Your point is well taken Christian, but I really think "garbage" is a mild way to refer to slander.

warmest, Susan

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: FG <FG@hotmail.com>
Subject: fw KevinEco Reconsider the NO votes, please.
Date: Monday, December 14, 1998 6:53 AM

I wish to thank Kevin for presenting a very balanced rationale for reconsidering Susan Maneck's call for NO votes against talk.religion.bahai.

Let me say, with all honesty, that my only reason for wanting an unmoderated forum on the Bahai Faith is that Bahais might learn the importance of, and live up to, Abdul-Baha's demanding words:

"These are effectual and sufficient proofs that the conscience of man is sacred and to be respected; and that liberty thereof produces widening of ideas, amendment of morals, improvement of conduct, disclosure of the secrets of the contingent world."

Abdul-Baha, A Traveler's Narrative, 91.

FG....The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience:
index.htm Talk.religion.bahai voter ballot is on news.announce.newgroups, news.groups,
alt.religion.bahai,
or email the votetaker dave@dogwood.com requesting the "trb CFV."

**-----

Subject: Reconsider the NO votes, please.
Date: 12/12/1998 8:09 PM Eastern Standard Time
From: KevinEco
Message-id: <19981212200919.08230.00001915@ng-fc2.aol.com>

As the tempest grows wilder, any attempt to present a balanced view on this subject appears more daunting, but now circumstances demand it.

To all of you, whether Baha'i or not, determined to vote NO on talk.religion.bahai, please consider carefully the implications of your decision.

Perhaps you reached this decision because you are annoyed with Fred Glaysher, and you think a NO vote the perfect revenge because it will annoy him. Perhaps you are convinced he has bad motives, and you believe anything that a person with bad motives will fight so hard to get must be a bad thing. Perhaps you don't have a clear idea of your own motives; whenever that happens to me, I always find it wiser to refrain from acting until I can clarify my own motives.

Now, let's consider the worst-case possibility. Suppose for a moment that Fred really is a bad person with bad motives, perhaps even a Covenant-breaker. (Let me state in the strongest possible terms that this is NOT my conviction about Fred; I am sorry to discuss such an accusation even hypothetically, but sadly, the accusation has already been made public, so it has to be dealt with.)

Even if this were true, even IF someone really does have destructive motives and really is hatching some kind of nefarious plot, we must remember that IT IS NOT OUR JOB TO SILENCE SUCH PEOPLE.

The Baha'i Writings tell us that to defend our religion, we are to speak the truth about it when someone makes false accusations against it -- NOT to compel such persons to be silent.

Leaving idealistic principle aside for a moment, let's get more practical. Suppose the talk.religion.bahai proposal really is part of some fiendish plot. Perhaps the fiendish plot is actually calculated to goad as many people as possible into voting NO, creating more evidence for the claim that most Baha'is love nothing more than censorship.

Seem outlandish? Yes, but if you read the exchanges on news.groups, you will see messages from people who are non-Baha'is with no interest in Baha'i matters, who are discussing this only because they follow discussion of every proposed newsgroup. Several such Usenet authority figures have explicitly stated their temptation to vote NO simply because they find Fred's tactics annoying. If we indulge in speculating about motives, we have to include the possibility that this is no accident.

Returning to the level of principle (as the Baha'i teachings require of us) none of us can claim anything other than speculation about the motives of Fred or anyone else.

There may be tons of circumstantial evidence that someone has bad motives, but the same evidence could also arise from a person who is extremely devoted to a particular principle, and just doesn't have the talent or charisma needed to inspire people's sympathy. In neither case do the Baha'i Writings give us any permission to attack such a person. No, we have an inescapable duty to treat all with love and respect.

For these reasons, let us all consider the following course of action:

1. Please stop giving vent to negative emotions regarding Fred Glaysher. Such venting will only drive him deeper into isolation, and as a creation of God he deserves better. If he really is trying to attack

the Baha'i Faith, such venting can only strengthen the attack. Focus on issues and facts in every response to him or about him, both for his sake, and for the sake of adherence to correct principles.

2. Please reconsider any NO vote on the talk.religion.bahai proposal. If you're still determined to annoy Fred (after all my efforts to stir your compassion), consider that a large NO vote may be just what he's aiming for.
A better way to send a message would be an ABSTAIN vote, which would show that you do not support the creation of talk.religion.bahai, but you are unwilling to provide more ammunition to those who claim that Baha'is try to censor everything.

3. If you must vote no, please refrain from publicly stating your intention to do so, and please refrain from campaigning for others to vote no. Both actions violate Usenet etiquette and will be interpreted as attempted censorship by many neutral observers.

To anyone who is still reading this longish message, thank you for your time.

If my attempt to present a balanced view of this tangled situation has offended anyone, I offer my apologies, and hope you will be kind when you point out my errors.

Your humble servant,
Kevin

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Smaneck <smaneck@aol.com>
Subject: Re: fw KevinEco Reconsider the NO votes,
please.
Date: Monday, December 14, 1998 10:31 PM

Dear friends,

I had deliberately confined my call for a no vote to the AOL Message Board where I found the disruptive behaviour and slanderous accusations of censorship against the Baha'i Board which Mr. Glaysher was using to promote his newsgroup more than I could stomach. Since the participants on the Message Board were in the best position to judge the falseness of Glaysher's statements I asked them to express their outrage by voting at the use of this kind of tactic by voting no. I had not intended for the call for a "no vote" to go beyond that list, but it seems Glaysher himself wishes to do this by posting references to this here on the alt. list. So be it. I am therefore reposting below the original messages I had placed on the AOL Message Board regarding this matter. The members of this list can decide for themselves whether this call was justified. It is up to Mr. Glaysher himself to decide how far this will go. If he ceases to use calmuny to promote his newsgroup then I will withdraw my call for a "no" vote. If he continues then those who are properly informed of the truth of these matters should vote their conscience.

warmest, Susan

Subject: Re: MEDIA RELEASE Baha'is Debate Freedom of Speech and Conscience

Date: 12/12/98 1:29 AM Eastern Standard Time
From: Smaneck
Message-id: <19981212012948.21483.00001810@ng-ch1.aol.com>

Dear friends,

Under normal circumstances I would be the first to support the notion of an unmoderated newsgroup. In the past I abstained from voting solely because I was aware of the destructive motives of the person behind the proposed newsgroup. Abstention may not however, be a strong enough measure to take against this constant campaign of slander being used to promote this list. I therefore urge anyone who objects to Fred's tactics to register their objections by voting "no" in the interest poll.

warmest, Susan

Subject: Re: Reconsider the NO votes, please.
Date: 12/13/98 11:11 PM Eastern Standard Time
From: Smaneck
Message-id: <19981213231106.21480.00002792@ng-ch1.aol.com>

Dear Kevin,

Thanks for your considered opinion. You wrote:

>3. If you must vote no, please refrain from publicly stating your intention >to do so, and please refrain from campaigning for others to vote no. Both >actions violate Usenet etiquette and will be interpreted as attempted >censorship by many neutral observers.

I am urging only those people on AOL who are offended by the slander Fred has used against this Message Board to promote his own news group to vote "no." Had I wished to mount a full-scale campaign against TRB I would also urge the participants in Bahai Studies and the other lists I am involved to vote "no" as well. I am not doing this. When the TRB announcement

was placed on Baha'i Studies it was done by Ron House in a dignified manner
without attacking or distorting the activities of other lists. I therefore see no reason to oppose it there. But the tactics which are being used to promote the newsgroup here are unconscionable and a clear message needs to be delivered
that such methods will backfire.

warmest, Susan

Subject: Re: Message to Mark Foster
Date: 12/14/98 11:36 AM Eastern Standard Time
From: Smaneck
Message-id: <19981214113637.00888.00003268@ng-bw1.aol.com>

Fred writes:

>I quote here too Kevin's rebuttal of her scurrilous
attack:

Kevin did not at all suggest that what I had written about you was scurrilous.
He was simply arguing that whatever tactics you are using to promote the list
do not justify a "no" vote. I disagree. There are other supporters of trb that have made the even stronger point that they do not support what you are doing and it is unfair to scuttle the newsgroup because of your actions. They have even accused me of descending to your level (what a scathing criticism that is!). They have a point, and that is why I have not broaden my call for a "no"
vote to involve all the lists I participate on. But newsgroups ought not to be approved as a result of campaigns of slander, therefore
on the forums where such slander is obvious to everyone, I urge those seeing it to register their protest and call "foul" by voting no.

Susan

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Subject: Re: MEDIA RELEASE Baha'is Debate Freedom of Speech and Conscience
Date: 12/15/1998 7:02 AM Eastern Standard Time
From: FG
Message-id: <19981215070259.09500.00001887@ng-fs1.aol.com>

>Subject: Re: MEDIA RELEASE Baha'is Debate Freedom of Speech and Conscience
>Date: 12/15/1998 1:49 AM Eastern Standard Time
>From: Smaneck
>Message-id: <19981215014952.00894.00003468@ng-bw1.aol.com>

**>
>Dear Fred,
**>
>I am specifically referring to the slander you made against this list. In >your Media Release you wrote:
**>
>>With recent clashes
>>even taking place on America Online and soc.religion.bahai >>banning for months now any links to any web sites whatsoever,
**>
>This is an out and out lie and anyone who participates on this list knows it.

This is not a lie at all. There have been many clashes on AOL over freedom of speech and conscience.

>There are web links even to Covenant breaker's sites here. Nothing has been >banned, there has simply been no one available to do this task.

In my referring to what I have called the 3 Issues I repeatedly stated I have never charged the folders here themselves are censored but rather that the stagnant situation itself is to the advantage of Bahai fundamentalists to allow to continue....

>

>There are other misrepresentations in your post as well, but this is the one >which is an offense to all the members who participate in this uncensored >forum.

It is obvious you're straining hard to trump it up into one! You have no basis for accusing me of slander, only your resentment that I've opposed your bid for power as Forum Leader.... Not a pretty sight, Susan, not a pretty sight....

What a strange sight you present to Non-Bahais and impartial observers who will perceive the desperation with which many Bahais oppose freedom of speech and conscience, seeking the flimsiest excuses for opposing talk.religion.bahai and denying these great words of Abdul-Baha:

"These are effectual and sufficient proofs that the conscience of man is sacred and to be respected; and that liberty thereof produces widening of ideas, amendment of morals, improvement of conduct, disclosure of the secrets of the contingent world."

Abdul-Baha, A Traveler's Narrative, 91.

>

>Susan

FG....The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience:
index.htm Talk.religion.bahai voter ballot is on news.announce.newgroups, news.groups,
alt.religion.bahai,

or email the votetaker dave@dogwood.com requesting the "trb CFV."

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

More on Maneck

---

From: Smaneck <smaneck@aol.com>
Subject: Re: AOL censorship via TOS allegations
Date: Thursday, February 18, 1999 2:17 PM

Fred writes:

>I highly doubt the veracity of the >claim that he was so sick.

What do you need Fred, a doctors excuse?

>Regardless, I repeatedly emailed >directly to him and requested that he resign, a request he's >always ignored.

The nerve of Mark! When Fred issues a demand like that Mark should comply immediately.

>Ms. Maneck herself referred to my opinions on AOL a number >of times as "garbage."

And nobody else would *ever* characterize the litter you spam these lists with in that manner.

Susan Stiles Maneck
History, Stetson University

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Susan Maneck, Baha'i scholar:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck8.htm>

Susan Maneck, Baha'i scholar

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck1.htm>

---

"According to the direct and sacred command of God we are forbidden to utter slander." --Abdul-Baha

"Unmeasured vituperation employed on the side of the prevailing opinion really does deter people from professing contrary opinions and from listening to those who profess them." --John Stuart Mill, On Liberty (51-52).

---

Dear non-bahai observer,

For further background on Susan Maneck and her tactics, see Susan Maneck, Baha'i scholar:

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck8.htm>

"In short, she has lied and made misleading statements about me in the past and this recent statement of hers is just another example of her lack of honesty." Steven Scholl

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Scholl4.htm>

"...she has behaved toward me in an academic setting with dishonesty and deceit in such a way as deprives her of the right to debate me publicly. She spied on me and lied about it. She betrayed confidences in such a way as to cause her academic colleagues to demand and get her resignation from a position she had held." Prof. Juan Cole

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Cole20.htm>

Juan Cole, February 13, 1999:

"It is a very, very, very weird religion. And if anyone is reading Susan Maneck's absolutely bone-chilling screeds on the desirability of Heresy Trials and carefulness in Shunning, they are seeing what it is like at the core of the religion."

"I really am sorry for them and her, since they seem sort of filled with hate and quite paranoid, yet say they are preaching love, unity and tolerance. Susan will say, 'may your abdomen be split by lightning and your guts fall out you filthy heretic whom I wish I could just have shunned and buried', and then she'll sign herself "warmest" and slander a university by adding it to her sig line. As if what she is about has anything at all to do with *universities*!"

"Isn't it sort of suspicious that she shows up at AOL backbiting me so assiduously on a forum where I am not even present? ... Is the only way to stay a Baha'i to capitulate morally in this way?" Prof. Juan Cole
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Cole19.htm>

"As for Maneck's relationship to the Baha'i authorities, she has herself boasted to common friends of ours of corresponding with House members about how to 'deal with Cole', and she served as a spy on an academic editorial committee for counselor Ghadirian, passing over to him detailed reports on confidential discussions, one of which she accidentally shared with an editor. And now she wishes to make my revelation of this role itself a reason for which *I* should be thought delusional?" Prof. Juan Cole
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Cole74.htm>

"I find Susan Maneck's speculation about his [Abbas Amanat] extremely internal, private, existential beliefs, based on nothing extremely more than hearsay, to be extremely rude and the height of slander...." Prof. Juan Cole <https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/media2.htm>

Rod Wicks, January 22, 2004:

I disagree...and my disagreement is based on years of online discussions in which Susans [Maneck] propensity to accuse (openly or through innuendo) is reflected by other fundamentalist Baha'is. So too the evasiveness, the glib, trite smarmy non answer, the drive by 'blipvert' of one line innuendo, the refusal to stand and defend/justify/explain any attack or allegation, the retreat into cowards killfile when her dishonesty is exposed.....all these are common features of what has been described as the Baha'i Technique. I did not believe such a phenomena could exist when I first came online... today the evidence is irrefutable and undeniable. Susan M perfectly reflects all that is worst about contemporary Baha'i culture...'they' know it and love her for it.

No....Manic and fundamentalist co workers do not simply "represent" the Baha'i community...they *ARE* the community...their identification is total/complete. Any criticism of any aspect of Baha'i is perceived by Manic and Co as a direct personal attack and they respond by attacking the individual rather than the argument. They will invent and manufacture 'enemies of the faith', 'violators of the Covenant' and even stoop to open allegations of criminal activity.

The AO cannot possibly be deaf, dumb and blind to this activity any more than the online Baha'i gallery and lurkers are blind to it. It is granted approval, formal or informal, open or tacit...it matters not.

The truth is apparent in examination of the facts...the facts are available in review of the archives...the archives reveal incident after incident/event after event in which Susan (or co fundamentalist) levels a baseless and unprovoked serious allegation, refuses substantiation, hides behind glib and evasive [expletive] and/or killfile and receives open or tacit support for doing so.

Susan represents a prevailing culture of abuse, slander, denial and evasion.

<https://groups.google.com/groups?selm=8ccded73.0401212239.6e99f512%40posting.google.com&output=gplain>

- > [Susan Maneck's] notion of "integrity" is clearly revealed here- [snip]
- > It involves misrepresentation, slander, psychic assumptions, refusal
- > to substantiate or explain and repetitious ad hom as an evasive device
- > to avoid acting in an ethical manner. [Susan Maneck's] will go to any lengths
- > to avoid responding to a justifiable call for substantiation of her
- > baseless allegations...she will cut, snip, evade, convolute and red
- > herring her way away from the question.
- > When called to account she will plead "hounding".
- >
- > All ethical connect to the notion of 'integrity' has been forfeit by
- > her.
- >
- > Rod in <news:8ccded73.0309141838.644c59dd@posting.google.com>

"You, Madam, are devoid of propriety, dignity and morality." El Baquiano
"Since I prize the Baha'i Faith, words that insult it are vile. And since I never uttered nothing resembling them, I say that you are falsely attribute them to me. You continuously imply that my motivations are suspect and nefarious and that I am attacking the Faith and its institutions. Yet in the face of irreproachable proof to the contrary, you continue to add to your mound of lies." El Baquiano

---

Further details on Baha'i scholar Susan Maneck at
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck1.htm>

See her slandering other views as garbage:
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck3.htm>

See her slandering other views as litter:
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck7.htm>

See also messages related to her abuse of AOL :
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/AOL.htm>

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/AOLcensorship.htm>

Bahai institutions DRIVING people out - Maneck's "get over it"
9/17/03
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck9.htm>

Homepage

om/bahaicensorship/Maneck9.htm

Homepage

>

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Susan Maneck's "Get over it" > I.e., the injustice of the fundamentalist administration

---

From <https://www.theage.com.au/ftimages/2003/10/01/1064819962076.html>

---

Reflect, Gentle Reader, what is "it" that the many victims of the fundamentalist uhj are supposed to get over? I submit "it" is defined by Professor Juan Cole in "The Baha'i Technique":

"The purpose of having this system where it is so easy to turn insiders into outsiders is to maintain very strict control over the community by its leaders. The idea is that everyone still on the inside will fear being made a non-person or being ostracized or being shunned, and so will keep quiet and let the leadership do as it pleases with them. Silent suffering of tyranny and injustice from one's leaders is the actual definition of a Baha'i in good standing. Of course, this requirement is cult-like...."

See related excerpts at

<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/technique.htm>

---

Bahai institutions DRIVING people out - Maneck's "get over it" 9/17/03
<https://fglaysher.com/bahaicensorship/Maneck9.htm>

----- Original Message -----From: "Susan Maneck " <smaneck@aol.com>
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai
Sent: Wednesday, September 17, 2003 3:52 PM
Subject: Re: Finding Nima

Melissa wrote:

>I remember this, too. At the time I thought you were making too much >of it but corrosive is a good word for it....

[snip]

>My own view was that a lot of them just got tired. Karen is right >that the anger runs out eventually, for everybody (well, almost >everybody!)

Anger runs out eventually among the who psychologically healthy. I think that's one of the reasons the House never takes immediate action against people who lash out against them. They usually wait until it is very clear they aren't going to 'get over it.'

warmest, Susan

Lines: 30 X-Admin: news@aol.com From: smaneck@aol.com (Susan Maneck ) Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai Date: 17 Sep 2003 19:52:07 GMT References:
<e37a2ae4.0309171130.185ae1c1@posting.google.com> Organization: AOL
<https://www.aol.com> Subject: Re: Finding Nima Message-ID:
<20030917155207.10923.00001658@mb-m29.aol.com>

---

A similar message posted by Maneck in 2005 reveals the bahai administration's approach to driving away people and views of conscience:

Path:
g2news1.google.com!postnews.google.com!g47g2000cwa.googlegroups.com!not-for-mail
From: sman...@jam.rr.com
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai
Subject: Re: CAUTION - Susan Maneck: A Widely-Recognized Liar and Slanderer
Date: 13 Dec 2005 14:33:12 -0800
Organization: <https://groups.google.com>
Lines: 7
Message-ID: <1134513192.475891.44680@g47g2000cwa.googlegroups.com>
References: <1131645770.227913.277330@f14g2000cwb.googlegroups.com>
<dl04c6$89t$1@theodyn.ncf.ca>
<1131687802.646686.41910@f14g2000cwb.googlegroups.com>
<yfCdndQJCTeEaBeneRVn-oA@comcast.com> <11pu6ef9gc11c79@corp.supernews.com>
NNTP-Posting-Host: 143.132.203.147
Mime-Version: 1.0
Content-Type: text/plain; charset="iso-8859-1"
X-Trace: posting.google.com 1134513197 5073 127.0.0.1 (13 Dec 2005 22:33:17 GMT)
X-Complaints-To: groups-abuse@google.com
NNTP-Posting-Date: Tue, 13 Dec 2005 22:33:17 +0000 (UTC)
In-Reply-To: <11pu6ef9gc11c79@corp.supernews.com>
User-Agent: G2/0.2
X-HTTP-UserAgent: Mozilla/4.0 (compatible; MSIE 6.0; Windows NT 5.1; SV1;
.NET CLR 1.1.4322),gzip(gfe),gzip(gfe)
Complaints-To: groups-abuse@google.com Injection-Info: g47g2000cwa.googlegroups.com; posting-host=143.132.203.147;
posting-account=N-MaJA0AAACzNAhy8DP6vLBeiThEytmK

>

- > By all means compare her lucid statements and opinions with the
- > statements/none-statements of the above author (Fredrick Glaysher).

Shhh, Infinity. Let sleeping dogs lie. We just got rid of Freddie, don't do anything to bring him back.

 I invite the reader to reflect on the tactics and [technique of the above message. From another viewpoint, it is precisely the intention of bahai apologists to provoke and draw its victims back into the fray. My leaving talk.religion.bahai had nothing to do with the typical onslaught of slander, insult, and derision meted out by Maneck and other apparatchiks of the bahai administration, but was entirely due to personal reasons, partly discussed in Farewell. ]

Compare the bahai tactics to the communist cadre or The Modern Inquisition of Catholicism.

---

More on Susan Maneck, Bahai scholar

---

Compare the 1997 comments of David Langness on driving people out of the Bahai Faith

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

During late 2003, Susan Maneck advocates clicking on a google advertisement I had for some months on their Adwords system, apparently in the hope of driving up the cost so much that I'd discontinue it. Such are the tactics of baha'i fanatics.

---

----- Original Message -----

From: <smaneck@jam.rr.com>

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai,soc.culture.iranian

Sent: Tuesday, September 27, 2005 6:57 PM

Subject: Re: Warning to the cult IT hackers of baha'idoom in Wilmette and Haifa

>

> Ah, so that would be similiar to our clicking on Freddie's link when he > had it advertised on Google. Only we weren't trying to deny him > service, we just knew he paid by the click and wanted to make sure he > got a substantial bill.

>

> warmest, Susan

Lines: 13

X-Admin: news@aol.com

From: smaneck@aol.com (Susan Maneck )

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

Date: 21 Dec 2003 04:29:30 GMT

References: <brkaqg$469nv$1@ID-75545.news.uni-berlin.de>

Organization: AOL <https://www.aol.com>

Subject: Re: EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith

Message-ID: <20031220232930.29517.00000608@mb-m02.aol.com>

Hey folks,

Don't click on those URLs. Access Freddie's website here where he is charged by the click.

<https://www.google.com/search?hl=en&ie=ISO-8859-1&q=Baha%27i&btnG=Google+Search>

<https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
Baha'i Studies is available through the following:
<https://list.jccc.net/cgi-bin/lyris.pl?enter=bahai-st>

--

Lines: 20

X-Admin: news@aol.com

From: smaneck@aol.com (Susan Maneck )

Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai

Date: 21 Dec 2003 06:49:19 GMT

References: <5ibFb.222268$Ec1.7933156@bgtnsc05-news.ops.worldnet.att.net>

Organization: AOL <https://www.aol.com>

Subject: Re: EVIDENCE grows... Dr. David Kelly & the Baha'i Faith

Message-ID: <20031221014919.29517.00000628@mb-m02.aol.com>

>

>Now isn't that a great Baha'i sentiment, Susan. Do you think it is in line >with the one that told Baha'is not to remove anti-Baha'i literature from >libraries? Or not to penalize CB'ers where the work. Sheesh.

>Alma

Alma,

I think clicking on Freddie's ad is perfectly fair game. We don't take books out of libraries because that is stealing. We don't penalize CBs at work because that deprives them of their civil rights. But if Freddie wants to pay money to attack the Faith I see nothing wrong with insuring he pays a lot.

Susan

<https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
Baha'i Studies is available through the following:
<https://list.jccc.net/cgi-bin/lyris.pl?enter=bahai-st>

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

See especially How "Review" acts as Censorship
3/28/2000 Alison Marshall re Bahai World

Alison Marshall - "How the Baha'i administration behaves"

From: "Ron House" <house@usq.edu.au>
Cc: "Alison Marshall" <alisonz@clear.net.nz>
Subject: Re: Review as censorship
Date: Wednesday, April 05, 2000 1:56 AM

Alison Marshall has sent the following message. I notice that Tookey has since said he'll go to Talisman, so I'll let the them discuss it over there, and I'll stay out of it. RH.

Dear Tookey,

Ron has passed on your questions and I will try to respond. I am happy that my message was posted on TRB. I feel that what has happened is of importance to the Baha'i world and if people are interested, they will discuss it, like they do in any civil society.

I believe in free speech. I believe that it is not against Baha'i law to criticise the House of Justice in public. I have done so on a few occasions over the 2-3 years they have been monitoring me. Whenever I have criticised the House, I have tried to be polite and constructive about it. It appears that the House has determined that my speech is unacceptable, so they have expelled me.

Nevertheless, I believe I have done nothing wrong. I have acted from my conscience, and I believe that is what Baha'u'llah would have me do.

Justice is seeing with one's own eyes.

Alison MarshallFrom: "Ron House"
<house@usq.edu.au>
Subject: Review as censorship
Date: Tuesday, March 28, 2000 5:34 AM

The attached articles were posted by Alison Marshall to Talisman, and I post them here with her permission.

--

Ron House                      house@usq.edu.au

Never fear the truth.

----- Part 1 -----

-

In early 1998, I was approached by the editors of the Baha'i Studies Review (ABS-ESE) and asked to write a review of two volumes of The Baha'i World. I spent the next several months reading the volumes and putting together the review. I approached the exercise in much the same way as I do when my company is asked to review publications for organisations. The review passed without comment the first vetting process, in which the item is read by a group of peer reviewers, and was then sent to the association's institutional panel for review. Its members had a number of difficulties with the review. The editors made various changes to the text in order to accommodate the panel's concerns, but the panel was nevertheless unable to come to a decision and so the editors appealed to the UK NSA for a final decision. The NSA sent the review to the House of Justice, who decided that it would be "inadvisable" to publish the review because of its generally critical tone.

I have posted the book review in a second e-mail message. The message I received from the secretary of the ABS ESE states:

**--

As you might have guessed with our long delay in getting back to you, we have had many discussions with the UK Bahá'í reviewing panel about your book review. Unfortunately, the piece did not pass institutional review. The UK reviewing panel was unable to make a decision. They referred the matter to the UK NSA, who, in turn, sought advice from the Universal House of Justice.

In a letter to the National Spiritual Assembly dated 22 August 1999, the Department of the Secretariat replied that the publication of your review was considered inadvisable, because of the generally critical tone.

Since then, the executive committee of the Association for Bahá'í Studies-ESE has further reflected on the implications of this decision. The committee is aware that Bahá'í scholarship is a developing field and striking the right tone and balance when critically reviewing any publication is one of its more difficult challenges.

**---

Although the letter says that the issue is a general one of criticising any publication, we need only open any issue of the Baha'i Studies Review to find book reviews equally as critical about publications not produced by

the World Centre. This decision shows just how sensitive the House of Justice is to criticism of its own publications. The review is critical, yes, but it is constructive, containing practical suggestions as to how the publication might be improved. In my work, I am **paid** by companies to give them this sort of feedback.

To me, this decision is a good example of how review acts as censorship.
Baha'i review is used by the Baha'i administration to further its own agenda. This agenda is focussed on creating and maintaining a particular public image, which can be gleaned from The Baha'i Worlds themselves.
The
administration will not tolerate any speech that might blemish that carefully crafted persona. The Baha's Studies Associations are not independent of the Baha'i organisation and therefore cannot publish any material contrary to these purposes.

As we can see from the above letter, the Baha'i administration assumes
the right to define "scholarship" for its members and to set it within very narrow parameters, placing emphasis on intangibles like tone. This decision
highlights the fact that those parameters are used to serve the purposes
of the administration, but are masked here as objective criteria for acceptable scholarship.

Alison

----- Part 2 -----
-

"The Bahá'í World" 1992-93 and 1993-94
Published by the Bahá'í World Centre
Reviewed by Alison Marshall

In her essay on the efforts of the Bahá'í community to realise equality between the sexes, Ann Boyles tells us that "Bahá'ís see their community life as a workshop rather than as a perfect model..." (1993-94 p. 273). After reading these two volumes, I cannot point to anything in them that would prove this statement true. The books are largely filled with public relations material, and their portrayal of the community is sterile and shallow.

Purpose and audience
-----

Beginning with the holy year in 1992, the World Centre has started a new, annual, series of The Bahá'í World. In an effort to return to Shoghi Effendi's original purpose, "to disclose to others something of the significance of the world-wide movement called into being by the Message of Bahá'u'lláh" (1992-93 p. 7), the World Centre has redesigned the volumes for non-Bahá'í readers (1992-93 p. 8), who are described as serious researchers and general students (back cover). The stated purpose seems to be twofold: firstly, to be a yearbook that reproduces major statements and provides statistical data and information on the Faith's activities; and secondly, to "offer readers general information on the Bahá'í Faith, its concerns,

and
its teachings" (1993-94 p. 1).

Content and organisation

-----

The 1993-94 volume has an accessible structure, with the content organised into the following categories (in this order):

- "Introduction to the Bahá'í Community", containing chapters on Bahá'u'lláh, Shoghi Effendi and the community.
- "Writings and Messages", containing excerpts from the sacred writings and an overview of House of Justice messages.
- "Events 1993-94", containing chapters on events such as international convention and the conference of Bahá'í counsellors.
- "Essays and Statements", containing essays on topics such as postmodernism, The Kitab-i-Aqdas, and statements from the Bahá'í International Community.
- "Information and Resources", containing obituaries, statistics, a directory, a short list of new publications, a Bahá'í reading list and a glossary.

The 1992-93 volume is similar in content type, but is not as well organised.

It appears more as a collection of various pieces of writing - some written for the volume, others not - and lacks an overall framework to bring it together. Topics are not categorised, and the result is a list of contents in no apparent order and with no indication as to the kind of information the reader is to expect. For example, the chapter "Bahá'u'lláh", which on its face could be just about anything, is a reproduction of a statement by the Bahá'í International Community, written for the holy year and not for this volume and its audience. One chapter is titled "The Bahá'í Community Today", which is not informative given that this is surely the topic to be covered by the book as a whole. It consists of a five-page piece focusing on the expansion of the community and the spread of its teachings. It is placed near the end of the book, and is laid out differently from the rest of the text, indicating that it may be a quote from somewhere. But there is no indication as to its author, purpose and audience.

There is just one significant oversight in the organisation of the 1993-94 volume. The chapter "Bahá'í Sacred Writings" contains two sections of quotes, headed "Writings of Bahá'u'lláh" and "Writings of 'Abdul-Baha". Unfortunately, the quotes have no quote marks and no references. There is sufficient context for non-Bahá'í readers to work out that they are reading actual quotes from the writings, but confusion sets in when you read on to the next chapter, which is headed "From the Universal House of Justice". You immediately assume you are getting quotes from the House of Justice. However, the chapter starts with "The Universal House of Justice was ordained..." and immediately you ask yourself, is this the House of Justice talking about itself in the third person? Second page in, you are told that

"This section of The Bahá'í World features excerpts from a selection of major letters" (p. 40), so it begins to dawn on you that the author is not the House of Justice as the title implies. In fact, the chapter is a short piece with an introduction on how the House of Justice communicates with the community and a summary of what the House of Justice wrote for the 1993-94 year, with indented quotes.

Dealing with two purposes

As stated earlier, the purposes of the volumes are to be a yearbook and to give general information about the Faith.

A yearbook is an annual publication that updates information on a given subject. However, in order to fulfil the second purpose of giving general information about the Faith, the publications also contain a great deal of information that has nothing to do with the current year. This dissipates their focus and leaves the reader wondering what is going to come next. For example, both articles about the Mount Carmel projects (1993-94 pp. 67-69) begin with pages of background before detailing progress for the year (1992-93 pp. 169-175).

The same problem also reveals itself on a micro level, within sections of articles. In the section "Year in Review" (1993-94 p. 128), the Houses of Worship section starts with an explanation of what

Houses of Worship
are,
what Bahá'ís do in them and how many there are,
before discussing Houses
of Worship for the year. And in the middle of an article on social and economic development, there is a paragraph that outlines assembly functions and explains the election process at all levels of the administrative order (1992-93 p. 234).

I recommend the editors commit themselves to making The Bahá'í World a yearbook. This would mean putting all the yearbook-related information
first
- House of Justice statements, events, statistics - and all background information into appendices - explanations of Bahá'í administration and teachings, quotes from the writings, and information on matters such as
the persecution of the Bahá'ís in Iran. The editors should definitely resist
the urge to put the sacred writings first just because Bahá'ís like it that way!
And they should also resist putting information together just because it is about the same topic. Information should be grouped according to time
not subject; so, for example, the article on what's currently happening in Iran
would come in the yearbook section, and then the reader can be referred to the appendices and other publications for further information.

The 1993-94 volume contains a glossary that explains and gives background on some basic Bahá'í terms such as "Universal House of Justice". Using a glossary stops the information in the main part of the publication from being cluttered with background detail. Unfortunately, this has not been heeded by the various authors of the volume, and the reader is given unnecessarily repeated explanations such as: "Every five years, a three-stage process culminates in the election by the Bahá'ís of the world of the supreme governing council of their community, the Universal House of Justice" (p. 51); "... immediately following the Seventh International Bahá'í Convention - the occasion every five years for the election of the Universal House of Justice..." (p. 60); "Members of the Universal House of Justice, the international governing body of the worldwide Bahá'í community..." (p. 79).

Impressing the audience

-----

The publications assume that a non-Bahá'í audience is not interested in detail. The World Centre's review of the first series of The Bahá'í World concluded that the series was a "detailed record" that resulted from the tendency of the writers and editors to provide an "exhaustive treatment" of community activities. These, it argues, were of intense interest to Bahá'ís, many of whom were personally involved in the projects, but not to the general reader (1992-93 pp. 9-10).

The result for the new series is a run of articles that give uninteresting descriptions of events supported by very little detail. In the 1993-94

volume, the section "Year in Review" is 50 pages long and made up of separate sections each focusing on a specific event, area of service or topic. With little to relieve the tedium, most follow a formula: a description of what happened, where it happened and who was there (those considered important), with a brief description of what was discussed.

To take one paragraph at random: "Five Bahá'í singers and musicians were among those who performed for the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting held in Cyprus in October. Alex Zografov directed the musical opening, Vic Salvo played the piano, and three members of the Zografov family sang in the choir. The performance moved many of the forty-eight leaders of Commonwealth Nations so greatly that some of them commented on it in their speeches" (p. 121). Be honest. Could you cope with that for 50 pages?

The article on the "Conference of Bahá'í Counsellors" tells us that:

"Issues concerning questions about the Faith raised by interested members of the public and attacks launched by opponents, the role of the Teaching Centre in encouraging systematic study of the Faith, the production and dissemination of Bahá'í literature, and the flow of pioneers and travelling teachers were also discussed" (1993-94 p. 66). No more detail is provided; there is no attempt to describe, much less analyse, what was discussed, and no attempt to clarify why the House of Justice considered the event "highly significant". The reader is left to wonder what could be meant by such phrases as "attacks launched by opponents".

Besides being uninteresting, I am at a loss to see how this information is of use to a 'serious scholar'. Beyond the general documenting of events for the year, the statistics, the obituaries and basic reference material, I suggest that the most telling aspect of the publications is what they don't say. Where is the heart and soul of the community? I could find almost nothing that reflected the community's humanity - people with foibles, people who make mistakes, people who are passionate.

Contrast this with the more than 100 pages devoted to the persecutions of the Bahá'ís in Iran in The Bahá'í World 1979-83. Although some of it would be excluded if the selection was restricted, as suggested, to material relating to the relevant years, most of what is included is relevant. As discovered in the review of the old series, the pages reveal a careful and loving attention to detail, with all sorts of useful material: photographs of those killed, personal accounts of persecution, reproductions of key documentation, maps, and exhaustive detail in the text. I cannot understand why this kind of information "will have a diminished importance in the eyes of general readers" (1992-93 p. 10). It is precisely this kind of detail that makes the publication useful and interesting. Although the editors state that their intention was to retain the positive aspects characteristic of the old series (1992-93 p. 12), I cannot see any evidence of this;

for example, the obituaries have been reduced from the short biographies of
the earlier series to a few cursory remarks.

There is one important exception. The article by William Collins, "The Bahá'í Faith in the Eyes of the World: What the Print Media Report About
the Bahá'í Faith" is interesting and informative, being crammed full of actual examples and detail. It has been put together by someone who knows the subject well and is able to analyse it and make intelligent comments
about
it. He describes the trends in the media's coverage of the Faith, explains events that sparked changes, and isolates themes that the media has taken up about the community. The article even mentions, albeit briefly, possible *challenges* for the Bahá'ís with regard to its relationship with the media
(1992-93 p. 167). Another article in the same volume that held my interest
was "The Case of the Bahá'í Minority in Iran", by Douglas Martin. It was informative, and written in a style that kept the story moving.

Language and style

-----

The volumes are verbose, with an overuse of passive sentences and nominal
phrases, and have an impersonal, dry PR quality:

"Among these are the aspiration that development activities will contribute to a rehabilitation of human society and will eliminate extremes of poverty and wealth, a belief that a desire to serve others is ultimately the most outstanding motivation for participation in development activities, and

the conviction that high standards of morality can and should be intentionally cultivated by every person." (1992-93 p. 231)

At some difficult points, unsupported generalisations fill the gaps:

"One of the principle [sic] teachings of Bahá'u'lláh is the equality of
the sexes, and throughout its brief history, the Bahá'í community has achieved
an extraordinary record in this area." (1993-94 p. 83)

In some sections, the authors are clearly writing for an external audience of policy-makers or academics and use language that they think would be usual in these circles, without themselves mastering or perhaps understanding it. The results are verbose, giving the appearance of analysis, without the substance:

"The development activities of the Bahá'í community express a well-articulated alternative paradigm of development, of interest in its unusual approaches to the dilemmas of sustainability, of meaningful project design, and equitable North/South interaction." (1992-93 p. 229)

Other sections are written without any apparent thought for an external audience; preachy, but preaching only to the converted:

"They [the letters of the House of Justice] show how the supreme elected institution ordained by Bahá'u'lláh in His writings functions, protecting the Bahá'í community from persecution and division, applying the Bahá'í teachings for the current situation, guiding the Bahá'í community in its course of development, and sharing news of both crisis and victory in the Bahá'í world." (1993-94 p. 47)

Essays and statements

**-----
As mentioned earlier, the publications contain essays and statements. In keeping with the purpose of The Bahá'í World as a yearbook, I think that essays should be included only if they are linked to some event that occurs during the year and needs extended comment. For example, the essay on The Kitab-i-Aqdas in the 1992-93 issue is justified, given that the release of that book during the year was a big event for the community. On the other hand, the essay on The Kitab-i-Aqdas included in the subsequent issue has nothing to do with the 1993-94 year. Worse, it is 47 pages long and, along with other essays, placed in the middle of the issue, breaking up the flow of information for the year.

Apart from this, I see no reason to include essays. The role of The Bahá'í World is to report what the Bahá'ís are doing in scholarship, not enter the arena of scholarship itself. It is striking how little space is actually devoted to Bahá'í scholarship: the 1992-93 volume makes no reference to it whatsoever, and the 1993-94 volume devotes just three pages to it.

With regard to statements, if a particularly important statement comes out for the year, there may be reason to include it as an appendix. Otherwise, I recommend listing the statements for the year - perhaps with summaries - and providing references or contact details for those wanting copies.

Conclusion

**-----

I recommend that the editors of The Bahá'í World focus on producing a yearbook that describes and analyses in detail the events of the year, with references to sources where readers can obtain further information. All background information on the Faith and any statements that must be included belong in appendices.

The editors should revisit the whole issue of content, bearing in mind that the 'human' element of our experience is attractive to readers, who will be looking for glimpses of themselves in the pages - evidence of people on real spiritual journeys, not reports of administrative meetings and events involving famous people.

I strongly advise the editors to abandon the impersonal, self-congratulating language in favour of a personal, straightforward tone and style.
From: "Steve Marshall" <asmارش@es.co.nz>
Subject: Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights &

Marshall Case

Date: Sunday, April 02, 2000 8:11 AM

>I know nothing of the situation regarding Ms Marshall beyond what has been >reported here (and it would be typical of the Faith if no mention of this >incident is ever reported in official Baha'i media) but on what has been >reported here, if it is accurate, Ms Marshall's rights seem to have been >ignored.

I can vouch for Alison's story. The terse letter from her national spiritual assembly, informing her of the Universal House of Justice's charges and decision, came out of the blue. I think the letter was terse because her national assembly was simply passing on a message. It seems to have had no other part in the process.

The message talked about "an established pattern of statements by [her] and behaviour and attitude on [her] part over the past two or three years". Yet no Baha'i administrative body so much as hinted to Alison that it had any concerns, right up until the email was received.

There was no consultation and no warning - just an arbitrary decision from the House terminating 20 years of membership. I think the lack of due process was shameful.

This new practice of removal from Baha'i membership is, not surprisingly, undocumented. There's plenty of information on deprivation of membership rights, withdrawal from membership and expulsion for covenant-breaking, but none on removal of Baha'i membership. When Michael McKenny had his membership removed a few years ago I asked for documentation on the practice and was told there wasn't any because it happened very infrequently and each situation generally turned on its own facts.

ka kite

SteveFrom: "Steve Marshall" <asmارش@es.co.nz>

Subject: Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights & Marshall Case

Date: Tuesday, April 04, 2000 6:01 PM

>I'm afraid you now have me rather confused. We've been led to believe that >Ms. Marshall's expulsion was without any warning. Now you tell me that >there's been communication during the past 15 years. These seem rather >incompatible with each other.

The appeals I was speaking of have nothing to do with Alison's expulsion. Here's a letter I wrote to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of New Zealand. It lists some of those appeals.

30/10/99

At 12:16 PM 28/10/99 +1300, you wrote:

>28 October 1999

>

>Dear Steve,

>

>The National Spiritual Assembly asked me to follow up with you the concern >you raised in the meeting with ABM Mina Moayyed about the fact that in your >experience due process doesn't exist and that your appeals "just >disappear". Peter Manins, who was at the meeting, as you know, mentioned >that you had raised this concern, and the National Assembly felt that I >should enquire from you about the specifics so that it can follow up on >anything that you feel is outstanding.

>

>I would be happy to get more information from you so as to pursue this >matter on your behalf. The National Spiritual Assembly is certainly keen to >resolve any outstanding matters, and to put your mind at rest about >administrative processes in the Faith.

>
>Looking forward to hearing from you.

Hi Suzanne

Due process
-----

When I've dealt with assemblies, I've seen very little attention paid to due process. I've generally not been told of the process the assembly planned to follow. And when there has been a process it often hasn't been followed. For example, with Baha'i review for Forum magazine it seemed that the reviewers were only kept on time and on-task when we contacted national office to say that the reviewers were missing deadlines or going outside the parameters of their task. I also felt that we saw no improvement in the process. We said that if things didn't improve we'd have to close the magazine, and in the end that's what we did.

Another example concerns sanctions and Baha'i membership. It seems there is no comprehensive list of offences for which a person could lose her administrative rights. A few years ago I wrote to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States, asking that a friend of mine be informed just why his administrative rights had been removed. The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of New Zealand was involved when the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States wrote to it about my appeal. At the time I agreed to stop writing to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States, but appealed to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of New Zealand to take the matter up with the Universal House of Justice. I've heard no more, and my friend is still in limbo-land.

Just a few years ago a friend in Canada had his Baha'i membership removed. I've been a Baha'i for a while now and I'd not heard of the process. Auxiliary Board member Mina Moayyed and Counsellor Heather
Simpson weren't able to find any documentation on it

>From: "cbcsimpson" <cbcsimpson@xtra.co.nz>

>To: "Steve Marshall" <forumbahai@es.co.nz>

>Subject: Re: Removal from Baha'i membership

>Date: Sat, 14 Nov 1998 22:44:5

**>

**> . . .

**>

>Removal from Baha'i membership appears to be a different sort of procedure >and does not appear to be a sanction as we understand the term in New >Zealand. I am not familiar with the procedures adopted in Canada and I can >think of only a small number of situations in this area which bear any >resemblance to "removal from membership". Those that I know of involved

>individuals with little or no knowledge of the Faith and its Laws who broke >the Laws out of ignorance. Each case was approached separately. There >were no defined procedures as the circumstances were quite unusual. In >each case the responsible Assembly sought the guidance of the Universal

>House of Justice and after extensive investigation and consultation it was >accepted that the individuals concerned were never properly enrolled in the >Faith. In such a situation the application of administrative sanctions

>would have had little influence on the individuals involved.

**>

>I am not aware of settled rules/guidelines for removal from Baha'i

>membership as the only cases that I know about turned on their own facts.

>As far as I know the procedure is rarely used.

In *****, I was working as a librarian and was a member of a professional library association. One of its rules of conduct concerned the privacy rights of library users. I was also librarian for the local Assembly. The Assembly asked me to report whether a community member had borrowed certain books. I refused, on the grounds that this was outside my professional code of conduct. The local Assembly then contacted the national Assembly. As I recall, the national Assembly's letter in reply indicated that a local Assembly could require anything it wished of its officers. At no point did the national Assembly consult with me.

Appeals just disappear

**-----

Examples:

1. Some 15 years ago, ***** and I were on the South Island Children's Camp Committee. We asked the Dunedin Assembly to appoint a Children's Camp Steering Committee to run a children's camp. to cut a long story short, a person who wasn't even appointed to the steering committee took over the children's camp. He justified his coup on the basis that he'd rung national office, talked to the secretary, (it was before your time, Suzanne!) and the South Island Children's Camp Committee had been over-ridden. I was attending the camp, and was powerless to do anything about the situation, but determined to sort out the mess after the camp. The South Island Children's Camp Committee wrote a letter of complaint to the National Assembly, which was basically ignored. It even confronted the national secretary at a conference. Again nothing happened.

At that children's camp there were serious safety issues. For example, children were being transported long distances (up to 100km) on the back of an open truck, along State Highway one.

2. Since December, I've been asking the ***** Assembly about its policies concerning advertising in the newsletter, with reference to a couple of specific circumstances. Despite repeated requests for a response, I've only been given a copy of the National Assembly's recent guidelines for newsletters, which really does not address or answer my questions.

3. A few years ago, a Baha'i effectively stole our car. We'd lent it to him with strict instructions about where and how it was to be used. For example, it was to stay within a 150km radius of Dunedin, be used to organise a ***, and to be under his control at all times. I had to go to Christchurch to retrieve the car, which had been left with *****. *****. It had about $500 worth of damage done to it.

The Baha'i had gone up to ***** and the next thing we knew, he was an assistant. We wrote to the Auxiliary Board member, ***** ***, detailing the behaviour of his new assistant, including his threats of physical violence to friends who objected to having their phone used for toll calls, and were told that we and others were backbiting and we must trust people like this assistant more. We wrote back and have heard nothing more.

4. A few years ago, I wrote criticising an article on the Internet in the National Newsletter, and offering to write a balancing article. I was thanked and told that space in the newsletter was pretty tight, but I'd be considered in the future. Again, effectively, my appeal just disappeared.

5. Alison has put a lot of work into various statements and discussion papers. And they just seem to disappear - the race unity statement and the discussion paper on women.

-----

I bring these examples up because you ask for specifics, but I'm not expecting resolution. I realise that, in most cases, it's too late for that now. I prefer to wait for change and improvement, but honestly, I don't see any sign of it. The international treatment of Baha'i academics that I've witnessed over the last 5 years has been just appalling. Don't get me started. :-)

Do you know, I now plan my life so as to avoid entanglement with Baha'i administration as much as possible, and I've never been happier or more productive.

ka kite,
Steve

From: "Steve Marshall" <asmash@es.co.nz>
Subject: Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights & Marshall Case
Date: Thursday, April 13, 2000 5:35 AM

>I've asked this question before, and no one has answered it: precisely what >was the Universal House of Justice to learn from asking Ms. Marshall that >the members didn't already know?

Hi again, Rick

What I get from your question is an attitude that the House pretty much knows everything, so it doesn't really need to make any enquiries or check facts. Correct me if I'm wrong.

Here are some things the House could have learned/avoided by making some enquiries:

The House, by its own admission, expelled Alison for a 2-3 year pattern of behaviour and attitude. If it had pointed out its concerns
to her over that period, she would have had an opportunity to reconsider her actions. She had no inkling that her behaviour and attitude was of concern to the institutions.

If the House had presented Alison with concrete examples of the sorts of behaviour and attitude that were of concern, then she could have told it whether its examples were indeed from her, or from someone pretending to be her. This isn't as silly as it sounds.
Alison lives her Baha'i life on the Internet, where one's identity is attached to emails and the like, and is easily forged.

The House could also have listened to the hierarchies of the "rulers"
and the "learned" to pick up on whether there was any sort of a problem in Dunedin, New Zealand, that required it to act. The institutions of the "rulers" and the "learned" in New Zealand gave Alison no hints that they considered her, or anyone else for that matter, to be a problem. Alison got personal assurances to the contrary, and both the Dunedin Assembly and its Auxiliary Board member for Protection separately assured the Dunedin community in 1999 that they were not aware of any problem in New Zealand related to the 7
April letter.

If, as I suspect, the House's concerns about "attitude and behaviour"

relate to Alison's postings on Talisman, then Alison could have cleared the matter up quite simply by informing the House that it was acting outside its jurisdiction by interfering in matters of conscience and theology. Then it could perhaps have gone back to legitimate concerns such as concentrating on legislation, and promoting world peace.

ka kite

SteveFrom: "Steve Marshall" <asmارش@es.co.nz>

Subject: Re: Infallibility: The Larger Issue

Date: Wednesday, May 31, 2000 4:03 AM

>>Though the brochures and adverts would claim the contrary, >>independent investigation of truth is not an option for the followers of

>>Baha'u'llah:

>And I disagree strongly with your statement about independent >investigation not being an option.

It's certainly not been an option for Alison Marshall.

The Universal

House of Justice (UHJ), the international governing body of the Haifan

Baha'is, has decided that she doesn't believe the right things and won't accept that she has a right to discuss those things on a members-only Internet discussion group, Talisman.

(Well, that seems to be the situation - the ruling against her and the letters sent by the UHJ to those who protested are vague about the charges)

The result is that the UHJ has removed her from membership in the Baha'i community. That clearly says to me that freedom of conscience and freedom of speech is so circumscribed in the Baha'i Faith that independent investigation of the truth takes a real back seat to blind faith when one becomes a card-carrying Baha'i.

That's no problem for people who think they've found the truth when they become Baha'is, and it's no problem for people who accept a monolithic religion. But you can pretty much forget more than token, tolerated, diversity. And for that reason the Baha'i Faith will remain obscure and of minority interest unless it revisions itself.

ka kite
Steve

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From the first volume of Alexis De Tocqueville's (d.1859) magisterial Democracy in America (Mansfield/ Winthrop edition/translation) p.42 (Chicago: 2000). He quotes the following extract from Cotton Mather's Magnalia Christi Americana, or, the Ecclesiastical History of New England vol. 1 116-117 (Hartford: 1820) regarding the Puritan idea of 'Liberty.' Mather is in turn quoting John Winthrop. De Tocquivlle refers to this passage as a "fine definition of liberty":

"Concerning liberty, I observe a great mistake in the country about that. There is a twofold liberty, natural (I mean as our nature is now corrupt) and civil or federal. The first is common to man with beast and other creatures. By this, man, as he stands in relation to man simply, hath liberty to do what he lists; it is a liberty to evil as well as to good. This liberty is compatible and inconsistent with authority, and cannot endure the least restraint of the most just authority. The exercise and maintaining of this liberty makes men grow more evil, and in time to be worse than brute beasts: Omnes Sumus Licentia Deteriores. This is that great enemy of truth and peace, that wild beast, which all the ordinances of God are bent against, to restrain and subdue it. The other kind of liberty I call civil or federal; it may also be termed moral, in reference to the covenant between God and man, in the moral law, and the politic covenants and constitutions, among men themselves. This liberty is the proper end and object of authority, and cannot subsist without it; and it is a liberty to that only which is good, just, and honest. This liberty you are to stand for, with hazard not only of your goods, but of your lives, if need be. Whatsoever crosseth this, is not authority, but a distemper thereof. This liberty is maintained and exercised in a way of subjection to authority; it is of the same kind of liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."

Quoted from my own copy of De Tocqueville, Editor Phillips Bradley, 1945; 9th printing, 1961, 44-45. De

Tocqueville's further comments on this passage would be well worth reflecting on. Thanks to Nima Hazini for bringing this passage to my attention.

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Michael McKenny

McKenny's "embryonic web page"

<https://www.geocities.com/solarguard/bahai/index.html>

Further documentation regarding the uhj's treatment of Michael McKenny may be found at:

<https://www2.h-net.msu.edu/~bahai/docs/vol3/mckenny.htm>

---

2003

Selected Messages 2003

---

2002

Selected Messages 2002

---

2001

Selected Messages 2001

---

2000

Selected Messages 2000

---

1999

Re: UHJ Fundamentalist Fantasy \(Reply to Susan and all\) 8/16/99

UHJ Fundamentalist Fantasy \(Reply to Susan and all\) 8/15/99

Re: Wisdom of Reviewing Before Publication 7/26/99

Re: One area in which Liberty is Limited in the Baha'i Community 7/25/99

Re: One area in which Liberty is Limited in the Baha'i Community

7/21/99

Re: Shoghi Effendi believed 1963 would be the calamity year 7/16/99

Re: Shoghi Effendi believed 1963 would be the calamity year meeting with Susie Tamas 7/16/99

Re: Shoghi Effendi believed 1963 would be the calamity year 7/12/99

Re: Saddened 7/2/99

Re: Juan Cole's theory of mutilation 6/7/99

Re: House warns of opposition "campaign" 6/2/99

Re: Questons And Answers 5/27/99

Re: non non-Baha'is revisited 3/10/99

Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Freedom of Conscience
2/13 /99

Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Freedom of Conscience
2/9/99

Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Freedom of Conscience
2/6/99

Re: All Baha'is are Pseudo-Baha'is 2/1/99

Re: Censorship 2/1/99

Re: What is a Cult? and McKenny case 1/30/99

Re: rmgroup: soc.religion.bahai \(Re: Annotated NO voters - 3rd interest poll\) 1/29/99

Testamonials From Infallible Sources 1/28/99

Re: Scent of the Bahji Rose 1/26/99

Re: To UHJ July 24, 1998 1/25/99

Redefining the Baha'i Faith 1/24/99

Re: To UHJ July 24, 1998 1/22/99

---

1998

The talk.religion.bahai poll has begun 12/18/98

Trying a More Constructive Approach 2/12/98

Re Who Talisman and Where Answer 2/19/98

Re So-called totalitarianism 2/16/98

Re Shunning Stories 2/8/98

Re Attacks 2/11/98

More on Trying Constructively 2/12/98

---

1997

Re Anonymous Remailers 12/8/97

Loyalty to the Covenant 12/10/97

For Those Suspicious of the UHJ 12/10/97

Letter to UHJ and Reply 4/10/97

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From talisman-errors@umich.edu Thu Feb 12 07:20:49 1998
Received: (from root@localhost)
by redheat.rs.itd.umich.edu (8.8.5/2.5) with X.500 id KAA13522; Thu, 12 Feb 1998 10:12:58 -0500 (EST)
Received: (from root@localhost)
by redheat.rs.itd.umich.edu (8.8.5/2.5) with X.500 id KAA13515 for talisman-members@umich.edu; Thu, 12 Feb 1998 10:12:58 -0500 (EST) Received: from freenet1.carleton.ca (freenet1.carleton.ca [134.117.136.20])
by redheat.rs.itd.umich.edu (8.8.5/2.5) with ESMTP id KAA13449 for <talisman@umich.edu>; Thu, 12 Feb 1998 10:12:51 -0500 (EST) Received: from freenet5.carleton.ca.carleton.ca (bn872@freenet5.carleton.ca [134.117.136.25])
by freenet1.carleton.ca (8.8.8/8.8.8/NCF_f1_v2.02) with ESMTP id KAA04194;
Thu, 12 Feb 1998 10:12:48 -0500 (EST)
Received: (bn872@localhost) by freenet5.carleton.ca.carleton.ca (8.8.5/NCF-Sun-Client) id KAA23192; Thu, 12 Feb 1998 10:12:47 -0500 (EST)
Date: Thu, 12 Feb 1998 10:12:47 -0500 (EST)
Message-Id: <199802121512.KAA23192@freenet5.carleton.ca.carleton.ca>
From: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca (McKenny Michael)
To: Smaneck@berry.edu
Subject: Trying A More Constructive Approach
Cc: talisman@umich.edu
Reply-To: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca

Greetings, Susan, from Ottawa.

If you are well, it is well.

I think what you said now was that very little of what I posted to Talisman was spam. Okay. Fine.

Moving on, you may not be right (possibilities are many) and still you raise a valid point. It is possible that had I not posted the letter I received from the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Canada which arrived out of the blue to say that I could no longer be considered a member of the Baha'i community on the assessment of the Universal House of Justice, then such information may not have been made public.

I will go further. There are other possibilities, and still one possibility is that on the basis of my clear statement on the need to follow principle over orders from leadership, the Universal House of Justice felt that were they to continue any extended process of communication with me this would have resulted in no change on my part and would have left them with the feeling they had to declare me a Covenant Breaker, on the grounds, which I don't accept as valid cause for such an action, that I wasn't obeying them.

Personally, I strongly feel that they owed me one direct order concisely stated "Stop posting," and after that they could have said "Since he didn't obey an unambiguous command from us, he can't be considered a Baha'i." This thing about wording it "member of the Baha'i community" doesn't wash with me, as I don't believe there is any category such as Baha'is not members of the community. The point is that they did not do this. They did not say, "Hey, didn't you say to Susie Tamas that you'd stop talking about women once we answered you." Even the notice I was out of the community, sent without warning, was sent by the Canadian NSA.

For the record, I felt my letter to them was treated summarily and that I was sent copies of material which had prompted me to write to them in the first place, along with something new which was an inaccurate statement.

So, yes, one possible understanding is that they felt however lengthy a process they continued with me there could be no better outcome than the step they took.

For the record, I have always said that a Covenant Breaker is one who asserts to be head of the Baha'i Faith contrary to the accepted transmission of authority, or one who backs such a self-declared head. Period. And I have never done anything of that kind. I have always called on the accepted head of the Baha'i Faith to act so as to increase the actual authority (as opposed to syllables and sounds, letters and words penned on paper) and respect of the accepted head.

The real drunk is the one who imagines any order soever, even one in violation of fundamental principle must be obeyed, that there may by investigation of members for their personal understanding of the Writings, that independent investigation of truth and freedom of expression may be interfered with, that people may be encouraged to resign from the Faith on the grounds of their understanding of the sacred text and on their exercise of the principle of freedom of expression, etc.

The shouting and screaming going on is a response to this abuse. It may not be optimum behavior, and, I, for one, would be happy to see instead discourse continually at a very lofty level. I have lately repeatedly told you that insofar as what I have direct control over I am quite attentive to any constructive ideas you may contribute to the consultation encouraging this to happen.

Now, if you have nothing else to say, except that any order soever really must be obeyed, that really it is not alcoholic consumption that women are excluded from the Universal House of Justice, that there is censorship, that there are literalist understandings of scripture which must alone be believed, or at least which alone must be uttered in public, that individuals in theory charged with diffusing the divine fragrances really are going around looking into the beliefs of believers and pressuring these believers to shut up, if they believe something other than the party line, that efforts were taken (are they continuing?) to drive the liberals, or at least the outspoken ones out of the Baha'i Faith, then again I say you are refusing to look at the place where you do live, and what constructive result emerges from such shut eyes?

I have said before that up here we take a dim view of the "Planet" (an argument such as either a planet is entirely composed of land, or it is entirely composed of water). You suggest that either the Universal House of Justice is unprincipled and the Baha'i Faith will never amount to anything, or the Universal House of Justice is the perfect expression of the divine will and inevitably Paradise will be reflected on Earth.

My reading of history leads me to accept this "Planet" no more than the general run of the lot.

I believe that previous monotheistic religions achieved some kind of success despite unprincipled leadership, unethical behavior, intolerance and oppression.

There are no absolutes. There were a great number of decent people living in Medieval Christian Europe or under the Umayyad Caliphate, etc. Yet, the rise to power of such religions did not take place in ways most pleasing to the divine.

You are completely free to believe what you like.

And I hope it is a quite understandable belief, however much you may not agree with it, that history could conceivably repeat itself.

And why in the world is it impossible for the Baha'i Faith to achieve principled leadership. Indeed, what I think Baha'is ought to be using all their alleged consultative skills considering is how may there be a transformation of present reality into the stage of principled leadership and all the other aspects of maturing Baha'i and human life.

Indeed, it is an understandable interpretation of reality that the very crisis of the outspoken liberals is part of the process of divine favour. Without justifying shouting, yet, one way of looking at things is that attempts to freeze the Faith in a mould contrary to the divine pleasure (one allowed, as such has always been allowed in the past, due to human free will; why else failed Ali, Husayn and all the imams?) have produced a response and this response, this crisis, however it is defined, is an opportunity to ponder deeply the real purpose of the revelation, and the means by which this may honourably, ethically and in ever increasing accord with principle, be achieved.

So, there is definitely sense in striving to see beneficial change whether or not what transpires in future history is a repetition of the past or some other unpleasant reality. The future is filled with possibilities, including some very beneficial ones. So, of course trying to foster beneficial change is a worthwhile activity, even if the attempt ultimately fails.

And, quite sincerely, if one possibility is that this pagan finds himself living around the year 155 C.E. with the ability to attempt to reduce the likelihood of the fundamentalist intolerance which so savagely impacted pagan civilization, then his continued attention to reducing fundamentalism and intolerance is surely understandable.

I am all ears if you know other methods more likely to achieve the desired result.

My contribution to the process of consultation you mention is:

The identification of the problem as the relative inattention to the fundamental principles of the Baha'i Faith;

The raising of principle in this consultation, for example, the independent investigation of truth, unity in diversity, the freedom of thought and expression, harmony of science and religion, and the complete equality of men and women;

My initial tentative solutions are:

The announcement by the Universal House of Justice that women may be elected to the Universal House of Justice, the lifting of review, the cessation of investigations of believers for expressing beliefs and understandings, the cessation of language from official sources expressed in inimical terms, and,

A much greater attempt by all believers and others (including Michael McKenny) to speak without yelling and name-calling;

A much greater attempt by each to perceive the other, especially those in positions of responsibility according to the positive light as advised by the Central Figures of the Baha'i Faith. By the way, as I understand it, in general, the antagonistic view of good and evil is much more resonant in pagan thought, and treating what I perceive as oppressive leadership positively, which I always tried to do when I was a Baha'i, would, in general be seen as misguided; yet it still seems to me that if everyone treats those who don't agree with them as enemies, then this is less conducive to a real solution, not that tolerating the degree of unprincipled leadership currently existing is the answer.

A greater effort by believers to carry out the decisions of the institutions of the Baha'i Faith, within reason, i.e. that these decisions are not contrary to fundamental principle, and that what does not work will be changed.

The only one of these under my personal control is to strive to stop shouting and use more elevated discourse. I will try, and, acting in isolation is very difficult. This is not a promise to cease posting nor even to cease stating what I believe are the crying needs of the Baha'i Faith, especially in the absence of any visible and beneficial action to respond to these needs.

And I am all ears to your constructive contribution to this consultation.

May this find you very well, and may the days to come be better than the days that were.

All the Best,
Michael

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: McKenny Michael <bn872@freenet.carleton.ca>
To: FG@hotmail.com <FG@hotmail.com>
Cc: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca <bn872@freenet.carleton.ca>
Subject: Re: The Talk.Religion.Bahai Interest Poll has begun.
Date: Friday, December 18, 1998 4:19 AM

Greetings, Frederick.

If you are well, it is well.

I remain very busy, and I still owe you some comment.

The reality is that I have moved on. When I saw everything from a Baha'i perspective I acted accordingly. I exerted all my effort in what I considered the most effective way to achieve the most essential goals. When the Universal House of Justice demonstrated that its purpose was to remain a dictatorial and unethical institution, when they declared that I was not a Baha'i, then, I assessed not merely my status within a Baha'i context, but the context itself.

I do not find fault with anyone who strives, as I did, to effect change within the context. You are to be highly praised for your efforts and your intent.

My present analysis is that the Baha'i Faith, because of its attempt to provide an over-arching system, its absolutist language on authority and the quite imperfect and undemocratic individuals rising to positions of power, could be a very dangerous thing.

Further, my understanding is that the most effective response to this danger is to allow the Baha'i Faith to collapse on its own. The system is designed to flourish if attacked. I will leave it alone.

I will not provide it any publicity which could bring it to the attention of those whose support for democracy and human rights are too weak to deter them from enlisting under its banner and backing the existing policies of its current leadership.

The Baha'i experience has greatly influenced my understanding of the benefits of absolute power in any form. I do not accept any present institution, past historical figure or even any god as having absolute power. My present realization is that monotheism itself is illegitimate and Abraham, Moses and Jesus, as all who have sought or been represented as having sought to assert hegemony over human perception of the divine, were incorrect.

In this light, I am growing in my attraction to the way of thinking, belief and worship of my ancestors, prior to the arrival of monotheism. Pagan gods in their number and diversity, as well as in their avoidance of insistence on absolute perfection, are more in tune with the needs of human beings. Humans are not slaves to receive orders requiring unthinking obedience. We have personal responsibility for ethical action.

I write this on one of my Holy Days, the Feast of the Goddess Epona. Blessings be upon you and yours this day and all days. And, whatever personal perceptions you may have of these issues, may you at least understand that I do sincerely think and feel now as I have explained above. And from my perception it is not such a bad thing at all if the vote goes against TRB, and an avenue of drawing something potentially quite dangerous to those of a like mindset does not come into being.

And if you win, may all the gods bless the efforts to transform this religious system into one truly tolerant and able to benefit the human species.

Fare ever Well,
Michael

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Numerous other messages by and about Michael McKenny

25 July 1997

Mr Michael McKenny
424 Cambridge Street South
Ottawa, Ontario K1S 4H5

Dear Mr. McKenny,

The Universal House of Justice has advised us of its conclusion that, on the basis of the correspondence it has had with you and the established pattern of behaviour you have demonstrated over the past several months, you cannot properly be considered a member of the Baha'i community. Accordingly we have removed your name from our membership rolls and have informed the Baha'i institutions concerned.

Sincerely,

National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Canada

Judy L. Filson

---

13 August 1997/ 13 Perfection 154

Mr. Michael McKenny
424 Cambridge Street South
Ottawa, ON K1S 4H5

Dear Mr. McKenny,

We have your e-mail message of 31 July 1997, transmitting a copy of a letter which you have addressed to the Universal House of Justice. You mention that you have published copies of both to various internet lists. This being the case, you should note that the House of Justice does not respond to communications handled in this manner.

You should note, too, that the conclusion reached by the House of Justice that you cannot properly be considered a member of the Baha'i community was in no way related to any failure on your part to write the additional letter you described. As we stated in our own letter to you, this decision was based entirely on your pattern of behaviour and attitude, as reflected in your correspondence.

Sincerely,
National Spiritual
Assembly of the Baha'is of Canada
Reginald Newkirk,
Secretary

---

Date sent: Mon, 18 Aug 1997 13:55:10 -0400 (EDT)
From: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca (McKenny Michael)
To: h-bahai@h-net.msu.edu
Subject: My Request for Clarification
Copies to: smaneck@berry.edu
Send reply to: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca

To the Universal House of Justice

Greetings from Ottawa.

Although on the day I received from the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Canada a notice that on your assessment I was no longer a member of the Baha'i community I addressed to you a message seeking to respond on the basis of my instant deductions as to what may have prompted such a decision, and although since that time I have continued to speculate as to what could have been the reasons for this it seems more constructive that I place the following question before you that I may affirm your assessment, attempt to clarify any misunderstanding which may exist, or consider any other steps which you may draw to my attention:

"What were the specific reasons for your assessment that I am not a member of the Baha'i community, and what is required for this to change?"

I would be grateful if your reply could confirm or deny your desire to receive from me the response to your communication to me dated April 8, 1997 which I had stated I would try to send by July 20th.

I look forward to hearing from you.

May this find you very well, and may that long be so.

Peace,
Michael

---

Date: Sun Sep 7 08:56:01 1997
From: (Catherine Woodgold) Subject: Natural Justice

To: secretariat@bwc.org
Cc: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca,

To the Universal House of Justice:

I want you to know that my respect for you has diminished significantly because of the manner in which you expelled Michael McKenny from the Baha'i community.

Religion usually has fundamental importance in a person's psychological, emotional and social life, and expelling a person from their religion is a very serious matter. If it is to be done at all, certain principles of natural justice should be followed -- especially if the institution initiating the expulsion boldly carries the word "Justice" in its name!

A person who is expelled should be informed of the reason for the expulsion. Michael was not so informed. He was given extremely vague statements about "behaviour" and "attitude" -- but since everyone exhibits some form of behaviour and attitude, these statements did nothing to explain the expulsion. He was provided with a small amount of information: that it had something to do with his correspondence. This is not sufficient to satisfy the principle of natural justice that he should be informed of the reason.

You should have a finite list of written rules that Baha'is are expected to follow, and you should tell Michael which rule or rules he failed to follow which led to his expulsion, as well as which specific acts of his were considered by you to be violations of those rules.

You should have warned Michael in writing that he might be expelled and told him what rules he was breaking and what he would have to do to avoid being expelled. Although Susan Tamas talked to Michael, as far as I know she didn't warn him that he might be expelled, or state rules he should begin to follow, or provide rules in writing.

Since Michael has been expelled without explanation and without warning, I believe that many other Baha'is must now be afraid that they themselves might be expelled at any moment; and they have no way of knowing what they might be able to do to prevent such expulsion from happening.

You should have told Michael whether his expulsion is to be in effect lifelong and if not, what he would have to do to regain his status as a member of the Baha'i community.

You should also have provided more clarification about what his status is now. Can he be a Baha'i without being a member of the Baha'i community? How does his status differ from that of a Baha'i whose administrative rights have been removed?

It's my understanding that the founders of the Baha'i faith did not bestow upon the Universal House of Justice the authority to expell people from the Baha'i community, and that they did not plan that anyone be expelled except for Covenant-breakers, which apparently you are not accusing Michael of being, nor has he behaved as such. It would be interesting to see if you can provide quotes from the Baha'i Writings to justify your authority to take such action.

In summary: Even if, in spite of the name of your institution, you have not set up a system of "due process", there are still principles of natural justice which you should follow. You should have warned Michael, you should have explained why, you should have clarified his current and future status, and maybe you shouldn't have expelled him in the first place. (Some of these deficiencies can be corrected by providing more information to him now.) Those are the reasons why I have less respect for the Universal House of Justice than I once did.

By the way, I am writing this on my own initiative; Michael made no suggestion to me to do so.

Catherine Woodgold

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: McKenny Michael <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Freedom of Conscience

Date: Saturday, February 13, 1999 7:26 AM

Greetings, Pat, from Ottawa.

Many thanks for your comments.

Pat, if everyone in the Baha'i Faith really behaved as you say you do, there would be no trouble at all in the religion at a personal level. In my opinion, you are doing precisely what Baha'u'llah asked all his followers to do.

You say that if Baha'u'llah wrote that Baha'is are to recite 95 times a day the greatest name that's what you do, and here you are telling us about it, and anyone who understands this passage otherwise than you do is free to have and to share and to act upon this other understanding. What has happened, at least in North America, as posts to Baha'i cyberspace indicated (though I hope experience has been beneficial and the relatively flame free nature of this newsgroup will continue forever) is that some prominent Baha'is, I mean by reputation or rank, thought they had a right, even a duty, to tell others these others had to believe everything according to the literal meaning of the words, even taken out of the context of the larger writing from which the passage appeared and the wider context of just where, when and to whom this passage had been written.

This insistence that others believe and express only the literal interpretation went from such extremes of idiocy as taking Baha'u'llah's remarks to a Persian that there are no detailed histories prior to the time of Alexander the Great, true, it seems, if we are speaking of works written in Old Persian, as tossing into a black hole the books on my shelf that were written by Herodotus, Thucydides and Xenophon to the awesome item which sparked the entire cyberspace Baha'i saga of Michael McKenny, the most blatant violation of essential Baha'i principle, the censoring of the Service of Women Paper and the whole anti-liberal response to it, rather than acknowledging the necessary eligibility of women to serve on the Universal House of Justice.

It is not plain reading that makes a world religion a cult. And, my very biting remarks at times about such plain reading impel me to seek to make the distinction crystal clear. It is the expectation that everyone else has to possess and practise such plain reading. In addition, at the most essential level, if it is plain reading rather than the fundamental, the basic, the elementary principles of the religion that officials seek to impose, in that case, this plain reading is diverting the religion from the high road of a world religion into the ditch of being a cult.

Baha'i liberals will likely be where they belong when the essential principles of the Baha'i Faith are practised.

I cannot maintain this pace. I do have a life outside this newsgroup. I do, indeed, have my trees, as you put it. However, if, to an extent, I return to what I would personally prefer to be doing, this is not a cause for complacency or relief on the part of those high officials whose real duty is to live their Baha'i life as you tell me you are doing, and hats off to you for living the life. I mean, if they wish, by all means, being able to read plainly, only not imposing such plain reading on anyone who reads otherwise, and not forcing the broad-minded and progressive movement revealed by Baha'u'llah to violate the essential principles, with which he endowed it.

My perception is that by circumstance this particular articulate person was one of the first to venture into Baha'i cyberspace and learn the lay of the land within the Faith at its higher levels. As openness increases more and more will the knowledge of what is be available to anyone, including the naturally large number of those who know there's a problem with the practise of essential principles. May they soon see the re-vitalization of the religion, may they soon witness the practise of essential Baha'i principle, may they soon behold the justly esteemed leaders of the Baha'i religion guiding a world religion. Otherwise, some of these, not because I'm party to any nefarious plot, but simply as the reasonable response of decent human beings completely unknown to me, will arise to cry out, "Hey, that's not proper..."

Pat, in my opinion, you've demonstrated a real strength in the Baha'i Faith. I hope life treats you very well, I hope the religion you're a part of does really well, while your alive to see it, and whatever the specifics of the life to come, may you be very happy there, as well.

All the Best,
Michael

>

> I accept Bahá'u'lláh's writings as they are written. In many cases, what is > written is symbolic. In many cases what is written has a plain and clear > meaning and this is the first valid meaning I draw from it. Where > Bahá'u'lláh tells me to recite the Greatest Name 95 times as day, I read that > as something for me to do. It is not my job to beat the friends up over > this; the text does not encourage me to act as a shepherd or pastor. If _you_

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: McKenny Michael <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Freedom of Conscience

Date: Tuesday, February 09, 1999 7:07 PM

Greetings, Susan.

Well, of course, we're too democratic a country to hound someone out of it for his opinion of the Prime Minister. A darn good thing that as Brian Mulroney achieved the remarkable feat of a fifteen per cent approval rate, and held that for the last two years of his period in office. And, do you think we'd be bragging about the difference between the individual who'd uttered his opinion of the Prime Minister having to apply again for his citizenship, and how it's perfectly reasonable he would only get it, if he apologized to the Prime Minister and we could be sure he would never again say anything nasty about Mr. Mulroney or any of his successors.

The United Nations didn't say this was one of the nicest places to live because we treat people like that. The Baha'i leaders might think a little bit about that.

Now, as for that pact with the devil you cite (Whenever you get a long paragraph so emphatically worded, even if it's the Ottawa/Japan Karate Company or whoever the folks are that run the place a block down the street my son was interested in, but he, we, or our heirs, rather than the "blameless" people at the karate place would have been responsible whether they or anyone else hurt our son before or after class, on or off the premises, etc., you have me automatically thinking I'm being asked to sign a pact with the devil, and whatever rich and varied harvest this family tree has produced, it's yet to generate anyone foolish enough to do that) look at that "Whatsoever has been revealed by their sacred pen". If you have fundamentalists getting their literal hands on that then your poor human signing her pact with Satan is committing himself whether she knows or it not to all sorts of things contrary to reason and principle. Do you really think, if it's really spelled out, that anyone of sound mind and a decent heart could possibly sign such a pact?

You will get some. There's some will join any cult. But, the more you spell out what's meant by the words, and, believe me, women on the universal house of justice, or rather women not being allowed on, in a religion that preaches equality, well, the fewer will be the dupes.

I ought to make it clear that, in my opinion, this quote of yours comes from a certain context, and that while and where it was in operation there were very few dupes, to such an extent that Shoghi Effendi himself instructed Baha'i teachers not to continue keeping people out of the Baha'i Faith, because of literal attention to such tremendous obstacles to membership as the quoted passage.

It is very clear that the current spirit, or the lack of it, in the Baha'i Administration has everything to do with those who are now alive and in a position to impose their literalist fundamentalism on today's functioning of the Baha'i Faith.

Sorry, but I'm not the kind of guy to blame my mother or Adam and Eve for the way I turned out. And, I'm not going to blame poor Shoghi Effendi who, in case the news missed you, passed away more than forty-one years ago for what the Universal House of Justice is doing and not doing now.

No, the literalist fundamentalism that has the Universal House of Justice casting aside the essential Baha'i principles and seeking to run the Baha'i Faith as a cult is their own responsibility, and they or their successors (Parliament cannot bind its successors) are perfectly free to deal with it.

To the Future,
Michael

Smaneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>
> Dear Michael,
>
> It wasn't a question of Dr. Cole "retaining" his membership. He had already > resigned and was examining the possibility of re-enrolling. As in the case of > Darrick I think the Institutions had every right to ascertain t

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: McKenny Michael <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Freedom of Conscience

Date: Saturday, February 06, 1999 7:54 AM

Greetings, Chris.

Many thanks for your comments. Again, you are underlining the "bug" as I see it in the Baha'i Faith, and someone ought to express this as precisely as possible for an FAQ for this newsgroup.

Chris Manvell (chris@breacais.NOdemonUCEPLEASE.co.uk) writes:

> Dear Matthew,

>

> What WOULD you have? If a religion is not based on the teachings of its > Founder (and, by explicit Writings, its leaders) who would define its > basic tenets? One only has to look at the factionalism of some other > religions to see what happens. Yes, free speech is a fundamental right > of any Baha'i or non-Baha'i but if that individual expresses opinions > that are basically counter to the teachings it can mean (in my limited > understanding) one of several things, viz, that they are a Covenant > breaker, that they have not understood (or been told about) some basic > principle of the Faith, or that they have not really understood the > station of Baha'u'llah. I am sure there are many other reasons, but > those seem to be the basic ones.

>

Now, what pray tell, are the teachings of this religion? I was told these were the agreement of faith and reason, the independent search for truth, the harmony of the human species, the prohibition of slavery, of racial prejudice, of sexual discrimination, as well as the abolition of holy wars and of religious fanaticism, etc.

Now, if you find somewhere in the literal text of thousands of pages of scripture something that appears to allow you to contravene reason, to indulge in religious fanaticism, to discriminate against women, to prevent the religion (because of this contravention of reason, this religious fanaticism, this sexual discrimination) from achieving its primary purpose of fostering the harmony of the human species, you are over-stepping the bounds of moderation to indulge in this license you imagine you have obtained.

Now, you may insist on doing what is contrary to reason, what is an example of religious fanaticism, what is sexual discrimination. You may even use Orwellian newspeak to define those non-believers who will have nothing to do with you because of your imbalance of faith over reason, your fundamentalist fanaticism, your discrimination against women as unspiritual, non-human, or whatever you like, and you can call those of your own faith who stand for the teachings of its founder by whatever names you wish. This does not alter the fact of the matter that what you have done is contrary to the teachings of the religion, and as a result of that violation of the teachings of the religion you have added to the religious contentions and divisions within the human species.

The solution to this fundamentalist bug involves giving priority to the teachings of the religion, and not enthroning the imbalance of faith, excessive literalism and male domination when the religion clearly is for the opposite characteristics.

This is the heart of the matter, and it will be fascinating for us all to watch the response of the Baha'i Faith to this diagnosis and this prognosis. Has Deity, through your prophet, endowed your religion with enough spirituality to enable you to toss away your violations of the essential teachings of the religion? Are you able to return to the broad-minded vision, the higher view, the global picture that informed your prophet's mission, that produced the progressive principles you are now sacrificing to the idols of fanatical fundamentalism, that were responsible for the growth and the widespread esteem in which your prophet's movement used to be held? Or, will a faction of your faith entrenched in positions of power continue to re-define the religion so that it is a fanatical fundamentalist cult, the furthest thing in the world from the wishes of your own prophet?

May Deity preserve humanity from that fanatical fundamentalism which has so stained the realm of the sacred. May humanity be blessed through the illuminated, blessed and harmonizing teachings so clearly expressed by the Baha'i prophet. May each of the days to come be better than the one it replaces.

To the Future,
Michael

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Saddened

Date: Saturday, July 10, 1999 9:24 AM

Greetings, Patrick.

When Juan is speaking from within the Baha'i Faith, then your words will have meaning. These things did happen in the mid 90s. These people, including Michael McKenny, so I know something about it, were pressured to leave the Baha'i Faith, because of expressing their personal views on private e-mail lists. And, it was not only that some prominent Baha'is as individual list members flamed me and told me to leave this religion. It was that there was official meeting and exchange of e-mail messages, and then when I was too thick to get it and shut up, there was, without a clear, "You must shut up or else," warning a bolt from the blue from the UHJ saying that I was out of the Baha'i community. That was not quite two years ago, so it is hardly the remote past I am raising.

The archives of this newsgroup contains references to other people who were not so thick and who resigned as a result of the pressure brought to bear on them, because they said what they thought. And, there are those who have fallen silent. I do not see them posting here.

The threat is held over peoples' heads that the UHJ may call them CBs and thus (what a wonderful, modern spiritual path is this) all the Baha'is they've known will shun them as spiritual lepers. Yum. And, you think it is unappetizing for me to write this. What is more unpalatable, the writing down of this medieval recipe or the cooking of this stale meal?

I have been very busy doing other spiritual stuff during these past few days, and only you would think otherwise as it was my holidays so I could also spend a little more time here. I post here to demonstrate now opinions may be posted openly, to deny the patriarchs a successful attempt to silence me, but, as the holidays end it is not possible to maintain an equal level of participation in what, frankly, I perceive as quite a sad and oppressive place. There is that charming letter from the UHJ in April of 1999 showing how the thinking of the UHJ about freedom of thought and expression has not much changed. There is that holiday message which Juan posted showing that people posting to a private e-mail list are having their messages sent to Hooper, a member of the UHJ, whose holiday, if I recall correctly, is to end on July 12, 1999, so it is not distant history I am citing. There was the letter of resignation posted here only a month or two ago, showing the same forces at play.

So, I wish you well, really, and hope that the environment in which you grow and the food that is placed before your eyes is most worthy of human beings in this modern age. I will continue to post here, and I will continue to hope that what has such wonderful principles will soon see them more closely followed.

And, remember you can hardly argue convincingly to me that things are rosy within the Baha'i Faith, and these principles are being followed until you have Juan speaking freely from within a harmonious group which includes women ruling at the top. Do not be unclear. I write nothing about my personal spiritual beliefs when I say this. I have been quite adequately convinced that true spiritual harmony was more closely achieved by our distant ancestors than by the monotheistic paradigm imposed and maintained often quite oppressively upon them. This does not prevent any monotheistic path from producing for those who'd follow it roses of fellowship, rather than the thorny gruel of closed-minded, exclusivist fundamentalism.

May today find you very well, may tomorrow treat you even more kindly and may each day after that be better than the one it succeeds.

All the Best,

Michael

(patk9018@my-deja.com) writes:

>
> I concur w/ Roger. The message is illogical and even distasteful. Its > repetition fails to improve it.
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Date sent: Thu, 10 Apr 1997 09:23:41 -0400 (EDT)
From: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca (McKenny Michael)
To: bahai-st@johnco.cc.ks.us
Subject: Letter to UHJ and Reply
Copies to: talisman@umich.edu
Send reply to: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca

Greetings from Ottawa.

Here's a copy of the letter sent to the Universal House of Justice on March 23rd and the reply. I've not studied the reply, so I have no comment at this time. I believe the appendices to the reply are already well-known. If not, I'll post them soon. If anyone wishes a copy of one or more of these and doesn't see the desired appendix (ices) within say 24 hours, simply ask me to send it (them).

Happy Reading,
Peace,
Michael

To the Universal House of Justice

Greetings from Ottawa.

In January when Auxiliary Board Member Susie Tamas met with me she warmly encouraged me to present my concerns about the Universal House of Justice to you. Throughout February she very attentively considered the preliminary drafts of the letter I began to compose in response. On reflection, moved by the spirit of this special period of the Fast, I came to perceive from her considered comments that I was trying to write to you from the head and that this was not enough.

Aware of my imperfections, here I try also to open to you my heart.

In the darkest hour before the dawn, when war seemed inevitable and the prime minister of this country travelled to the capitals of the nuclear powers to plead for peace, I prayed to the beloved Guardian:

"Dearest Shoghi Effendi, my understanding is that you have said quite clearly this cataclysm will come. Your words depict the falling of fearsome weapons of destruction upon our cities and the deaths of two thirds of the people of the world. Please, I beg you, would it not be better for us to be spared this devastation, for us to find a symbolic explanation of such frightful words than for you to be confirmed as completely and literally correct by means of the murder of these billions of people?"

My ardent prayer, often repeated at that time, was that God demonstrate His all-compelling authority and might by inspiring us peacefully to transform this planet into that reflection of heaven foretold in Sacred Scripture. I asked Him: "Is it not a greater sign of divine power and love to grant human leaders the imagination and will to move ever more peacefully towards world peace than through inaction to provide the opportunity for the indescribable agonies of such a holocaust? Is it not more befitting the Almighty, the Most Munificent Creator of the Worlds to lead us to transform with our own hands physically and spiritually the dark landscapes around our bodies and our souls into the perfumed gardens visualized in the Writings than to watch the burning craters appear, radiation ride the winds and the minority of survivors driven rather than guided into the Cause of God?"

I was not alone. In every Terran language, from every land on Earth the pleas for peace were raised to Heaven.

And the Prime Mover, to the astonishment of the nations of the world, answered. That mortal man portrayed by Cold War rhetoric as the Evil Emperor was inspired to lead the way in the move to peace, even at the cost of his position and his Empire itself, an event perhaps without parallel in the annals of this world. And the very precious soul we call the Priceless Pearl did not insist on inflicting humanity with the literal fulfillment of his authoritative statements about weapons and death.

Auxiliary Board Member Susie Tamas in response to concerns I raised at what I considered a dangerously divisive impression that the definition of a true and loyal believer consisted in one's literal interpretation of the Word of God shared with me this passage which you wrote on March 6, 1982:

"In considering the whole field of divinely conferred infallibility one must be careful to avoid the literal understanding and petty mindedness that has so often characterized discussions of this matter in the Christian world. The Manifestation of God (and to a lesser degree, Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi) has to convey tremendous concepts covering the whole field of human life and activity to people whose present knowledge and degree of understanding are far below His. He must use the limited medium of human language against the limited and often erroneous background of His audience's traditional knowledge and current understanding to raise them to a wholly new level of awareness and behaviour. It is a human tendency against which the Manifestation warns us, to measure His statements against the inaccurate standard of the acquired knowledge of mankind. We tend to take them and place them within one or the other of the existing categories of human philosophy or science while, in reality, they transcend these and will, if properly understood, open new and vast horizons to our understanding.

"Some sayings of the Manifestation are clear and obvious. Among these are laws of behaviour. Others are elucidations which lead men from their present level of understanding to a new one. Others are pregnant allusions, the significance of which only becomes apparent as the knowledge and understanding of the reader grow. And all are integral parts of one great Revelation intended to raise mankind to a new level of its evolution."

This uplifting of humanity is a process which seems to be continuing outside the Faith.

The beloved Guardian says, "It should also be borne in mind that the machinery of the Cause has been so fashioned, that whatever is deemed necessary to incorporate into it in order to keep it in the forefront of all progressive movements, can, according to the provisions made by Baha'u'llah, be safely embodied therein."

(WOB 22-23)

In 1988 in response to your call to summon the troops into the Cause of God by sharing with them the Peace Message, I presented a copy of this document to almost everyone I knew. I invited many of them to regular followup "Peace Talks" at my place. This resulted in some keen consideration of this Faith by people of capacity, members of many circles and organizations. Whatever the probability, it was not impossible that some of these very active and capable individuals could have ignited the fire of the love of the Glory of God within troops of souls. When a non-Baha'i exposed that this Faith does not practise the full equality of the sexes, none of these people could accept that the Will of God for this Age could be so far from the forefront of all progressive movements as to perpetuate the concept and the practice of women being excluded from highest office.

The spirit of this very communication, "The Promise of World Peace", moved the leaders of the Cold War beyond mistrust and the paralysis of will which had so divided and threatened humankind for decades. It would appear that the Cause of God today needs to be uplifted above such mistrust and paralysis of will.

You called for: the submergence of theological differences, identification of and guidance by principle, the sweeping away of assumptions and formulae ceasing to promote the welfare of a continually evolving humanity, women to be welcomed into full partnership.

Indeed, you advised the rulers and peoples of this world: "The emancipation of women, the achievement of full equality between the sexes, is one of the most important, though less acknowledged prerequisites of peace." I am delighted to be able to tell you that almost everyone I know seems to agree with you on this point. The openness of my heart compels me to add that apparently no non-Baha'i I know accepts that the Baha'i Faith may claim to practise what it is preaching until women may serve on the Universal House of Justice. An assertion that somehow there may be equality of men and women with the highest positions reserved for men, draws forth scorn and demonstrates that this is a false religion ("By their fruits shall ye know them") of people "whose words exceed their deeds", a people given to Orwellian Newspeak, doubletalk and euphemism.

Last year I learned of some of the energizing discoveries made which facilitate our demonstration of the clearly expressed principle of the equality of men and women that we may surpass that petty minded preference of an interpretation which not only tasks reasonable thought when read in full, but tests souls beyond their capacity, something God has urged us not to do. If there is to be a choice between a literal application of the concept of infallibility and the implementation of such a basic principle as the equality of men and women, bearing in mind your own words concerning literalism and infallibility quoted above and the quote that "It is incumbent upon them who are in authority to exercise moderation in all things" (THE PROCLAMATION OF BAHÁ'U'LLAH p. 113) are we truly powerless to be people whose principled deeds clearly match our words? There is also the warning: "In all matters moderation is desirable. If a thing is carried to excess, it will prove a source of evil." (Quoted in BAHÁ'U'LLAH p. 46.) The chief tidings in my prayer to you is that, in the estimation of troops, for us to refuse to moderate our attachment to literal infallibility even when this leads us to subservience to previous levels of understanding at variance with Baha'u'llah's fundamental principle exposes the unworthiness, the hypocrisy, the falsity of this Faith.

Many and varied are the words possible and my heart is overwhelmed. How may I proceed when these eyes dim with tears? Still, how may I not continue to pray as I prayed for the protection of this world and its peoples from impending devastation?

You yourselves have drawn the connection between the full equality of the sexes and peace, and presented the choice as to "Whether peace is to be reached only after unimaginable horrors precipitated by humanity's stubborn clinging to old patterns of behaviour, or is to be embraced now by an act of consultative will."

The connection of these two points, the necessity of this species to will to arise above old patterns of behaviour in order to avoid unimaginable horrors and the necessity to move beyond the period of the restriction of women in order for there to be peace convulses my soul, because it is evident to non-Baha'i observers that the community to which you directed the scrutiny of the nations is still bogged down in that anachronistic pattern of behaviour which has supreme authority in the grasp of men alone.

My heart is very perturbed both because I fear this has to a significant extent delayed the creative and positive forces from taking full advantage of the unexpected opportunity provided by the courage and vision of the Soviet leadership and because I am aware of what seems a very unhealthy anticipation within the Faith for the chastisement of the peoples of the world who largely have ignored this latest Revelation.

The anguished questions that follow may seem truly amazing. However, I would not be opening fully to you my heart were I to leave them unspoken. Is it really so unspiritual, is it worth the death penalty for individuals and the burning of cities that the literal words of the fundamental principle of the equality of the two sexes be seen as taking precedence over a narrowly literal perception of the Guardian's interpretation of those words of the Master which appear to refer to the House of Justice in Chicago? Is humanity to experience that catastrophe that the so-called Evil Emperor delayed, if he did not overcome it, or some other one, to cleanse the world of those so influenced by the Prince of Peace that they expect Baha'is to comply fully with His fundamental principle, although the world in the lifetime of the Blessed Beauty did not follow this principle, one reason, perhaps, for its gradual implementation? How may the troops pour in through the open gates of this Faith, while this drawbridge remains raised in their faces?

At this point I feel I must mention my father. You know I did receive some advice that it was not a good idea to write to you, and that if I did I ought to say what you'd find pleasing, as you may otherwise respond in the manner of historical Terran monarchs and view one daring to impart information you may not like to hear as quite a presumptuous fellow. Yet, how would I contribute to the proof we are leaving behind anachronistic habits if I remained silent or, according to past patterns of behaviour, concealed from the Source of All Good the real news of how this Faith is now becoming perceived by ordinary people?

Although I lived in the same house as my father until I was twenty-three years old, I heard him say almost nothing about how he spent his early 20s. This was a time of such intense experience for him that he still does not speak of it, not even after the passage of fifty years. He, as so very many people at that time, had his life greatly impacted by events in the world at large. He left the family farm to participate in the defence of the Free World from one of this Century's most notorious examples of totalitarianism.

The relevance of this is that this country, so extolled in the Tablets of the Divine Plan for, among other things, its freedom, others in the Free World and those lands which experienced totalitarian regimes contain a lot of people who are quite unsympathetic to certain characteristics of those unpleasant administrations inflicting such anguish upon both their citizens and foreigners.

Among these features is that old pattern of behaviour which involves the control of information. My weeping heart leads me to tell you very bluntly that my perception of people here is that no alleged details unflattering to this Faith can exceed in negative impact the fact that there is control of information within the Baha'i Faith. Forbidding the use of the word "censorship" and insisting upon the term "review" only seems to underline the very distasteful impression this gives of our Faith. It is the same with the term "exemption" being insisted on as a substitute for "excluded" in reference to women hitherto being prevented from serving on the Universal House of Justice.

Very frankly, it is very difficult to see the distinction between such Baha'i practices and those directed by Goebbels which at length required the intervention of my father and many millions like him. I can not describe for you the extent of the impact it had on me when I learned that your initial response to the reception of the information that the Writings contain passages in which women are referred to as "men/rulers" and that it is quite likely that Abdul-Baha was speaking about the House of Justice in Chicago and not the Universal House of Justice at all was to prohibit the publication of this data. It may suffice for you to know that this was the principle reason I told Auxiliary Board Member Susie Tamas that a literal understanding of the infallibility of the Universal House of Justice would be contrary to the evidence of my senses.

Further, while the Constitution of the Universal House of Justice contains as one of your powers and duties, "To safeguard the personal rights, freedom and initiative of individuals," a responsibility resonating strongly with peoples in this Century which has endured such onerous oppression, you have made recent comments that may be perceived as a denunciation of "liberty", "liberalism" and "freedom".

I can imagine no more effective means to inflict harm upon this Faith than for someone to call a news conference and simply read quotes hostile to liberalism and liberty. Would you not be understood as demonstrating this responsibility to protect personal rights was falling victim to euphemism and cause alarm that were God to permit you to direct the course of human affairs this would inflict upon the peoples of this planet a global oppression, compared to which the regionalized and relatively low tech regimes of the recent past would pale?

May I not pray that you in future remove such an opportunity from anyone wishing harm upon this Cause, that however you raise our understanding of the value of co-operation and harmony, you keep before our eyes this shining jewel of individual rights and freedoms for which my father endured so much and many others died? Will you join me in praying that the Blessed Beauty ever inspire you to guide humanity through insightful and imaginative vision, embracing fundamental principle and winning by this means the admiration and wholehearted support of those comprising a maturing species, as remote as possible from the totalitarian tendency to focus on literal details defining legitimate authority and the insistence upon the obedience of anything at all? So very many people yearn to witness the evidences of the influence of the Higher Worlds that they may exert all their energies backing something so constructive and positively creative. Very few of these can see in the tedious reiteration of an insistence that there is yet another Centre which must be obeyed whatever it may command anything more than the basis for the commission of immoral and unethical deeds. The fact that women have been prohibited from service on the Universal House of Justice and that Scriptural grounds to lift this prohibition hitherto have been concealed from the generality of the believers does nothing to allay what ought to be quite incredible apprehensions about our similarity to other totalitarian systems uttering such assertions and staining the annals of history with unprincipled behaviour.

One of the most illuminating events in the more than fifteen decades of the history of the New Era was that glorious spiritual act by the Hands of the Cause of God on the occasion of the election of the Universal House of Justice. In a deed elevated above traditional human temptation to seek to retain control of authority, these laudable souls not only permitted the Supreme Body to replace them in directing the affairs of the Cause of God, but went so far as to ask not to be elected to the Universal House of Justice. This happening has a profound influence on the soul of any seeker of truth receiving word of it. How likewise must be the impact of each example of the ability of the Prince of Peace to elevate His declared followers, and, especially, those wielding authority within His Faith, above the normal manner of human behaviour. May we not expect the peoples of the world to respond very positively to every proof that this is indeed a New World Order?

In conclusion, here is the gist of my ardent prayers for the progress of the Cause of God and the protection of the peoples of this planet from cataclysm, death and destruction:

May we please receive the communication that from now on women may also be considered eligible for membership on the Universal House of Justice?

May we please be notified of the suspension of the temporary policy of review?

May we please be guided to an understanding of co-operation and harmony consistent with "the personal rights, freedom and initiative of individuals", and sensitive to the significance in the Free World of the terms and concepts "freedom", "liberty" and "liberalism"?

May we please delight in the vision of human harmony radiating from the World Centre, embracing in a wondrously rich garden the great variety of human thought bestowed upon this species by an Ever-Loving, Most Bounteous, All-Powerful Creator?

May the Most Merciful Lord allow the intent of this message to transcend all the barriers to effective communication and permit you to see what is in my heart that you may know for certain that the above was written only with the purpose of supporting you in guiding humanity towards what is truly worthy of being described as an ever-advancing civilization and a Golden Age.

"I beseech Thee, O my God, by that Letter which, as soon as it proceeded out of the mouth of Thy will, hath caused the oceans to surge, and the winds to blow, and the fruits to be revealed, and the trees to spring forth, and all past traces to vanish, and all veils to be rent asunder, and them who are devoted to Thee to hasten unto the light of the countenance of their Lord, the Unconstrained, to make known unto me what lay hid in the treasuries of Thy knowledge and concealed within the repositories of Thy wisdom. Thou seest me, O my God, holding to Thy Name, the Most Holy, the Most Luminous, the Most Mighty, the Most Great, the Most Exalted, the Most Glorious, and clinging to the hem of the robe to which have clung all in this world and in the world to come."

Peace,
Michael.

Date: Thu, 10 Apr 97 13:52:22 IDT
From: secretariat@bwc.org ("Baha'i World Centre")
To: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca

8 April 1997

Transmitted by email: bn872@freenet.carleton.ca

Mr. Michael McKenny
Canada

Dear Baha'i Friend,

The Universal House of Justice has asked us to respond on its behalf to your email message of 23 March 1997, in which you share your thoughts and suggestions on a number of issues related to the development of the Cause. The sincerity of your struggle to understand, both intellectually and spiritually, the implications of Baha'u'llah's Revelation is apparent both from your message and from your desire to respond to the comments of the Auxiliary Board member Mrs. Susanne Tamas. It is hoped that the comments which follow and the related enclosures will be of assistance to you in this effort.

As it is not possible to go into all of the detailed points raised in your letter, the House of Justice believes that it will be most helpful to address two specific issues which are clearly of particular concern to you. These are the question of the ineligibility of women for membership on the Universal House of Justice and that of the temporary policy requiring pre-publication review of works on the Faith written by Baha'is.

With respect to the first of these two subjects, we have been asked to enclose two documents which you will find especially relevant:

1. a copy of a letter of 31 May 1988 written by the House of Justice to the National Spiritual Assembly of New Zealand, which reviews in detail the documentation related to the subject of the principle in the Faith's teaching which limits membership on the Universal House of Justice to men; and
2. a related document recently prepared by the Baha'i World Centre's Research Department on the concept of "'umumi," a term which is central to an understanding of this same subject.

With respect to the second of the two issues mentioned, we enclose a lengthy extract from a letter of 29 December 1988 written on behalf of the House of Justice to the followers of Baha'u'llah in the United States on the subject of individual rights and freedoms. As you will note, this statement addresses directly the question of the continuing necessity at this stage in the evolution of the Cause, for the policy of pre-publication review.

Mr. Michael McKenny

8 April 1997

Page 2

The House of Justice believes that, in studying these documents, you should challenge yourself to reflect deeply on the vital importance, to one's spiritual life and intellectual advancement, of the Faith's teaching that each individual must investigate truth for himself or herself. Specifically, in the light of current Internet discussions in which you are a participant, you will want to consider carefully and prayerfully the extent to which your current thinking may have been influenced by the views of individuals who have presented themselves -- and perhaps, to some extent, been accepted by you -- as "scholarly authorities" on the Baha'i teachings. While all of us can benefit in our study of the Revelation from consulting a range of views held by other believers, Baha'u'llah calls us to maintain a condition of spiritual autonomy as a basic prerequisite for spiritual search, "For the faith of no man can be conditioned by any one except himself."

note Gleanings from the Writings of Baha'u'llah, p. 143

The Cause of God, encompassing teachings, laws and institutions, has been given to us one and whole by its divine Creator. To the challenge of demonstrating this distinguishing unity of the Cause a global community has brought the testimony of a century and a half of heroism and of sacrifice of self. Only those influences which lead us more deeply into a comprehension of the organic wholeness of Baha'u'llah's Revelation -- and thus into a fuller consciousness of our own integrity as individuals -- can rightly claim to merit our attention.

The House of Justice assures you of its ardent prayers at the Holy Threshold that Baha'u'llah will surround you with His blessings and will confirm your devoted efforts to deepen your understanding of His purpose.

With loving Baha'i greetings,
Department of the Secretariat

Enclosures 3 (appended) warmest,

Susan

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: One area in which Liberty is Limited in the Baha'i Community
Date: Sunday, July 25, 1999 10:21 AM

Greetings, David.

There are web sites with lots of data, if you are honestly interested in data. The archives of this list contain some of the original documents.

The history of my participation in Baha'i cyberspace goes like this: I spent a year or so reading newsgroups as diverse as Australian SF, Soc. Culture.Russian, Sci.Classics, some pagan ones, etc. keeping an eye once in a while on Soc.Religion.Bahai. Well, one day I read a petition there to the UHJ asking that the UHJ publish more of the devotional and mystic writings of Baha'u'llah, such as the unofficial translations available on the Talisman list. While the response on SRB was a thread about whether or not it was permissible for Baha'is to write such petitions to the UHJ, (Since they wrote petitions to Abdu'l Baha why shouldn't they write them to the UHJ?) my reaction was to contact Steve Bedingfield, an old friend, whose name I had seen on that petition, and ask him what was this Talisman and how could one join.

So, I came onto this "Baha'i" e-list looking for more of the mystical and devotional writings of Baha'u'llah, and I walked into a brawl. The first thing I saw was that there was one faction calling the other names and another bunch of people trying calmly to discuss issues. So, on the basis of more than a decade in amateur press publishing, (sort of a print version of cyberspace's newsgroups and e-lists that's been thriving for more than a century, and where at least in Ottawa we've well worked out some of the rules) my first contributions to Talisman One, as it's now called, were to go after people snarking, as we call it, to point out to this "Baha'i" list that the non-Baha'is I've spent so much time with had worked out the rule that while you could call the Prime Minister of Canada and everyone else in the world whatever names you liked, the members of our hard copy list were beyond such. In addition, in formal logic issues are important and any references to personality, to the person who said something is invalid. Further, what was being said, in a Baha'i context, accusations of playing fast and loose with the Covenant, was something that lay solely in the jurisdiction of the UHJ and individuals were to leave such to them. I provided the appropriate quote.

David, on the above principle, regulation of an Ottawa apa, which has published every six weeks since 1984, I render you an open apology for anything I said to you which you found a personal slight.

On the issue of the Stalinist nature of the UHJ, as opposed to what was intended by the Glory of God, I continue.

Now, at this stage I could look and see what were the issues being discussed, why it was that "Baha'is" felt it necessary to call others in their religion names, rather than talk calmly about issues. Well, the guys being flamed were liberal arts university professors in favour of freedom of speech, in favour of expressing a variety of personal views on issues, in favour of a variety of views that are, in my personal opinion, the hallmark and sign of human progress to this stage of development, as well as essential elements of the vision of Baha'u'llah for a future global mature human civilization. And, the issues being favoured by people flaming these professors were things such as censorship, etc. which are Stalinist.

And, then, came a quite staggering experience. Someone e-mailed me a copy of the censored "Service of Women" paper. This thing was written in the late 80s by a group (God loves those who work in groups) of the top Baha'i scholars. It demonstrated that the context of that supposedly clear quote by Abdu'l Baha that women had to put up with their exclusion from the UHJ was that more than 50 years before the establishment of the UHJ someone in Chicago had written to Abdu'l Baha complaining about her exclusion from the Chicago house of justice and Abdu'l Baha had replied that while she could serve on this committee, that committee and the other committee she'd have to put up with being excluded from the general house of justice. Also, in any case, the majority of the Baha'i writings, still kept untranslated, includes quotes that in this day women are rulers/men (the same word as the rulers/men of the UHJ trotted out as further backing for an official policy of discrimination within the Baha'i Faith.

To make a long story short, as a result of posting views to this tiny e-list (one or two hundred members would probably be a generous figure) university professors were phoned by Counsellors, told the Counsellors wished to meet with them and then had Counsellors discussing these posts and the orthodoxy of the opinions expressed and the necessity of keeping silent in future. This is Stalinist, though to be fair to the communist USSR, they did not officially discriminate against women. So, in this sense, the USSR was ahead of the UHJ. Some people on Talisman One were silenced. Some people, under incredible harrassment were driven out of the Baha'i Faith.

And, one idiot continued freely to express his views in the successor lists that followed the list owner of Talisman One (who had faced enormous pressure and posted an apologia as to why he was still remaining a Baha'i that sent tingles up my spine when I first read it, precisely because here was a liberal democrat writing as if he were in Stalin's Russia, but it was the Baha'i UHJ which forced him to write as he did, and Baha'i was intended to allow humans to reach above anachronistic patterns of thought control. This and a vast amount of other material ought to be available somewhere) bowing to pressure and disbanding the list. Michael McKenny continued to post and to say that his saying what he thought without being contacted by Baha'i authorities demonstrated freedom of speech in the Baha'i Faith.

And, one January day in 1997, Susie Tamas, an Auxiliary Board Member, phoned to say that Counsellor Birkland had asked her to meet with me on his behalf. Now being normal Canadians and normal Baha'is we didn't do this the way Counsellor Birkland and some of those who've written about their sessions with him described those sessions. We had a pleasant and lengthy chat, just the two of us. Susie had asked if she could bring Assistant Al Wong with her. However, since I recalled the Feast where Al Wong had spoke in favour of Communist China and said how a Western Baha'i, overcome by emotion at being in the famous Tienamin Square, a place where hundreds of pro-democracy people had been killed, had sung some songs, Al had said the Communist Chinese authorities had been told this person was insane, and he'd been removed from China, on that ground, although I did not tell her why, I declined her offer to have Al present at a discussion held in the context of freedom of speech. Al Wong was appointed a few months later to be Auxiliary Board Member to replace Susie Tamas.

I told Susie Tamas that I had no complaints with the Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Ottawa or the National Assembly of the Baha'is of Canada, but only with the UHJ. She invited me to write to the UHJ and I sent preliminary versions of such a letter to her, and, finally, on March 23, 1997, e-mailed a final version to the UHJ. I chose that date as it was the birthday of one of my sisters (The rights of women were a significant part of the intent of my letter) and also because I felt it less likely the UHJ would respond fanatically after the Fast was over.

The reply was relatively swift, within a month, I believe. But, all it contained was repeats of the material which had prompted my letter, with one possible exception, a statement from the Research Department that was factually wrong. Both my letter and the reply are available, I believe, in the archives of this newsgroup.

I continued to post my views to Baha'i cyberspace, and without any further warning there came a letter in the mail, at the end of July 1997 saying that the Canadian NSA had been informed by the UHJ that I could no longer be considered a member of the Baha'i Community and so my name had been removed from their membership roles. This I posted and for months there was feedback, including other comments from the UHJ in response to requests for clarification and to protests from Baha'is and non Baha'is. The remarks by the UHJ have been provided some detailed analysis.

This material and a lot more is available, some of it in the archives of this newsgroup.

The topic of the similarity of the UHJ to Stalinist authority has been addressed somewhat in this post, and I'm sure if you look for material both in the archives here and elsewhere on web pages etc. you'll find a great deal. My only hope is that you'll see no future continuation of such behaviour by the UHJ. If the Baha'i Faith is really going to provide any real human harmony, this will not come by continuing to oppose the methods, the essential Baha'i principles, Baha'u'llah provided for the achievement of this goal. Although, the secret letter by the UHJ to the NSAs dated April 1999 re the Internet conspiracy, the consequent resignation of two believers, one an Assistant, saying that, among other things, they could not continue spying on fellow believers to see whether they had approved thoughts or not, and that vacation message from Hooper Dunbar, whose vacation ended on July 12, 1999, being received by Juan Cole and several other members of a private e-list, of which Hooper is not a member, make my hopes seem less likely of being fully realized in the near future.

Nevertheless, I continue to believe that openness, even to the extent of having this newsgroup, is moderating somewhat the behaviour of the UHJ.

To the Future,
Michael

"David Fiorito and Jennifer Spotila" (fiospots@pond.com) writes:

> You just don't get it do you. I am trying to discuss things I believe. If > it matches the "robotic" party line then that is just coincidence. I am a > free thinker willing to listen to all views. You don't know me well enough > to know who I am or what I think, or believe. And I do not know you well > enough either. The point of a discussion is not to accuse or sling > satirical mud around. The point is to share information - pure data - and > to examine it take it for what it is worth and process it for yourself.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

---

Homepage

---

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Shoghi Effendi believed 1963 would be the calamity year

Date: Friday, July 16, 1999 4:20 PM

Greetings, Geoff.

Many thanks for your patience, and, touch wood, I've actually got a moment or so to read your post more carefully.

Actually, I disagree with you about the necessity to connect freedom of speech with freedom of action, if I understand what you mean correctly. In Canada, as far as I know, we still do not have the death penalty, but individuals are allowed to speak in favour of the death penalty, although such freedom of speech does not mean they may go out and execute someone.

Submitting to the teachings of the Faith means putting into practise the essential principles of the Baha'i Faith, including independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of religion and science and the equality of women and men. Only one of the teachings of the Baha'i Faith is that there is to be a democratically elected international spiritual council (Universal House of Justice). Yes, the principled decisions of this body are to be obeyed, but such literal text as emphasizes that does not justify this body seeking to impose what is contrary to principle upon the believers.

Those who argue that there is a distinction in the authority of the UHJ and of the Papacy, thus, explaining how it is that the Baha'i system is to remain undivided into sects as happened in Christianity, aside from ignoring the sectarianism which already exists, as anyone may note from reading this newsgroup, are missing the chief reason for the rejection of the authority of the Papacy by those Christians who bolted. It was not in the least that the Popes claimed too inadequate a backing from heaven, and now in place of the assertion that God had said (Jesus after all is God to Christians) Peter (and his legitimate successors) were to guide with divine approval, now God (Baha'u'llah) had written a will providing a family tree of inheritance all the way to the present UHJ. No, God's word was good enough spoken or written, had only the people asserting on such grounds they had such authority behaved in a principled manner.

The history of the Vatican, as Abdu'l Baha said, is most extraordinary. This provides quite satisfactory explanation for the sectarianism that took place, regardless of claims to divine authority.

Since the UHJ has sought to censor the historical facts concerning the prohibition on the election of women to the UHJ, since they have violated this essential principle of the equality of women and men, since they have spoken against scholarship and individual scholars have faced pressures to shut up or leave the Faith, since without final warning they simply declared Michael McKenny was not a member of the Baha'i community, etc. they have committed acts equally demonstrating the extremism connected with claims to divine authorization of whatever they please. And, precisely as some humans faced with such extremes from popes rejected the unprincipled behaviour of the popes, so do those learning of what is going on in Baha'i include those who reject the correctness of the misbehaviour of the UHJ, asserting to rule on the basis of literal text.

The distinction has been clearly made that one may be the legitimate ruler or ruling body and this does not necessarily mean that the rules one seeks to impose are proper. So long as one is providing proper guidance one may claim that one has infallible divine backing for one's legislation, and it doesn't matter. The legislation is proper and on that ground, it will, heaven willing, be attractive to human souls, anyway. However, when one has strayed from what is proper and instead concentrates on assertions of the ability to do any unprincipled thing at all, because of literal words in scripture saying, "Whatsoever," then there is a problem. If religious authorities strive to impose what is unprincipled, then only a section of their people, and certainly only a section of humanity can possibly accept such literal justification for what is unprincipled.

The essential Baha'i principles resonated all over the world because they were beneficial for this age. The concept of simply obeying what unprincipled commands soever which leaders have the power to impose has a long and sorry history in the sad annals of this species. It has been well tested, and the experience of humanity is that the goal of the prophet of Baha'i, the harmonious progress of this species, is not furthered through the attempted imposition of this hoary and sorry idea. Better to implement the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of science (reason) and religion (inspiration), the equality of women and men, etc.

I pause here, though I may soon write more on the rest of your post. Again, sorry for being so hurried earlier.

May today find humanity thriving, may tomorrow treat this species even more kindly and may each day after that be replete with increasing blessings.

All the Best,
Michael

"Geoff Churchill" (fedge@clear.net.nz) writes:

>
> I made the argument that you cannot have freedom of expression without > freedom of action, not because of anything against freedom of expression but > that it is fruitless without the necessary freedom of action to put such > beliefs into practice. Yes, the Baha'i Faith follows the principal of the > right to the individual investigation of truth, but this is qualified. If > you have acknowledged the essential truth of the Faith (as this applies) you > must submit to its teachings. To quote the Aqdas...

>
> "The first duty prescribed by God for His servants is the RECOGNITION of Him > Who is the Dayspring of His Revelation and the Fountain of His Laws.... It > behoveth everyone who reacheth this most sublime station, this summit of > transcendent glory, to OBSERVE EVERY ORDINANCE of Him Who is the Desire of > the world."

> (Kitab-i-Aqdas p.1, my emphasis added)

>
> Okay, this is not a direct statement on the principal of Independent > Investigation of Truth, but bare me out here. Yes, I believe whole heartedly > in the right to independently investigate the truth, but I believe that it > needs to be balanced by the duty prescribed upon those rights. If we > acknowledge the truth of Baha'u'llah as he who he claims to be, then we must > follow his ordinances. If Baha'u'llah is the Messenger of God for this day, > the Fountainhead of His Laws as he declares, then we must abide by those > laws, otherwise what is the use. As individuals I'm sure you would agree > that we are fallible. I can't hope to understand the universe perfectly, > therefore I can't be asked to make perfect choices. But if I have > acknowledged Baha'u'llah as a Being (whatever you regard that to mean) Who > has revealed perfect instructions (God's Laws) about that society, then > surely it is in my best interests to follow those ordinances.

>
> Now, before you ask, I do not believe that the duty of individual > investigation of truth ends when you become a Baha'i, but that at that point > all investigation must be tempered by that obedience.

>
>
--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Shoghi Effendi believed 1963 would be the calamity year
Date: Friday, July 16, 1999 7:21 PM

Greetings, Geoff.

Forgive the number of posts you are getting in reply to your single one, though were I to do justice to you in a single post, that single post would be quite lengthy.

No, you don't have to take my word for anything. The current Baha'i history to which I refer has been quite extensively documented. It was followed with great interest by people on Baha'i e-mail lists who saw this unfold before their eyes on their computer screens. Many of the documents have been posted to web pages and indeed the archives of this newsgroup contain some.

I do not believe the facts are in doubt. For example, Michael McKenny did meet with Susie Tamas, she did invite him to write to the UHJ, his letter and the reply are available, he continued to post to Baha'i e-mail lists, without further notice he received a letter stating the UHJ had said he could no longer be considered a member of the Baha'i community, this led to quite extensive followup, including some detailed analysis of the more explanatory letter from the UHJ when that at length came.

It is my belief that as a result of the less than completely positive publicity gained by the UHJ through such correspondance and discussion, it would behave more honourably in the future. The April letter concerning the dangerous Internet as well as a resignation by an Assistant claiming among other things to find spying on believers distasteful, lends some support to those who argue otherwise.

The other cases have also taken place, some in the full gaze of those people on Baha'i e-lists while they happened. If you or anyone wishes more documentation, I am sure you'll not want for lack of material. Indeed, if I am proved wrong and the UHJ continues previous action into the future, you may well merely have to continue reading this newsgroup to see what, gods willing, is on the contrary only past history.

All the Best,
Michael

"Geoff Churchill" (fedge@clear.net.nz) writes:

> Kia Ora Michael,
>
> I don't think I would be qualified to talk on this point. I do not know the > recent Baha'i history that you refer to, but I would put a proviso below > that may act as a moderator on this as well. I would prefer to keep this to > a hypothetical level, as any one view that someone presents to me here would > very well be the view of one person. I hate to put this so bluntly and > please don't take this maliciously. Your own view may well be a biased as > the view you are accusing. It is hard for me to take your word verbatim...

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: McKenny Michael <bn872@freenet.carleton.ca>
To: smaneck@berry.edu <smaneck@berry.edu>
Cc: talisman@umich.edu <talisman@umich.edu>
Subject: Re Who Talisman and Where Answer
Date: Thursday, February 19, 1998 10:06 AM

Greetings, Susan, from Ottawa.

If you are well, it is well.

Thanks for coming back to add this other word.

Of course, this is merely the primordial fundamentalist Baha'i ad hominem. It is equally against the canons of logic as all of its so numerous children. By the way, for those with a little Latin, vir is the word for man in the sense of male; homo means person.

You have defined, in my view, the primary flaw in the reasoning of Baha'i fundamentalists, i.e. that no consideration is given to ethics and morality, but that obedience to despotic authority takes priority over decent behaviour.

However, leaving aside wishes and hypnotic dreams, whether self-imposed or otherwise, the objective reality is that if actions when conducted by the governments of Nazi Germany or Soviet Russia or name whichever tyrannical violators of human rights you will, if such deeds are wrong performed by these administrations, it does not render such deeds correct, proper and moral to substitute the word Baha'i or the name Universal House of Justice as the perpetrators of such outrages.

It does not even help you to substitute the name God for the originator of unethical and unprincipled behaviour.

As I understand the Baha'i line, the essential reason for the appearance and existence of the Baha'i Faith is the alleged arrival of human beings at the station of maturity. Well, is not that much loved of despots position that the people are children whose only function is to obey and serve the state quite contrary to such a concept of adulthood?

The maturity of the human race means that the individual members of the species may no more plead innocence on the grounds of simply obeying orders than could the officials who ran the death camps for the Nazi government, or all the rest of those who placed doing what they were told to do above decency and principle.

Principle may not morally be defined as simply listening to what authority dictates; it is demonstrably clear in history, in Baha'i history as well as non-Baha'i history, that authority, if granted such power, behaves immorally and, just as individuals in a mob find it easier to condone and perpetrate unethical actions, so also those who are able to toss away conscience by asserting they are simply doing what authority says, and, alas, it seems, all the more, those actually exercising such unrestrained authority, including the members of the Universal House of Justice, find it easier to act in ways no upright human would act, let alone any beneficent deity.

Each human being, as an individual, has a personal responsibility for ethical and principled action. That Baha'i officials have been going around telling Baha'is that their membership in the Baha'i Faith necessitates the placing of obedience to Baha'i authority higher than obedience to conscience is a very clear sign that the Baha'i Faith as currently administered has more to do with despotism than with morality.

Let there be no doubt, were flying saucers to arrive and by what means soever to dictate that an all male ruling body must rule this planet, notwithstanding the awesome power at their disposal, still such aliens would be unprincipled interferers in the affairs of this people. Changing the name of such an alien species to the UHJ or god does not alter the issue in the least.

If one posits the existence of a beneficial and ethical deity then the actions attributed to the will of this deity will be beneficial and ethical. If what is said to be the will of such a god is unethical and not beneficial, then this attribution is false. The source of such actions can be varied and diverse. However, it is not the will of the divine.

It is crystal clear, unless and until the members of the Baha'i ruling patriarchy act according to principle, rather than seeking to redefine principle so that what is contrary to the fundamental principles of the religion is asserted to be the unquestionable divine will, they will be seen as they deserve to be seen, as humans who have dragged the standards of their prophet into the mud of their personal unwillingness and incapacity to walk the talk.

May this find you very well, and may each of the days ahead of us be more filled with peace, happiness and prosperity than the one it succeeds.

All the Best,
Michael

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

---

Homepage

---

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

From: McKenny Michael <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: rmgroup: soc.religion.bahai (Re: Annotated NO voters - 3rd interest poll)

Date: Friday, January 29, 1999 2:49 PM

Greetings, Donald.

Many thanks for this.

Actually, during the second round of voting a number of people who had supported it in the first round did not vote YES. My assessment was that it failed for lack of support.

Surely, relatively speaking, with hundreds of people who had voted NO the first time not voting the second time, the attempt to suppress talk.religion.bahai may be said to have been concentrated in the first round.

The important thing is that the third round was successful, and here we have a visible indication that absolute control over freedom of thought and expression is no longer taking place.

It will be fascinating to see the extent to which Baha'i leaders resist the temptation to go after people for views stated here. I don't think they will interfere. I really believe that they learned their lesson from what happened before. It may have been easy to live as if buried in snow up on Mount Carmel, but I think reality has intruded now. Also, now there is international observance of what is going on here.

On the one hand, there is a remarkable opportunity for people to see the real impact of the spirit of the Baha'i Faith in action, unfolding before their eyes, and who can tell what the beneficial results of that could be?

However, if I'm wrong and any action whatsoever is taken against any person because of views expressed here, let the world observe in complete detail what is the present practise of the authorities.

May this find you very well, and may each of the days to come be better than the one it succeeds.

To the Future,
Michael

"Donald Z Osborn" (osborndo@pilot.msu.edu) writes:

> There are, as I understand it 2 conditions for est. of a new ng:

> 1) Receive 100 more yes than no votes

> 2) the yes total must be at least 2/3 of the total vote cast

>

> So... technically Frederick is correct, however, a mere 10 votes would have > defeated the 2nd proposal and, as news.groups regulars tell us, one can > expect a number of no votes probably greater than that for the average > proposal. So in terms of actual experience, one can legitimately say that > the proposal failed for lack of support.

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

Homepage

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

[Mostly from 2000, after a few from late 1999.]

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Fred's Baha'i Membership Could Not Confirmed
Date: Tuesday, December 28, 1999 8:26 AM

Millennial Greetings, Susan.

Uhm, I was speaking in terms of giving legitimacy to critics and of demonstrating the insecurity of incompetent administrators. It doesn't matter whether you are the president of the US or a member of a dinky cult's wannabee politburo, the effect is the same.

Who the Hell gave Doug Martin the right to meddle with the beliefs of anyone else? The Baha'i Faith is not derived from the theories of John Locke but rather those of Baha'u'llah, who forbade Doug Martin and the boys from interfering in the personal beliefs and the freedom of expression of any other human being. Anyone may acknowledge Baha'u'llah and believe that Baha'u'llah was telling it like it is and not some forked tongue Soviet mouthing newspeak when he (Baha'u'llah) spoke of world peace depending upon the recognition of the equality of women and men. World Peace has not yet happened because Doug, Adib and the rest chose to assume the role of cult leaders, keep the women out and react to honest criticism in the Soviet manner.

John Locke is right on the mark when it comes to freedom to create as many religious organizations as necessary to accomodate individual freedom of conscience and the natural tendency of leaderships to seek to rule over unquestioning sheep and to impose their limited understandings on the outfit.

Baha'u'llah, on the other hand, had this crazy idea that all of human thought could be harmonized through the validation of the inalienable right of each individual perception to be shared, expressed, enunciated, promulgated, all the while tolerating the vast variety of varying views within the rainbow of human thought.

Doug, Hooper and the boys display to the world their opinion that the founder of the world religion they prefer to direct as a dinky cult had no clue about harmonizing a species. Now, Stalin, there's the guy to take as a role model. What does it matter that this role model has already been discredited?

Now, you tell me whether it wouldn't be better to have people able to write as well as Juan, Nima and I composing posts about this principled entity where men, following the example of the Hands of the Cause, gave up absolute power, proving the World Unifier Manifestation of the age of maturity had the influence to overcome religious fundamentalism, sectarianism and male chauvinism, so inherent an evil of past power games. You tell me whether inclusion or exclusion was the most effective concept to further the goal of world peace. You tell me whether there'd be any need to quibble about whether a century ends in 00 or not, if you had a model of human peace and harmony that chose not to follow John Locke's manner of allowing for the sectarian diversity of religious beliefs, but instead accepted Baha'u'llah's wisdom of including each opinion inside the rainbow of one over-arching human faith.

To the Future,
Michael

Smaneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

- > One is a citizen by virtue of being born or naturalized within a country. But
- > one belongs to a religion by virtue of believing certain things. The two issues
- > are really not comparable. I suggest you take a look at John Locke's essay on
- > Religious Tolerance. He recognized that an indispensable part of that tolerance
- > was the right of each religious community to determine its own membership and
- > to discipline that membership by means of excommunication. In his view the - > right of each person to choose their own religion and the right of religions to
- > excommunicate those who did not recognize its authority were inextricably
- > intertwined and that the state had no right to intervene in either function.
- > Susan Stiles Maneck
- > History, Stetson University

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Tests of faith
Date: Wednesday, December 29, 1999 2:33 AM

Greetings, Adelard.

Is it you or Hooper and the boys who are trying to impose this one fundamentalist interpretation of the words of Abdu'l Baha on another human being, despite Baha'u'llah's insistence that human harmony is impossible if there is any attempt to interfere with the freedom of thought and of expression?

It seems clear to me that those who find themselves entrusted with leadership within the Baha'i Faith are being encouraged to rule as if they were the source of all good, to promote human harmony and follow the essential principles of their religion. The individuals comprising a maturing species are to seek to carry out the practical manifestation of the essential principles Baha'u'llah enunciated.

To insist that this authorizes those who find themselves in the seats of power to trash the essential principles of the religion, to rule according to fundamentalist whim and demand the absolute thoughtless obedience of the entire maturing human race is demonstrably fallacious. Humans have sacrificed their lives to oppose this kind of evil, and the fruit the current fundamentalist leadership in Baha'i has garnered by attempting to dictate this evil is that the expected troops have washed their hands of such outmoded fundamentalism. In addition, as only to be expected, many within the religion have spoken out against this narrow anachronistic attachment to old divisive notions, failed theories of totalitarian leadership.

Neither you nor Hooper and the boys are authorized by your prophet to denigrate the sincerity of anyone else. Anyone may read any words and perceive these words according to the divinely created variety of human thought and understanding. My understanding is that the imposition of a single permissible interpretation is contrary to the remedy your prophet stated would cure humanity of conflict and contention. Humans require the freedom to see things according to a vast rainbow of perception, and to allow others to view things in many other valid ways.

The current members of the UHJ have trashed the guidance of Baha'u'llah by opposing Baha'u'llah's essential concepts of the equality of women and of men, of the freedom of thought and expression, of the harmony of humanity, of the non-existence of evil, etc. When these are followed, then the UHJ may claim more convincingly that it is being guided by the founder of your religion. I doubt that I'm in a very small minority when I state, I assure you quite sincerely, that no entity I'd consider divine would give the time of day to any leadership trashing liberal democracy, human rights, equality of women and men, freedom of thought and expression, etc. You are quite free to believe otherwise and to express your belief as convincingly as you can. Just don't insist everyone must see things your way.

To Harmony,
Michael

"Adelard R" (edrubu@cruzio.com) writes:

- > Greetings, Michael;
- >
- > I suggest you to read the "will and testament " of Abdul-Baha.
- > And if you did , you posting is lack of sincerity or may be you don't - > think that the faith is divine in nature.
- > Don't you know that the "Universal house of justice " is being guided by
- > the blessings of Baha'u'llah. Was not
- > that promised by and written in the "will and testament of Abdul-Baha".
- > Please be sincere in your beliefs .
- >

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Tests of faith
Date: Wednesday, December 29, 1999 1:53 AM

Greetings, Brian.

Uhm, surely there were plentiful and delightful fruits for some in the Nazi party, for a while. Because the theory of exclusion was carried to the extremes it was, even these suffered as the 12 year reich came to its tragic end. Now, the difference with Baha'i is that in theory it is for everyone, and it is supposed to promote some fairly uncommon ideals. The beneficial fruits it harvested were largely the consequence of those fairly uncommon seeds having been planted. Now, some of that harvest has been trashed and some awfully stale seeds are being planted these days by the likes of

Doug and Hooper -- you know, anachronistic concepts that human beings are to perceive the species as divided between the elect and the lost, that only men may rule at the top, that one may not freely express one's opinion, that the patriarchy is owed thoughtless obedience, that those who think too much are bad, that liberal democracy is condemned and the leadership theories of Stalin are worthy of emulation, etc.

Now, the harvest of the latest model of UHJ seeds is proving to be less praiseworthy, unless the anachronistic good feeling of being one of the elect few is defined as praiseworthy. Perhaps, the original seeds of Baha'u'llah were okay and his vision of a harmonious fragrant garden of divinely created diverse humanity wasn't so much in need of ditching.

To A Decent Future,
Michael

"Dr. Brian F. Walker" (dr.walker@fsandp.com) writes:

> Nice point Michael,

>

> but the difference surely is in the fruits of what we follow? The tragedy that was > the third Reich has been laid bare for the world to fail to comprehend, so great > was the tragedy. The fruits of the Baha'i Faith are plentiful and delightful.

>

> But point taken.

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Tests of faith

Date: Wednesday, December 29, 1999 9:00 AM

Greetings, Brian.

Congratulations for keeping your cool (whether you thought you were or not, I felt you were) in the face of some pretty tough talk in my posts. I'll try to reply as coolly. I'm sorry if you don't notice it, but at least the analogies having been made, will not be repeated in this post.

First of all, the common fallacy of those defending what I consider the indefensible attempt by the UHJ to reduce the vision of Baha'u'llah from an all-encompassing over-arching world religion into an exclusivist fundamentalist cult is to comment on the personality of someone. What one says is of interest in a Baha'i consultation and according to the Baha'i principles of consultation who says something isn't even supposed to be of concern to the one who spoke. What was said has been placed on the table and may be considered on its own merit. This, by the way, is in full agreement with the rules of formal logic, where ad hominem (to the person) is held to be a fallacy.

Now, the defenders of what I consider the indefensible spend a great deal of attention on who said something. They spend a lot of energy on exerting pressure so the likes of Juan Cole renounce any association with what bears so little resemblance to the all-embracing vision of Baha'u'llah, and then speak as if such a renunciation invalidates the points Juan makes. This is a method of discourse contrary to formal logic and opposed to Baha'i principle. The threads concerning whether or not someone in Chicago has erased the name of FG are in the same category, as is the issue of sending out a letter telling Michael McKenny the UHJ said his name should be erased from a list in Toronto. It should be noted that even within this fallacious context the UHJ has not proclaimed any of these people to be Covenant Breakers, a medieval concept I've addressed earlier on here and elsewhere in Baha'i cyberspace. If the whole purpose of the Baha'i Faith was to achieve the peaceful harmony of humanity and Baha'i leadership has had the nerve to tell the contending governments and peoples of the world to get along with each other, then shunning those who don't see eye to eye with you about the Baha'i Faith only demonstrates you are not of those who practise what they preach.

I think I've been clear enough in stating that, in my opinion, the harvest of straying from the Baha'i principle of the freedom of thought and expression to the one of insisting that everyone must accept only one fundamentalist interpretation of the words of Baha'u'llah, and even those of Shoghi Effendi, is the cultivation of what was intended to be a world religion. Those with the power to do so can insist that those who do not keep quiet about opinions varying from the literalist fundamentalist are excluded from the elect, but such an insistence does not result in fruits plentiful and delightful at a general level, whatever thrills one may obtain from feeling one of the small minority who are seeing reality in the only true light, even the only true Baha'i light.

If you mean that the fruit is in the writings, according to an imposed literalist fundamentalist interpretation, the human mindset, so very varied, renders this impossible for humanity. Humans are so diverse of perception that humanity cannot accept one imposed literalist interpretation. Humans are also at the point, some would hold as a consequence of the influence of Baha'u'llah, that an imposed literalist interpretation that places the rule of a patriarchy above the essential principle of the equality of women and men, will succeed only in preserving the present men's grasp on power within an overwhelmingly rejected anachronism. This has been demonstrated clearly. No incumbent on the UHJ has been defeated in election, if one may use this term for how Baha'i leadership goes about prohibiting a direct vote for Baha'i leadership and perpetuating individuals in office, and the predicted troops have quite understandably not joined an outdated patriarchal outfit.

As to how one may have understandings that accept the as still hidden "In this day women are men/rulers" (when will all the writings be published?) that think it made more sense for Abdu'l Baha to answer Corinne True's question clearly and tell her she had to accept her exclusion from the "General House of Justice" in Chicago, the exclusion she was complaining about, rather than put up with her exclusion from the UHJ, not to be established for more than fifty years, that really essential principles such as the equality of women and men must trump the literalist reading even of Shoghi Effendi (He used the spiritual interpretation of this letter to Corinne True to uphold essential principle and state that in every case, where it was safe to do so, women were equally eligible to serve on Baha'i spiritual assemblies, clearly identified with houses of justice; it is humanly possible to envision the utilization of this spirit of upholding the essential principle of the equality of women and men over a dogmatic fundamentalism that does not rise above the literal interpretation of words and letters), that the essential Baha'i principle of the harmony of mind and heart, reason and faith permit more than one dogmatic literalist understanding of Shoghi Effendi's infallibility, as well as the infallibility of the UHJ (and hasn't Ron House repeatedly reminded us that this word is consistently passed off as meaning inerrant when those in charge have admitted when he's pressed them that it does not mean this), that one may perceive such writings to refer to the high standards of behaviour those finding themselves in the position of leadership in Baha'i should strive to manifest, the opposite meaning from they should suppress all articulate comment reflecting understandings at variance to their own, and saying one has complete freedom to speak in exile is not really a good demonstration of upholding the freedom of thought and expression -- all these have been discussed in some detail and may be searched out in the archives of this and of other cyberspace sites.

I am all in favour of freedom of thought and expression. Express your point of view as clearly as you like, and by all means detail the good things going on in the Baha'i Faith. That certainly won't be off topic. I'll look forward to reading about them.

Slan,
Michael

"Dr. Brian F. Walker" (dr.walker@fsandp.com) writes:

>
> I would say that the fruits are there for ALL to enjoy. First of all there > is the life-giving water of the Holy Writings.
>
>
> I understand this riles you, but then again, if God has said He wants it > this way, are we wise to disagree? On the other hand, if you think that > the UHJ got it wrong, you could point out where God, through Baha'u'llah, > agrees with you?
> ...
> Well, this is your POV, and every right you have to hold it. I am of another opinion, I > see good things happening,
> ...
> 1. What is the truth of Baha'u'llah? How can I be sure He is of God?
> 2. If He is of God, how do I react to law AB or principle XY?
> 3. How do I make my Faith practicable, day to day and liveable? Tread the spiritual path > with practical feet?
> ...
>
> Slainte
>
> Brian
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Tests of faith

Date: Wednesday, December 29, 1999 1:25 AM

Greetings, David.

Don't you think it would be better to grasp the mindset which leads to the atrocities of Stalin and Hitler ahead of time, rather than working to establish a totalitarian theocratic world state a la fundamentalist UHJ vision, so that your grandchildren will be spared the reality of dying at the hands of empowered Baha'i fundamentalists, if they have not the worse fate of executing other human beings because of a natural diversity of human thought, the liberal democratic tolerance and understanding of which Baha'u'llah called for and the UHJ has ditched?

The sole difference between Hitler and the UHJ is that he had the power of a 20th Century state to enforce his will. And, you are quite wrong in stating there is an identical obedience situation between Hitler and the Prime Minister of Canada. The Prime Minister of Canada, as I've said here, has not sought to suppress dissent -- to the extent that those seeking to break up our federation and establish a separate country of Quebec, far from being relegated to concentration camps and gas chambers, have freely expressed their opinion and been elected to govern the province of Quebec.

What ought to be the difference between Hitler and the UHJ is that the Covenant be understood as promoting, rather than eliminating, the right of individuals to freely express and share personal opinions. Liberal democracy works. Opposing liberal democracy a la UHJ is the mindset of Hitler and Stalin. This fails hellishly. You choose which you'd rather have.

What is more hurtful, to have the reality of the nature of exclusivist fundamentalism exposed in blunt language, or to follow the dictates of such fundamentalist passion to the point that all that prevents Hooper, Doug and the boys from creating a worse hell than Hitler's or Stalin's is their lack of the ability to do so? The theory that everything Shoghi Effendi said is literally true means that a theocratic state is the intent of this outfit. The notion that Hooper, Doug and the boys can trash whatever they please of the high minded principles of the religion and are owed mindless obedience from all to be included in this theocratic state paves the way for Hooper's offspring to take the step of the final solution with regard to dissidents (The nine bully boys already have said that there cannot be dissidence within their vision of the Baha'i Faith; check that newspeak titled Rights and Freedoms Letter).

If you find it painful to see outlined the consequences of exclusivist fundamentalism, good. Perhaps there's some hope for what was intended by it's founder to include, not exclude. The road to hell is paved with good intentions, and intending to create a peaceful world monolithic state of sheep all baaing while the UHJ stomps on fundamental human rights and the principles that were enunciated by Baha'u'llah is guaranteed to produce a hell worse than those of Hitler and Stalin, if only Hooper and the boys, "Get the muscle" to do what they want. If you and others really object to the reality of the nature of Hooper's brand of exclusivist fundamentalism, maybe you'll try being a bit more open to Baha'u'llah's vision of inclusion.

To Harmony,
Michael

"David Fiorito and Jennifer Spotila" (fiospots@pond.com) writes:

> You know. Maybe it is because I am sitting here with the flu but I am sick > and tired of these over blown comparisons that just don't hold up to > scrutiny.
>
> I am sick of anyone dragging out Hitler and Stalin every time they get > ticked off at some one else.
>
> Until there are more mass murdering meglomaniacal psychos running around can > we please stop saying that people we disagree with are Stalinist Nazis?
>
>
> Oh and by the way - you follow the laws of your country don't you? Well > guess what in you statement bellow you might as well put in your name and > the name of your countries leader because you are doing the same thing as > the Germans did during W.W.II - you are following your leader.
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Tests of faith

Date: Sunday, January 02, 2000 7:56 PM

Greetings, Brian.

Happy Millennium.

At last I have a moment to reply to your previous post. I have already made one comment on it, on the position that one ought to wait for a divine intervention, or that what transpires: fascist rule in Germany, the Inquisition, Stalin's reign of terror or the violation by the UHJ of essential Baha'i principles, is happening according to the pleasure of God. This is the position of the tyrant and the opium eater, and I am so very happy that our modern age so overwhelmingly disagrees with so dangerous and harmful a philosophy. Had there been no Inquisition, no Holocaust, no reign of Stalinist terror and had the UHJ not sought to stomp on the principles of Baha'u'llah and create an exclusive cult, then those other than cultists could agree with such historical evidence. However, we may now judge by the actual evidence of the history which happened the worthiness of despotic theories, the utility of taking opium and the price of opposing freedom of thought and expression, the equality of women and men, the independent investigation of truth, liberal-democracy itself.

I am so very sorry that you confess that you would have to leave the Baha'i Faith, were you to decide that you had a UHJ, as you do, which has removed itself from the guidance of god. We may quibble about the meaning of the word god, however, any decent entity does not grant to mortals the absolute authority to violate principles. Such authority comes through no other legitimate agency either. The doctrine that the state or the party or the royal family or the institution of the monarchy or anything else may render concentration camps, gulags, inquisitions, crusades, pogroms, etc. etc. worthy, as opposed to unprincipled deeds, is bogus, hogwash and the excrement of cattle. A deed is principled not because leadership says so, but because it is principled, and, if the primary principle insisted on is that Hitler, Stalin or the UHJ must be obeyed, regardless of principle, then the unprincipled, the sadistic and the cultist may obey, and this obedience will never achieve the harmony of humanity, although censors, secret police, exile, imprisonment and execution of dissidents be undertaken by such unprincipled authorities in the name of achieving a unity no decent person would ascribe to an honest man, let alone a deity.

I entirely disagree with you, and I assert that neither you, nor anyone else, not even the UHJ has the right to insist on your opinion. If you wish to resign from what you perceive as a cult, divinely guided, you are quite at liberty to do so. What you have absolutely no right to do, and what the UHJ has absolutely no right to do, is to insist that anyone else must see with your eyes, must believe in obedience of despots as the primary principle, must follow you in quitting a cult on discovering that the UHJ indeed has discriminated against women, indeed does forbid women from holding office, indeed has harassed the likes of Juan Cole to drive them out of the religion, indeed did erase the name of Michael McKenny from the membership list, because he continued to post to e-mail lists his opinion that there are essential principles brought by Baha'u'llah such as the equality of women and men, the independent investigation of truth, the harmony of true religion and science, etc. which must be accepted by any authority seeking to assist a greater harmony among the human species.

Anyone who chooses to believe that the founder of your religion sought to provide the essential principles to bring about greater human harmony and that these principles outweigh the Stalinist doctrine of absolute obedience of any command soever, anyone at all who is of an opinion other than the literalist one in the infallibility of the UHJ, is quite rightly a believer, a member of the Baha'i community, as s/he sees fit. By seeking to have the ability to decide who is a follower of Baha'u'llah, by drawing on this article of its constitution to have the names of individuals erased because these individuals have another understanding of the words of the Prophet of Baha, than the Stalinist one, the UHJ has strayed far from the universality of the purpose of the founder of the religion. It has insisted on a narrow, a single, a fundamentalist, a despotic, a tyrannical, a cultic interpretation of the words that may also be understood as directing these very members of the UHJ to be all-embracing in their vision, to arise above the power seeking, the self-centredness, the imposition of one viewpoint, the despotism, the male chauvinism, the medievalism, into which in reality the current members of the UHJ have sunk.

My hour is up, so I'll post this. The point is clear. You are quite at liberty to believe the primary principle upon which all principle depends is the obedience of despots, and others are at complete liberty to hold a less cultish, less opium devouring opinion, and you, nor anyone else has the right to tell them they must think as you think, or they are not Baha'i.

To a Better Future,
Michael

The issue regarding the position of women on the UHJ has been decided upon, and is based on the Writings. At least, I am satisfied it has been clearly stated. But that is my opinion, and a differing opinion is welcome. Where we differ is that I have confidence that the UHJ has been guided by God. If I were not confident of that, I would have to leave the Faith.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Old Friends
Date: Tuesday, June 27, 2000 12:53 PM

Greetings.

An old friend looked in here to find my e-mail address.

Ah, how time flows and memories stir in the breeze of the years. How much has passed since you told me of this wondrous medium of cyberspace. The USSR has ceased to be, and I in starry eyed innocence walked into Talisman to read the provisional translations of writings by Baha'u'llah not available elsewhere. And this petit gars from Ottawa became one of the articulate voices encouraging the Baha'is to choose a way embracing the open-mindedness so refreshingly a fundamental aspect of the teachings of their prophet. I was one of them at the time, and you may enjoy reading some of what the spirit of this faith wafted at that time. The archives of this list contain copies of some of this material, and you may assess, as may any independent seeker of truth, the value of the thoughts of these people who were hounded until they said they weren't Bahai's or, if they persisted in saying they were, were declared to be unqualified for membership in this religion.

Personally, I became a Baha'i overwhelmed that God could be providing for humanity to avoid the darkness of nuclear confrontation and guiding the species to harmonious life. Yet, when they so demonstrated, I accepted the evidence that those whose obligation it was to further this goal of the maturity of the Terran species had instead replicated the defects of previous totalitarian and divisive systems.

I do not know whether it was ever humanly possible to achieve the vision of Baha'u'llah, as we saw it in the old days, one vast diverse garden of humanity, fostering the open-minded search for truth, the harmony of reason and faith, the freedom of thought and expression, the balance of the feminine and masculine wings of the bird of the species -- ah, such golden dreams we had so long ago.

Anyway, if you wish, go ahunting for the thoughts of your old friend and others such as Juan Cole from those halcyon days in the mid 90s. And, judge for yourself the quality of opinions decreed heretical (in a religion whose author strove to overcome the concept of heresy).

I have spent a lot of time recently very deeply exploring the ways of those who were not monotheists. Unlike Juan Cole and some others, my opinion is that the inability of the UHJ to escape the contagion of power regardless of principle exposes the incapacity of the revealed monotheistic paradigm to provide for a mature human species. There are many strengths in polytheism, and the chief need, in my opinion, humanity has when it comes to religion, is the separation of church and state with the state based on liberal democracy. Humans are too prone to catch the disease of dictatorial totalitarianism regardless of the particular source of their theoretical and practical power to allow leaders a legitimacy transcending liberal democracy, human rights, etc. Perhaps, I'll have more to say on this later. For now, greetings again and farewell. I look forward to an old friendship renewed and wish you all the best.

See You,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Bingo! (was: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium)
Date: Sunday, July 16, 2000 11:26 AM

Greetings, Patrick.

(patk9018@my-deja.com) writes:

> Correct. Categorizations of certain individuals as Nazis, or some sort > of anti-christ, are simply demonizations which excuse the view holder > from any additional thoughts on the matter - rationalizations for > prejudice and rigid adherence to flawed opinions.

President Reagan described Mikhail Gorbachev as the Evil Emperor. The response by Gorbachev was to acquaint Westerners with the meaning of the Russian words Glasnost and Perestroika and to end the Cold War, so that we saw recently Westerners describing Gorbachev as the man of the 20th Century.

Michael McKenny advised the members of the UHJ that their actions in conducting censorship, seeking the exclusion of scholars from the Baha'i Faith, opposing liberal-democracy, etc. were similar to those actions which required the defence of the Free World. The response by the UHJ was a continued opposition to professors in the humanities and to the concept of liberal-democracy, as well as the innovation of removing from the membership rolls some liberal-minded followers of the religion.

What you fail to notice is that it is the behaviour of Mikhail Gorbachev and the members of the UHJ which permit unbiased observers to note the distance or the spot on nature of the assessments made by others. If one says you are behaving in the manner of the Nazis and you react by insisting on censorship, thought control, one officially imposed dogma, etc., it is not the words about you, but your own deeds which demonstrate the validity of that comparison.

Despite the depiction of Gorbachev as the Evil Emperor, Reagan and the West paid keen attention when Gorbachev demonstrated how different he was from such a depiction. Despite the current lot in power in Haifa acting previously as have acted such despicable regimes as the Nazis, let Doug and Co. begin to behave differently, let them welcome, within the Baha'i Faith, professors of the humanities such as Juan, who think in ways confirming Baha'u'llah's description of humanity as a garden, let them promote humane principles, enunciated also in Baha'i texts, let us observe such actions and sentiments described on this newsgroup and elsewhere and, as the west paid attention to Gorbachev, so will attention be paid to Doug and his partisans. Indeed, such actions may well contribute to elevating the Baha'i religion above sectarian and personal partisanship, as was hoped by the founder of the religion.

And, if Doug and Co. continue to behave in a manner opposing the freedom of thought and expression within the Baha'i Faith, attacking liberal-democracy, etc., attention will still be paid to them, as it currently is, and the similarity of such behaviour to the actions of previous despicable regimes will continue to be noted.

Write to the best of your ability, describe as fully as you are able, elucidate to the utmost of your capacity the theories and the practises of Baha'i leadership. If they are behaving worthily, anyone at all will be able to convince humanity of this; if they are behaving harmfully no one will be able to convince unbiased observers that their oppressive, divisive, harmful action is beneficial.

May they provide you and others with material worthy to present.

All the Best,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Bingo! (was: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium)

Date: Wednesday, July 19, 2000 9:42 AM

Greetings.

Your statement as to the election of Baha'i leadership may be your understanding and it is valid in this non-absolutist sense. It is not the understanding of many others who consider themselves Baha'is. It is, in the estimation of the Solar Guard, at the root of the current sectarianism within the movement begun by Baha'u'llah. Overcoming your fundamentalist insistence that the literal texts you believe applicable to this issue and those which you ignore as being unconnected with it (or trumped by those you favour) freeze the electoral pattern of your religion in pre-modernism has divided you and has permitted the totalitarian membership for life (or as long as personally desired) of an old boys' club of fundamentalists. This is in the best interests of such an old boys' club; it has been demonstrated to be against the intent of Baha'u'llah, except to those interpreting this intent as the formation of a fundamentalist sect controlled by an old boy's club.

We find the thought that the formation of a fundamentalist sect, the insistence on silent compliance with a fundamentalist agenda (or exclusion from membership), discrimination against women, opposition to liberal-democracy, to the harmony of faith and reason, to the independent investigation of truth, etc. is the promotion of the Baha'i teachings quite remarkable. According to this method of defining such teachings, one would be most likely to find virgins in brothels.

You are free to think and to say what you like, and we repeat that your definite statement is not the Baha'i position, although it may be one of a number of personal opinions held by individuals saying they are Baha'is.

We stress the importance of the permission of the expression, within the Baha'i Faith, of all personal opinions on such topics. Refusal to allow such freedom of thought and expression is one indication that the individuals so interfering in personal thought and expression are unfit for leadership, that is their leadership is harmful to humanity.

Loving Greetings,
Department of the Secretariat,
Solar Guard

(patk9018@my-deja.com) writes:

> The Center of the Cause does promote those teachings > and is elected consistent with the guidance given by Baha'u'llah and > thus 'Abdu'l Baha as well.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium
Date: Saturday, July 08, 2000 11:57 AM

Greetings, Rlittle.

Have you read THE PROMISED DAY IS COME? Were Shoghi Effendi alive, he would castigate Doug Martin and his colleagues with the same vehemence with which he lashed out at the fundamentalists and the despots of previous generations.

Have you read THE EPISTLE TO THE SON OF THE WOLF? Were Baha'u'llah alive, he would use the same language to denounce Doug Martin and his colleagues for hounding, harrasing and maligning those who demonstrate that the harmony of humanity is incompatible with fundamentalist despotism.

Altering Baha'u'llah's vision of a golden age of human maturity into yet another re-run of tyrannical oppression and sectarian animosity is indeed reprehensible.

May every human being clearly perceive the extent to which the spirit of this age and species repudiates tyrannical fundamentalist sectarianism.

Loving Greetings,
Department of the Secretariat,
Solar Guard

(rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:

> Is there anyone who can read this passage and still consider that > slander and backbiting and vilification and demonization are "meet and > seemly?"

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium
Date: Monday, July 10, 2000 1:38 PM

Greetings, Brian.

Many thanks for your comments.

"Brian F. Walker" (dr.walker@fsandp.com) writes:

> I put it to you that the basic beliefs of Christians everywhere can result in > unity only if we concentrate on the Bible, but that people are divided (and > tyrannized by their respective AO) because of divisions caused by the minds of > humans which interpret the Holy Writ for the "benefit" of others. One looks at > the Orange order marches in Northern Ireland, and wonders what is going on > between their ears.

The important concepts introduced by Baha'u'llah include harmony as the goal instead of uniformity, the recognition that individuals, by nature, will have a vast variety of understandings and that no one understanding should be imposed as the exclusive authoritative one; such impositions, contrary to human nature, have been quite destructive in the past; people must be allowed, encouraged to seek independent understanding of reality and to speak freely their ever-changing personal perception of truth, also listening, or at least allowing to be spoken, each other human's personal awareness of truth.

> The danger I see comes from those who would reject, modify or abrogate the > words of Baha'u'llah, Abdul-Baha and Shoghi Effendi, put them into "historical > perspective"

No, the danger comes from those who would deny other human beings the freedom to seek independently for truth, those who believe they know the real perspective of the words of Baha'u'llah, etc. and if they hear some other thoughts then these other thoughts are the rejection, modification or abrogation of such words. In my opinion, those who seek to squelch the freedom of the followers of Baha'u'llah to think and to share their thoughts have rejected, modified and abrogated the words of Baha'u'llah and have tossed away one of the chief means for the achievement and preservation of human harmony.

The concept that one understanding alone is permitted to be spoken and all other understandings exclude one from the community has been attempted with the full force of totalitarian regimes, has been condemned by Baha'u'llah and has been demonstrated in the laboratory of human experience to result in the opposite of human harmony. Human minds are not made that way. We are not clones. We see things differently. Accepting this variety of views is a means by Baha'u'llah for the peace, harmony and prosperity of this planet. By rejecting Baha'u'llah's methods, Baha'i fundamentalists have transformed his vision into one in which contention, confrontation and disharmony are inevitable.

> I see the blindness of those who would pretend to see, and who attack the very > institutions that Baha'u'llah created and defined

As far as I know, the focus of discussion has not been an opposition to the institutions Baha'u'llah defined. I consider it perfectly legitimate for humans to think and to express their thoughts, within the Baha'i Faith, for a variety of institutional forms. However, so far, what I have observed in these discussions is the assertion that the Baha'i world should now be blessed by the actual institutions created and defined by Baha'u'llah, instead of by individuals using the names of such institutions but as far from such institutions as one (or at least I) can imagine. In place of a Universal House of Justice, we have some guys who are administering as if they were a typical tyrannical cult leadership. They use the name, but humans have long suffered from leaders using names and words, but being and doing the opposite.

When we see visionary leadership, accepting the views of Baha'u'llah so as to provide an over-arching accepting harmony of humanity, when we observe that those imaginative (some would say inspired) concepts of Baha'u'llah: the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of science and religion (reason and faith), etc. are preferred to dictatorial imposition of one fundamentalist interpretation, to one exclusivist understanding, to one divisive dogmatic definition, then we will know that the institutions created and defined by Baha'u'llah don't merely have their names applied to their opposites, but really exist.

I have not seen anyone here attack the institutions created and defined by Baha'u'llah. Just as one may object to a drunk at the wheel of a car stuck in the ditch without finding fault with the car, so those who have failed to provide us with a Universal House of Justice, instead replicating the attitudes of the most objectionable and oppressive regimes in human history (generating the same divisiveness and diminishment of respect for leadership as was generated by those regimes) find themselves pointedly called to drive on the Baha'i highway and get out of the ditch of fundamentalism, suppression of human thought, exclusivity, confrontation and disunity. May the institution of the Universal House of Justice at long last appear resplendent before the expectant gaze of humanity. It is not attacked, it is long overdue.

All the Best,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium
Date: Thursday, July 13, 2000 11:44 AM

Greetings, Brian.

Many thanks for your comments.

Brian F. Walker (dr.walker@fsandp.remove.com) writes:

> If we regard the UHJ as just another group of politicians <pfui> then I > would be behind you on the barricades and shouting and jumping up and down > (albeit from the standpoint of a non-Baha'i) to effect reform.

Reason and faith are in harmony. Blind faith is forbidden to Baha'is. When the observation of reason reveals that the current lot in Haifa are manifesting precisely the same attitudes and behavior as totalitarian politicians (in actual fact, democratic leadership is one of the great achievements of humanity; I do not malign Canada's prime-minister, and one reason is that we are free to agree or disagree with him and to say so; leaders who insist their errors are correct and may not be pointed out are unacceptable wheresoever they may be, in the Kremlin, on Mt. Carmel or anywhere else).

I absolutely reject the position that you or any other human being, or committee of human beings, pretending they are doing so according to the words of deity, may dictate whether any other soul is a Baha'i, Buddhist or Confucianist. The fact that the allegedly universal faith of Baha'u'llah is now being administered by men who have done so and who advocate that some believers of Baha'u'llah tell other believers of Baha'u'llah that these other believers are not Baha'is unless they accept that the errors of Doug Martin and his colleagues are literally correct is one indication these guys have behaved as cult leaders instead of as members of an all-embracing Universal House of Justice. They have divided the movement of world harmony, exactly in the manner of the most objectionable politicians.

We have been through this on this newsgroup. Infallibility, in the sense of inerrancy, is NOT the correct meaning of what was said about the decrees of Doug Martin, Hooper Dunbar, et al. In addition, I've already posted here, that the words may be seen as addressed to Doug Martin, Hooper Dunbar et al. They may be perceived as being directed to act AS IF they were the infallible source of all good; this may be understood as strong spiritual advice TO THEM. And, they have so far not followed it very well. When they rein in the fundamentalists, when they follow the universalist teachings of Baha'u'llah, instead of promulgating a dogma that humans cannot be Baha'is unless they accept a literalist fundamentalist viewpoint and take the behavior of Doug Martin, Hooper Dunbar, et al. as the only possibly correct course, as dictated by deity (Oghma, great god of wisdom, great champion of our people, great source of eloquence, may I be empowered to overcome so nightmarish a vision) then will they be contributing to benefit instead of adding to human suffering.

> I think, however, that the analogy is completely wrong. I believe that > Baha'u'llah was right, that the UHJ is not man-made, but a Divinely > ordained body, which does not play by the Old World Order rules. The > motives which are ascribed to it are not what motivate it.

They are pointedly called to account because it is evident to reason that they are playing by Old World rules, and the most objectionable of Old World rules at that. They are the cause of confrontation, division, oppression; they are the ones who have redefined the religion into a sect.

>>The opinions of those liberals who were hounded out of the Baha'i >>Faith, and in my case booted out when I resisted all efforts to get me >>to resign, are legitimate within a Baha'i belief system. Human minds are >>obviously capable of arriving at them, and human hearts which feel that >>the founder of the religion intended there to be harmony between faith >>and reason (religion and science), the independent investigation of >>reality, unfettered by orthodoxies either scientific or religious, the >>freedom of thought and expression, the recognition of the over-arching >>harmony of the species, rather than a uniform acceptance of dictated >>dogmatic belief, living the life, rather than discriminating on the >>excuse of fundamentalist literalism's mistranslation, when it comes to >>equality of women and men replacing male's only at the top, etc. are >>demonstrably in accord with the influences and the movement of >>Baha'u'llah.

> Wow! OK ... for the most part I agree with you, but consider this Michael:
> let us assume that the future of the world is bleak indeed unless we have a > new style of government and leadership.

Nonsense. Liberal-democracy has been shown to be one of the greatest achievements with which humanity has been blessed. Why does the UN keep saying Canada is the best place to live?

The new thing you assert is as old as the hills; it is the childish tyranny of the weak and the insecure. It is the oppression of those who have been divinely created to see things differently from Doug Martin and Hooper Dunbar, etc. It is the attempt to shut people up, drive them away and define them as other, alien, non- The future of humanity is likely not bleak, UNLESS fundamentalism, blind faith that deity has given Doug Martin & Co. the inerrant right to impose their opinions, silencing all others, is inflicted upon a species that has so long endured despots and tyrannical rule.

>The woes facing us (environmental > political and social) are immense, and need a new cure. Let us further > assume that the new world order we need depends upon *consultation*, which > Shoghi Effendi assures us is the only really new part of our religion, all > else being a renewal of revelation.

Some consultation! Unless one caws a fundamentalist party line, one is not included. Great Epona, protectress, shield, sword, defend our people from such anacronism, such Orwellian newspeak.

Consultation means listening to all points of view. Doug Martin, Hooper Dunbar and their colleagues have sought to impose one point of view. This is not new at all. It is not in the least required by humanity at this, or any other stage, of its existence.

> Let us go on to assume that if

> Baha'u'llah is right, then the UHJ will play a role in that new world > order, using consultation and assured of Divine guidance.

Doug Martin, Hooper Dunbar et al have tossed away whatever divine guidance they had and instead of the novel view of Baha'u'llah that all humans are part of a vastly varied divinely created garden, have sought to grow only a field of fundamentalism.

I absolutely deny that it is basic to Baha'i belief that the redefinition of the Baha'i Faith into a fundamentalist sect must be the opinion of the totality of the membership. Of course, as old world communists, as the partisans of Stalin, it could be imposed, by force, that one had to keep opinions quiet or suffer the consequences. This is not new and it is not to the advantage of humanity.

Were Baha'u'llah to raise up a Universal House of Justice that really behaved as the guides of the planet, that actually promoted the independent investigation of truth, the harmony of reason and faith (defining this a bit more acceptably than believing whatsoever Orwellian newspeak emerges from Mt Carmel is reasonably inerrant), that practices the principles of freedom of thought and expression, the true equality of women and men, the veritable diversity of valid viewpoints, etc, then, perhaps such a body would deserve some consideration. As long as the guys now in charge can't even get along with those who believe in their own prophet what possible worth are they to the world at large?

Let them get out of the ditch, toss away the bottle of fundamentalism and then perhaps they can ask others to observe how splendidly they drive. >

> I know - a lot of assumptions, but I think they are basic to Baha'i belief.

> Now, to the point.

> I believe that the reason you, personally, have had problems is not so much > because of what you have said, but more because of how you have said it. I > think that part of the reason is because you have assumed the UHJ is part > of the old world order - and you have treated them as such.

Absolutely wrong. Read the sequence of my writings in order. I assumed they were a Universal House of Justice. They responded as old world politicians. Only then, did I understand, because I am not one incapable of modifying my opinions according to new information, that the Universal House of Justice called for by Baha'u'llah does not exist.

> I also assume that you have had the most honourable of intentions, and that > you act now in a spirit of righting wrongs. But if I am right in having > made the above assumptions, then it is possible that the way back to peace > is to accept the new world order for all its beauty,

Oghma, Epona, Lugh, all the warrior gods of our ancient past, ever preserve humanity from such a nightmare as the oppression, tyranny and discord of such a terrible beauty. Arm us in mind, body and spirit ever to resist, oppose and vanquish such horror.

May anyone who assumes that diversity of views may be squelched, that reason may be extinguished by fanatical fundamentalism, that women may be dominated by an all-male hierarchy, that the liberal arts may be vilified, that dictatorial dogma may be imposed on this species be granted the full realization that such demonic efforts cannot succeed, that only a cult would attempt them and that, with the blessing of deity and the full approval even of Baha'u'llah, humans will die rather than submit to so great an evil.

> and work - with that > diversity you uniquely manifest (tongue in cheek but sincerely meant) - for > that abundant and diverse garden. Consultation instead of confrontation.

> Unity in diversity instead of diverse disunity.

Orwellian newspeak again. It is not Baha'i liberals who had problems with diversity. The origin of this intolerance lies with the fundamentalists who hounded the liberals and even legislated them out of the organization they control. It is not Juan, etc. who need to show greater acceptance of diversity. It is Doug Martin and his colleagues. This ball is on their side of the net. Let them manifest the attributes of an ordinary follower of Baha'u'llah, to say nothing of those charged with behaving AS IF they were the wellspring of divine guidance, a mighty example and source of human harmony. This is an entirely different concept from the thought that one must think a certain way, be silent or be gone.

>> .... is an historical testimony to their failure to guide the religion >>as a universalist movement, according to the broad-minded vision of the >>founder of the faith, but instead they have repeated the behaviour of >>those whom Baha'u'llah assessed to be in error and an oppressive burden >>to their people. As Juan once said, yes, it may be possible to alter the >>Baha'i Faith so that it is a fundamentalist sect, but, then, doesn't it >>cease being relevant and become redundant?

> Again, I see your point, and the horror you express, but I truly believe > the UHJ is leading us to achieve that very beauty you desire. My wish is > for you to see the beauty I see, not the horror you see, and that you were > in that vanguard, watering those flowers.

How can you say they are leading us to beauty, when what they have done is drive people away, define only one fundamentalist viewpoint as acceptable, turned a universal religion into a fundamentalist dogma, etc. etc. This is contrary to reason, which, as I understand Baha'i, is contrary to Baha'i. One may have blind faith in cult leaders, even to the extent of committing suicide. Blind faith, contrary to reason, is a proof the individual or the entity may be assessed to be non-Baha'i, according to the original definition of the Faith.

May those who would call themselves Baha'is be granted the insight to realize such a word requires open-mindedness, understanding that no one, not even Doug Martin in committee with eight other men, may oppose diversity of views or impose thought control, censorship, suppression of thought and expression, etc. etc.

To the Future,
Michael

> All the best,
>

Brightest Blessings to you and yours.

> Brian
>

> (Do you think we are all that far apart?)

If you posit that Doug Martin and Company may impose fundamentalism, we are worlds apart. If you accept that a world spiritual assembly promotes the rainbow of human understanding, we are not in the least apart.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium

Date: Monday, July 10, 2000 12:44 PM

Dia Dhuit, Pat.

No, I base it on his opposition to fundamentalists such as the Wolf and ibn Wolf, his enunciation of metaphorical interpretations of scripture, his assertion that individual understandings of scripture, god and religious concepts (including one's perception of the nature of Baha'u'llah himself) should be recognized, his promotion of the principles of the independent investigation of truth and the freedom of thought and expression, and his declaration that the reason he opened his mouth was to demonstrate the underlying inclusive harmony of the human species. Doug Martin, Hooper Dunbar and their colleagues have behaved in the exact same exclusive, literalist fundamentalist manner as those castigated by Baha'u'llah, as if their theological heritage may be traced through ibn Wolf and father, instead of as the spiritual offspring of Baha'u'llah. The Baha'i Covenant, so literally cherished by the fundamentalists in charge, includes the concept that if the one in line to succeed does not manifest the attributes of his ancestry, then such a lack demonstrates his lack of fitness to succeed. It is obvious, to any non-cultist, that those demonstrating their spiritual heritage is from the family of ibn Wolf, instead of Baha'u'llah, have no mandate to positions of leadership in the Baha'i Faith, although there may be some theological positions they may legitimately compete for in the fundamentalist religions.

Slan,
Michael

Pat Kohli (kohli@ameritel.net) writes:

>
> As far as your predictions regarding Baha'u'llah, would you base that on the > influence of Sufi pirs? British intervention in Egypt? tobacco concessions in > Iran? or something else?

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium

Date: Sunday, July 16, 2000 9:11 AM

Hmmm, do you understand that there are other things than your literal interpretation of the scripture. You already received the answer that the very writings you consider the divine standard include THE EPISTLE TO THE SON OF THE WOLF, and in addition there is THE PROMISED DAY IS COME which contains quotes as well as the writing of Shoghi Effendi, quite pointedly commenting on the failings of others. These are among numerous passages in Baha'i literature, scripture and commentary by Shoghi Effendi, calling leaders, political and religious, to account in terms quite similar to those being used concerning the misdeeds of Baha'i fundamentalists now in power.

It is legitimate for those in control of the Baha'i religion to be treated as Baha'u'llah treated their spiritual ancestors, fundamentalists in other religions.

If you have some other opinion and can cite some other passages as to how you or Doug Martin think you or Doug Martin may respond to Baha'i fundamentalism, by all means, as long as your interpretation of such passages does not incite you to break the law of the land, live your life. Do not demand that your understanding or Doug's understanding is the only Baha'i understanding and demand everyone else must follow your personal understanding of such passages.

There are several basic principles to modify your premise about the priority of Baha'i scripture: primarily, one must accept that human minds being divinely created different will perceive such writings in a wide variety of manners and that this variety is valid and efforts to impose a single understanding cannot succeed, unless success is defined as the uniform dogma of a sect, such a sect being the consequence of the failure of the mission of Baha'u'llah to achieve human harmony.

Additional factors, such as the metaphorical and poetical exaggeration of inspired text and the essential requirement to harmonize spiritual literature with spiritual principles necessitate the avoidance of actions based on literal readings contrary to humanity and ethics. That is, by principle one cannot place an absolute priority for one's actions on literal text if the literal text (for example, "Leave not a single unbeliever alive in the Central provinces of Iran,") appears to justify what is already known to be unethical.

I hope the above is clear. If not, don't hesitate to say so.

To the Future,
Michael

(rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:

> May I ask just what post you are responding to? I asked questions, > rather than "insist(ed) that one opinion of the writings is the only > correct one." Perhaps you did not understand my questions, something > quite likely in newsgroups.
>
> So, to restate the previous post, I stated an a priori: that the > Writings of the Baha'i Faith are to be considered as the divine > standard by which all else is judged.
>
> I then asked you what the Baha'i Writings say concerning how one ought > to respond to an injustice, whether real or perceived; and, I asked you > what those same Writings say concerning backbiting, and if possible, > how we can determine if we or someone else is committing backbiting.
>
> You have raised an interesting point that ought to be expored as well, > in my opinion: You said that Baha'u'llah opposed despotism and this > seems to be fundamental to your position. How did He oppose despotism?
> (quotations will do nicely).
>
> I hope that by sticking to what the Writings say, we can avoid slippage > down that slope that leads into personal attacks and denunciations, and > remain on flat, friendly ground.
>
> Ok?

>
> Robert A. Little

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Exposing Mr Mahdi Part 1
Date: Tuesday, July 25, 2000 8:49 AM

Greetings, Comrade Adelard.

Many thanks for your comments.

Yes, I recall one famous fundamentalist telling me that the UHJ (by which Doug Martin and Co. were intended) had no sense of humor at all. Well, Gee, Comrade, don't you think one takes something seriously when one spends some time at it, considers it, takes actions, considering the consequences, accepting the consequences, hmmm.

"Keep insulting the institutions of Baha'u'llah" well, as I've said before, I haven't really posted anything saying that the institutions of Baha'u'llah are anything except in need of coming into existence, having a reality more substantial than the current verbal cloneship to, Dear Comrade, entities familiar to Soviet citizens and readers of 1984.

I would like to share one comment made a while back on a pagan cyberspace planet. It concerns this concept of "insult". This pagan posted the opinion that one is not really insulted unless the offensive remark is true. In other cases one may simply dismiss the offending words as of no factual connection to one's self. He used as the example, "But he said my mother was a whore?" and the response, "Well, was she?"

So, if some guy chattering away on an e-list or newsgroup says that the men in charge of the Baha'i Faith are acting more in the manner of totalitarian dictators replete with the oppression of the Baha'i principles of independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of science and religion, the equality of women and men, etc., well, if this is false say so, demonstrate that really Allison Marshall has not been removed from the rolls of the Baha'is in New Zealand by the guys who really are not clones of the old Politburo members, that really there is no censorship within the Baha'i Faith and historians may write books about Baha'u'llah without getting nasty letters composed by Doug Martin or anyone else in Haifa signing his name "Department of the Secretariat", etc.

And, if you tell me or if Doug Martin tells me that what I say is insulting well, perhaps it that what I write is true.

I was astonished when one member of a Baha'i e-list (soon after my unwarned notice arrived saying my name had been deleted from the list of Baha'is) posted that he had contacted someone in Totonto (HQ of Canadian NSA which sent me the notice on behalf of the UHJ) to seek more details and had been told the members of the UHJ had found my communications with them insulting. Go back and read what I wrote. This is written in a very polite style. So, is my pagan friend correct, and did the issues I raised (with all the delicacy an inspired and careful writer could attempt) insult because they were true?

And, again, you have the complete freedom to express your opinion, if such it is, that your interpretation of the words of the Will and Testament of Abdu'l Baha is that Doug Martin and his buddies may decree anything they please and behave in any manner they desire. And, anyone else is equally free to express any other opinion, including the one that the Institution of the Universal House of Justice is required by the Will and Testament to seek to live up to Baha'i standards and principles, and these include promoting freedom of thought and expression among all humans instead of seeking clones of good Soviet citizens to compose the cult's membership rolls.

Those who criticized the attitude and behaviour of despots were not attacking Mother Russia or any other country afflicted by such leadership. Ditto for those objecting to the despotic attitudes and behaviour by Doug Martin and his buddies. One calling for something using the name of the institutions written about by Baha'u'llah actually to be recognizable by Baha'u'llah instead of by Stalin is not attacking the institutions that Baha'u'llah called for. Doug and Co. are lucky that Baha'u'llah is not alive to give them a piece of his mind, because he'd give them an earful they could really find insulting, and all of it true, Comrade.

To the Future,
Michael

"Adelard R" (postmaster@ishop-usa.com) writes:

>>>I'm at a loss to understand why you two are defending

>

> I am still asking Mr Nima hazini, why could you get at loss, when you > really know these individuals are not sincere and don't take seriously the > Will and Testament of Abdul-Baha and keep insulting the Institutions of > Baha'u'llah and our beloved Universal House of Justice . What do you > expect Nima?

>

> Thank you though for your sincerity on this thread .

>

> Adelard R

> Adelard.Rubangura@unisys.com

>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Exposing Nima

Date: Wednesday, July 26, 2000 11:01 AM

Greetings, Hooper.

Uhm, well, I am interested not so much in the all too prevalent ad hominem in general, as this is a typical fundamentalist Baha'i error. If reason and faith are to agree and if faith minus reason is merely superstition, then the basic foundation of much fundamentalist argument is pure superstition, condemned by the very founders of the religion. For, if one examines such argumentation, a great deal of it, in complete contradiction to both elementary formal logic and to the basic principles of Baha'i consultation, is directed at who is speaking, instead of what is being said.

So, whether it is the ghost of the Ayatullah Khomeini or an alter ego of Hooper Dunbar or the president of a theological college in Ohio or a miner in the Ukraine or wrote these references to Nima's personality, such references are absolutely irrelevant to the thoughts posted here and the positions taken here by Nima or anyone posting under his name. It is pure and simple superstition to focus on the individual saying something and not what is said.

Now, as I said, what I find most interesting is not the usual blatant and irrelevant superstition per se, but the specific things that are supposed to render the thoughts of Nima void.

Let's look at these:

Mr Mahdi (mrmahdi@aol.com) writes:

> Don't worry folks, a grown man who is mostly like still living with his parents > in the land down under is nothing to take seriously.

As one who has spent much of my free time over the past six months seeking to get a glimpse of traditional Chinese religion, thought and life and its similarities and dissimilarities to the ancestral ways of my Celtic ancestors, I find this reference to abiding in one's paternal home quite fascinating. Supposedly, Hooper or whoever, believes that one's thoughts may be discounted because one has not moved out of the parental home, an action that would seem quite bizarre, possibly unfilial, to a great many of the people who have ever lived on this planet.

Hmmm, is there something wrong with Australians, Hooper? This is of a class of argument that suggests that everything someone says may be discounted on the grounds that person is from Iran or Egypt or Greece, etc. Such national prejudice is what may be discounted.

>A cult prone vagabond who > had to borrow money from a family (as well as other things) is nothing to lose > sleep over.

Well, can we have it two ways, first, he stays in the ancestral residence, then he leaves it and wanders around presumably away from the ancestral home? However, you know whether one is sedentary or a nomad, the thoughts of this individual (or of this people) are equally worthy of consideration and not to be disregarded on the grounds that they are the thoughts of one settled or one ambulatory.

What? that someone is considered trustworthy and meritorious enough to be the recipient of the charity you suggest is supposed to render his remarks void? A fascinating suggestion. And, uhm, by the same reasoning, this fellow Muhammed, this cult vagabond who wandered up to Medina and received charity there, would you suggest we discount anything he said, too?

> Let him rant and rave and cry about why he can't get a teaching > job.

What, Hooper, I would have thought, according to the anti-scholastic sentiments within fundamentalist circles, that we'd be told to ignore what Nima was saying were he to have a job as a teacher. So, were he something other than a teacher, this ought, by fundamentalist reasoning, to render his comments of greater interest.

As I noted earlier, all references to Nima's personality rather than to his thoughts are superstitious irrelevancies.

> Nima, doesn't telemarketing pay minimum wage these days?

As I understand sales, of which telemarketing is one branch, you get healthy bonuses, if you are successful at it. Hooper, whether you are a telemarketer, a college professor, a carpenter or a UHJ member has no bearing on the validity or the invalidity of your positions. Your expressed opinions may be assessed on their own.

I can appreciate the enormous challenge this raises for fundamentalists all too often feeling the flawless, infallible response to thoughts expressed is to talk about the person speaking. However, according to reason (what is actually taught in formal logic) and religion (what at least used to be taught in Baha'i deepenings on Baha'i consultation) such references to who, rather than what, is superstitious irrelevancy

I will repeat that I find the specific grounds of this Nima ad hominem quite fascinating.

Department of the Secretariat,
Solar Guard

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: << bahai >> newcomer
Date: Wednesday, August 02, 2000 10:57 AM

Greetings, Rlittle.

Many thanks for your comments, and acknowledgements that you are posting to TRB, replying to others' post, demonstrating that you at least are reading what others are posting here. However, if I understand you correctly you are upholding the policy that there should not be freedom of speech within the Baha'i religion.

If by vertical you did not mean the creation of additional layers between Doug and Co. and the ordinary people, but rather the development of diversity within local communities, hats off to you.

Factually, of course, it is very incorrect to suggest that few places exist without fifteen adult Baha'is. Even in the US, I would be surprised were one per cent of localities to possess fifteen adult Baha'is, and in such vast nations as China the number of such localities is likely minute.

In addition, while it's a great thing to continue the long standing Baha'i concern with developing local communities, your statement as to the novelty of this is also incorrect. It has always been a Baha'i concern. I would be astonished if your Baha'i community, however marvellously developed it may be, can compare with Ashkabad a hundred years ago for the vitality and diversity of the local community activities.

Also, local community development is not incompatible with greater practise of Baha'i principles. Indeed, the extent to which you insist that the expression of varying views is something passe and prohibitive of the building of a community, to that extent are you revealing the resistance you are exhibiting to the growth of the vision of Baha'u'llah.

The ability of individuals to think various thoughts and to express these thoughts is essential. It, of course, is a natural ploy of despots to assert that their despotic, unprincipled measures are fixed and no one is permitted to show what may otherwise be done. This is simply factually incorrect. Neither what was fixed by those ruling Germany during the 30s and the first half of the 40s, nor what was fixed by those ruling Russia through much of the 20th Century has necessarily remained. Likewise, however attractive it may be for Doug and Co. to envision that their attempt to freeze their religion in a similar totalitarian blueprint (devoid of newspeak, this is what your impression of moving ahead with decisions made for the world boils down to) is not at all, the gods be praised, something that all of humanity will have to grin and bear.

Thoughts may be thought, ideas may be expressed and the consequences of the seed of totalitarianism can be observed. The day will come when what Doug and Co. wish you to believe is fixed will be as melted as the similar ice from Nazi and Soviet regimes.

I will happily applaud you and Doug and Co. or their successors, when your words are not mere Orwellian newspeak and really you are showing you are striving to create something according to the vision of Baha'u'llah, Abdu'l Baha etc. This vision is the democratic respect, within the Baha'i Faith, for the independent investigation of truth, the harmony of faith and reason, the freedom of thought and expression, the equality of women and men, etc. When this is evident, I will be happy to applaud. When all you and Doug and Co. have to offer are such words of opposite meaning as were the style of Goebbels and Co., I'll continue to underline how what you claim is the opposite of what you do. You say you offer the vision of Baha'u'llah and you provide something more familiar to Stalin.

To Baha'u'llah's Vision,
Michael

(rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:

> Hi Michael

>

> Well, we disagree. I seem to be following the exhortations you mention, > concerning freedom of expression, eh?

>

> Think about it, please: For decades, the advice has been that fifteen > adult Baha'is were sufficient for a community. Baha'is have been > dispersing for a very long time, with the result that they now live in > nearly as many places as Christians. They are running out of places to > disperse to.

>

> The need to disperse is still there, and dispersal is continuing, but > the need for communities to form, to build up the structure of a Baha'i > society is taking on more importance. That is what we have seen in the > goals of the Four Year Plan just finished, the current plan now > underway, and that is the focus for the next twenty years. Integration > of believers into community, and the development of community into a > structure which can effect change in society. Change, Michael, is > inevitable.

>

> This is a Faith which requires that one rolls up one's sleeves and jump > into the fray. You're going to get scratched and bruised now and again, > but it is the only way to raise up the edifice of the future which > Baha'u'llah has charted for humanity. You are most probably right that > some of the people in there with you aren't reading the blueprints the > same way you are. So what? You have most strongly expressed your own > opinions on the way things ought to be, and probably always have, as > have others, but at some point someone has to make an authoritative > decision.

>

> Have you considered the process of consultation in any of this? Are you > aware - you most probably are - of the requirement for relinquishing > ownership of one's opinion once it has been given, within the structure > of consultation? Are you aware that the collective force of a unified > community going in the wrong direction is preferable (as I understand > it in the Baha'i Faith) to a disunited community going in various > directions?

>

> You seem to call for the freedom of individuals to hold their own > opinion, a freedom you correctly state Baha'u'llah grants you. But > unless all those/us isolated individuals agree at some point to build > something, nothing will ever get built. And in order to build, they/we > will have to follow the vision of Baha'u'llah, and the blueprint laid > out by the interpretations of 'Abdul-Baha', Shoghi Effendi and the > Universal House of Justice.

>

> Everything you rail against is the inevitable result of the growth of > the Faith. You came into the Baha'i Faith at a time of what I call > horizontal growth, or outward growth of individuals. Now we are > witnessing the very beginning of a growth of community, which entails > Baha'is working together, as against seeing each other now and again at > Feast or holy day observances. Working together in ever larger and more > complex arrangements. Vertical development.

>

> I think history will sort out whether or not we are progressing in the > right direction, or in a direction you have been pointing in. I don't > walk in your shoes, nor you mine, so it is very difficult for either of > us to judge the other, and judging is certainly not our responsibility > in any event.

>

> With respect,

>

> Robert A. Little

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: << bahai >> newcomer
Date: Friday, August 04, 2000 7:45 AM

Greetings, Rlittle.

Many thanks for your comments.

You wrote:

> One of the differences I see between us is that I > _choose_ to participate in the construction of the future as I > understand Baha'u'llah to have revealed it, and you _choose_ not to.

Actually, factually, it was Doug and Co. that decreed that my name be removed from the membership rolls of the Baha'i community. I chose in response to seek to follow the more beneficial path of our pre-monotheistic and very largely tolerant ancestors and I chose to continue to exercise the principle of the freedom of thought and expression here, in order that the potential evil that you are striving to construct may be clearly exposed.

How in the world could anyone expect me to participate in the construction of a global fundamentalist state, a place where the most intrinsic and essential principles enunciated by Baha'u'llah are ignored while despots discriminate against women, trample on the rights of the individual, impose one literalist interpretation of text, oppress scholars and others daring enough to exercise their god-given right to freedom of thought and expression, etc.?

I stand at the Tree Ring and express gratitude to my ancestors that while still alive I was able to cease contributing to so great an evil.

And, in my life, in my studies, in my interaction with diverse humanity, in my posts here, I continue to try to promote all that was best in both the ancestral ways of all our peoples and in the so beneficial intent of Baha'u'llah.

May they who call themselves Baha'is likewise strive to live and to create not something that would be a horrible affliction for a species that has already endured so much division, despotic oppression, narrow minded fundamentalism, but something really inculcating the broad-minded and effective vision and the essential principles of Baha'u'llah. May they insist that anyone who would guide them as the living leaders of their religion live, breathe and behave in a manner that accords with all that is worthy, so that were anyone to denounce them as narrow-minded cultists, the words and deeds of such leaders could not be produced as proofs of their remoteness from the over-arching Baha'i principles bestowed upon humanity, but as undeniable evidence that Baha'u'llah has the influence to produce a true harvest of humble leaders guiding so as to contribute to a divinely endowed, humane and widely tolerant civilization.

May today find you very well, may tomorrow treat you even more kindly and may each day after that be better than the one it succeeds.

To the Future,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: << bahai >> newcomer
Date: Saturday, August 05, 2000 8:37 AM

Greetings, Robert.

Many thanks for your message.

Primarily, the evil may be seen in your fundamentalist reply. It is evil to impose one exclusivist interpretation of text (and by the way, are you aware the UHJ is forbidden to interpret Baha'i scripture; they are supposed to be a legislative body and not to stray into the realm of interpretation), intolerant of the divinely created diversity of human thought, perceptions and understandings. Baha'u'llah said humans were diverse, called for no one (including you, Doug and Co.,) to impose one interpretation, and said that even when it came to the most primary Baha'i concept, what exactly is the nature of Baha'u'llah himself, different people would have different understandings, and all were valid.

The evil is your insistence that only your understanding is correct. Your understanding is one valid understanding, but when you insist it is the only permissible one, and when you define your understanding as the understanding of all Baha'is and when Doug and Co. not only stray into the realm of issuing interpretations, but insisting that these interpretations are the sole interpretations permitted, and take this to the extent that they would (if Pat, I believe it was, is to be believed) exclude a Baha'i in good standing from membership within the broad-minded, tolerant, universalist movement envisioned by Baha'u'llah, on the grounds that she posted a book review to a USENET newsgroup, then, yes, indeed, this is a great evil.

Those who have used their fundamentalist exclusivist intolerance to cause the terrible deeds of pogroms, inquisitions and persecutions also spent time in daily prayer, in reading writings they considered sacred, in receiving messages from authorities believing they had the right, or at least acting as if they had the right, to impose one (usually literal) interpretation of scripture upon a whole people and to exclude anyone who was divinely endowed with a different perception.

What they inflicted upon humanity was evil. When you follow in their footsteps, instead of building up the open-minded, inclusive, tolerant vision of Baha'u'llah, you are walking in the path of evil, instead of seeking to follow the Golden Mean.

Personally, I am a pagan, honouring the spirits, gods and goddesses of my ancestors, who seldom, if ever, oppressed each other over matters of the spirit, until intolerant, exclusivist monotheists planted the seed of this evil in our lands and raised a terrible harvest from which we are still suffering. Baha'u'llah sought to transform that evil growth into a richly diverse and fragrant garden that would provide fragrance to all of humanity. You, Doug and Co. have rejected this vision of Baha'u'llah and tried to foster within Baha'u'llah's own universal movement this poisonous weed of the insistence on one single intolerant, exclusivist interpretation. I believe Baha'u'llah is ashamed that you who call yourselves by his name are striving so hard to defeat his purpose and have to such an extent opposed the more open-minded of his declared believers that you (speaking generally, fundamentalists, in general) have hounded many out of the organization using his name, even, in at least two cases legislating them out of the movement, when they could not be bullied into resigning on their own.

I do not consider myself a Baha'i, though it would have been very interesting to see what would have been the dialog between me and pagan thought, had Doug and Co. allowed Baha'u'llah's name to be used for the broad-minded, universal and tolerant movement He initiated. In other words, is the modern Neo-Pagan revival, a turning of the wheel again to a pattern of thought that would, in any case, have received such strong validation, or is it largely the distortion of Baha'u'llah's more up to date correction of exclusivist monotheism into just one more fundamentalist intolerance which leaves the field clear for the revalidation of the spiritual tolerance, etc. of our ancestors?

Here's a toast to tolerance and understanding, peace and prosperity, health and happiness. May you never again insist that your personal opinion, or Doug Martin's personal opinion, or the "interpretation" of the current or future leaders of the largest Baha'i sect defines all Baha'is. May you never again ask for literal quotes from scripture with the intent that only one literal reading of such text is allowed. May you and those like you whether they prefer to read the Torah, the Bible, the Koran, Baha'i texts or anything else be inspired by the words they read, by the gods they believe in, by the so precious humanity of this species to accept the fragrant garden of human diversity (even by those of their own religions) and cease watering with the tears of fellow humans the evil, the harmful, the poisonous weed of fundamentalist, exclusivist intolerance.

To the Future,
Michael

(rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:

>

> I am less able than you to express myself, yet your words merit a > response, so....

>

> My words:

>

> On a daily basis, Baha'is offer up prayers to God, prayers revealed by > the Bab, Baha'u'llah and 'Abdul-Baha'. On a daily basis they read and > study and meditate on the words and teachings, exhortations, tablets, > letters and books revealed by Baha'u'llah, as well as the > interpretations of His authorized interpreter, 'Abdul-Baha', and the > Guardian, Shoghi Effendi. On those occasions specifically permitted in > writing by Baha'u'llah, where there are no interpretations from 'Abdu'l-> Baha' or Shoghi Effendi, Baha'is turn to the specific interpretations > of the Universal House of Justice. Finally, Baha'is regularly > participate in activities of community life, in myriads of ways, which > are based upon the writings of Baha'u'llah, and His authorized > interpreters.

>
 > Several times a year, Baha'is receive letters from the Universal House > of Justice, a body which Baha'u'llah called for and which His followers > elected into being and reform through a universal election every five > years. Those letters frequently announce or refer to a plan of action > which directs Baha'is to strive to achieve particular goals. Currently, > those goals center around increased study and meditation of the > writings upon which this Faith is based, principally the writings of > Baha'u'llah. The letters invariably quote Baha'u'llah, 'Abdul-Baha' > and/or Shoghi Effendi as the source of authority for any plan of action > called for. It would follow then that you believe that the Baha'i > writings Baha'is read, study and pray have been perverted, thus > bringing about the evil you discuss.
 >
 > My understanding of your words lead me to conclude that you consider > yourself to be a true follower of Baha'u'llah, while those who call > themselves Baha'is do evil. You consider that you stand for the > principles He enunciated, Baha'is do not.
 >
 > I have read your conclusions, but have never read any of the source > materials you have based those conclusions upon. You are encouraged to > cite your sources, i.e., quotations from any of those letters which > illustrate this claimed evil.
 >
 > Robert A. Little

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
 (Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
 Subject: Re: << bahai >> newcomer
 Date: Tuesday, August 08, 2000 8:44 AM

Greetings, Robert.

Many thanks for your comment.

No. Whatever the UHJ decides (including the decision that a matter does not fall within its jurisdiction) may be reconsidered at a later date. The UHJ may not interpret. It may legislate. It may express its opinions behind such legislation. Such opinions may not be imposed on any other Baha'i, except in the manner that all ought to attempt to implement what has been legislated -- within reason, of course.

It is very important to underline the historical fact that the Baha'i liberals (many of whom have now been driven out of the organization Doug and Co. head) insisted that while they held the opinion (contrary to the opinion of Doug and Co.) that Baha'i principle called for the membership of women on the UHJ, still they believed this would come to pass when the UHJ so legislated. In other words, none of them did anything. There was no holding of conventions to elect women, etc. All that happened was the expression of opinions that Doug and Co. had the responsibility to arrange for the eligibility of women on the UHJ to be recognized.

The evil of Doug and Co. was less any legislative decision, even the legislative decision, contrary to Baha'i principle, not to include women on the highest Baha'i legislative body, but their intolerance of any other opinion. By censoring the research and the views of those who thought otherwise, those nevertheless accepting that women would serve when the UHJ so decided, by oppressing those who dared to speak their opinion, Doug and Co. exposed the identity of the evil of their actions.

Clinton and the US Congress may hold a vast range of views and their is a great scope of legislation based on quite a variety of opinions that they or others in their positions (or any positions, especially the positions of administrative religious leadership) may hold, and little or no harm need occur, unless and until the ability of others to hold and to express differing opinions is denied. Then legislators, by opposing freedom of thought and expression, by being intolerant, have become a cause of evil.

It is such intolerant tyrants, opposing such essential Baha'i principles as the independent investigation of truth and the freedom of thought and expression who may be considered as "O ye that are lying as dead on the couch of heedlessness".

To Tolerance,
 Michael

(rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:

> The Universal House of Justice is not forbidden from interpretation, as > you erroneously state. On numerous occasions Shoghi Effendi (and I > believe 'Abdul-Baha' also) stated clearly that the question put to him > (them) would be answered in the future by the House of Justice. That > body is forbidden from REinterpreting, something that people whose > faith in their own vision exceeds their faith in Baha'u'llah dislike as > a general rule, as it means that body cannot and will not change the > teachings which those of little or no faith dislike. See Hidden Words > #20 (O YE THAT ARE LYING AS DEAD ON THE COUCH OF HEEDLESSNESS).

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Thoughts (was Re: For Fundamentalists)
Date: Thursday, August 10, 2000 11:42 AM

Greetings, Rick.

Many thanks for your comment.

I look forward to a reduction of the amount of material quoted by fundamentalists here with the intent to insist only one view is valid.

I greatly look forward to an increase in the evidence that you and other fundamentalists here (as well as Doug, Hooper and others) are demonstrating in your own lives this humility and detachment from the insistence on the sole validity of your views. It is not the thinking and expressing of views which is a problem. It is your insistence that only your opinions are allowable. May you (and Hooper and Doug, etc.) follow your own advice, show us all your humility and detachment from the sole validity of your own views and accept that others may legitimately think and speak within the Baha'i Faith opinions which are not dictated by you.

When you start living the life in such a way, you may well notice you have ceased being a fundamentalist. You may hold and utter as traditional a viewpoint as you like. Only don't arrogantly dictate this opinion as the only one Baha'is are allowed to hold.

To your practising what you preach.

To Tolerance,
Department of the Secretariat,
Solar Guard

Religion is in the greatest danger of becoming meaningless when we spend more time quoting stuff to each other than we spend reflecting on what these various statements mean in our own lives.

Ultimately, religion is about personal transformation--a transformation that manifests itself in our behavior. Thus, Rabbi Heschel manages to talk of only half the equation. The other half is our response, as individuals, to the exercise of authority and the compassion we demonstrate in our own lives. The latter requires a certain degree of humility and detachment from the validity of our own views. Alas, this is something we see all too infrequently in these forums.

Regards,
Rick Schaut

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Thoughts (was Re: For Fundamentalists)
Date: Friday, August 11, 2000 8:13 AM

Greetings, Dave.

Many thanks for your comments.

Just in case you didn't notice it, YOU SAID THAT ANYONE DISAGREEING WITH YOU WAS IN OPPOSITION TO BAHU'ULLAH AND HIS CAUSE. You are insisting on your understanding to that extent!!!

Now, actually, I'm saying that when it comes to assessing the priority of understandings of the entire ocean of Baha'u'llah's Revelation, to say nothing of the totality of Revelation and of human awareness of spirit, then there are essential principles that are taken into consideration.

One of these essential principles, enunciated by Baha'u'llah, is the independent investigation of truth. Another is the freedom of thought and expression. Thus, one may have whatever understanding one pleases about any specific passages, on the condition that this understanding does not interfere with the ability of others to investigate freely, within Baha'i, and to express the results of this investigation. When you insist your opinion must be accepted or else one expressing another thought is in opposition to Baha'u'llah and his cause, you are violating Baha'i principle and defeating the purpose of the Baha'i cause.

Another of these essential principles is the harmony of faith and of reason. Thus, one may offer whatever opinion one has, and if one is imposing an opinion that is contrary to reason, not only is one imposing such an opinion, but what one is imposing is superstition, condemned by Baha'u'llah.

So, if one insists on an interpretation that the UHJ must be obeyed, even when the dictates of the Universal House of Justice are contrary to the essential principles of Baha'u'llah and contrary to reason, then one is insisting on what is unreasonable and condemned by Baha'u'llah.

The essential thing for you (and for Doug, Hooper, etc.) to realize is that it is impossible to have as the primary principle in any society that leaders must be obeyed unthinkingly, even when what they attempt to decree is contrary to morality and to reason. There are those whose reasonable morality will refuse to tolerate the excesses of such heedless obedience. The only reason for the Baha'i Faith's existence was the achievement of human harmony. This harmony is unattainable if previous fundamentalist literalism insists that everyone in the world must accept the superstitious position that, contrary to all reason and contrary to all morality, one defines the dictates of despots as morality.

One can seek to insist that humanity accept exclusion as harmony, the imposition of a single opinion as tolerance, heedless obedience of tyrants as mature reason and as the highest morality. One can even, as has been posted here, argue that there is a distinction of class between the oppression of individuals within the Baha'i Faith by the so called universal house of justice and the oppression of people by the Nazi and the Soviet regimes, on the grounds that interfering in personal beliefs but not imprisoning nor executing is a different kind of thing, indeed, it is not really interfering in human beliefs, nor is it oppression. It is a difference of degree, not kind, and interference in personal belief, imposition of a single opinion is oppression and contrary to essential principle. One can utter newspeak, as previous totalitarian regimes have done, and this will be understood and some, whatever the cost, will arise to protest the abuse of language and the oppression of the people.

As has been stated here before, even when the baseline was taken as unthinking obedience to authority backed by the full might of the modern state, the identical bases of rule Doug and Co. are trying to dictate (heedless obedience of whatsoever in the world, including censorship, discrimination, injustice, oppression is decreed by the authorities) the laboratory of human experience has provided the results that such bases cause enormous human suffering and are unsuccessful in achieving human harmony. Humanity produces the harvest of noble souls who oppose such evil, despite the personal consequences dished out by the tyranny.

Again, the words and admonitions of Abdu'l Baha may be understood in a vast spectrum of ways, and the problem arises when you (or Doug and Co.) demand everyone in the world must understand them in the same way and try to prohibit anyone from thinking and expressing another of the various perceptions of what any specific passage signifies within the context of vast totality of Abdu'l Baha's writings, the full range of the example of his life, the wholeness of the life and revealed utterance of his father, the entirety of prophetic revelation and the complete experience of human spirituality.

Such an insistence on one literal perception violates essential principle and has been shown to lead to religious persecution and conflict, which are contrary to the purpose of the Baha'i Faith.

Yes, there are lines that may not be crossed. Thou shalt not impose your understanding on others. Thou shalt not interfere in the freedom of thought and expression within Baha'i. Thou shalt not impose superstition on others. Thou shalt not view others as enemies. Thou shalt not divide humanity into a sect that holds your opinion and the rest. Thou shalt not demand a mature humanity speak newspeak, censor truth and on the couch of heedlessness obey oppressive despotism. Thou shalt not discriminate against other groups of humans, including those of a different gender. The lines that may not be crossed are clear. May you and Doug and Co. be assisted to get back on track and cease bothering others who naturally think differently than you do.

The principles that one heedlessly accept tyrannical oppression and that everyone had to think in a uniform way, according to a particular literal interpretation of text or else be excluded as an enemy have been among the greatest ills in human history. The principles of the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of reason and faith, the equality of women and men, etc. are the remedy to the ills of the age. Thou shalt not demand everyone toss away the remedy of Baha'u'llah and swallow the poison of past ills instead.

I trust the above is clear. Read what you please, think what you like, say what you think, and refrain from imposing your opinion on others, heedless that such imposition is contrary to Baha'i principle (and human spirituality in general) and do not insist that anyone else heedlessly violate reason and Baha'i principle and superstitiously obey injustice and oppression.

To a Decent Future,
Michael

Okay, but what about the essential principle expressed in the first paragraph of the Kitab-i-Aqdas? And what about the essential principle of obedience to the Universal House of Justice, or the essential principle of adherence to the words and admonitions of Abdul-Baha?

Do you see what I mean? How we select some of Baha'u'llah's words and not others?

And what do we do when Baha'u'llah tells us that the order of the world is maintained through reward and punishment? What do we do when He says that men are like a flock of sheep in need of strong guidance? And finally what do we do when He gives us a clear mechanic for dealing with people whose opinions stand in opposition to Him and His Cause?

Whether we like it or not there are lines that Baha'u'llah Himself said can not be crossed. He told us that the UHJ would be the supreme body in the Baha'i Faith and He was the primary author of the rules they follow.

You are arguing that we distill Baha'u'llah's words down to a few essentials and discard the rest. How does that make sense in light of Baha'u'llah's characterization of His Revelation as the perfect perscription for the ills of the world?

Cheers,

Dave

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: << bahai >> newcomer

Date: Saturday, October 07, 2000 12:10 AM

Greetings, Rick.

Many thanks for your comments.

This may have worked better in Russian during the Soviet era. Uhm, are you saying that there wasn't posted to several lists and reposted to this newsgroup (where it should be in the archives) and probably to several web pages some extensive material by the UHJ, Michael McKenny, Catherine Woodgold, Juan R. Cole, etc. concerning the intolerant removal of Michael McKenny's name from the membership roles?

I guess I'll have to get my own web page to make sure such amnesia by Baha'i officials is addressed.

Of course, the whole point about Soviet style (as well as the style favoured by Goebbels, by the way) was using words in ways contrary to the dictionary definitions. So, you say that Doug and Co. are not intolerant and indeed intolerance is being shown towards them because they're not allowed to boot people out of the Faith for writing book reviews, then you say that not all the facts are known about the booting out of people. Well, if that includes me, check the archives and my new web page when I get around to that obviously essential task. If you mean Alyson Marshall, well, shall we have her non-Baha'i spouse write a letter denouncing the injustice of something daring to call itself the Universal House of Justice, so Doug and Co. can provide another sample of intolerant prose for minds to read clearly?

The whole reason you can speak about speculation instead of fact in this issue of intolerance is that Doug and Co. prefer not to have an open system of justice. They go Soviet justice one better by not even bothering to hold a kangaroo court, just quietly conveying the news to individuals that they'd been found not to meet membership requirements and their names had been removed from the rolls. In the case of FG they've even trumped that, it appears, and not even bothered to have him notified they were booting him out.

The reason that Gorbachev brought in Glasnost is that it became apparent to this leader that having the authorities seeking a more open communication was better than what had been previous procedure. I believe that this is very much true within the Baha'i Faith as well. So, don't sit there bragging that the UHJ, without warning, without due process, without providing the facts, excludes individuals in good standing from membership, so that no one can say anything about it, as there is only speculation for them to speak about, albeit it was a traditional Baha'i (Pat Kohl, if memory serves me right) who posted here that Alyson was booted out for posting to USENET a book review and that Michael McKenny was expelled for comparing the actions of the UHJ to those of Goebbels.

As I've said before, the actions of the UHJ can be compared to anything by anyone and this is significant only when any unbiased observer can see for oneself that yes, indeed, these actions are indeed comparable to those mentioned.

Michael McKenny has posted repeatedly that his views are among a vast spectrum of valid views. This is so even within the Baha'i Faith. That is, although I personally deny I am still a Baha'i, many of my opinions are shared by some who still consider themselves Baha'is. These opinions are among a great number of valid ones within Baha'i. This validity includes any opinion, within reason, that Doug Martin may hold.

What is invalid is the intolerance of Doug and Co. That is, it is a flaw in logic to assert that freedom of thought and expression allows Doug Martin or anyone else to insist Doug Martin's opinion or any other opinion permits the suppression of all other opinions. The UHJ may not interpret; it may not demand that any one understanding must be the only allowable understanding. With that exception, let Doug and his friends say whatever they like. I strongly favour Doug Martin writing any book review he pleases, as long as his book review is not imposed as canonical doctrine and as long as other people may also review the same book, without being declared non-Baha'is, unless they agree with him.

I trust this is clear, albeit clarity has not seemed a very high priority on the part of fundamentalists holding positions of responsibility within the largest sect of Baha'is.

To a Better Future,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@email.msn.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message
> news:8mp01h$otn$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...

>> As I have already answered, your own posts and more significantly >> the words and deeds of the "infallible" Doug and Co. demonstrate your >> unwillingness to tolerate diversity of views within the Baha'i Faith.

>
> Yet again, the above constitutes an interpretation of the facts and not the > facts themselves. The following remarks have similar difficulties:

>
>> If Doug and Co. did not pen attacks about >> history books and remove from membership Baha'is in good standing on the >> grounds of writing book reviews, if you did not present your views as the >> only views Baha'is could hold, then anyone could write whatever they >> wished without any connection to your evil and Doug and Co's evil. This >> evil is demonstrated through your actual intolerance.

>
> 1) The letter that's been attributed to Mr. Martin merely states a number of > facts about a particular book and the premises upon which some of it's > conclusions are based. It's difficult to see how this would constitute an > "attack". It appears as though the Universal House of Justice is not > entitled to have their own opinion or are not entitled to voice that opinion > in any way that certain individuals have demanded their own rights to voice > an opinion.

>
> 2) We simply don't know the facts regarding some individual's expulsion from > membership in the Baha'i Faith. I haven't seen any such facts posted here, > and, frankly, I'd expect them to be posted often given the political mileage > some individuals are trying to make from said expulsion. Thus, Mr.
> McKenny's statement is pure speculation, and does not constitute fact.

>
> 3) Mr. McKenny has a habit of expressing his own views as being the only > views that Baha'is should hold, even to the point of questioning the honesty > and integrity of those who disagree with him. If this is "tolerance", then > someone is abusing the English language.

>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: authorship - the person matters

Date: Tuesday, November 07, 2000 7:30 AM

Greetings, Dave.

Motive is irrelevant. It doesn't matter whether I advocate open-mindedness, tolerance, equality of women and men, independent investigation of truth, harmony of reason and faith, freedom of thought and expression, the non-existence of enemies within Baha'i because I'm striving to advance the Cause of Baha'u'llah, because I'm trying to nip in the bud the reappearance of a new Dark Ages, because I'm seeking to provide for a decent first contact between Civilization in the wider Galaxy and Terra, fully conscious that religious fanatics who discriminate against women, oppose freedom of thought and expression, insist on literal text over reason, conceptualize others as enemies and are trained to believe they are mature sophonts, all the time having to goose step in tune to whatever irrational utterance emerges from the Patriarchy would not be the most understanding people to contact Civilization, or whatever other reason, motive or purpose I may have.

These issues may be assessed on their own, and the validity and invalidity of the cult being established by the current administration and the World religion they are seeking to ditch may be considered per se and apart from the motives of those who prefer to lord it over a cult rather than to guide a world religion or those who prefer the world religion advocated by Baha'u'llah to the cult which is being passed off under his name. Assess the issues on their own without any reference to personalities and let's see what is more valid, this narrow-minded cult or this all-embracing world religion.

To the Future,
Michael

(dfiorito@my-deja.com) writes:

> I hear ya Pat. I guess what I am getting at specifically is not > character but motive.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium

Date: Sunday, July 02, 2000 1:58 PM

Greetings, Dfiorito.

Could you kindly post a copy of Martin's attack on Juan's book. I thought that's what this thread was all about.

As to your words about humbly consulting with the UHJ, Susie Tamas said to me when I was still a Baha'i that I should write to the UHJ if I had any problems. I did and the rest is history, as they say. The idea that one guy or one politburo has absolute right to do whatever they like and everyone else has to grin and bear it in silence is a characteristic of the cult minded. Sometimes such demagogues have the might to enforce the people to lump such but this is not acceptable behaviour on the part of any ruler or government. By rejecting Baha'i principles and seeking to divide Baha'is, rather than to promote the real harmony in diversity of the human species, Martin and his buddies have demonstrated to any uncultish scrutiny that he and they have lost the Mandate of Heaven. Reciting the literal text of Marx, Engels, Lenin or Baha'u'llah as justification for unprincipled behaviour can only cut it with of one (fundamentalist) way of viewing reality.

Such totalitarianism could not be imposed by the full might of the modern state apparatus. It breeds heroic dissidents who sacrifice their lives to demonstrate that humanity (to say nothing of the divine) is made of loftier stuff than this most great oppression.

Martin and his buddies have taken a great crack at erecting a cult in place of a global spiritual movement.

I stress the distinction between having a high regard for the office of emperor, for the institution of the UHJ, and being very conscious of the failings of the individuals who make a mess of things because they happen to occupy such an office. I very much admire Baha'u'llah's idea of a democratically elected world spiritual assembly, and I recognize, firstly that as all institutions staffed by humans it is imperfect and secondly that the office is a thing apart from the people who enter into office.

The ones in need of humility are they who've turned the vision of human harmony Baha'u'llah provided into an exclusivist cult, replete with censorship, anti-democratic tirades and attacks on intellectuals. The Baha'i principle is that reason and faith go hand in hand, also that freedom of thought and expression is essential, etc. By trashing these principles designed to achieve world harmony, by preferring to rule a cult instead of provide an example of a mature human culture, Martin and his buddies have behaved in a manner that lost the Mandate of Heaven.

As a student of history, the most amazing thing I see in this whole story is even today the real Baha'is forced or booted out of the cult have refused to establish an alternative organization to the one that was transformed by Martic and Company. Unlike previous times there still has not emerged a new sect of Baha'is as a response to this cultification. Were such to emerge, the legitimacy of such an organization would be valid, according to the principle of the Mandate of Heaven, whatever cultists opine about the precise writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin or Baha'u'llah.

It will be fascinating to see how the future unfolds. In my opinion, the traditional views of our ancestors are, within moderation, validated by the failings of Martin et al.

To the Future,
Michael

(dfiorito@my-deja.com) writes:

> Juan,
>
> Everytime you post something like this you just deepen the perception > that you are an enemy of the Faith of Baha'u'llah. You try to split > hairs and say that an "critique" is not an "attack" but your words > betray read like an attack.
>
> You try to single out one particular member of the Universal House of > Justice and then you say you are not assaulting the institutions. That > may work for you as some kind of self-justification, but when it comes > out it reads like an attack on the institution.
>
> Every post like this just digs the hole deeper. Why not take the high > ground and consult with the Universal House of Justice with humility > and forgiveness? Why squabble with them in public? You know that it is > perceived as a move for authority on your part and just reinforces their > characterization of you and your motives.
>
> Your critiques come off as a play for superiority and as a call for > revolution. That is the main problem. Why not call a truce in the war > of words and talk to the Universal House of Justice?
>
> Cheers,
>
> Dave
>
>
> Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
> Before you buy.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Old Friends

Date: Saturday, July 01, 2000 7:56 PM

Greetings, Juan.

Many thanks for your comments.

I'm sorry I'm so busy these days that I only get to glance here once in a while.

I'm glad the Internet allowed me to meet you and others whom otherwise I'd never have heard of, unless BAHAI CANADA or the rumour mill reported on some bad guys. May all the gods and holy ones, Baha'u'llah included :) , be praised that I was spared that, and saw with my own eyes. I am enormously grateful that before I died I learned the consequences of the theoretical mandate of infallibility. I'm delighted that I ceased to contribute to this very harmful situation.

I don't doubt that the vision of Baha'u'llah was bright and beneficial. I also have no doubt that any work of yours on this topic is a magnificent and moderate portrayal of the moderate individual who inspired such a wonderful spiritual movement. That after he lived others tarnished his legacy and were caught in the sticky webs of narrow minded fundamentalism, the bane of religions of the book, in no way diminishes the luminous nature and the bright hopes of the great soul who founded the religion. That you have written a book honouring this noble being and presenting the circumstances of his life and works in a moderate context is a true accomplishment that no one can remove. Any fundamentalist opposition to the work exposes both the unpalatable nature of fundamentalism and the value of moderation.

I look forward someday to reading your book. Right now I'm breathing the fragrances of Chinese paganism and pondering the similarities it bears to the ancestral ways of my early Celtic ancestors. The time will come when I will turn to look at and inhale the rose you have grown in the garden of Baha. I look forward to that. If, personally, I've come to some opinions about the validity of the ancestral view of the Celtic people concerning the too sacred nature of spirituality for mere mortal words to enclose it (a denial therefore of the very concept of the Prophet and the Book) and the recognition that spirit, deity is all about us, instead of outside creation providing infallible mandates to Prophets and their successors, this in no way is intended to invalidate the enormous benefit obviously possible from the influence of the life and words of any spiritual being, including the glory of god. Honour to you who honour Baha'u'llah and honour to him whom you honour.

A great value of the ancestral ways is the acceptance that each one of us, each people, may interact with the spiritual realm in individually, in culturally valid ways, harmony in diversity, as Baha'u'llah would say. It is the temptation of the literal minded and the fundamentalist to say only one view is valid which I oppose. Those who look at a book or a holy one and use this as justification to exclude all else are the reason the paradigm of Prophet and Book has had the opposite result for humanity than the life-giving intent of such spiritual beings.

In general, in my opinion, our pagan ancestors were more accepting of the diversity of opinions and spiritual customs of the various peoples. There are exceptions such as Roman opposition to the druids (in my opinion, due to the powerful political influence of this trans-tribal body so strongly resisting Roman expansion). However, in my opinion, these were relatively very rare. My great hope for the future is that humanity, all humans, increasingly accept peacefully the very valid diversity of the species.

Again, deepest thanks for your great contribution. May the influence of Baha'u'llah melt the ice of the fundamentalism that froze his hopes. May his lofty aims overcome the failings of those responsible for the administration of his spiritual movement.

Thrice Three Blessings,
Michael

Juan Cole (jricole@my-deja.com) writes:

> Dear Michael:

>

> It was so good to see your name, and thanks for continuing to post at > Baha'i venues. It is so important to demonstrate that people cannot be > made simply to vanish by heavies like Doug Martin just by the expedient > of removing them from membership rolls.

>

> I still think it is funny in a darkly tragicomic way that they chose > *you* to come after. I can't think of anyone more gentlemanly and > courteous, more wedded to the key Baha'i principles of tolerance and > love of humankind.

>

> As to your reference to my continued faith in Baha'u'llah, I hope you > will read my book *Modernity and the Millennium*. I think he stood for > democracy and the separation of religion and state, and for freedom of > expression. I also think his teachings about the divine transcend mere > monotheism. That his followers have misunderstood him and sought to > create social structures more reminiscent of the Spanish Inquisition > than of Baha'u'llah's gentle and all-embracing faith is not his fault.
> Human beings are human beings. There have been intolerant polytheists, > too, you know. The RSS in India are polytheist fascists of the first > water. There is no 'framework' that can escape the human tendency to > seek inordinate social control. All we can do, in our various > traditions, is stand up for human rights and speak out when we see > things veering in the wrong direction.

>

> I cannot say how much I admire you for having done so.

>

> cheers Juan

>

>>

>

> --
> Juan Cole, <https://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai.htm>
> Buy *Modernity & Millennium: Genesis of Baha'i*
> <https://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/0231110812/qid=933798168/sr=1-1/0>
>
>
> Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
> Before you buy.

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Prof. Cole's book and further thoughts
Date: Wednesday, November 08, 2000 6:35 AM

Greetings, RLittle.

No, what has fallen beyond the Pale is your intolerance of any view other than your own. If that's my misapprehension of your words and really you are tolerant, I'm delighted to apologize.

In my view there are a vast number of valid subjective opinions, understandings, perceptions. If you wish to believe that Creation occurred over six 24 hour periods in the year 4,004 BCE, that is fine by me and I defend your right to express this opinion. What I vehemently oppose as invalid and not of Baha'u'llah is any effort by you to impose such a view as the only legitimate opinion, denying within Baha'i freedom of expression to all other understandings.

It is a valid understanding within Baha'i that Baha'u'llah was a man who had a normal exposure to the culture and society within which he grew up and lived. It is a valid understanding within Baha'i that each verse he recited has a great number of possible understandings, not merely the dictionary definition of the words. It is a valid understanding within Baha'i that these verses be perceived in a rainbow of metaphorical meanings. It is a valid understanding within Baha'i that the spirit of the law, the essential spiritual principles of the Revelation require spirituality, rather than the materialistic reading of dictionaries that oppose spirituality. All of these views, including the literalist one, are valid.

Where I oppose you and others holding literalist opinions is not on your literalism, but on your perceived intolerance to any other opinion within Baha'i. Put forth, post clearly and articulately, express with full freedom your literalist understanding. But do not demand that others must accept such a materialistic opinion.

So, I reiterate, what is not included in the rainbow of valid views is an insistence that only one frequency of thought may be expressed within Baha'i. So, go ahead, clearly state that you accept within Baha'i not just your single understanding, but also the whole range of possible perceptions. And, I delightedly apologize for having misunderstood you and erroneously perceived you to be considering your one viewpoint the only one allowable within Baha'i.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

(rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:

> Well, Michael, I'm open to hearing an alternate understanding of the > statement where Baha'u'llah says that His Revelation is from God, and > not from Him. I believe Pat has supplied a quotation (in this thread) > which you may wish to refer to. My understanding is literal, what is > yours?
>
> I'd like to mention here that while you say you are open to a rainbow > of opinions, it has been my experience that my opinions have > consistently fallen outside the color scheme you accept. One could > conceivably conclude that in insisting on a rainbow of diverse and > equally valid opinions, you are rejecting any particular one as being > _the_ correct one, thereby freeing yourself from any duty to perform.
>
> I assume that there are other possible interpretations, so perhaps this > time we can agree.
>
> Robert A. Little
>
> In article <8u9njv$pan$1@freenet9.carleton.ca>,
> bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA (Michael McKenny) wrote:
>> Greetings, RLittle.
>> I'm open-minded and constantly delighted to be proved wrong when
> it >> comes to perceptions of narrow mindedness. If you really are open to >> accepting a variety of views other than your own, if, indeed, someone >> understands Baha'i other than according to literalist rendition of > text, >> and you consider that valid, great. I'm happy to eat my words. The > only >> colour lacking in my rainbow of valid opinions is the bigot's demand

> that >> everyone else is wrong, except the literalist perception of > scripture. I >> even accept as valid a literalist understanding; where I draw the > line is >> where the literalist demands everyone else buy into his literalism or > be >> considered wrong.
>> So, if you post your acceptance to the validity of a vast variety
> of >> views, and not just one literalist perception, you have welcomingly
> from >> me my sincerest apology for misunderstanding you, and my delight that
> the >> darkness on this planet is a shade less severe than I'd, fortunately, >> erroneously understood.

To the Future,
Michael

>>
>>
>>
>> (rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:
>> > This is pretty cute, Michael: you have transformed my offered > opinion
>> > into an "insistance", and deemed me not a Baha'i, all in the spirit >> > of "a rainbow of valid personal opinions."
>> >
>> > Your rainbow lacks a few colors, Michael.
>> >
>> > Robert
>> >
>> > In article <8u8sst$ghq$1@freenet9.carleton.ca>,
>> > bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA (Michael McKenny) wrote:
>> > > In your opinion. He also said that a rainbow of valid personal >> > opinions >> > exist, and that would include the one that he was also a normal > human >> > who >> > spoke Persian and Arabic, as he learned them from humans, etc. To >> > insist >> > on your single opinion as the only one permitted is to demonstrate > you >> > are not of Him.
>> >
>> > (rlittle95@my-deja.com) writes:
>> > > Please provide your source(s) for your contention that > Baha'u'llah >> > > revealed His writings in accordance with what he learned from > men.
>> > >
>> > > Did Baha'u'llah have free will, as you do? He says no. He says > that >> > God >> > > is the Author, the Source, and He is the Pen, moving across the >> > page at >> > > God's behest.
>> > >
>> > > Is this thread about backbiting, Fred? If so, perhaps you might > also >> > > offer some textual references as to what constitutes backbiting.
>> > >
>> > > Robert A. Little
>> > >
>> > > In article <5HGN5.83368$hD4.19427592@news1.rdc1.mi.home.com>,
>> > > "Patrick Henry" <patrick_Henry@bigfoot.com> wrote:
>> > > > See my comments below:
>> > > >
>> > > > "Chris Manvell" <chris@breacais.NOdemonUCEPLEASE.co.uk> wrote in >> > > > message
>> > > > news:oncQDxAXVZB6EAfE@breacais.demon.co.uk...
>> > > > On talk.religion.bahai, Zutetflute428 >> > > (mailto:zutetflute428@cs.com)

>> >> >> > wrote:
>> >> >> > >>> If Juan has abused the trust of his readership, then I've > no >> >> > doubt >> >> >> > >>> that this will come out in academic reviews of his book.
>> >> >> > >>
>> >> >> > >>> It was mentioned in one of the reivews at Amazon.com, but
> that >> > now >> >> >> > >>> seem
>> >> >> > >
>> >> >> > > Please! ANYONE can write a review on Amazon.com, That > hardly >> >> > qualifies >> >> >> > it as >> >> >> > > an academic review, no matter who the reviewer claims he is.
>> >> >> >
>> >> >> > > If you can get hold of a copy of the latest Baha'i Studies >> > Review,
>> >> > you >> >> >> > will see that Juan's book is the subject of a Sounding. This > is >> > not >> >> > so >> >> >> > much an academic review as an invitation for further comment.
> The >> >> > author >> >> >> > is disappointed with the book but does say that "the positive >> > public >> >> >> > impact of [the] book outweighs its shortcomings." The author >> >> > continues:
>> >> >> >
>> >> >> > Cole, who has demonstrated in his prolific and often >> >> >> > brilliant >> >> >> > writings his capacity for careful and meticulous >> >> > scholarship, is >> >> >> > curiously at his most tenuous in demonstrating what he >> >> > promises >> >> >> > to do, i.e. in establishing the connection between the >> >> > writings
>> >> >> > of Baha'u'llah and the presumed sources that > influenced >> > him.
>> >> >> > Virtually all the presentation of the evidence, such > as >> >> > supposed >> >> >> > casual conversations with westernised Ottoman leaders
> and >> >> >> > thinkers in the coffee houses of Baghdad and Edirne, > is >> >> > couched >> >> >> > in vague and subjunctive phrasing. Juxtaposition of >> > European >> >> >> > trends of thought on major components of modernity > with
>> > the >> >> >> > progressively emerging and ever expanding vision of >> >> > Baha'u'llah
>> >> >> > is reminiscent of exercises in intellectual history > where >> >> > ideas >> >> >> > are detached from events and very scant attention is > paid >> >> > to the >> >> >> > resonance between the two. [BSR vol. 9, page 159]
>> >> >>
>> >> >> Such opinions are at variance with Baha'u'llah's often repeated >> >> > emphasis >> >> >> that the Manifestation is influenced by the conditions and > culture
>> > of >> >> > his >> >> >> time and origin. Cole's book, as cultural history, is highly >> > accurate
>> >> > and
>> >> >> perceptive of the subtle influence of middle-eastern reformers.
>> > That

>> >> > the
 >> >> >> uhj has ossified into the very reincarnation of the Son of the > Wolf >> >> > does >> >> >> not excise the Writings of Baha'u'llah nor the undeniable impact >> > upon >> >> >> him of Western liberal political and social thought.
 >> >> >>
 >> >> >> The opinions and non sequiteurs expressed below are quite > typical
 >> > of
 >> >> >> bahai fundamentalism.
 >> >> >>
 >> >> >> --
 >> >> >> FG
 >> >> >> www.FG.com
 >> >> >> The Bahai Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience
 >> >> >> <https://members.nbc.com/FG/index.htm>
 >> >> >>
 >> >> >> > And, that seems to sum up the author's view of Cole's book.
 > It >> >> > throws >> >> >> > into relief the difference between a review written for Baha'i >> >> > readers >> >> >> > and one written for academia in general. Because the Baha'i >> > reader >> >> >> > knows in his or her heart that Baha'u'llah is the source of >> > change,
 >> >> > it >> >> >> > does not make sense to speak of Him being influenced by > outside >> >> > sources.
 >> >> >> > But for the professional academic to retain credibility in the >> >> > world of >> >> >> > historical research he must put his beliefs aside and "compare
 >> > and >> >> >> > contrast" the teachings of Baha'u'llah with the accepted > mores of
 >> >> > the >> >> >> > days. That some of Baha'u'llah's teachings were already > starting
 >> > to >> >> >> > emerge in the West will not surprise a Baha'i -- he or she > will >> > see
 >> >> > that >> >> >> > as being a result of the outpouring of the Baha'i revelation.
 >> > But
 >> >> > the >> >> >> > non-Baha'i historian would be looking for the flow to be in
 > the >> >> > other >> >> >> > direction. This appears to be the burden of Professor Cole's >> > book.
 >> >> >> >
 >> >> >> > This also raises the question of how fundamentalist (I use the >> > word
 >> >> > in >> >> >> > the sense of following the fundamental teaching of the Faith, > as >> >> > opposed >> >> >> > to "fanatical" which is what is usually meant when we use the >> > word
 >> >> >> > "fundamental") we should be. Baha'u'llah's teachings are > mainly >> >> > well >> >> >> > defined and, through the writings of 'Abdul-Baha and Shoghi >> >> > Effendi, >> >> >> > interpreted. Certain basic principles are laid down and we > are >> >> > enjoined >> >> >> > to observe them. In many cases, these fundamental principles >> > are in >> >> >> > conflict with generally accepted behaviour in today's > society, a >> >> > good >> >> >> > example is the laws involving chastity and marriage.

>> >> >> >
 >> >> >> > I believe that one reason the mainstream churches (in > contrast to
 >> >> > the >> >> >> > more fundamentalist sects) are waning is their determination > to >> > be >> >> > found >> >> >> > to be acceptable to the majority of the people. (Whether > some of >> >> > these >> >> >> > changes are actually valid, and I believe that some are, is > not
 >> > the >> >> >> > point.) Members of the church are distressed, and rightly so, >> > when >> >> > they >> >> >> > see these efforts at compromise and outsiders just see the >> > churches
 >> >> > as >> >> >> > being weak and popularist.
 >> >> >> >
 >> >> >> > During my time as a Baha'i I have seen and heard (and,
 >> > occasionally, >> >> >> > been the source of) many erroneous statements about the > Faith's >> >> > tenets >> >> >> > and teachings on various subjects. Yes, I have, as a result,
 > had >> >> >> > problems with institutions set up by my NSA, but I have also >> > found
 >> >> > that,
 >> >> >> > where there has been a problem, taking it to the right > authority >> > has >> >> >> > usually sorted it out with a minimum of fuss, whether it be
 > the >> >> >> > institution or me that has been at fault. That authority is
 > the
 >> >> > Baha'i
 >> >> >> > Administrative Order, not a public forum. At no time have I > ever >> >> > felt >> >> >> > that I was being a nuisance (apart from once, when I really >> > was!),
 >> >> > and >> >> >> > my problem has been addressed and resolved either by education >> > (of >> >> > me)
 >> >> >> > or by resolution of the problem itself.
 >> >> >> >
 >> >> >> > The Faith cannot bow to changes in generally accepted social >> > mores,
 >> >> > it >> >> >> > is the mores that, amongst Baha'is at least, must conform, in
 > the >> >> > end, >> >> >> > with the Faith. Our worst enemy is compromise, followed by a >> > close >> >> >> > second; apathy.
 >> >> >> >
 >> >> >> > With love you all,
 >> >> >> >
 >> >> >> > Chris
 >> >> >> > --
 >> >> >> > Chris Manvell <<https://manvell.org.uk/>> email:
 >> >> > <chris@manvell.org.uk>
 >> >> >> > Breacais Iosal, Isle of Skye, Scotland. Fax:0870-
 > 056 >> >> > 8081
 >> >> >> > Main Web site:
 >> >> > <<https://www.breacais.demon.co.uk/>>
 >> >> >> > ABS(ESE): /abs/>, DAYSPRING: /dayspring/>, UK BAHAI >> >> > LINKS: /lynx/> >> >> >> > ISLANDS OF THE NORTH SEA: /islands/>, SAPLING >> >> > PUBLICATIONS: /sapling/> >> >> >> > SGRIOBTIUREAN CREIDIMH NAM BAHAI-I (Scots and Irish Gaelic with >> >> > English >> >> >> > Translations)

>> >> > <<https://www.breacais.demon.co.uk/gaelic/>>
>> >> >> > Baha'is of Skye and Lochalsh
>> >> > <<https://bahai.community.skye.co.uk>>
>> >> >>
>> >> >>
>> >> >
>> >> >
>> >> >
>> >> > Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
>> >> > Before you buy.
>> >>
>> >> --
>> >> "My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
>> >> (Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
>> >>
>> >>
>> >
>> >
>> >
>> > Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
>> > Before you buy.
>>
>> --
>> "My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
>> (Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
>>
>>
>
>
> Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
> Before you buy.

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Prof. Cole's book and further thoughts
Date: Wednesday, November 08, 2000 6:50 AM

Greetings, Susan.

What is contrary to the Baha'i Faith, and what Baha'u'llah said he was quit of is any insistence that only one possible understanding of scripture is allowable within Baha'i. A literalist, material dictionary rendition of the ocean of revelation is allowable; what is verboten and forbidden is the denial of all other viewpoints, perceptions and understandings except the mundane materialist one wrapped up in words and letters. Express your literalist perception as articulately, as clearly, as openly as you please and this is fine, unless you deny all other views a similar freedom of expression.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>>Such opinions are at variance with Baha'u'llah's often repeated emphasis >>>that the Manifestation is influenced by the conditions and culture of his >>>time and origin.
>
> Which passage from Baha'u'llah's writings did you have in mind here? Was it one > of these?
>
> "We have not entered any school, nor read any of your dissertations.
> Incline your ears to the words of this unlettered One, wherewith He > summoneth you unto God, the Ever-Abiding. Better is this for you than > all the treasures of the earth, could ye but comprehend it." (Baha'u'llah: The > Kitab-i-Aqdas, Page: 57)

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Question for all Baha'is
Date: Wednesday, November 08, 2000 2:00 PM

Greetings, Dave.

The problem is that you are not following his teachings, you are not living the life. Baha'u'llah taught the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of reason and faith, the equality of women and men, the non-existence of enemies as the means to create world peace and advance his Cause. You (the current administration and those backing them) are squelching independent investigation of truth, censoring freedom of thought and expression WITHIN BAHAI (it is inane to sputter that our liberal-democracies permit people to speak their mind outside Baha'i), conceptualize others as enemies, discriminate against women, suppress reason. Is there any wonder that the cult which has rejected the spiritual principles of Baha'u'llah is being rejected by humanity more in tune with Baha'u'llah than those calling themselves Baha'is.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

(dfiorito@my-deja.com) writes:

- > Darrick,
- >
- > You are not telling the Baha'i community something it does not already
- > know. As long as I can remember the focus has been on Baha'u'llah.
- > Both the UHJ and the NSA encouraged us to focus on the station a claims
- > of Baha'u'llah as a part of our teaching efforts. In 1992 we got that
- > great statement on Baha'u'llah from the UHJ. Here in Philly the
- > students at U-Penn distributed thousands of copies and held numerous
- > firesides based on who Baha'u'llah is. But one cannot separate
- > Baha'u'llah from his teachings. The foremost of which is the unity and
- > oneness of mankind. So you see - neither Baha'u'llah nor the
- > principles that he taught can be separated.
- >
- > We have known this for many years Darrick. This is not a revolutionary
- > concept.
- >
- > Dave
- >

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Question for all Baha'is

Date: Wednesday, November 08, 2000 5:07 PM

Greetings, Dave.

Oooo, now can you see how hard it is for me to perceive your tolerant inclusion of a valid variety of views. This is pretty hard to read except as your insistence that only your single literal understanding holds and all others are wrong. I invite you to clarify this and state that really you do admit other opinions besides your own are valid.

According to Baha'u'llah a wide range of opinions is valid and this includes the one that demanding only the dead bones of letters, words, syllables and sounds be worshipped is insistence on idolatry. Clothe those dead bones with the flesh of the spirit and accept the spiritual principles of Baha'u'llah, including the freedom of thought and expression of the totality of the rainbow of human understanding, not merely one literalism.

It is a valid opinion that you see yourself bound to absolute obedience. There are many other valid opinions on that point, and if you demand everyone else adopt your view of absolute obedience you have crossed the line into what is not of Baha'u'llah. A mature sophant, in my opinion, and according to reason, cannot render absolute obedience. Those who render absolute obedience operate gas chambers and gulags. They are the opposite of mature, decent and spiritual. Those who demand absolute obedience are exposing their desire to control others and to direct humans to perform unacceptable, unprincipled, unethical actions.

I will add that one valid viewpoint is that the obedience to which the followers of Baha'u'llah are summoned is the living the life of the spiritual principles of the Baha'i Revelation. By opposing freedom of thought and expression within Baha'i, by opposing reason, by opposing the essential spiritual principle of the equality of women and men, by opposing the peace-creating, peace-maintaining concept of the non-existence of enemies the current administration and those backing it have failed in this duty to obey the Lord of the Age and his fundamental principles for this age. This view is valid within Baha'i.

The metaphorical, the spiritual, the entire context of human spirituality and of the revelation of Baha'u'llah permit a vast range of perceptions, understandings, comprehensions of passages, the dead bones of whose isolated letters, words, syllables and sounds can provide the basis for reprehensible behaviour. Another point is the quote, "By their fruits shall ye know them." Honestly now, what has been the fruit of hankering after those dead bones that fostered discrimination against women, the conceptualizing of enemies, the opposition to reason, the opposition to the independent investigation of truth, censorship within Baha'i? Be honest. Is this fruit worthy, valuable and valid? Does it taste like what Baha'u'llah said would come from truly obeying him? Perhaps, obedience really means clothing the dead bones of letters and literal words with the flesh of his spiritual principles.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

(dfiorito@my-deja.com) writes:

> Michael,
>
> That is your perspective. However the authoritative texts do not > support your version of the Truth just as they do not support > Darrick's. Darrick has taken things to literally and you have ignored > some key specifics in favor of larger themes. The fact of the matter > is that the whole Revelation must be considered to understand just what > the Baha'i Faith is.
>
> Baha'u'llah did endorse independent investigation of the truth yet he > commanded complete obedience to those who recognized Him. He > definitely endorses the absolute equality of women and men yet He and > His authorized interpreters have made it clear that women are not to > serve on the Universal House of Justice. He upholds liberty and > freedom yet He says that it needs moderation.
>
> What are we to do? We can not ignore any of it. What we need to do is > understand how these seeming contradictions actually are part of the > whole. We need to figure out how the whole thing works and not get too > fixated on one particular point-of-view.
>
> Cheers,
>
> Dave
>
>
> Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
> Before you buy.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Question for all Baha'is

Date: Sunday, November 12, 2000 3:12 PM

Greetings, Dave and All.

Addressing the issues:

Primus, it is asserted that the writings of Baha'u'llah are what remain of him. Later, the concept of these writings will be more closely examined. The immediate response is that the influence of such a figure may be more extensive than only the writings. Someone else, perhaps Dave himself, can quote from the writings of Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l Baha what is said on this point of the example of the life of spiritual figures as an extra-scriptural source for the influence of such figures. The fact is that the charisma of such people, their elevated interaction with their fellows, the generally narrow-minded, bigotted and fanatical reaction they arouse from those whose understanding of spirituality is limited to a literal interpretation of scripture, those believing their duty is thoughtless obedience of religious administrators, those understanding that reality contains evil enemies who do not see things in the same literal way as certain religious administrators, etc. may be observed in history.

Among the concepts written down by Baha'u'llah is that as a pure well comes a great spiritual figure, but that with the passage of time after such a soul has ascended, there comes the introduction of human dirt into this well and it ceases to be what it was. Now, I am fully conscious that the literal text of Baha'i Scripture includes passages asserting that this time such muddying of the water of life, such a night following day, will not take place. On the one hand one may perceive in such a prophetic utterance an admonition, command and order for those who would follow Baha'u'llah to obey, that is, "See to it, that this time the normal human temptation to transmute the water of life into the mud of exclusive literalism, of anti-rationalism, of thoughtless obedience to religious administrators, of the preference of the dry bones of the letters of scriptural passages to the spirit of such passages, etc. is avoided." On the other hand, regardless of any literal text, informed reason, the evidences of our senses, what is actually the situation may be considered. Thus, one may assess the purity of this water and one may determine the brightness of this light and one may taste this fruit.

So, the assertion that the water, light and fruit of Baha'u'llah is the literal understanding extracted from a specific take on the minority of the writings allowed to be translated, so that, despite Baha'u'llah's principle of the equality of women and men, there is discrimination against women, instead of his concept of freedom of thought and expression there is one literal dogma allowed, other than his command for freedom of thought and expression there is censorship, notwithstanding his order that there be a balance of reason and faith, there is a rejection of logic, reason and good sense, displacing his brilliant vision of only light and no positive evil, nor enemies is the traditional human perception of us the people and of them evil outsiders, in place of his command to live a life of mature spirituality there is the insistence on thoughtless obedience of what is contrary to his definition of spirituality, etc. may be read, seen, felt and, the quality of such water, light and fruit may be known quite clearly.

To the extraction of dirt from this polluted well, to the removal of the thick clouds obscuring this sun, to the harvesting of what Baha'u'llah considered the spiritual fruit of his Revelation,

Michael

== BEGIN forwarded message ==

From: dfiorito@my-deja.com
Newsgroups: talk.religion.bahai
Subject: Re: Question for all Baha'is

In article <8uegde$576$1@freenet9.carleton.ca>,
bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA (Michael McKenny) wrote:

> Greetings, Dave.

> My understanding of this statement, I hope incorrect, is that > Baha'u'llah is quit of you and you have no connection with Him. I am > eager to apologize for my misunderstanding.

There is a definite connection to Baha'u'llah. Though He is no longer physically here the Writings of His Revelation are.

> Within Baha'i, according to Baha'u'llah there is a rainbow of valid > personal opinion.

Please show me that in His Writings. Then show me where He says we can disregard His laws and ordinances.

> Abdu'l Baha even said that here is one interpretation > of mine (i.e. of Abdu'l Baha's) and there are many others within these > words. To insist that your perception, it could be said according to > the dry bones of letters, words and dictionaries, is the yardstick \ > for all that is valid within Baha'i is to demand the idol-worship of > your vain imaginings as the totality of the Revelation of > Baha'u'llah.

The Word of God is none of the things you mentioned. It is the Living Waters, the constant Voice of God. Using your logic it should never be referred to again. I say that it is the glue that holds the Baha'i community together. The Word of God is an active force as well as a guide and a yardstick.

> This fanaticism, bigotry, narrow-mindedness and intolerance is the > opposite of the Baha'i Faith.

Was it narrow minded of Baha'u'llah to insist that all of His words be followed? He makes it very clear that the Word of God is eternal and to it we must all turn. You are saying that it should be discarded and replaced by vague notions and human rational thought. Clearly this is not what Baha'u'llah meant in the first paragraph of the Kitab-i-Aqdas.

> It is the source of the persecution of Baha'u'llah and of all > persecutions by closed-minded, intolerant individuals and > cultists.

The persecution of Baha'u'llah came at the hands of people who had turned away from the Word of God or twisted its meaning to suit their own purposes. That is why we must look at it as a whole system. We must not disregard those words that challenge us. In the Gospel of Thomas Jesus said, "Those who seek should not stop seeking until they find. When they find, they will be disturbed. When they are disturbed, they will marvel, and will reign over all."

- > I repeat emphatically that I would be only too happy to state here
- > the extent of my failure to understand you and to apologize for this
- > failure. All that is required for that is for you to clarify that
- > really you did not mean that one single understanding, one literalist
- > interpretation is the totality of the broad-minded, inclusive Baha'i
- > Faith. This actually ought to be easy, since Baha'u'llah himself
- > advocated broad-mindedness,

yet limited liberty

- > unfettered search for truth,

yet absolute obedience once a soul has recognized his Lord

- > accepting the validity of a variety of understandings.

yet demanded that the Word of God be THE standard for our understanding of all things

- > Even on the issue of one's understanding of the nature of
- > Baha'u'llah, he said that some would perceive him as god,
- > some as man, etc. and all are valid. WITHIN BAHAI.

Yes. Some language in the Baha'i Revelation is mysterious - allusions and symbols. But some is clear and evident in its meaning. Baha'u'llah explained this clearly in the Kitab-i-Iqan.

- > If one perceives Baha'u'llah's utterance that he never entered
- > schools or studied the learning current amongst men to mean that
- > everything he wrote was directly channelled from God, that actually
- > he did learn his mother tongue from his mother and others around him,
- > that really he was trained in calligraphy, that truly he did hear
- > people talking about certain topics and maybe he read the odd book,
- > etc. etc., it doesn't matter. If his words are taken as
- > literally and exactly true or as metaphorical, symbolic and poetic
- > exaggeration, it doesn't matter until there's the demand that one
- > viewpoint is the yardstick measuring validity within Baha'i.

But one viewpoint is the yardstick - Baha'u'llah's viewpoint.

- > It is not the literalist, fundamentalist opinion per se which places
- > one outside Baha'i; it is the demand that only this is allowed to be
- > thought and expressed within Baha'i. Such a demand is incompatible
- > with the broad-minded, universalist movement intended by Baha'u'llah
- > to create harmony and peace, not to replicate the spiritual
- > arrogance, intolerance, divisiveness and darkness of those who
- > persecuted him.

But you still have not told me how you reconcile this broad-mindedness with the clear call of Baha'u'llah to follow His Word completely. On another news group someone posted the following:

A philosophy of unity permits many mentalities but only one Mind, innumerable individualized points in the same creative consciousness of an Absolute which always remains one, undivided and indivisible unity.

I do not have an attribution for it but it does give a good summary of how unity in diversity really works. The "Mind" and the "Absolute" in the Baha'i model is Baha'u'llah - the Word Made Flesh. We can differ but He is absolute. We can vary but He is of "one Mind". He makes it very clear that His Will and His Words override our own. He states clearly and unequivocally that all of His ordinances are to be followed by those who believe in Him.

You may wish it were not this way. You can refer to vague notions and grand themes, but in the end we still have His Words to adhere to. And when those Words clearly contradict your words then His Words prevail.

- > So, yet again, state your freedom from the fanatical intolerance
- > perceived by me in your post, and I'll be delighted to apologize for
- > my poor perception and I'll welcome any contribution you add to the > valid rainbow of human understanding. What is unacceptable, > intolerable is exclusivist, closed-minded insistence that only a > single understanding is allowable within Baha'i. The yardstick is > your ability to see the whole rainbow as valid, not only the one > colour that most easily touches your eyes.

Baha'u'llah is the Yardstick. The colors of that rainbow either fit His will or they do not. What touches my eyes does not matter. What He says does.

Dave

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Tag up? (was: s.c.i.fredglaysher)
Date: Sunday, October 01, 2000 12:55 PM

God and Mary Be With You Cousin,

Sorry that I'm too busy to really enter into this. However, here goes. First of all, this uncensored newsgroup is not in the least redundant. As I mentioned on news.groups, FreeNet here does not carry the alt one and, I hope, you will admit that, pleasing or un as the case may be to Uncle Doug, this newsgroup does carry a lot of stuff that the censors on SRB would not pass. Doug may not like it, but, hey, just because Soviet leaders may not have liked The Voice of America does not mean that medium had no reason to exist. So, this NG is not redundant.

Secondly, as I've repeatedly said if you want me to read it, post it here. This technopeasant is too busy and inept to be counted on to go elsewhere. That said, I'm not impressed by a position that says the word paranoia has been used by non-fundamentalists re Fred. Do you mean this specific word has not been used on Sept 28th by any fundy, never used at all by any fundy about Fred, or what? I am very open (I was able to accept purple trees and I can accept similarly that no fundamentalist ever used any term, i.e. paranoia or any of the host of other words used to cast doubts on Fred's sanity, but, then, as with the purple trees, I'd just be admitting I've entered a different Slider's World; where I come from the fundamentalists, including you, used terms suggesting you considered Fred not all there).

Thirdly, this whole discussion is an ad hominem, a thread discussing discrediting what Fred has to say on the grounds of who he is or is alleged to be. I have no complaints at all about a collaborative FAQ on the issues raised by Fred. That is valid. What was gold medal calibre was the concept of responding to a troll by a committee writing an FAQ. For seven or more people to tackle the issues is fine, and it confirms the significance of the issues; this is the opposite of trollbane, but it has a place here, just don't do the ad hominem thing, for, then your FAQ is counter-productive to your own position. Gods willing, I'll take time out from my filled schedule to point it out here.

Fourthly, a fundamentalist, as I've said before, is one, such as Doug, who insists on one generally literalist interpretation of Scripture and is intolerant to the expression of views other than his own. I completely agree with those, including Michel Boucher, who have said to me that this word in a different sense, the sense of holding to traditional Baha'i thought (e.g. tolerance and openness to the expression of a vast variety of views) actually much more clearly describes the position of those who think tolerantly, etc. Perhaps, when I've time to mull this over I'll come up with something more appropriate, although the problem is that elsewhere holding to traditional monotheistic systems did not generally include tolerance and openmindedness, so usually, not just in Baha'i, monotheists intolerant and closedminded, corresponding to Doug, have been described as fundamentalist. It may be difficult to use the term within Baha'i in am opposite, even though technically more precise, accurate, sense.

Sigh. I also ignored all those who responded to the guy saying that aliens would intervene in the war in Yugoslavia. I'd have ignored this thread, too, except it stood out. By Lugh, if you do a gold medal performance, you just might get me to respond. I do apologize, though, that really my schedule is full, so I can't be expected to even see all that's posted here this month, let alone respond to it.

Fred, that's the main reason I'm not saying more here about this or other threads. I'm working, studying hard and doing other time consuming things. My best wishes remain with you at all times, and I acknowledge your contribution to piercing through Baha'i censorship. Thrive ever.

Doug's funny. That closed minded, intolerant guy calls those who Hmmmmmm, so you see the AO migrating east of the Oder? I suppose that is progress. FWIW, I read Nostalgic Moscow as entertainment.

Health, wealth and/or wisdom,
- Pat
kohli@ameritel.net

Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
Before you buy.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Thoughts (was Re: For Fundamentalists)
Date: Friday, August 11, 2000 1:37 PM

Greetings, Rick.

All I have insisted on is that you and Doug and Co. do not demand everyone else accept your single opinion as exclusively valid, booting people out of the club, if they don't agree with you.

I continue to invite everyone to say what they think. Write any book reviews you like. That's fine by me. I only insist that you allow everyone else the freedom to think and to say whatever other thoughts they please.

The archives of this newsgroup contain my quote from LEST DARKNESS FALL on this complaint by some fundamentalists that they're being discriminated against because the government is preventing them from discriminating against others.

Comrade Shaut, I delight in this my kind of insistence: Yes, I insist that all views are allowable, that your views (express them as freely, as well, as you can) are not the sole ones permitted.

To Tolerance,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@email.msn.NOSPAMcom) writes:

>

> Sorry, Mr. McKenny, but no one in this newsgroup, with the possible > exception of Mr. Glaysher, has been as insistent on the singular correctness > of his own views as you have been.

>

>

> Regards,
> Rick Schaut

>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: uhj's backbiting letter about Prof. Juan Cole
Date: Saturday, November 04, 2000 4:06 PM

Greetings, Rick.

The issue is the freedom of thought and expression, tolerance, peace-creating advance of civilization, human maturity. When those who are supposed to be enhancing these beneficial things instead squander their time composing letters advising people promoting academic works that there is the matter of heresy, that there are enemies of true thought, etc., said position is quite open to criticism.

You are completely correct that no ad hominem ought to be applied to the UHJ. The equality of women and men, the harmony of faith and reason, the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the absence of the concept of enemies, etc. are valid on their own merits and the opinion of any individual or group of individuals does not validate, nor invalidate them.

It is the current leadership of Baha'i that pretty well exclusively makes references to the ad hominem: this Michael McKenny he's not a Baha'i, this Alyson Marshall she's not a Baha'i, this Juan Cole he's writing what we disagree with, etc. instead of rationally refuting what these people have said. The flip side of the coin is that the UHJ position strikes me as being: "Discrimination against women, the visualization of enemies, the creation of a dogma of belief and hence the existence of heresy, the necessity for the suppression of the free expression of human thought -- all of this platform of Ibn Wolf, instead of the basis of Baha'u'llah's Faith, is valid on the grounds that we so decree." Solely on the basis of ad hominem.

Speak to the point, the matter, the issue without the ad hominem of who is arguing such a point. Go ahead defend the indefensible per se and without reference to who says discrimination is valid, who says we should have a harmonious human civilization by means of conceptualizing others as enemies, who says that true progress involves the suppression of freedom of thought and expression, who says that reason ought not to apply and only blind faith in the above inequities is necessary.

Go ahead. Make your point. I'm waiting.

And, oh yes, darn tootin' right, when some outfit has power, the public had better be able to scrutinize that outfit to make sure it don't trample on human rights and abuse that power.

To the Future,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@email.msn.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Steve Marshall" <asmash@es.co.nz> wrote in message > news:3a028979.31258996@news.dun.ihug.co.nz...
>> On Thu, 2 Nov 2000 12:25:51 -0800, "John McQueed" <jmcqueed@qwest.net>
>> wrote:
>> >I don't see anything in this letter that I would consider "Backbiting".
>
>> Ok then. I'll also avoid backbiting and stick to giving my opinion of >> John McQueed:
>
>> No, It still feels like backbiting.
>
> Yes, and while the Universal House of Justice, in a private letter to an > individual, pointed out certain facts regarding another individual that can > be construed as finding fault with that individual, we, here, are going to > publicly find fault with the Universal House of Justice. Can you think of > no circumstances when it would be appropriate for an institution to point > out the faults of others, particularly when, in the eyes of that > institution, doing so is necessary for the protection of members of the > community? I can think of plenty.
>
> You know, you might discuss whether or not what is said in that letter is > true or false. Very few people but Dr. Cole seem to actually go after the > substance of that letter, and even he only manages to give it only glancing > blows (particularly the part about the existence of authoritative Baha'i > texts that contradict his conclusions). You might discuss whether or not > the Universal House of Justice's concern for the well-being of the members > of the community is justified. Yet, you do neither of these things. Does > Mr. McKenny's argument apply to your and his criticisms of the Universal > House of Justice?
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: uhj's backbiting letter about Prof. Juan Cole

Date: Tuesday, November 07, 2000 3:18 PM

Within Baha'i; it is indeed very much an issue, WITHIN BAHA'I!!!!

To babble that one is free outside Baha'i, due to the, gods be praised, liberal democracy of our free countries, to publish what one wills is to admit the nature of the problem WITHIN BAHA'I!!!! The Baha'i Faith, the liberalizing, peace inducing, maturity raising vision of Baha'u'llah has a need to elevate itself above the totalitarian, anti human rights concepts that idiotically provide you with an apparant excuse to say the essential Baha'i principles may be practised outside Baha'i. The problem is not with our, may they ever be blessed, liberal democracies; it is with the current despots oppressing these principles WITHIN BAHA'I !!!!

to Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@email.msn.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message
> news:8u1tpb$plt$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...
>> The issue is the freedom of thought and expression, tolerance, peace->> creating advance of civilization, human maturity.
>
> Since no one has denied that Dr. Cole has a right to publish whatever he > wishes to, this is a non-issue.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Reply to Doug's Review of Juan's Book Concluding Part

Date: Friday, September 22, 2000 8:50 AM

Greetings.

Here is the conclusion of my analysis of Doug's letter. Doug wrote:

>this opposition has tried by every means possible to undermine the >broad authority conferred in Baha'u'llah's own words and emphasized in >the Master's Will and Testament.

I concede, Doug, that the gold medal for undermining the authority of the Universal House of Justice has been won by you and your colleagues. Without your exclusivist fundamentalism, who knows, half the world might be Baha'i by now.

>(In Dr. Cole's book, this agenda makes its appearance in the >conclusion: namely, that the Faith founded by Baha'u'llah has failed in >its mission because, like "the Khomeinist state in Iran", it has been >somehow captured by "fundamentalists", by which term Dr. Cole has >repeatedly characterized the members of the Universal House of >Justice.) . . .

Actually, from an historical point of view, you could provide a very valuable primary source for information on this point. Would you consider sharing with us how precisely it was that you and your colleagues came to dominate the religion and to try so hard to impose your personal understanding of Shoghi Effendi's writings as the sole doctrine of the Baha'i religion? If the mission of Baha'u'llah is understood as the educating of humanity so it could accept its vast variety, including its vast variety of thought and belief, within Baha'i, then, indeed, your rise to power and your insistence on a single allowable doctrine is the failure of that mission. Of course, at some point the influence of the broad-minded and tolerant founder of the religion may succeed in overcoming your temporary defeat of his purpose.

To Tolerance In Baha'i,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: Michael McKenny <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Tests of faith

Date: Thursday, December 30, 1999 3:40 PM

Greetings, Brian.

My holiday is over, so I'll focus for now on a key issue you raised.

"Dr. Brian F. Walker" (dr.walker@fsandp.com) writes:

> The bottom line for me though, is that I believe the Baha'i Faith to be > of God. Therefore, by definition almost, if mistakes have been made, they > will be rectified. Unless, of course, mankind is allowed free rein to > interpret what mankind thinks God really meant. Then we get real problems.

You have real problems because one fundamentalist human interpretation of what God meant has been adopted and is being insisted upon as the only exclusive permissible understanding, in contradiction to such essential Baha'i principles as the freedom of thought and expression and the equality of women and men.

One of the major concepts proposed is this idea of doing nothing until God does something about it, that if there's anything wrong, then, in his good time and in his way, he'll set things right. And, why when God did not step in at the time of the Crusades, the Inquisition, the Holocaust, Stalin's savaging of millions in the Soviet Union, etc. etc. should anyone await such an intervention in Haifa? One way has suggested that the ideal such divine action would be for Hooper and the boys to discover that they'd had a miraculous sudden sex change.

As the saying goes, "God helps those who help themselves." There was reasoning behind the Communist consideration of religion as, "The opium of the masses." Of course, tyrants and oppressors favour a philosophy of putting off any rectification of wrongs until God decides to do something about it. This permits the wrongs to continue unabated while the wronged are soothed with, as the song goes, "There'll be pie in the sky when we die."

It is belief in the divine that leads one to insist that essential spiritual principles be implemented, even in such medieval enclaves as the UHJ. To allow despots to dictate as if they had a lifetime (or a thousand years) to stomp on fundamental Baha'i principles and God given human rights does nothing to convince the peoples of the world that you are of God. If you were of God, you would not rest until God's principles had effected the transformation of your despotic patriarchy into a real Universal House of Justice, radiant in its embodiment of the vitality of the essential principles for this age.

Peace,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Nostalgic Moscow Act One Scene Five

Date: Monday, October 09, 2000 8:40 AM

Nostalgic Moscow
Act One, Scene Five

"Greetings, Comrades. Don't crowd all together. Line up like normal. You'll each get your turn to pay."

"But why should we pay for calls we never made?"

"One at a time."

"But we're together."

"You are all paying the same phone bill? It is not a regular occurrence."

"We're not all paying the same phone bill. We're none of us paying for calls we never made."

"I will try again. You are all using the same telephone?"

"No, though we've had conference calls. You see we are members of the Svyerdlovsk Academy for the Investigation of the Philology, Philosophy and Validity of Bakunin's Writings."

"Ah, yes. I hear the Central Committee plans to translate more of his writings within the next three hundred years."

"Actually, three hundred and thirteen. But we're really here to ask about our phone bills. Why are they so exorbitantly high?"

"No doubt the bill is as high as it is, because you have been talking on the phone as much as you have to people not living in Svyerdlovsk. This is a common happening."

"Comrade, my colleagues and I have compared our phone bills and they are all wrong."

"Well, rare as it is, it does happen that we make a mistake. Only the Central Committee is infallible."

"The Central Committee..."

"Shhh... Not here, Nikolai."

"What was that?"

"Nothing. Look at these bills. There is a common mistake in all of them."

"Hmm. I don't see any mistake."

"It's this number here. See that's the phone number of our member, Alexis Mestnov. Yet, we are each being charged long distance rates to call this guy who lives right here in Svyerdlovsk."

"Why do you say he lives in Svyerdlovsk?"

"Well, he said so."

"Hmm. Let me check. Yes, I thought so. That is a Moscow telephone number."

"Moscow! But why would he say he was in Svyerdlovsk, if really he was in Moscow?"

"And not just any Moscow phone number."

"What do you mean?"

"This guy you were calling was using a telephone located in the Kremlin."

"Holy Bakunin! The Kremlin!"

"So, maybe you don't have a problem after all."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, if you have a member in the Kremlin, maybe you can get the Central Committee to cover the costs of your calls there."

"Yes, Nikolai, can you just see it -- the Central Committee paying for our phone calls."

"They won't do that any time soon."

"Ah, yes, I forgot. They are busy considering Professor Kolyev's book. Sorry, you'll have to pay."

(End Act One, Scene Five)

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Building Bridges

Date: Monday, July 03, 2000 6:54 AM

Greetings, Karen, Hooper et al.

"Karen St.Rain" (seeker@indiana.edu) writes:

> A higher divorce rate in the Baha'i community doesn't imply ANYTHING > about the AO.

The Mandate of Heaven has been withdrawn from the current members of the Universal House of Justice because they have behaved in a manner so as to cause division, conflict and contention among those who stated a belief in Baha'u'llah. Your reply to Juan is one example of such opposite to harmonious behaviour. Such a reply originates from the fundamentalist actions of Martin et al.

In actual fact, the principle of the Mandate of Heaven holds the leadership responsible to ensure that all is going well. The leadership is to be spiritually in tune with the needs of the people and with the higher spiritual energies required to have things go well. If there is a high divorce rate (the opposite of the primary Baha'i principle of harmony at the most basic level of society) this is an indication that those higher spiritual energies are not being adequately accessed by the leadership. In traditional Chinese society, considering the importance of the family, this alone would suffice to cause the emperor to take extra-ordinary spiritual actions. It should be noted that an argument (Is it in the book BAHA'U'LLAH AND THE NEW ERA?) for the validity of the Baha'i Faith was the strength of Baha'i marriages and the near absence of divorce among Baha'is. The reversal of this condition, the existence of high divorce rates among Baha'is could then be stated to prove the invalidity of the Faith.

In my opinion, high divorce rates are simply another indication that the individuals presently in charge of the religion have lost the Mandate of Heaven. They have done this primarily by using the means of conflict and contention, visualization of enemies and opposition, suppression of Baha'u'llah's concept of the freedom of thought and expression within the movement intended by its founder to encompass the vastness of human diversity, identification of a supposedly universal movement as a limited exclusivist entity opposed to those such as Juan whose more open minded approach to reality is closer to the vision of the founder of the Faith than the exclusivist expressions and the divisive deeds of those in positions of responsibility.

I would advise those individuals at the highest levels of this Faith to consider and to act so as to access the higher spiritual energies. I would advise them to consider and to act so as to demonstrate their acceptance of the primary Baha'i goal of human harmony. This includes the means by which conflict, contention, opposition and division are overcome, namely an all-embracing harmonious approach. On the specific issue of a book about Baha'u'llah this could include a statement that the leaders of the Baha'i Faith are delighted that yet another item has been included in Baha'i bibliography and they look forward to the continual growth in the field of Baha'i literature. Such inclusive rather than exclusive attitudes and behaviours will be the demonstration that the Mandate of Heaven is being sought, rather than proofs it has already been lost.

To the Future,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: {bahai} Re: New Email List (Zuhur19)

Date: Monday, May 22, 2000 1:17 PM

Greetings, Nima.

My deepest appreciation for you taking the effort you have been to express such a reasonable point of view in general on this newsgroup. I'd like to respond to one point.

You said:

> I supported his action then, as I do now, > and in fact I have made it quite clear that if anyone should subscribe > to Zuhur19 under false pretenses and proceed to forward subscribers' > posts without their expressed permission to Baha'i authorities, and were > the Baha'i authorities to take retaliatory measures against a > subscriber, the matter then will be between attorneys for groups and > the Baha'i authorities to deal with.

All I have to say is what I have said for years about cyberspace. In my opinion, one ought not post to cyberspace anything one would not feel happy seeing on the front page of the daily paper. In my time on Talisman I strongly insisted that the Baha'i Faith guaranteed complete freedom of thought and the full expressions of the entire rainbow of human opinion. I was quite happy to have my opinions available to be read by anyone who so wished, including the members of the Universal House of Justice. And, the reaction they provided was an opportunity for me independently to assess the literal validity of the claim they are infallible. My path has moved on to an exploration of the way of my early ancestors, and I'm doing a lot of reading of Confucian and Taoist stuff these days. Apologies again for being too preoccupied with other stuff to do more than cast occasional glances here.

The main point is, however, that if anyone really is worried about the absolute secrecy of what they post, perhaps they'd best not post. It is the natural thing in cyberspace for unintended exposure of embarrassing material. And, I would just like to say that one's personal opinion of Baha'i scripture or the antics of its administrators could only strike someone as embarrassing in an organization some significant distance from what was visualized by the founder of the religion.

Again, my deepest appreciation for all you are doing here.

Thrice Three Blessings,
Michael

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Doug Martin's attack on Modernity and the Millennium
Date: Tuesday, July 04, 2000 7:58 AM

Greetings, Patrick.

In the course of my letter, I said that I had been advised that it was not wise to write to the UHJ, that others told me they'd respond poorly. I said that their policy of censorship which I urged them to lift, etc was comparable with the policy of Goebbels, which is true. It can never be the words of some obscure individual which most demonstrates the validity or invalidity of such comparisons. It is the behaviour of the UHJ itself that best shows it is indeed more in tune with the thinking of Goebbels than of Baha'u'llah. The institution of a world spiritual Universal House of Justice is a fine one. The present individuals in office have not measured up, and, if they reply to words to that effect by attacking individuals, this all the more demonstrates they are out of touch with the spirit of the age, as the Founder of the Faith saw it.

Peace,
Michael

> Your historical allusions compared the Baha'is with the Nazi Party, > suggesting that many millions of men might have to be called into war > to rid the world of their menace, "Very frankly, it is very difficult > to see the distinction between such Baha'i practices and those directed > by Goebbels which at length required the intervention of my father and > many millions like him." Your 'high regard for the institution of the > UHJ' might be a bit much to swallow in the same bite w/ 'humbly > consult. Others may hold different perspectives on your opinions.

>

> Blessings!

> - Pat

> kohli@ameritel.net

>

>

> Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>

> Before you buy.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Tag up? (was: s.c.i.fredglaysheer)
Date: Friday, September 29, 2000 5:13 PM

Greetings, Pat.

Uhm, no, my intent was to use your post as is, disguising only the names. Nostalgic Moscow was an additional idea.

Uhm, no, it was fundamentalists who suggested Fred mustn't be all there; I was doing a quote thing. I reckon the vote on news.groups with hundreds of NOs confirmed Fred's claims that they (fundies) wanted to prevent him from speaking; having this great collaborative FAQ against him would only further validate any claims he's made, right?

Uhm, no, my constant recommendation and practise re trolls is not to feed them. I saw no need to prepare an FAQ against the guy elsewhere who had a news release saying aliens were going to interfere in the war in Yugoslavia. No, your idea is the opposite of my thought on trolls. Further, and more important official Baha'i response to what's posted to cyberspace exposes inept leadership. As I've said repeatedly as long as Clinton et al do not respond to alt.conspiracy all is well.

Uhm, no, the newsgroup is not an elevator; you may even killfile whomever you like, or dislike, no need even to glimpse their posts, so accomodating is technology. The fundy problem is not that they see Fred's posts or those of others with whom they disagree, but that other people may see these posts, hence Fred is correct that they wish to interfere with his freedom of speech, hence, despite fundy claims to the contrary, he's as sane as they come, my position, by the way.

Uhm, no, sadly enough Nostalgic Moscow is not fiction; it is satire, and it's satire drawn from reality. Satire was a response to old Soviet system; it is a traditional Irish response to inept leadership; the UHJ begs for it, by its perversion of Baha'i into a clone of inept Soviet system. One exposes how ridiculous such a system is, and then, gods willing, the very serious consequences of such inept leadership may be overcome.

To Health and Sanity Within Baha'i,
Michael

(patk9018@my-deja.com) writes:

> Diai dhuit,
>
> Sure, but dress it up well. Instead of me giving Fred some benefit of > the doubt regarding his emotional state just edit it so I'm describing > him as a definite fruitcake, OK? That is what you've suggested I've > done in your remarks below.
>
> There are plenty of contenders. Methinks your wife lives w/ one, a > modest one who may not be fully aware of his own abilities.
>
> For a bunch of folks to cooperate there often is some 'at odds > accomodation'. Personally, I'm not convinced that a FAQ is needed, but > I think it might assist in coopting all concerned. Though I alluded to > fruitcake above, I'd like to point out that you're the one who > introduced the notion that Fred is bonkers here; of course Fred drags > the notion out himself just so he can say he's not crazy. But for your > piece, put it on me - it's fiction, right?
>
> The fact is we _regularly_ get complaints on the cross posts and when > folks set out to refute what Fred wrote a certain percentage > inadvertantly cross post setting off more protests.
>
> Laugh all you want Michael. I'm just trying to figure out a course of > action so that reading the NG is not so much of a overcrowded elevator > w/ complaints of toes being mashed.
>
> Dress it out smartly for BNW. My guess is that the editors who amuse > themselves the most over notions of their preconceptions of double > standards are the ones who most would most like to see them for folks > they like. I can't stop Fred and I won't stop you either. When your > done, rest assured I'll get over it. Have a good laugh, though, that > is the important thing.
>
> Slan,
> - Pat
> kohli@ameritel.net

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: 13 MYTHS ABOUT THE RESULTS OF THE 2000 ELECTION
Date: Thursday, November 16, 2000 7:13 PM

Hi, Dave.

Ad hominem arguments are invalid. It's not an issue of trusting who said it. One observes the facts, the point, the issue, the matter not that Popeye or Baha'u'llah said something, but what was said. Now you vehemently assert, as do Doug and the boys, that mere liberal-democracy and human rights have no place in Baha'i, Baha'i is a more elevated system in which no trials need be held, merely private judgements rendered. Nothing anyone else says can more seriously impact negatively on the reputation of the UHJ than what they say themselves.

Ad hominem arguments are invalid. It is not a question of trusting this person who has missed clear statements by Baha'u'llah. If it is proven that Baha'u'llah really advocated, male supremacy (to be called the equality of women and men), censorship, the ignorance of reason, the insistence on a single viewpoint and expulsions for heresy and posting censored book reviews to the internet, along with an entity designated the universal house of justice which issues private decrees of guilt without bothering with the childish concept of fair, honest and open trials, all this does is indicate the kind of unpalatable and unpleasant individual Baha'u'llah was. You do not validate indefensible actions by saying they were advocated by anyone -- even God. Such a God achieves a metamorphosis and acquires the attributes of a demon.

Now, go ahead, post your clear quotes which I missed and try to paint Baha'u'llah as a mean nasty fellow. Perhaps, Juan, Nima or someone will take the time to defend this spiritual soul you're so intent on maligning.

Again, what is despicable is despicable and trying to prove really that's what Baha'u'llah meant instead of convincing decent people that what is despicable is really okay and really (nudge, nudge, wink, wink) women aren't created to rise to the top, you only convince people this guy Baha'u'llah was a male supremacist whose influence belongs in the past. Ditto for all the other nasty characteristics. Of course, one can posit that it's only the fundamentalist interpretation of ten per cent of the allowed scripture, and a selective reading of that, which is seeking to tar the stature of this soul. And, golly gee, I guess that's true. I guess one can look at the totality of the Writings of this soul and the example of his life, etc and arrive at non-fundamentalist understandings that don't make him sound so bad. May unbiased observers note this and not judge only on what you and Doug accuse Baha'u'llah of being.

So, here's to Juan and the rest, who are more intent on advancing the reputation of Baha'u'llah, so badly mouthed by the fundamentalists.

Michael

(dfiorito@my-deja.com) writes:

> Michael,
>
> Considering that you are passing these judgements by ignoring some very > clear statement by Baha'u'llah why should "the unbiased observer" trust > you biased and misinformed opinions?
>
>
> Dave
>
>
> Sent via Deja.com <https://www.deja.com/>
> Before you buy.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: My article on Alison Marshall's expulsion
Date: Saturday, December 02, 2000 5:54 PM

It is a valid human and Baha'i understanding of reality that writings that in the original do not speak of the inerrancy of the current nine men composing the entity titled UHJ, nor of the inerrancy of any other collective, cannot trump the essential spiritual principles of this Faith or any other religion, to say nothing of spirituality itself. It is contrary to the example of the Founders of the religion, and of all other spiritual heroes, to posit the principle of absolute thoughtless obedience of the orders of any others to spiritual principles.

It is true that, following armed rebellion in Babi times, though it is pointed out such conflicts were defensive in nature, Baha'is always tried to obey legitimate authority, but only within limits. They did not even agree to join the political party the Shah of Iran set up when no one else had a problem with this, not in the sense of agreeing politically, but in the sense of doing what he ordered.

So, to think or feel values such as freedom of thought and expression, equality of women and men, independent investigation of truth, harmony of reason and faith, etc. trump the opinions, even the orders, of Doug Martin and his colleagues is a perfectly valid position. The case can be made that it would be non-Baha'i to thoughtlessly obey such violations of principle, regardless of the source of such unprincipled opinions or commands. In my opinion, it is clearly non-Baha'i to say those holding to principle are non-Baha'i. The Baha'i way is to demonstrate open-mindedness, tolerance, acceptance of a variety of valid views. If some claiming to be Baha'is show closed mindedness, intolerance, unwillingness to listen or even to permit the expression of opinions varying from their own, these people are not Baha'is. This has ramifications, inasmuch, as I understand it, membership on the Universal House of Justice is only open to Baha'is.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

(dfiorito@my-deja.com) writes:

- > The questions in the first paragraph indicate that Alison does not
- > understand or fails to recognize the authority invested in the UHJ. In
- > the second paragraph she makes it clear that she feels that she can
- > have the authority to question the validity of the UHJ's infallible
- > ability to legislate.
- >

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: My article on Alison Marshall's expulsion

Date: Saturday, December 02, 2000 6:17 PM

Greetings, Susan.

As was mentioned in the quite considered analysis of that letter, the UHJ has no business, no authority and no excuse for getting involved in matters of personal belief. The Baha'i Faith was designed by its Author to prevent the long sorry history of human religious leaders insisting they could intrude into issues of personal belief. The Baha'i Faith permits the free expression of a vast variety of valid views, including the range of views that hold the guys now wielding power are as flawlessly correct as were the aged gentlemen who ruled Soviet Russia in the good old days.

Personally, my understanding was that if the cutting edge (sic) of monotheism was not able to do better than incarnate Soviet political opinions on the foundation of cloned theology from Medieval Christianity and Islam, then our much pitied pagan ancestors were maybe not so poor of insight, discernment and spirituality as some hastily infer. But, if Juan, Alison and others choose to walk a monotheistic, indeed, a Baha'i, path, three cheers for them. And, it is they, rather than those daring to judge their theology heretical who match the description of Baha'i, whatever may be written in the constitution of the USSR, or any such similar document.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

- > What happened to Alison and Michael was neither. They were removed
- > from the roles because it was determined that their beliefs were not in keeping - > with the qualifications of Baha'i membership as given by Shoghi Effendi. This - > is why, for instance in their letter to Michael's wife, they make no attempt to
- > lay out any conditions for his return and instead urge her to help Michael find
- > other avenues for the expression of his humanitarian concerns. The House
- > recognizes that beliefs are not a matter which can be ordered or for which one
- > can expect obedience.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: My article on Alison Marshall's expulsion

Date: Monday, December 04, 2000 12:06 PM

Greetings, Susan.

Many thanks for the clear, simplistic quote. It is so easy and so comforting to the conscience to be able to find something that lets one feel one has the right to tell anyone disagreeing with one to shut up or get out, because otherwise they are insisting on their views and they will shatter unity.

Any corpus of writings may become an accordion out of which anything may be pulled or squeezed. The issue is which particular quotes does one accentuate and according to which interpretation. Now, there are those who express the opinion that the clear quotes in the Baha'i Writings in favour of basic human rights, etc. are the reasonable and the spiritual way to go. And there are those, in power, operating according to the way things were done in the Ex-USSR, saying what's needed is silent acceptance, if not very vocal support of anything at all decreed from on high. Now this latter way is a fine method of controlling people and of imposing one's opinion. Defining the posting of views to Baha'i e-mail lists, or even to TRB, as violating the Covenant is quite convenient for those in power seeking to dominate not by the spiritual conviction of freely expressed views and the independent investigation of reality, but through the intimidation of others and the demand that evidence be concealed and the broad-minded tolerance of Baha'i, which, frankly, is what raises it above the afflictions of many previous power structures (but not liberal-democracy, against which fundamentalists have railed) be frozen into its opposite. If the broad-minded and tolerant movement Baha'u'llah intended to promote human harmony really is transformed into the sort of inflexible fundamentalist outfit your post appears to insist on, then, the quotes also exist, it were better it did not exist.

In reply to your sig line, each generation tends to feel this is the end, that it's too late. Such is myopic thinking, however understandable. A vast range of constructive options always exist. The only thing certain is that the current attempt of individuals exercising power in Baha'i (contrary to Shoghi Effendi's recommendations, or would you say his orders?) to freeze the religion, according to their interpretation, will fail and change will occur. Change has already happened. In place of the image of tolerance, open-mindedness, humanity, innovative perception in constructively harmonizing interpersonal and intergroup relationships, this insistence on one interpretation has conveyed to increasing numbers within and without your community that Baha'i authorities are closed-minded, intolerant, opposed to human rights, clueless in dealing with diversity of human opinions, except according to anachronistic and ultimately unsuccessful methods much condemned by decent people, including the founder of Baha'i.

Many positive, valuable and constructive options exist. The specific path taken is less important than the essential principles, that whatever means are employed, humanity respect the rights of individuals, within all organizations, certainly within all organizations claiming to be spiritual, to freely feel and think and speak what they think and feel.

All those asserting, contrary to the original text, they have god-like perfection in decision making accomplish by such a selection and interpretation of passages which they hope will justify the violation of essential spiritual principles accomplish is to demonstrate to all non-cultists the reprehensible nature of their cult. Those such as Alison Marshall this flawless UHJ judge heretical (heresy being a crime abolished in Baha'i) are upholding and promoting what gives Baha'i any worthwhile reason to exist. Do you honestly believe that this poor planet needs another (so much for innovation) all-male body assessing theological validity and insisting that whatever the hell it orders must be obeyed?

Argumenta ad homines are invalid, and any simplistic quotes may be placed within the wider context of the entire Revelation, the other quotes upholding the essential nature of freedom of thought and expression, the quotes requiring the UHJ to legislate and not interfere in human rights (Did not Baha'u'llah call upon the leaders of the West to promote human rights; he obviously did not authorize an interpretation of a passage that was penned almost a century ago and according to specific circumstances of those days ("The Baha'i leader after me is Shoghi Effendi") to mean that a legislative body supposed to be guiding the Baha'i Faith should interfere now with the very basic human rights of those recognizing Baha'u'llah.

As I said, arguments directed at the person are invalid. The points are refuted, not because you said them, but because they cannot stand and at the same time support something decent. Claiming people can't say they agree with Baha'u'llah that this is the age of human maturity and human maturity is demonstrated not by words alone, but by action, by really proving independent investigation of reality, freedom of thought and of expression, harmony of reason and of faith, full equality of women and men, open-mindedness, tolerance, acceptance of the validity of a variety of understandings -- claiming Baha'is must avoid such thoughts, or at least accept censorship and not say such things out loud, if they wish to be Baha'is is the proof of the indecency of those so claiming.

And, although arguments directed at the person are invalid and despite having shown to all non-cultists that it is not the Baha'i vision which is indecent, but those seeking to impose their fundamentalist (intolerant, male dominated, anti-rational, unwillingness even to permit the expression of alternate views, doctrinaire, etc.) dogma as the single interpretation of the Baha'i Revelation who are opposing what is decent about Baha'i, yet I am writing to you. And, as you surely are aware, these guys so intent on clinging to power, on telling others what they are allowed to think and to say within however small a puddle over which they may exercise their male dominance, do not believe you actually feel what you are posting here. You, yourself are able to refute the fundamentalist baloney that you post. If you did not live within a non-Baha'i, within a Stalinist environment, you would freely express what elevates the Baha'i Faith, not what pleases the despots. They know this and you know they know this. So, I certainly do not post anything revealing to you.

This is not an assertion that any two individuals completely agree, or that there will not be plenty of opportunity after the liberation of Baha'i for the Nimas, Juans, Alisons, Susans, etc. to have thrilling and fascinating exchanges of opinion. It is an assertion though that such exchanges of opinion will uplift, elevate and promote Baha'i -- something that is not accomplished by posting simplistic quotes, interpreted out of context, to attack that openness, those principles, that spirituality, those diverse ideas and Baha'is confirming Baha'u'llah's value today and tomorrow.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>>First of all, what law did Alison ever break? Or Michael McKenney? I >>>thought that the penalty for breaking Baha'i law was the removal of >>>voting rights, not expulsion from the community.
>
> Dear Karen,
>
> What was violated was the provisions of the Covenant as stated in the Will and > Testament:
>
> "To none is given the right to put forth his own opinion or express his > particular conviction. All must seek guidance and turn unto the Center of the > Cause and the House of Justice. And he that turneth unto whatsoever else is > indeed in grievous error. " W&T p.26. >
>
>
> That's true. And the reason they were not declared Covenant breakers is that > the House determined that their opposition was due to their "misconceptions" > not a deliberate attempt to violate the Covenant.
>>
>>>They knew they couldn't silence Alison. In >>>fact, I think the reason that no one contacted her is that they knew >>>that any contact would be immediately reported on the Internet.
>
> I think you are probably write about that. Had the House any reason to believe > that Alison would have responded positively to a meeting with a Counselor they > would surely have seen to it that happened. .
>
> "And we were gathered in one place, a generation lost in space, with no time > left to start again . . "
> Don McLean's American Pie
>

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."
(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

The Baha'i Faith & Religious Freedom of Conscience

Michael McKenny - Mostly from 2001

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Heart of the Baha'i Faith Discussion Group Announces Formation
Date: Wednesday, March 28, 2001 12:12 PM

Greetings, Susan.

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:
> But then it has been a long time since ethics has entered into the way Prof.
> Cole does anything involving Baha'i history.

Hmmm. It seems to me that the concept of ethics suggested here has to do with what appeals to the politicians running things these days in Baha'i. I think the word as normally understood is much closer to Prof.
Cole than it is to the guys whose modus operandi involves exclusivist fundamentalist
opposition to the essential principles of the religion they rule.
To the Essential Baha'i Principles,
Michael

**--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: < baha'i > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
baha'i institutions for FRAUD
Date: Friday, March 30, 2001 2:20 PM

Greetings, Rick.

Sigh. I'm sure you'll be sad to hear I'm too busy to devote
the attention to this I'd like to.

For the record, as usual there's a lot here about WHO rather than WHAT.

Everything to do with who is irrelevant ad hominem. Stick to the issues man.

That's what you're so powerless to do, since your whole position is at odds with rational discourse -- you hold that WHO is all that counts.

Doug and his buddies, because of who they are, can define ethics and the good. So, you carry this over into all discourse, you comment about who, rather than what.

Formal logic, in complete agreement with the principles of Baha'i consultation, holds that who said it is of no consequence; what is said is the whole point. The issue is what counts.

I look forward to you addressing issues, but I don't hold my breath.

To the Essential Baha'i Principles,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (rsschaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Pat Kohli" <kohliCUT_THE_CAPS@ameritel.net> wrote in message > news:3AC40611.995016AD@ameritel.net...
>> Could be a guy from somewhere else who gets thanked for his legal > expertise in >> helping put together a book on wildlife laws which is available at the U > of New >> Mexico web site:
>> <https://ipl.unm.edu/cwl/fedbook/acknow.html>
>
> Not necessarily _legal_ expertise. One "Yorgos D. Marinakis" is also the > author of a couple of papers on biochemistry and the environment.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: < baha'i > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against** baha'i institutions for FRAUD
Date: Saturday, March 31, 2001 1:21 PM

Greetings, Susan, Nima and all.

This is ad hominem.

The point I think being made is that the people running Baha'i, including the current lot on the UHJ, are corrupt because this former leading Canadian NSA member was doing hanky panky and his buddies took care of him by placing him in a position of trust. Lovers of the ad hominem leap to defend him and people can debate whether he was really at fault (they didn't lock him up) or innocent (but, he agreed not to practise his profession in British Columbia, or is it Canada, or is it anywhere any more).

To me this is ad hominem and beside the significant issue. I've said before that Hooper and his buddies can have as many mistresses as they please (though I'd advise them to have consensual sex) and that doesn't bother me at all. It's a non-issue.

The issue is that the founder of the Baha'i Faith envisaged an open minded, universalist movement, administered according to certain essential principles and the guys running the show have mutilated that vision by operating according to traditional divisive partisan politics & religious fundamentalism (abhorrent to Baha'u'llah) and they expect to be followed unthinkingly no matter how extensively they mutilate the Baha'i vision.

It is not which individuals are dividing the believers, declaring people not to be Baha'is, discriminating against women, opposing the freedom of thought and expression, etc., etc. It is the platform of fundamentalism, the abuse of authority to mutilate Baha'u'llah's position on the freedom of thought and expression and his views on the equality of women, etc. which is the issue.

The issue is that Baha'i is a universalist movement that promotes the diversity of human understandings, that firmly accepts the equality of sexes, that is inclusive, liberal (in the beneficial meaning of the word), etc. When the issues are discussed, instead of whether Hossayn Danesh did or did not grope his female patients, then it becomes a bit clearer what's involved here. At some point Baha'i authority is going to return to Baha'u'llah's abhorrence of fundamentalism, partisan politics, disunity and start living the life he envisaged, guiding according to his principles, rather than the old hat of outworn dictatorial domination, imposed dogmas, etc. etc.

Let's realize what the issue really is and not play the personality game.

M

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>

>>So why would he cut a deal never to practice psychiatry ever again?

>

> The "deal" had nothing to do with the civil case which was dismissed with > extreme prejudice.

> But he gave up his license to practice medicine before this came to court > because he had already retired and was on his way to Europe at the time. He > thought doing this would quiet things down without bringing any embarrassment > on the Faith. Obviously he was wrong, and my understanding that the NSA and > the House were none too pleased that he handled things as he did.

>

> "And we were gathered in one place, a generation lost in space, with no time

> left to start again . . "

> Don McLean's American Pie

> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against** bahai institutions for FRAUD

Date: Saturday, March 31, 2001 4:29 PM

Greetings, Rick.

Only ad hominem here, except an allegation without further detail that the complaint is flawed. How is it flawed.

If you really were concerned with truth and with issues, you'd admit women are equal to men, that the Baha'i vision is inclusive, tolerant, open-minded, universalist, world-embracing, harmonizing. The issues transcend personalities. Mismanagement has divided the religion. Political attitudes and fundamentalism have mutilated it from the vision of its founder. The issue is to live the life: that is, to demonstrate the essential principles in action.

Show us you can do more than speak about personalities. Admit here your belief in what makes Baha'i worthwhile, instead of standing as a political backer supporting the faction in power and the individuals heading it. Forget who and say what. The truth is that any true backer of current leadership would clearly uphold the principles leaders need to elevate as standards for those guided. Well, your move. Can you speak any language, but ad hominem?

M

"Rick Schaut" (rsschaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message

> news:9a54kp$1sr$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...

>> Again, as expected, you are not dealing with issues, but irrelevant >> personalities. Who is logically irrelevant; what is the issue.

>

> Again, as expected, you take me to task for engaging in a discussion of > personalities when you're absolutely silent when it comes to Mr. Hazini's > attacks on people in this forum. Try using a more even hand about this.

> And, by the way, I have not argued that the complaint is flawed because the > attorney is incompetent. That, of course, would actually be an ad-hominem > argument. Rather, I have argued that the attorney appears to be incompetent > because the complaint is seriously flawed. So, the only real question is > how you've managed to fail to notice that Nima has yet to address the > _issue_ of the rather obvious flaws in the complaint?

>

>

> Regards,

> Rick Schaut

>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar

Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
bahai

Date: Tuesday, April 03, 2001 7:21 AM

Greetings, Rick.

Uhm, well, what's stopping the Universal House of Justice from stepping in and resolving differences here? I suppose considering the past performance of the guys currently in power when it comes to doing this, we might be grateful they've not intervened in the case.

However, at some time there could come actions by the UHJ that are in accordance with the title and job description, including resolving differences -- really resolving them that is. This is antipodal from seeking to impose one authoritarian dogma and declaring the rainbow of valid personal opinions to be invalid, except for the opinion of the faction in power, and everyone else to have the freedom to remain silent or to have their say outside the entity Hooper, Doug and their buddies control.

So, if there are differences, and, if their job is to resolve such differences, what are they waiting for? Do they need an invitation from the disagreeing parties? Every dawn brings a new day during which those in charge of Baha'i have another opportunity to be true Baha'i guides for a species quite some distance from harmony.

Here's to the day the UHJ begins functioning as what it was meant to be, and what humanity can benefit from.

M.

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

>

> If that's the case, then why does the complaint fail to mention any effort > to bring these issues to the attention of the Universal House of Justice?

> Wouldn't it be equally reasonable to suspect that the complaint was filed in > a New Mexico court because the plaintiff doesn't recognize the authority of > the Universal House of Justice to settle matters which have caused > differences among the members of the Baha'i Faith?

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: < baha'i > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
baha'i institutions for FRAUD
Date: Tuesday, April 03, 2001 6:19 AM

Hi, Rick.

Then challenge him to a duel if you wish.

My point is that what you say is not validated by who you are. And, it is not only my point. It is a principle of formal logic and it is a principle of Baha'i consultation. Talking about persons, pretty much all I see from you, is irrelevant to issues.

The main issue is that Baha'i is open-minded, tolerant, favouring the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the realization that the jewel of spiritual truth is perceived in a rainbow of varying perceptions, according to the divinely endowed diversity of humanity, the equality of women and men, the harmony of faith and reason.

It's a great game to focus discussion on who you are and your character, etc., but that is irrelevant to the issue.

Thrive,
M.

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message

> news:9aak0a$dk9$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...

>> What Rick said or what Dermot said is not validated because of who >> said it.

>

> Except when Mr. Ryder makes a remark that's intended to disparage my > character. In which case you reply by saying that this is an important > issue. The double standard strikes again.

>

>> It is the principles that >> are the issue, not which individuals order them to be disregarded, nor >> which individuals disregard them.

>
> Then kindly explain why you happen to notice when some individuals > supposedly disregard those principles and fail to notice when other > individuals blatantly disregard them.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: BIGS Bunch
Date: Wednesday, April 04, 2001 6:25 AM

Greetings, Charles.

Actually, since the issue is that Baha'i is freedom of thought and expression and the independent investigation of truth, and freedom of association with people of a variety of valid views, etc. I suggest you let the non-Baha'is in all these other NGs receiving Fred's posts handle any problem with crossposts to them. Otherwise, it might appear that Baha'is were deeply concerned with the suppression of thought and expression and preventing other people from reading Fred's opinions, etc.

Thrive,
M.

Charles (Imno@mindspring.com) writes:

> Thanks for your responses...
> I am a "BIGS" by the narrowest of margins, and in some ways I can relate clearly > to the situation of good ol' Fred, but his method of spamming and kil-filing > irks the snot outta me. Most people see through the cross-posting, but I still > think it quite rude to impose these arguments on multiple newsgroups. Fred has > been hurt by all this, and is spreading that hurt willy-nilly to a lot of people > that do not deserve it or need it.

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar

Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
bahai institutions for FRAUD

Date: Wednesday, April 04, 2001 8:08 AM

Hi, Rick.

Why not try the Michael McKenny approach. I delight in flames and ad hominem. I respond these indicate that the flamer obviously considers my position, my thoughts, my points irrefutable. Rick, rather than thinking, in error, that I've the time to read everything posted here and take everyone to task for ad hominem, why not yourself respond to those maligning your character by saying, well I see my points are irrefutable as Nima, etc. you are not addressing these issues I've been making.

Only problem with that seems to be that I'm still able to ask you what are your points, other than personalities?

Let's see you demonstrate that Baha'i is independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, harmony of faith and reason, acceptance of the valid variety of personal opinions, the equality of women and men, individual responsibility for ethical action, the abhorrence of dictatorial, closed-minded, intolerant, exclusivist fundamentalism. Then, address every comment about you or other individuals by saying such remarks are invalid logically and according to the principles of Baha'i consultation and merely demonstrate the irrefutability of these Baha'i principles.

Well, now that you're doing that, I can get back to my other duties.

I'll check in from time to time to see how you're doing.

Good Luck,
M.

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message

> news:9acbk9$5hp$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...

>> My point is that what you say is not validated by who you are.

>

> Which still fails to answer the question as to why you notice when some > people do this in relatively subtle ways (if at all), but fail to notice
> when people do it so blatantly as to astound the senses.
>
> You're exhibiting prejudice, Michael. Your efforts to make this point have > been carried out in an arbitrary and capricious manner.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < bahaï > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against** bahaï institutions for FRAUD

Date: Friday, April 06, 2001 5:55 AM

Greetings, Rick.

Uhm, no, not at all.

The point is that ad hominem are irrelevant. The absence of relevant text is what has been indicated, the non-existence of substance.

The issue is that Baha'i is freedom of thought and expression. The freedom of thought and expression is antipodal from culpable behaviour for which individuals may be expelled from Baha'i. Sharing one's views on issues is not behaviour, although people have been expelled from the Baha'i Faith because they were posting their opinions, in favour of the essential Baha'i principles, to e-mail lists. This is a very serious issue. That issues are avoided and personalities alone addressed is very noteworthy.

Thank you for providing the opportunity for this distinction to be underlined. Again, freedom of thought and expression, the posting of personal opinions to e-mail lists and to newsgroups is Baha'i;
the very serious issue of using political power to define those posting opinions
one doesn't share as misbehaving so culpably that membership is denied is non-Baha'i.

To Baha'i,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> I'm afraid you've failed to notice that this is precisely what I've been > doing in my recent responses to your messages. You see,
rather than > focussing on discussing the issues I've raised, you've focussed on my > behavior. By your own definition, that's ad-hominem. And, by your own > argument, you now understand the implications of your repeated, and very > one-sided, attempts at discussing my behavior.
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

**--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: < baha'i > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
baha'i institutions for FRAUD
Date: Friday, April 06, 2001 1:43 PM

Greetings, Susan.

Baha'i Faith is independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, acceptance of the valid rainbow of personal understandings, tolerance, freedom of association with individuals of varying viewpoints, harmony of reason and of faith, personal responsibility for ethical action, equality of women and men, etc.

Just maybe this was a reason for the preference of the word
"Faith" in the description of this entity. Too many entities referred to by the word religion had been about interfering in personal beliefs, in the imposition of a dogmatic structure by authoritarian leadership happy to tell the childish followers what must be believed. Baha'i Faith is the attaining of humanity to maturity, the abolition of clergymen telling flocks what to think. Authorities interfering in the personal opinions of others, seeking to prevent independent investigation of truth, to oppose the freedom of thought and expression, to thwart the harmony of faith and reason, to refuse the equality of women and men, separating, dividing and splintering the fellowship of believers indeed show behaviour, but it is not Baha'i Faith's behaviour.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>Sharing one's views >>on issues is not behaviour,
>
> Says who? Religion is all about believes.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: common ground

Date: Thursday, January 11, 2001 11:40 AM

Greetings, Susan.

This is a fascinating position. You seem to argue that the UHJ judges individuals on the basis of the motives of these individuals and that the individuals themselves do not know what their own motives are.

This justification of inappropriate behaviour by authority is a Most Great Unacceptability for any decent society.

And with that this green Druid slips back into the verdant woods.

To Life,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>
> Yeah, it mostly has to do with motive which is sometimes not all that easy to > discern.
>
> Well, since Karin has removed herself from the Baha'i community she really > isn't subject to Baha'i standards of conduct anyhow, so I don't know that it > much matters. As for Karin's motives, I'm not sure she knows what they are.

>

> warmest, Susan

>

>

>

> "And we were gathered in one place, a generation lost in space, with no time

> left to start again . . "

> Don McLean's American Pie

> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
bahai institutions for FRAUD

Date: Saturday, April 07, 2001 9:56 AM

Greetings, Rick.

No. I see there's a complete lack of understanding as to what I've been communicating. I'm not in the least complaining about the ad hominems and personalities you've been posting. I said and I meant it that I delight in ad hominems. They are indication of absence of substance; they are testimony of irrefutable nature of points made in favour of Baha'i Faith as great promoter of worthy principles, including independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression and harmony of faith and reason.

What I am doing so delightfully is exposing imperial nudity of those who have presented Baha'i as censorship, dictated unreasonable thought, male supremacy, etc. Numerous the haystacks piled by such of remarks about personalities. Emperor's naked body is indicated. Complaint on my part is non-existent. Mandate of heaven not likely to rest on so very unclothed a form.

Further, I don't kill file anyone. I am all in favour of freedom of thought and expression. In all the sectors of cyberspace I've ventured I have travelled without kill file technology. As I said from the beginning to those on Baha'i lists very concerned to restrict freedom of speech, I don't have time to read everything I'd like to read, so I certainly am not forced to read what I don't like. Posts arrive with titles and with the indication of authorship, so one can select according to interest, known history of posters and I am aware of the number of minutes available, etc.

Kill filing is not necessary, and since it exists, then interference with freedom of thought and expression is not required. Those so strenuously seeking such limitation on Baha'i lists, and going on about it here seem much more concerned to prevent other people from reading thoughts varying from one single orthodox dogma, than with their personal relationship to words so unnecessarily perused.

To Baha'i,
M.

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:
> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message
> news:9ak7an$act$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...
>> The point is that ad hominems are irrelevant. The absence of relevant >> text is what has been indicated, the non-existence of substance.
>
> Yes. Which is why there is no substance to your repeated, and extremely > one-sided (do you have Fred in a kill file?) complaints.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> Subject: Re: < baha'i > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
baha'i
Date: Saturday, April 07, 2001 12:55 PM

Greetings, Rick.

Nope.

An issue is valid or invalid according to the substantial reasoning.

The shining of the sun at noon is something happening or not, regardless of any characteristic of humans observing or not said occurrence. The vast hayfields of comments about individuals: Nima lives in Australia; Rick lives in America; Well, Nima used to live in America and nauseum are beside the point.

The Baha'i Faith is freedom of thought and expression, harmony of faith and reason, independent investigation of truth, association of people with rainbow of various valid views. Attempted justification of remarks about individual is denied. That Nima claims to have witnessed a moon orbiting Earth neither proves nor disproves existence of moon. All comments on Nima's failing or excellent eyesight, his honesty and his dearth of reliability are unconnected to actual existence of such a natural satellite.

It is the same for vast majority of issues. Assertions about the credentials of Nima or Rick (whether made by you or by anyone else) are unconnected with the reality of issues. And, I am equal in the assertion of this basic point of logic and of Baha'i consultation. An idea is mentioned and is recognized by all, including the one voicing it, as an entity apart from any individual. All comments about people, the colour of their eyes, the quantity of books in their basement, the amount of snow on their back lawn are so much hay, non-metallic in content, needle free.

Please feel free to point out, with my blessing, any remarks made about you by anyone among gardens of posts unread by me as haystacks devoid of thread bearing potential, able to adorn issues with novel wardrobe of emperor. And, I will continue delightfully to indicate nudity of posts by those opposing essential Baha'i principles of the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of faith and reason, the association of unlikeminded people, the validity of a rainbow of valid personal understandings, the equality of women and men.

To Baha'i,
M.

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes: > Actually, Michael, where the credibility of the witness is concerned, > pointing out past instances where the witness' testimony proved to be > entirely false is about as "competent, relevant and material" as one can > get.
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message
> news:9ak7g7$ald$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...
>> Ad hominem; no substance.
>>
>> Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:
>> >>
>> >>> You really are selective. Nima has confirmed the essentials of the > type
>> >>of >> >>> behaviour in this particular community
>> >
>> > A great source!
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
bahai
Date: Saturday, April 07, 2001 1:14 PM

Greetings, Susan.

The point where essential logic meets essential Baha'i consultation includes everyone. All comments about Susan Maneck are equally unconnected with issues as are such remarks about anyone. The issue is of interest;
personalities are irrelevant. The issue is valid or invalid; the LSA of Albuquerque and the USA NSA and the UHJ clearly perform their duties or fall short of the standard in measureable ways, regardless of anyone so testifying with or without anyone's expert or inexpert advice. The facts of the case are independent of successful or unsuccessful legal case or even of existence or non-existence of any legal case.

The independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of faith and reason, the association of a vast variety of valid personal opinions, the equality of women and men are essential aspects of Baha'i. The opposition by any individuals wearing any titles is irrelevant to that point. The recognition of that point may assist individuals in positions of Baha'i authority on how to act and this clear knowledge may assist individuals ordered to obey rules to discern Baha'i from non-Baha'i commands. Such awareness by everyone also facilitates more elevated behaviour by those conscious that dictating compliance with any order soever is hallmark of tyrannical non-Baha'i regimes. Baha'is have adult personal responsibility for ethical behaviour.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>Comment

>>about lawyer, whether s/he exists or not, is comment about personality >>and not issue.

>

> Dear Michael,

>

> I am *not* making a comment about *any* lawyer. The term "competent" came from > Dermod's post not mine. I was simply repeating the phrase.

As Rick, has pointed > out this is once more a good example of your lack of even-handedness. I was > merely pointing out that the person in question had apparently not consulted > with *anyone* before making his decision, including a lawyer.

>

> warmest, Susan

>

> "And we were gathered in one place, a generation lost in space, with no time

> left to start again . . "
> Don McLean's American Pie
> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
bahai

Date: Sunday, April 08, 2001 11:47 AM

Greetings, Dermod.

Baha'i is freedom of thought and expression. Any declaration of heresy is non-Baha'i. Personalities are irrelevant. The identity of the entity making this declaration does not render non-Baha'i declarations Baha'i. The identity of individuals and their titles does not fundamentalize and medievalize the Baha'i Faith. Fundamentalism and medievalism are not characteristics of Baha'i. Understanding that Baha'i includes variety of valid opinions and excludes intolerance, authoritarian dictated dogma and heretical proclamations may assist those calling themselves by Baha'i titles to pass legislation in accordance with the characteristics of the Baha'i Faith. It may also assist those claiming to members of the Baha'i Faith to understand that personal responsibility for ethical behaviour is Baha'i and thoughtless obedience of dictated non-Baha'i decrees, while imposed on oppressed masses in despicable systems, is not the action of mature humans. Human maturity of the body of the believers will assist those in authority to abstain from absolute abuse of absolute power.

To Baha'i,
Michael

"Dermod Ryder" (grimreaper@freenetname.co.uk) writes:

> Have you any authority for that? In any case is it not the proper way to > caution a potential heretic of his/her "misunderstandings" and endeavour to > correct them PRIOR to taking any administrative action?

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> Subject: Re: < bahai > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against**
bahai
Date: Sunday, April 08, 2001 11:32 AM

Greetings, Susan.

The Baha'i Faith is the freedom of thought and expression.
The declaration by any individual(s) that one is expelled from the Baha'i

Faith because of Internet postings is contrary to Baha'i.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

> There were no witnesses against Alison. So far as I know actions taken against > her were entirely on the basis of her internet postings, all of which are a > matter of public record.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Validity of membership in the Faith
Date: Monday, April 09, 2001 12:33 PM

Greetings, Roger.

This is irrelevant ad hominem, personality stuff devoid of issue.

Baha'i is independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, association of a rainbow of valid diverse personal opinions,
harmony of faith and reason, abhorrence of dictatorial oppression, personal responsibility for ethical action, equality of women and men, etc.

The assertion by anyone, whatever titles may be associated with that person's signature, whatever quotations may be appended to this focus on personality, that someone is not a Baha'i has no connection with the qualities and attributes of Baha'i membership. The Baha'i Faith is not a political party, not even the political party in a totalitarian state, operating according to the whim of individuals and imposed ideologies, by means of the literal text of constitutions penned by leadership. It is a moral, ethical and spiritual essence.

It has been stated correctly on this newsgroup that Abdul-Baha as well would have had his name removed the rolls, were he alive today and expressing his point of view. This is a point of personality that may communicate more to you than the pure spirit of Baha'i consultation and of formal logic that issues are valid and personalities are not. Why in the world would anyone take the trouble to bother with whether or not a poster here has his name registered in Chicago, unless it's an attempt to assess this individuals posts on his identity, instead of on the value of the words posted?

Why in the world go to the trouble of removing names from membership rolls when people continue, as Baha'is doing what the Perfect Exemplar did and His Father before Him, to freely express personal opinions, even in the context of dictatorial leadership, unless it was misguided effort to address not the issues, opinions and ideas expressed, but instead the totally invalid personality of who is expressing such ideas?

Removing the names of those most articulate in portraying the Baha'i Faith as independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, harmony of faith and reason, amicable association of the rainbow of valid personal opinions, the equality of women and men, individual responsibility for ethical action, abhorrence of dictatorial imposition of orthodox dogma, etc. does not transmute the identity of the Baha'i Faith, nor the qualities and attributes of those pressured into resigning or decreed to no longer belong. The identity of Baha'i Faith and its qualities and attributes are shining testimony very much unconnected with personalities.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Roger Reini (roger@rreini.com) writes:

**> ...

> In the US, Baha'is are issued numbered membership cards when they > enroll in the Faith. On the back of those cards, there are these

**> ...

> For those who are interested in the mechanics. I made a request to > membership services at national. I provided them with [believer X's]

> name and

> Baha'i ID# (made public by [believer x] on his website). At first

> they said

**> ...

**--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: < baha'i > - New Mexico LAWSUIT **against** baha'i

Date: Tuesday, April 10, 2001 12:45 PM

Greetings, Rick.

I understand the awesome difficulty it is for those who are unable to argue on the issue against freedom of speech, independent investigation of truth, harmony of faith and reason, association of a valid rainbow of personal understandings, the equality of women and men to say anything about the issues themselves. Nothing at all seems to be available, no words, no text, no letters, no sentences, paragraphs, arguments, reasoning -- nothing but personality which is irrelevant.

Rick, you seem unable to grasp the point, or powerless to post any words even if you do grasp the point, that even had this article been about Michael McKenny, even had I been the one who had made some deal promising not to practise medicine or psychiatry in Canada again, that fact would be absolutely unconnected with the essential nature of the Baha'i Faith as something embodying independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, harmony of reason and faith, association of a rainbow of valid personal opinions, equality of women and men etc.

Powerless to address the issues, the totality of the utterance of those supporting the opposite of the essence of Baha'i is ad hominem, is to attempt (invalidly according to both Baha'i principles and the principles of formal logic) to speak about the individuals making the points. It is why you are so sensitive to such articles about the personality of Hossayn Danesh, because it addresses you at your own irrelevant level, but the only level to which you attribute any weight.

Why did you not respond when I pointed out your article had substantial value? Why not post that and promote a discussion on issues instead of personalities?

Again, whether I operate brothels, am indeed the agent of the Oikoumene on Terra, am a six year old hologram generated by the computers in Haifa or anything else having to do with me is irrelevant to the validity of the issues I address and which remain undiscussed by you, let alone refuted.

To Baha'i,
M.

"Rick Schaut" (rsschaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:
> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message
> news:9attmd$9c7$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...
>> It's my constant request that anything, including your paper, that >> is brought up here with a web address etc
>
> No, Michael, you're not sliding out of this one with that kind of line.
You

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Pat Kohli and the invlaid election fo UHJ and a Defense of the Guardianship
Date: Wednesday, April 25, 2001 1:07 PM

Greetings, Nima.

Many thanks for your comments.
From my perspective, a lot of people on this newsgroup have the disadvantage of having been indoctrinated that there are some really evil people out there (I know one quite valid understanding of Baha'i teaching is that evil has no existence and there are no evil people, nevertheless ...) who have taken an egotistical and divisive spin on the Will and Testament.

Shedding such cult think and examining issues with one's own eyes and not through the eyes of others, allows the fact to be acknowledged that the Baha'i Faith is not a solid monolith, despite assertions of having gone through so many years with its unity maintained. Only cult think definitions that define anyone who has accepted another Guardian as non-Baha'i permit this incorrect statement to be passed on in the indoctrination of new believers.

Moving further, one acknowledges that not only are there other sects of Baha'is besides the one acknowledging the power, if not the wisdom, of the men in Haifa, but these valid associations of believers have grounds for their existence. I do not find it a very beneficial exercise here or elsewhere to seek to demonstrate the invalidity of existing groups of spiritual individuals.

It is valid to present the issue that your opinion is that a Guardian must know Arabic and Persian (possibly English as well, if Shoghi Effendi's writings must also be considered by his successors), but that is one view; other quite valid viewpoints exist, including the one that interpretation as expected of the Guardian is not a literalist duty, which may be given to any translator, but a spiritual responsibility, to guide the body of the believers according to the spirit of the revelation and the needs of the present time.

My point is not to assert a single authoritative understanding, but rather to say that all who have been influenced by the revelation of Baha'u'llah are worthy of respect and the recognition that they have valid views. Associations of believers are valid and to be encouraged both to live the life, according to their understandings, and to see in others with differing opinions fellow humans, even fellow believers.

Actually, as I've said before here, one quite energizing potential of the existence of such a forum as this is that it permits those
of all persuasions and opinions to associate and even to explore modalities for harmonious organizational agreement. I am fully aware that the men in Haifa are so fundamentalist they are expelling people from their own organization. This does not mean that the possibilities of the Internet do not exist, only that the opportunities have not yet been utilized by those who could demonstrate their ability to unite themselves
as an example to the greater world.

Thanks again for your comment. Your point is valid, as is the view that one need not know certain languages to be a Baha'i spiritual leader.

To All Baha'is and Others,
M

"Nima Hazini" (lotusapt@wxc.com.au) writes:

- > Boy, this issue keeps coming up with Remeyites year after year, and they
- > still come back with the same weak retorts.
- >
- > Answer this, then. An authoritative interpreter (mubayin) such as a Guardian
- > must elucidate (tabyin) upon texts. This is what the primary function of the
- > Guardian is. If you knew Persian and Arabic and could read the W&T in the
- > original languages this truism would be self-evident to you without
- > demonstration. A Guardian who does not know Persian and Arabic cannot
- > authoritatively elucidate upon texts he has no access to whatsoever, so
- > therefore the chief primary function of that Guardian as mubayin is
- > inoperative throughout his/her ministry, making the very existence of that
- > office superfluous and totally unnecessary. It's as simple as that I'm
- > afraid. Remey, who was not even an Aghsan, did not read a word of Persian > and Arabic. Neither does Joel Marangella. Therefore, Remey was not a > legitimate wali amru'llah, nor Marangella for that matter.

 >
 > Besides I happen to believe Shoghi Effendi could've and would've done much > better than some upperclass, snob American socialite upstart to succeed him > in his office. Ruhi Afnan, for starters.
 >
 > cheers,
 > Nima
 >
 >
 >
 > <multiman@aros.net> wrote in message news:3ae5326d.3848345@news.aros.net...
 > On Tue, 24 Apr 2001 10:47:57 +1000, "Nima Hazini" > <lotusapt@wxc.com.au> wrote:
 >
 >
 >>
 >><multiman@aros.net> wrote in message
 news:3ae4b39c.3511230@news.aros.net...
 >>> I certainly do not find that one of the spiritual or otherwise >>qualifications of the Guardian >>>to be appointed is that he speaks Arabic and Persian.
 Which paragraph >>>of the Will and Testament is that in?
 >>
 >>What languages was the W&T originally written in??
 There's your answer.
 >
 > So Baha'u'llah and Abdul-Baha could not interpret the New Testament
 > and Old Testament since they were written in Hebrew and Koine Greek!
 > What an argument.
 >
 > Since there were translations made by others in Arabic, Baha'u'llah
 > quotes an Arabic translation in the Iqan, those translations no doubt > had the bias of the translators in it, including those in the New
 > and Old quoted by Abdul-baha, he should not interpret, unless of > course what we have been maintaining is true which is there is no > language requirement for Guardianship or Abdul-baha's position either > since not knowing the language did not stop Him or His Father from > interpreting.
 >
 >
 >>cheers,

>>Nima

>>

>>

>>

>>

>

>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: I have nothing to do with the election of the UHJ (was: something else)

Date: Thursday, April 26, 2001 6:29 AM

Hi, Pat.

Well, here's a defense of medieval shunning. Incredible. The point I've made before is that shunning is an admission that one is very insecure, that one has failed to imbibe the spirit of the Baha'i Faith which is the harmonious association of the rainbow of human beings, whatever their colour, language, class, beliefs, etc. The practise is indefensible and like censorship is designed to defend inept leaders by means of keeping followers from realizing that those with other leaders and other understandings are decent human beings who may well be capable of articulately expressing themselves on views such inept leaders don't wish their followers to encounter. Little demonstrates the incapacity and insecurity of leadership more than an insistence followers avoid exposure to alternative views. Little demonstrates the remoteness of individuals from that open-minded maturity promoted by the Central Figures of the Baha'i Faith than blind obedience to decrees of such insecure leaders that individuals, spiritual associations and ideas be shunned and censored.

To Harmony,
M.

Pat Kohli (kohliCUT_THE_CAPS@ameritel.net) writes: > Allahu Abha!

>
> Dermod Ryder wrote:
>
>> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message
>> news:9c73p0$7ar$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...
>>
>> Amen Michael - I don't think the Orthodox or other groups have a good >> interpretation on the Guardianship but I fully acknowledge their right to >> believe what they do. The policy of shunning them is abhorrent in the >> extreme - we need tolerance and respect not blind hatred.
>>
>> As ever,
>>
>> Dermod.
>
> Allahu Abha!
>
> Personally, I find shunning much better than relaying nasty dreams, or claiming > that 'Abdu'l Baha wrote bad things about Baha'is, etc. and so on. Shunning > shows more toleration than blind hatred. When I read the
"GUESS WHO SAID THIS > ABOUT BAHAI'S" message I thought to myself, this was an utterly marvelous world > where MrMahdi might have brought in a friend who can read
'Abdu'l Baha, spell
> "Baha'i" and insult us, rather than just read the propaganda, tell us it is > "bahai" and all quite thoroughly refuted. If MrMahdi shunned us, his blind > hatred wouldn't be so visible, would it?
>
> My mother used to say that when you have nothing nice to say, say nothing.
> Shunning is an extension of this.
>

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Pat Kohli and the invlaid election fo UHJ and a Defense of the Guardianship
Date: Monday, April 30, 2001 12:07 PM

Hi, Nima.

The comparison here was of a recognized spiritual authority speaking to those seeking to limit his authority. By the way, I don't think you're a Tibetan Buddhist. Do you accept the subjective validity of the authority of the Dalai Lama and his followers, regardless of your personal understanding of reincarnation, or do you deem him and those who consider him a spiritual leader all wrong? If you grant validity to those Buddhists, similarly you may be able to understand the validity of those who accept living guardians, even if you're not among the number who do.

I hope this clarifies the issue. Ah yes, Juan is an ad hominem here.
He is an individual. The issue is that those recognized as guardian may Interpret (elucidate, guide, explain, etc.) without literally translating.
For Juan or anyone else to come here and say, "The literal interpretation of the word and the historical context of Ali and the Imams of Islam is that the Guardian should literally translate," would be an indication that on this point his and their opinion was literalist. I have already said that such an opinion is subjectively valid; it is just not exclusively so. He would no more invalidate living guardians and their followers than his expression that reincarnation is not taught in Baha'i would invalidate the Dalai Lama, Tibetan Buddhism or any other religious leaders and faiths that understand reincarnation to exist, even, by the way, were there Baha'i guardians and their followers believing Shoghi Effendi was alive and guiding the religion in a new incarnation.

By the way, Nima, why did you snip the example I provided where one invested with the authority could authoritatively rule, without knowing Hebrew, Greek or Latin that a Biblical passage stating "Thou shalt not permit a witch to live" does not state, "Thou shalt not permit Wiccans to live", but, "The penalty for death by poison is death" or even rule that actually the death penalty is historical, not current? Whether one owes authority to genetic heritage, to reincarnation or to any other cause, one in authority may issue rulings on such issues without personal knowledge of the original languages of the text.

Personally, I think history demonstrates that the attitude that the text must be followed literally has been calamitous for humanity. I feel you do see the value of non-literal understandings in places. I hope you will agree that it would be much better to live under an Interpreter who knew not a word of the language and guided according to the principles of the Baha'i Faith than one who was expertly fluent in languages and ruled as a medieval, fundamentalist, literalist theocrat. The criticism of current administrators in the organization centred in Haifa is not that one may not find a way of literally extracting their medieval policies out of the ocean of words of Baha'i text, but that such literal extraction is done at the expense of those principles that elevated the Baha'i Faith above the medieval mindset. One aspect of this medieval mindset is the refusal to entertain the possibility other people holding non-literal understandings have valid understandings.

To A Better Future,
Michael

"Nima Hazini" (lotusapt@wxc.com.au) writes:

- >
- > Bad comparison and irrevelant. The function of a Dalai Lama is much, much
- > different than a Guardian. I think the problem here is a fundamental
- > misunderstanding of the role of a Guardian by Remeyite and Haifan Baha'is
- > alike. The Guardian is a not a divine being, not a Manifestation, not a
- > prophet, not a seer, not the incarnation of a Buddhist deity, or what have
- > you. He is a temporal - not divine - guardian/caretaker of the religion, and
- > there are certain foundational qualifications for that office without which
- > the utility of the office becomes questionable. Remey did not possess a
- > single one of those qualifications, and neither does Marangella, nor Jacques
- > Shoghomonian, Pepe Remey, Rex King, etc., for that matter.
- >
- > Irrelevant. A Dalai Lama is not a Guardian.
- >
- > If it's according to the understanding of texts he has no way of > understanding, then the apparent limitations of that Guardian's abilities > once again raises questions of functional utility not to mention legitimacy.

 > Besides if that Guardian is **only** interpreting translated texts, why even > have a Guardian when others can equally do the elucidating/interpreting for > themselves??
 >
 > Nonesense.
 >
 > Another hypothetical "what if" scenario which is not grounded in reality.
 > This is worse than the Dalai Lama example. One could also conjecture wildly > that maybe Shoghi Effendi did write a Will and Testament which was > suppressed by certain Hands including Remey, the contents of which appointed > a lessor known but competent female of his kin to succeed him as Guardian, > Head of the Faith and member for life of the UHJ. It would make for one heck > of a great suspense mystery novel, and maybe I should just it, but so what?
 >
 > Michael, put some of these arguments you're making past people who know what > they're talking about and know the texts backwards and forwards and see how > far you get. Try Juan for starters. You still don't understand the dynamics > of the questions involved and are drawing analogies that are for the most > part completely irrelevant and non sequitor. Again, a Guardian who does not > possess the requisite knowledge of Persian and Arabic cannot be an > **authoritative interpreter**. If he cannot authoritatively interpret, then he > vacates his fundamental duty as Guardian, therefore his guardianship is > illegitimate - period, full stop. Please don't give me this silly "The Holy > Spirit will guide correctly an illiterate guardian" argument. It is > nonsense.
 >
 > cheers,
 > Nima
 >
 >

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar

Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Morals of a Mole

Date: Thursday, January 18, 2001 12:32 PM

Top o' the Mornin' to You, Dermot.

You make me almost regret being so busy I'm not even reading everything posted here. But, it's great to hear your Irish voice. Keep it up, if you've the time and inclination. Personally, I tend to think that all talk about personalities is irrelevant; however, since this is generally the whole of fundamentalist discourse (trying to discredit those not fundamentalist instead of addressing the issues and trying to say because of who the fundamentalists are, therefore their fundamentalism, according to that ad hominem, is exclusively valid), perhaps you're right to score on the net they stand in front of, rather than the one they leave empty.

Anyway, as I learned that old folksong as a child in the Ottawa Valley the lines went:

"That's why women are worse than men

They can go down to Hell and come back again."

And, notwithstanding the concept of humour in previous generations, women are fully eligible to serve on the UHJ, and all that's lacking is the will of the patriarchate to live in the present, instead of the Dark Ages.

Slan,
Michael

"Dermot Ryder" (grimreaper@freenetname.co.uk) writes:

>

> "So it's true that the women are worse than the men,

> For they went down to Hell and were threw out again."

>

> Traditional Irish Words and Air

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Pat Kohli and the invlaid election fo UHJ and a

Defense of the Guardianship

Date: Wednesday, May 02, 2001 7:36 AM

Hi, Pat.

Continuing revelation is completely in accord with the concept of revealed religion. There are possibilities for semantic arguments, e.g. that in Baha'i, or one or more of its sects, the leader interprets and does not reveal, or elucidates and does not interpret. Such semantics have no overall significance, however important they may be decreed internally. Thus, separate sects can have different official positions and different individuals within the sects will have a variety of perceptions, however intense the pressure by dictatorial leaders to quash personal opinions or at least the expression of such.

Speaking specifically to the case of Baha'i, my personal opinion is that one of the most important aspects of the Revelation by the original Revealer (Baha'u'llah) was to provide a modern alternative to fundamentalist Islam and to fundamentalism in general. Accordingly, the transformation of his movement into a fundamentalist one opposed to the essential principles he enunciated is inconsistent with this specific revealed religion. Historically, revealed religions often seem to have come into the hands of leaders whose insecurity and domineering natures, etc., have prompted them to rely on fundamentalist techniques and to impose a fundamentalist ideology.

While I consider the current oppression by the men in Haifa of the Baha'i principles: the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of faith and reason, the equality of women and men, the harmonious association of a variety of valid opinions and of the various peoples on the planet, etc., to be inconsistent with the paradigm of the Revelation of Baha'u'llah, indeed to be what he sought to eliminate, I recognize the existence of these men and understand that they, through decree, have asserted a single selective and literal interpretation of the ocean of Baha'u'llah's writings. It is completely in keeping with the fundamentalist (as opposed to the Baha'i) paradigm for those issuing such decrees to say that really they are not decreeing anything, not interpreting anything, merely elucidating the obvious literal interpretation of weighted passages of text. QED.

They exist and their effect on the movement launched by Baha'u'llah may be observed. The original universal, harmonizing, open-minded, individual-enhancing, tolerant, liberal intent of Baha'u'llah may be outlined and, sooner or later, the fundamentalist excesses may be shed.

To the Future,
Michael

In an abstract sense, above the specifics of any faith, the "Guardian of the Faith" might be a continuing revelator and thus not depend on reading the revelation. I don't think that that fits too well in the paradigm of a revealed religion.

Is it possible that a Guardian of the Faith who is continuously receiving revelation might seem inconsistent with a revealed religion, to you?

Is there any notion which might be inconsistent w/ certain religious paradigms, as you understand various types of religions?

Slan!
- Pat
kohli@ameritel.net

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: My fears about the Albuquerque Baha'i community
Date: Thursday, May 03, 2001 11:56 AM

Greetings, Roger.

You have not demonstrated that you are arguing with validity. You are arguing against persons because of who they are. This is invalid according to formal logic and according to the principles of Baha'i consultation which hold that issues alone are valid. Present issues, but do not say (outside of a cult) that one is wrong because one does not accept the cult leadership's position. You may defend the cult leadership's position as cogently, rationally, articulately as you wish. However, the cult leadership's position is not correct simply because the leadership says it is, nor is someone else wrong simply because that one disagrees with leadership. If leadership's view is so dazzlingly correct tell us why; if one disagreeing with leadership is so blatantly wrong show us on the issue. If you say this person is wrong on the grounds he disagrees with the cult leaders you are, in my opinion, testifying that you are powerless to refute his statements.

As I said on news.groups during the discussion about establishing TRB, if the response by the US president to claims by someone that he was the lawful King of the USA was to publically inform the American people that there was someone asserting to be King of America, and for the good of the country no one should read anything this guy had to say and his supporters should be denied access to public media, then logically we'd have to deduce that, By Zeus, there must really be something to this guy's claims; gosh and golly gee, we'd always thought the US was a republic and no possible legitimacy existed for anyone to claim to be a US king, but the president's response shows there must be something to it. Similarly, the response by official Baha'i leadership undermines their own position and indicates there's something to the points being made by those they don't want read.

Again, you may refute to your utmost capacity any points made, but don't argue against people on the grounds of who they are or you are confessing the superiority of their positions and your impotence to show them wrong.

To Tolerance,
Michael

Roger Reini (roger@rreini.com) writes:

> On 2 May 2001 18:55:30 GMT, bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA

(Michael

> McKenny) wrote:

**>

>>Ad hominem and hence invalid. Issues, points, content is valid. What is >>said is valid. Who said it is invalid.

**>

> Not in this case. A Covenant breaker or a supporter of a CB would be > expected to engage in attacks on the legitimacy of the Administrative > Order in general and, in this day, the Universal House of Justice in > particular. This would be to gain support for their position - - their > rebellion, as it were.

**>

> And here we had someone attacking the House of Justice, someone who > had expressed sympathy for the views and positions of Mason Remey, who > falsely claimed the Guardianship for himself. That sets off warning > alerts for me.

**>

**>>

>>Roger Reini (roger@rreini.com) writes:

**>>>

>>> I tend to discount that person's opinion in this case because of other >>> opinions he has stated in this newsgroup -- opinions that, IMHO, are >>> in support of individuals who have broken the Covenant of Baha'u'llah.

>>> I am NOT calling him a Covenant breaker, for I have no knowledge of >>> his status in the Baha'i Faith. Still, if he is indeed a CB or a >>> supporter of CB's, then I discount any statement of his on the supreme

>>> Baha'i institution and its legitimacy.

**>

> Roger (roger@rreini.com)

> <https://www.rreini.com/>

**--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Albuquerque - some corroboration

Date: Tuesday, May 08, 2001 9:46 AM

Hi, Rick.

Well, gee, I'm not even a Baha'i. Why should I go and dig this stuff out of the basement, when there's so much not getting down, while I even take the time to type this. If you want to attack the Baha'i Faith and say this is definitely not an outfit where one can submit a letter, a request, an appeal, a communication and expect any response (other than having it tossed in the waste paper basket) well, let the Baha'is defend their religion against you, or will it be Nima who gives you your quotes?

I continue to assert that nothing anyone else says about the Baha'i Faith can cause as much harm, is such an attack, as what is signed by Doug and his buddies and those claiming to be in the same party.

I don't promise never to post such quotes. I'm just astonished that people such as you act as if you're defending Baha'i when you challenge assertions that it is decent. You reply to remarks in favour of Baha'i with, "No, that aint so, prove it, by citing," (literally I assume) "the appropriate quotes." I expect if I don't find "Thou shalt not trash the appeals sent to thee unanswered," you'll say, "See we are allowed to respond to appeals by trashing them unanswered." And this is defending the Faith?

To Baha'i,
M.

"Rick Schaut" (rsschaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

> "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA> wrote in message

> news:9d14h0$smh$1@freenet9.carleton.ca...

>> Of course, Baha'i texts allow for people contacting Baha'i authorities >> to receive a timely response -- response being defined as an answer, a >> reply, a communication from the authority to the person initially >> contacting them.

>

> So, cite the actual texts, Michael. Better yet, quote them, and explain > precisely how those texts apply to these circumstances. Such would be a > vast improvement over the constant stream of uninformed

personal opinion
> that plagues these newsgroups.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Handling Appeals (was Re: bahai - Re: Unconstitutional (per UHJ Constitution) NSA By-law)
Date: Thursday, May 31, 2001 12:13 PM

Yes, Rick, they acted by tossing the appeal in the wastepaper basket. An individual addressing a decent authority, especially in this manner, is entitled to more than the unspoked assurance that whatever action, if any, is deemed appropriate by the authority will be taken. The individual is entitled to a real reply informing her/him what action has been taken. Actually, in decent contexts this would be published in the press.

"Rick Schaut" (rsschaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:
> "Dermod Ryder" <Grim_Reaper_Mk2@btinternet.com> wrote in message
> news:9euse9$1bfl6$2@ID-84503.news.dfncis.de...
>> "Yorgos" <nthyorgos@hotmail.com> wrote in message >> news:OE44pGOjXZ1tazAfM0n000072cb@hotmail.com...
>> Thank you for confirming the length of time that elapsed between the time >> that Deborah filed her Complaint with the NSA and the emission of a reply.
>> As you well know yet more months followed before the Complaint was filed
> in >> Court. Mr Schaut seemed to think I was making this story up. I wonder > what >> further comments he now has to make!
>
> Actually, Mr. Ryder's memory is somewhat faulty. I have pointed out that we > only know that Ms. Buchhorn is unaware of any action taken by the National > Spiritual Assembly in these matters. Mr. Ryder's conclusion is that that

> National Spiritual Assembly "sat on" (to use Mr. Ryder's words) the appeals > raised by Ms. Buchhorn--a conclusion that would imply that the National > Spiritual Assembly never took any action to investigate the matters raised.
> All I've pointed out is that we don't know whether or not the National > Spiritual Assembly took no action whatsoever. We only know that they have > not replied directly to Ms. Buchhorn's appeals.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: MacEoin Review of Crooked/Straight, Part Two Date: Sunday, June 17, 2001 8:23 AM

Greetings, Denis and Nima.

Many thanks for this post. I see that this second part of the review contains some of the specific objections I mentioned as lacking in the first one. This, in my opinion, still does not excuse the other objections I raised about the first half (complaining about the size, number of footnotes, length of bibliography and presence of Latin and also about the lack of scholarly credentials of the book's authors!!!).

I note the objection to the use of secondary source material, including GOD PASSES BY which itself contains no footnotes, and this is a valid objection. If Baha'u'llah himself is not to be taken as a primary historical source for events to which he was not an eye witness, that is, if Baha'u'llah's historical assertions concerning such things as Greek philosophers are not to be accepted as literal fact, then Shoghi Effendi, whom Baha'is do not regard as a Manifestation of God, cannot be treated as a hollow reed transmitting God's inerrant historical knowledge. The normal standards are to be applied in his case, and it is indeed a failing of the book being reviewed (notwithstanding its length, number of footnotes, size of bibliography and seasoning of Latin quotes) if indeed it accords any priority to Shoghi Effendi over actual primary source material.

Denis, as strenuously as I can, I absolutely disagree with your assertion that one should not be writing on a subject, if one does not know about the existence of certain material. This is flawed reasoning
and a favouring of censorship repugnant to me. Let whosoever wishes write and let whichsoever publisher desires publish what is written.
And, by the same token, then, may you or anyone else who has a point of view, an awareness of facts unstated (through ignorance or deliberate misrepresentation) be equally free to write and to be published. Let knowledge thus be advanced not be telling others to be silent if they haven't read everything you have read or if they don't share your opinion and mine as to the primacy of primary sources (thus,
removing GOD PASSES
By from any cultish pedestal), but rather through the freedom of authors both to write what they wish and to encounter corrections and opinions at variance to their own.

I would like to comment on your specific point that it is reprehensible for Baha'u'llah to have conspired to have another substituted for him for reasons of safety. I fully appreciate your point of view, and one of the essential Baha'i principles is the freedom to express one's opinion and the willingness to listen to the rainbow of personal opinions held by the diverse individuals comprising humanity.
This point is not so uniformly believed as you suggest. Many rulers in past times employed tasters whose task was to die in place of a ruler being poisoned. I do not say that I necessarily consider this the most heroic thing to do, only that many people have esteemed the life of the ruler highly. There is, for example, that story of a Chinese ruler about to rush to the aid of a woman being threatened by a wild beast, only to be advised that he could be provided with other women, but what could they do if their ruler was killed. You don't have to share this opinion of the value of a ruler's life, or of his acting so as to reduce the possibility his people will be confronted by his death. My point is that the view does exist that the ruler's life is so precious, and the official Baha'i opinion is not so universally condemned as you imply.

I agree, of course, on the issue of democracy over totalitarianism.

Again, thanks for posting this. In my opinion this review could have been better written. Also, if the book is as forbidding to most readers as the reviewer suggests (in the sense of length, etc.), then such readers could benefit from the kind of review that summarizes its content in half a dozen or so pages. This could be written by someone sympathetic with the authors' point of view, and one hopes also aware of the validity of other viewpoints.

Thrive,
Michael

Article 46149 of talk.religion.bahai:

[Part 2 of review by Denis MacEoin, Ph.D., of:

Udo Schaefer, Nicola Towfigh, and Ulrich Gollmer (contribs), Making the Crooked Straight: A Contribution to Bahá'í Apologetics, trans. from German by Dr. Geraldine Schuckelt, 2000, George Ronald, Oxford, 863 pp.]

Not many lines later (p. 485), he writes 'Although, as a Baha'i one trusts that the main sequence of events is recorded correctly'. Frankly, being a Baha'i doesn't come into it, Ulrich. Facts are facts, and pious trusting has no place in historical analysis. But Gollmer isn't content with trusting in the texts: he actually believes that the lives of their authors make a difference.

Referring to Abd al-Baha' and Shoghi Effendi, he writes: 'The lives of these two chroniclers testify to this, embodying as they do the ethical principles of their faith'. I've no doubt Shoghi Effendi was the best of men (though I know less about him than I do about, oh, let's say, Ann Frank), but the fact is that, when he wrote God Passes By, he hung his 'facts' on a preconceived framework. Just as I might distort historical characters or events in writing a novel, so he told his tale in order to meet the demands of a grand scheme, a divine drama played out in Shiraz, Baghdad, or Acre. It's a work of genius, but I don't think it's a reliable historical source, if for no other reason than that there isn't a single reference from beginning to end. We're meant to take everything on Shoghi Effendi's say-so. Whereas academic books are open and transparent, displaying their origins in the form of citations and bibliographies, God Passes By is wholly opaque, cramming primary and secondary materials in together without rhyme or reason, and leaving the reader in the dark throughout. So just what Shoghi Effendi's rather unknown life has to do with the veracity of his text is quite beyond me.

One particularly lengthy historical section, written by Towfigh, runs from page 599 to page 673, and deals, in the main, with the break between Baha' Allah and Subh-i Azal. I found this a very frustrating sequence to read, because I sensed throughout that Towfigh was only marginally familiar with the original texts, but brazened things out by judicious use of secondary materials, most of them from Baha'i sources. Since this is still a controversial area, it requires well-honed historical and linguistic skills, without which it is easy to slip into error, as Towfigh does.

As before, I am aware that the only detailed discussions of Babism in this period are to be found in Chris Buck's Symbol and Secret and in two articles by myself, 'Hierarchy and Authority' and 'Divisions and Authority Claims', along with Juan Cole's translation of the Risala-yi shathiyya and some discussion that has emerged from it. Yet, apart from a passing reference to Buck's work, none of these is brought into Towfigh's analysis.

In other words, she is choosing which sources to cite, and which to engage with (if any), whereas in proper academic discourse a salient book or paper demands to be accounted for. In other words, you don't have the freedom to ignore anything that gets in the way of your argument. Unless, of course, you don't actually know such materials exist, in which case you should not be writing on the subject.

Towfigh is constantly out of tune with what seems to have been happening. She shows no understanding of the Shi'ite concept of ghayba as an element in Azal's behaviour (it was certainly referred to by his contemporaries in explanation of his absence), she persists in accepting 'Mystic Source' as an adequate translation for the phrase masdar-i amr, (13) she believes (incorrectly) that there is no document in the Bab's hand which legitimizes Azal's position, and she does not know why Azal was chosen as the Bab's successor (on account of his 'inspired' writings, apparently).

In one place she states that 'the early Babis, too, clearly expected the Promised One to arrive soon', which is debatable at the very least. And she goes on to say: 'Only this can explain the fact that during the years immediately following the martyrdom of the Bab so many proclaimed themselves to be the Promised One.' If she had read the second of my articles, she would have seen adequate evidence that probably no-one made that claim at that point, and that all these matters require a much more sophisticated understanding of events and terminology than Towfigh brings to them.

Since the range of claims open to the Babis of that period was fairly large, a researcher in this field ought to be able to access the sort of texts in which they are laid out. I see no mention at all in Towfigh's copious footnotes of Naraqi, Dahaji, the Azali compilation Qismati az alwah, the original texts of Baha' Allah's Baghdad writings, or the relevant later works of the Bab. The work is being done largely from secondary texts: God Passes By is cited no fewer than twenty-one times, A Traveller's Narrative thirty-one, and other articles by Browne thirty-nine times.

Elsewhere, ideology leads to contradictions. On p. 665, we are assured that, when Browne was writing, 'a single, united Babi community had long since ceased to exist', whereas on pages 672-3, we are informed that 'the term schism is inappropriate in connection with the conflict between Mirza Yahya Azal and Baha'u'llah, since no division within a religion occurred'.

There are numerous other points that arise from this section, but I'll restrict myself to just one here, which is an ethical, not an historical one. On p. 636, Towfigh quotes a statement from 'Abd al-Baha' to the effect that the Bab and Baha' Allah agreed to have Subh-i Azal appointed nominal head of the faith in order to preserve his older brother from danger. She is not the first Baha'i writer to cite this with approval, and I'm sure she will not be the last. Let me only comment here that, if the aim of this book is to win friends and influence people in the non-Baha'i world, this citation alone would undermine the whole enterprise. Imagine how Christians would react to the suggestion that Jesus conspired to have Judas substituted for him so he could escape the cross (an idea actually mooted by some Muslim writers). Or that a French resistance fighter handed a Jew over to the Gestapo, knowing that doing so would save his life. Or that

John Kennedy, fearing assassination, had placed a double to ride in his open-top car.

This is something the Baha'is have to think about hard. Fortunately, the solution is historical rather than ethical. We can't prove there wasn't some sort of conspiracy, but Azal's appointment does seem genuine, we know that the Bab gave Azal specific instructions to 'preserve himself', (14) that he issued instructions to others to take care of Azal, (15) and that Baha' Allah was in the public eye from quite an early period. (16) What Abd al-Baha' was trying to do was to find a plausible explanation for what was to him an unpalatable fact: that the Bab had appointed as the guardian of his faith and writings a man considered by Baha'is to be a primary source of spiritual evil.

That's enough history for the moment. To be honest, the historical gaffes and distortions gave me less grief than some early sections in Schaefer's main contribution, and in parts of Gollmer's section on politics. This isn't easy to convey, but it matters, so please be patient while I try to develop this point.

My problem is this. With one important exception, which I shall come to later, the tone and content of much of the book seemed to me deeply conservative and self-righteous. What is worse is that Schaefer clearly seems to want his voice, with its illiberal overtones, to be taken for the voice of the Baha'i faith as a whole. To be honest, this doesn't surprise me, since a rather puritan conservatism was the atmosphere within the Baha'i movement when I was a member and had much to do with driving me and others out. What does surprise me is that, after so much worthwhile debate, promoted by organs like Dialogue magazine, the liberal voice of Baha'ism has not convinced men like Schaefer that they are dinosaurs who need to modify their views in some respects if they are not to cause

the Baha'i
faith to petrify in a mode that will become more and more out of touch with the reality lived by most thoughtful, caring people.

Let's take a look. After a lengthy section on Baha'i political ideas, to which I'll return in a moment, Schaefer really gets going on
pp. 301 ff., where he discusses 'the concept of liberty'. At first he seems quite reasonable, arguing, for example, that the liberty of which Baha' Allah
disapproved was not democratic liberty but anarchy, immorality, and so forth. From there, he works his way round to a popular Baha'i theme, namely that true liberty is obedience to God's law. This too, he stresses, does not contradict democratic liberties.

But this liberal mask starts to slip not much later. Ficicchia, he says (p.
318), argues against Baha' Allah's legislation 'purely on the basis of the modernist attitude held by the sceptical and irreligious person who lacks any concept or understanding of religious obligations and-horrible dictu-faithful obedience, who rejects any possibility of absolute authority, accepting no authority but his own self according to
the principle: "I am the Law!"

There's nothing like a stereotype to waken certain forms of bigotry, in this case the notion that non-believers do not understand religious matters, and that they are anarchists and libertines at heart.

But he goes further. It isn't just non-believers whom we can't trust, it's people in general: (17) 'people today value nothing more dearly than their sovereign liberty in decision-making, their individual right to shape their own lives, their freedom to decide for themselves what is and what is not permissible as defined by their sense of moral autonomy' (p.
320).

In the last century, thousands upon thousands of men and women gave their lives to establish just such a freedom, very rightly rejecting

the 'absolute authority' of fascism and communism. Many of these were religious people of upstanding morals. Others, perhaps the majority, were agnostics or atheists, also of high moral standards Many of Schaefer's own countrymen and women joined the widerstand, the internal opposition to Hitler, just as many Russians resisted Stalinism, denying that the authority of the state is absolute and that individuals have no rights.

Other men and women fought - as many round the world today still fight - for human rights, for the right of the individual to believe and speak and write and act within very broad limits. This sometimes results in speech or behaviour that you or I may find offensive. But I - and millions of others
- would always prefer to be offended than to be straitjacketed
by a Hitler, or a Khomeini, a Pope, or an 'infallible' religious body. If Schaefer sees
(as I think he does) something ignoble in this, what a very blinkered man he must be.

One of the things that originally attracted me to the Baha'i faith was its modernity, its concern with contemporary issues, the belief that it had passed beyond traditional religions to a new dimension of belief and action. All I see now, when I look at it, is a religion led by deeply conservative men and women whose beliefs chime only too well with those of the conservative wing of all the old faiths. Baha'is have more in common with haredi than Reform Jews, with the present Pope than liberation theologians, with Southern Baptists and fundamentalist Muslims than Unitarians and reformist Shi'a.

Much of this neo-conservatism has its roots in just the same fears that prompted Pius IX to declare war on the liberalism of his day.
It's a deep-seated fear of people, a distrust of anyone who dares to think for himself, to publish a book without having to ask anyone else's approval, to stand up in meetings and tell those in charge they are talking nonsense, to tell obscene jokes like Lenny Bruce, as a weapon against racism and sexism.

It's a fear of that young man with his shopping bags standing his ground in front of tanks on Tianenmen Square, of the Catholic women who stand up in church to demand the right to contraception, abortion, and women priests, of the Muslim women who jeered at the fundamentalists marching in support of the fatwa against Salman Rushdie, of the angry rabbis who dared take God to task for allowing the Holocaust to happen, of a writer daring to satirize a religion that has the temerity to condemn him and others to death. It's a fear of change, of questions, of the laughter that punctures the pride of the man on the platform, of satire; a fear of the power of sex, of the power of words, of the power of people who are willing to make their own decisions and their own mistakes, people who have eyes that can see through the Emperor's new clothes.

Schaefer is on the wrong side of history. We atheists and agnostics out here are not a gang of depraved, self-interested libertarian anarchist no-gooders. If you want depravity and self-interest, better look in almost any religious group around. Religious people have been responsible for an outrageous amount of suffering in this world, and they still have the gall to tell us: 'It was bad then, but that was a mistake, just trust us, we've got it right this time round.' Rationalists believe in the dignity of man, the value of reason, the worth of ordinary human wisdom, the power of disobedience to irrational authorities.

Was the Enlightenment a denial or affirmation of the worth of humanity? Was science hindered or helped by its separation from religion? (18) Ditto medicine. Which is the less violent culture, that of largely secular Europe, or that of the highly religious USA, with its craze for guns, its murders, drug-related crime, capital punishment, and Star Wars? Is secular England, where churches are demolished or turned into bingo halls, a worse place to live than my native Northern Ireland, which has churches on almost every street corner? Which developing countries have made the most progress economically and socially: the lightly religious nations of Asia, or the fervently religious countries of the Islamic world? Are practices like female genital mutilation, honour killings, forced marriages, and the like more common in religious (mainly, Islamic) countries or in secular states?

I could go on here for pages. In case anyone thinks this has just been a digression, may I point out that my reason for going into all this is simply to draw full attention to an extraordinary refusal on Schaefer's part to come face to face with arguments like these which contradict his self-assertive and, frankly, pompous pronouncements on the frivolity and danger of the non-religious world.

The fact is that Schaefer and pals are writing an extended polemic, not just against Ficicchia, but against a host of Baha'i bugbears, from free speech to balanced academic enquiry.

On pages 209 ff, Schaefer addresses the questions of pre-publication review, restrictions on free expression, and so on. I don't intend to pursue the topic here, since a lot could be said on the matter. But I will comment that the arguments employed by Schaefer reminded me vividly of a debate that is currently raging in several Asian countries, notably Singapore and Malaysia, over the role of the press vis-à-vis the government. Inevitably, the more authoritarian states take much the view that Schaefer does here, arguing that the state (for which read Schaefer's religious institutions) must be above all criticism.

In similar vein, Schaefer writes, refuting Ficicchia's claim that Baha'ism is anti-democratic, 'On no account is [the Baha'i order] "anti-democratic", since the democratic elements, along with the theocratic traits, are dominant' (p.246). The overall impression (and Schaefer is not alone in giving it) is that the proposed (and, indeed, the current) Baha'i system of government is dominantly democratic. I imagine many of my readers will concur in this understanding. I, however, beg to differ, as, I think, will most democrats.

The trouble is that you cannot, in reality, just mix monarchy/aristocracy, democracy, and theocracy (with absolute authority). The result is a denaturing of each of the elements to no useful purpose. We in Britain have a monarchy, but the monarch cannot override the will of the people: if she could, we would no longer have a democracy, and might as well dissolve parliament.

Theocracy, as in Iran and Afghanistan, tends to demand precedence over democratic norms (such as the right of the people to enact laws according to their will). Democracy, where it flourishes, tends to make other systems redundant.

This is not to say that democracy does not have its problems. But those problems will not be solved by introducing incompatible notions such as absolutism or infallibility.

Throughout this section, Schaefer selects his targets so that he does not have to confront the real issues. The main objections are as follows: 1) the fact, referred to above, that believers can have their voting rights and their right to vote suspended should they infringe the Baha'i moral code (including, I would argue, improper questioning of the authorities); 2) the fact that heresy/disobedience to divinely-constituted authority leads to automatic exclusion from the community; 3) the fact that, however democratically elected, no Baha'i government can introduce major legislation in its own right or abrogate laws set by Baha' Allah or the Universal House of Justice (democratic parliaments make and rescind their own laws); 4) the fact that women cannot serve on the Universal House of Justice; 5) the fact that a Baha'i state would be a one-party state (try setting up in opposition to the official 'divinely-appointed' line even now); 6) the fact that there can never be open debate about certain basic issues, such as gay rights, capital punishment, or any number of matters from contraception to the running of the police, that have yet to be decided by the Universal House of Justice.

I know that Baha'is don't actually want a democracy, but that leaves the rest of us justifiably concerned. It's not enough to try to reassure us by saying democracy is dominant alongside theocracy. Democracy is not divisible, and is only mocked when autocratic states use it as a mask to conceal their true nature.

Finally, what was the exception referred to above? On pages 256-7 and page 742, Schaefer and Gollmer mention something that they do not, surprisingly, make much more of. The second reference is to two texts, one by 'Abd al-Baha', the other by Shoghi Effendi, both writing about the need to accord human rights to covenant breakers.

To be honest, this flabbergasted me. I had never seen the passages in question before, and they caught me unawares. Anything, whether scriptural or otherwise, I had ever read previously on covenant-breakers, had been extremely negative: reading their words is like eating vomit (from a 'Hand of the Cause'), they are utterly despicable, they are to be shunned absolutely, even by their families, and so on. All of those vitriolic passages in God Passes By about Azal and Mirza Muhammad 'Ali, and Ruth White, and Ahmad Sohrab, and every 'enemy of the Faith' from Hajj Mirza

Aqasi on. So to learn that even Covenant-Breakers have rights turns a lot of my assumptions upside down.

The biggest puzzle, of course, is why there aren't more passages displaying this degree of humanity, and why the Baha'is haven't made greater efforts to present this side of their faith, instead of the heavy-handed conservatism to be found in the work of so many eminent exponents.

There are also, of course, obvious contradictions between these texts and others. 'Abd al-Baha' instructs some believers not to obstruct a covenant-breaker in seeking employment as a teacher, since even such a person has to earn a living. That's terrific, and much more sensitive than I'm used to in Baha'i texts; but if we move forward a bit in time, to a large village or small town where most of the inhabitants are Baha'is, what happens at the school? I can't imagine the Baha'i authorities or the other teachers or the parents letting a covenant-breaker loose on their children just because 'Abd al-Baha' says he should have job. Can you?

I also have trouble with the Shoghi Effendi passage. Not with the statement itself, which is admirable, but with how it squares with other things. If covenant-breakers are not to be deprived of their civil rights in a free society, then how come the mere act of drinking alcohol, or having sex outside marriage, or even, for a man to let his hair grow below the earlobes, will lead to the loss of voting rights, the most basic civil rights of all? How humanitarian is it to demand that a man's wife and children should shun him merely because he has changed his beliefs?

All of this needs to be addressed, and I was disappointed that neither Schaefer nor Gollmer chose to do so.

I'm left with a list of items that I'd love to take up, but I realize this has also become one of the longest book reviews on record. Given time, I could probably get to 900 or even 1000 pages, but I doubt very much if anyone would want to publish the resulting book in German.

Why have I been so hard on Dr. Schaefer and co-authors? Basically, it's because Schaefer himself goes to some trouble to point out how much Ficicchia's book damaged understanding of the Baha'i faith within German-speaking academic and ecclesiastical circles, and even civil authorities (pp. 1-12). I don't disagree with that, but when I then find that the volume seeking to correct Ficicchia's misrepresentations is itself with replete with factual errors, academic sloppiness, and apologetics dressed as scholarship - in other words, many of the things Ficicchia stands accused of - I find myself obliged to try to set the balance as straight as a simple man can.

The fact is that Making the Crooked Straight will sell more copies to Baha'is than to the great unwashed beyond their gates. Most people aren't sufficiently interested in Baha'ism as yet that they will sit down and read over 800 pages of apologetics. So, I suppose the book is aimed more at believers than anyone else. If that's so, it means that Schaefer, et al., have produced a major contribution to a process that has been going on since Shoghi Effendi's days, but particularly over the past fifteen years or so. At some point in that period, while expansion remained a priority, the Baha'i authorities seem to have woken up to the fact that most believers had a limited grasp on the basics of their faith. Making the Crooked Straight may not be the most systematic presentation of where Baha'is stand on most crucial issues, but it is certainly the largest, and has the appearance of being the most authoritative.

That's why I've spent so long niggling away at the text, and why I could go on longer if I thought anybody was still reading. Major statements require greater care than has been devoted to this volume. Not only that, but it disturbs me to find that fundamentalist Baha'is have seized the high ground in this way. Why shouldn't some liberal Baha'is tell it like it is for once? If my criticisms nudge things further in those two directions-accuracy and liberality of mind and heart-they will have been worthwhile. Thank you for reading this far.

Denis MacEoin
Dursley
Newcastle
June 2001

NOTES

1. I remain unimpressed by Schaefer's curious claim that Ficicchia's book was really written by someone else: 'I doubt if the author, Francecso Ficicchia, who has certainly contributed a lot of material, was able to write the book himself in the style of a methodical, scholarly work, using the terminology of theology and religious studies and Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, Greek and Latin terms - languages of which the author, himself a social worker, has no knowledge. It is very probable then that the book was written by an expert of religious studies and that Ficicchia contributed some material and his name' (Baha'i Studies Review, 2:1 (1992)).

2. The first sentence of chapter one, part one reads: 'The goal of all academic research is to find truth', with the rest of the chapter proceeding along the same lines.

3. That making academic work conform with Baha'i mass opinion is an obligation on Baha'i scholars is made clear by Moojan Momen: 'Secondly, you have to satisfy the Bahá'í community that your scholarship is a true representation of the Faith, one that most Bahá'ís would agree is a presentation of the Faith that is consistent with the texts and being interpreted in ways to which most Bahá'ís would not object' (Baha'i Studies Review, 3:2 [1994]).

4. This episode is cursorily dealt with in a reference on p. 101, and a footnote on p. 703.

5. Baha'is seem to have a problem with this. Many years ago, I met with the editor of the Penguin Handbook of Living Religions and two members of the British NSA, who were there to persuade him to drop my commissioned article on the Baha'is and replace it with one they would have written by a Baha'i author. Like any sensible academic, I admitted during the meeting that I had my biases and assumptions. The Baha'is seized on this, arguing that this alone disqualified me from writing the piece. Not once did they accept the possibility that their Baha'i author might be biased in his own way. The editor, John Hinnells, admitted to me later that he had been quite sympathetic to the Baha'is until he actually sat through that meeting.

6. I'm referring specifically to the many volumes of scripture edited by him, all of them sloppy, filled with mistakes and misattributions.

7. Religion, 12 (1982): 93-129. See also 'Baha'i Fundamentalism and the Academic Study of the Babi Movement', Religion 16 (1986): 57-84, and 'Afnan, Hatcher, and an Old Bone', Religion 16 (1986): 193-195. It's interesting that none of these articles, which represented one of the first debates between the old-style Baha'i scholarship and the new, academic approach, is referred to in the present work.

8. Gollmer does it too. On p. 464, he quotes approvingly a statement by the World Council of Churches: 'A second danger is that of interpreting a living faith not in its own terms but in terms of another faith or ideology. This is illegitimate on the principles of both scholarship and dialogue'.

9. W. Collins, Bibliography of English-language Works on the Babi and Baha'i Faiths, p. 281

10. In footnote 20, p. 498, she complains that 'Even within Ficicchia's own transcription system, the transcription Ta'rih (sic) is incorrect, since Táríkh is written with alif and not with hamza. Since when? Ta'rikh is an Arabic word and is written with hamza in that language, whatever the Persian pronunciation might be. Of course, it would be pointless to object if someone left the hamza out, but it seems most irregular to correct someone for putting it in. And, by the way, it is not Ficicchia's 'own transcription system', but a standard one used widely by Arabists and Persianists in Germany and elsewhere.

11. Gollmer too shows a reluctance to engage with current scholarship, and even appears to be unaware of what is happening in the wider world. On p. 778, for example, he states magisterially: 'no systematic presentation of the Baha'i Faith has yet been published that satisfies academic criteria'. Says who? Peter Smith's excellent volume for Cambridge University Press springs immediately to mind. And what about the numerous encyclopaedia articles by Juan Cole, Smith, Moojan Momen, Todd Lawson, and myself?

12. Gollmer reiterates this position on pp. 558 and 559.

13. He gets into greater trouble on the next page, when he asserts that there are plenty of scriptural texts in which the phrase masdar-i amr refers to God. I have gone over most of these texts with Steve Lambden, and I don't think there was one where the phrase might not as easily have referred to the Manifestation. For examples, see my 'Divisions and Authority Claims', pp. 118-19. I am dismayed that Gollmer did not even attempt to engage with these references.

14. See MacEoin, 'Divisions and Authority Claims', p. 109.

15. Ibid

16. See ibid', p. 117.

17. There's more of this on the next page, p. 321: 'most people at present', 'modern people'. On the next page, p. 322, he expresses his impatience with 'a critical and sceptical public'.

18. On this, see an excellent new study by Stephen Jay Gould, Rock of Ages.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Democratic Conservatism was Refutation of Peter Khan

Date: Monday, June 18, 2001 10:03 AM

Greetings, Nima and Juan.

Juan asks if you hate Communists and Liberals who is left to admire bur fascists. I certainly understand the context behind this rhetorical question, and I would like to take this opportunity to underline that what is reprehensible about the behaviour of the UHJ is that it is acting precisely as have acted those whom Baha'u'llah condemned and it is oppressing its own people not because it is neither communist, nor liberal, but because it is anti-democratic, because it violates the most essential Baha'i principles of freedom of thought and expression.

In this country there is an ongoing debate of considerable proportions among those of conservative viewpoints and one of the most heartening aspects of this debate is the extent to which the term and attitude of democratic conservatism is used and demonstrated. The guy who, in my opinion, is the most articulate talk show host in this city is a great example of this. He continually and sincerely invites the expression of all points of view, admits he is expressing his own opinion, which may not be correct and certainly isn't the only one and states his opposition only to the view that there is only one permissible opinion.

It is, in my opinion, essential to stress this point in the Baha'i context. Holding conservative views and expressing them is perfectly legitimate and in accord with the universalist approach of Baha'u'llah. Where those who now hold power have broken their trust is not by thinking there is life on Pluto or Herodotus lived after Alexander the Great etc. but in their refusal to allow the expression of other opinions. That they exercise censorship, that they misuse their stewardship of the Baha'i Faith to divide the community when their job is to advance the harmony of the human species, that they are striving to de-evolve the world-encompassing vision of Baha'i into a replica of the intolerant sectarian entities Baha'u'llah sought to surpass is why they are so much in error and have caused such harm.

Again, express whatever literalist and conservative views one wishes, on the condition other views are not suppressed. It is the true clash of conflicting opinions that produces the spark of truth.

To Truth,
Michael

> ... At one point Khan > spoke of the fall of communism, and he almost spat the word "communist."
> His nose flared, his eyes blazed. Then he spoke of the likely criticisms > "Western liberals" would make of Baha'u'llah's Most Holy Book. And, he > almost spat the word "liberals." His nose flared, his eyes blazed. If you > hate both communists and liberals, I'm not sure who is left to admire but > fascists.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Refutation of Peter Khan

Date: Tuesday, June 19, 2001 12:20 PM

Greetings, Juan.

Many thanks for replying to my questions.

On the issue of the ethical source of e-mails forming the basis for action against Alison Marshall and others, I think you're missing the point. The issue is not whether or not my memory that Talisman had a non-forwarding policy is flawed. The fact is Susan is admitting, as I believe do those individuals signing themselves the Universal House of Justice, that opinions people expressed on e-mail lists were sent to Baha'i authorities who then took action against such people on account of these opinions, such action extending to that of declaring such people not to be Baha'is, notwithstanding the fact that the e-mails forming the basis for such astounding actions were views supporting the fundamental principles enunciated by Baha'u'llah.

What significant difference is there between what Susan is seeking to prove, i.e. that it was after messages on e-mail lists had been forwarded to Baha'i authorities and these authorities took action against people because of the expression of personal opinion on e-mail lists that there came into being the remarkable entities of private Baha'i e-mail lists whose members are not to forward messages to Baha'i authorities or that there already existed private Baha'i e-mail lists from which personal opinions were sent to Baha'i authorities who took action against those expressing such opinions.

Speaking of ethics, if what Susan is asserting (contrary to my memory) were true, if really she was forwarding messages to Counsellor Ghadirian, Peter Khan or whomever from lists that were not private, and then she observed Baha'i authorities taking action against Baha'is because of the views they had expressed and which she had forwarded to these authorities, then, morally outraged she ought to have posted her response in words similar to these:

"What in the name of the Prince of Peace are you doing taking the honest expression of personal opinion, using what I forwarded to you, as the grounds to oppress those voicing their views? Freedom of thought and expression is one of the essential principles of this religion.

Who do you think you are supposed to take as your model, the Centre of the Covenant or the Son of the Wolf and his ilk? Cease and desist your reprehensible moves against those expressing personal support in cyberspace for the world embracing vision of the Blessed Beauty and his fundamental principles for human harmony. If this is what you're going to do with e-mails I honestly sent you in good faith, you can swallow sea water for all I care, but I won't send you another comma from any lists and I'll recommend they adopt a no-forwarding policy. Immerse yourselves in the Writings of Baha'u'llah and stop oppressing the believers." If Susan posted any such honest outrage, I missed it. Maybe someone else can post it and she'll stand vindicated.

Anyway, the bottom line on this issue is that it is a violation of fundamental Baha'i principle to interfere in the freedom of thought and expression. Baha'i authorities have no business taking action against those posting their personal views to cyberspace. The Calamity is quite evident and its source clear when people signing themselves the Universal House of Justice and any other Baha'i authority use posts to e-mail lists as grounds for action against Baha'is expressing personal opinion, especially personal opinion in support of the fundamental principles of Baha'u'llah. It matters not whether or not such lists had or had not a non-forwarding policy.

To the Future,
Michael

Juan Cole (jricole@my-deja.com) writes:

**>
> Michael, I think you can corroborate for me that talisman@umich.edu > has always had a limited no-forwarding policy, and that in fact I > tossed Iskandar Hai off it in 1997 for violating it with regard to > a particular liberal Baha'i scholar of the time. Therefore, it is > certainly true that "evidence" against Alison Marshall was gathered > unethically.

>
> The community in the midwest that wanted to build a local Baha'i > House of Worship had purchased the land and just wanted to put up > a sign saying that it was the site of a future local Mashriqu'l-> Adhkar. Goons from the central Baha'i administration appeared, who > insisted they take back down the sign. This, despite `Abdul-Baha's > strict and urgent instructions that local Houses of Worship be built > everywhere as soon as possible.
>
> cheers Juan

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Refutation of Peter Khan

Date: Tuesday, June 19, 2001 9:19 AM

Greetings, Nima and Juan.

Peter Khan is quoted as saying that the Calamity already exists, as can be seen from this situation in New Zealand. He asks isn't the loss of spirituality the Calamity.

I would like to underline this remark and place it in the context of Baha'u'llah's own definition. It's been years since I read it, but no doubt someone here can provide the exact reference. Does not Baha'u'llah in the KITAB-I-IQAN refer to the Calamity and say that it already exists as a consequence of the fundamentalists who are ruling in Islam. Does he not ask there something like, "What greater Calamity can there be than that the believers would wish to turn to their spiritual leaders for guidance and not be able to receive such spiritual guidance from them?"

In my opinion, Peter Khan is completely correct that the situation existing currently as demonstrated by the expulsion of Ms. Marshall is an indication that the Calamity is upon the Baha'is. It is the very same situation deplored by Baha'u'llah, that those whose responsibility is to promote the harmony of the human species have instead become wolves ravaging on the very believers of the Prince of Peace.

Here's to Peter Khan and his like reading more of Baha'u'llah and humbly reversing the Calamity they themselves have brought about.

To the Future,
Michael

>
> On the belief of Baha'i cultists that the world was going to end or eternal > peace come or something in the year 2000, Khan quotes a questioner as > saying: "Related to that is the question: "I'm still waiting for the unseen > calamity by the end of the 20th century. Are we still getting it?"
>
> He replies, "I've got news for you folks, you've got it. This stuff going > on in New Zealand at the present time, if this is not a calamity, what is?
> Would you rather lose your spiritual life and your spiritual condition and > go through all eternity spiritually crippled by this? Is that worse or > better than the physical calamity of having your house blown up or having a > war occur or something like that? Our values are spiritual.
The things we > value most are spiritual things. We are facing spiritual tests and a > spiritual calamity is before us. And one of the things I wanted to do this > morning is to alert you to my understanding that the Baha'is in New Zealand > are facing the very real prospect of a spiritual calamity unless urgent and > immediate measures are taken."
>
> In other words, Khan is reinterpreting the Calamity that Baha'is have been > waiting for (and which obviously hasn't come in the way the cultists
> expected) as the tendency of New Zealand Baha'is actually to think for > themselves and not bow down in glaze-eyed uniformity before the infallible > pronouncements of Peter Khan. This is so extreme, so absurd, that it is > hard for me to believe that the audience didn't just walk out on him at > that point.

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Text of Fosters Threatening Letter to a 15 year old girl with depression
Date: Monday, June 25, 2001 9:54 AM

Greetings, Mark.

One of the reasons I so strongly supported the formation of this newsgroup was that it provides freedom of thought and expression. I very much encourage you and everyone else interested in this subject to post here. And, I am constantly happy to repeat that in the discussion of issues comments directed at individuals, rather than the issue being discussed, are invalid. Indeed, I have always welcomed flames as an admission by the flamer that my points were assessed incapable of refutation. Otherwise such refutation of the points would have been posted and not invalid remarks about the individual making these points. This point concerning the invalidity of remarks directed against an individual normally applies to all individuals, including those who are flamed in posts I'm too busy to read or to respond.

I look forward to reading your further comments on this newsgroup and trust the focus will be on issues and not irrelevant personalities.

Thrice Three Blessings,
Michael

"Mark A. Foster, Ph.D. " (owner@sociologist.com) writes:

**> ...

> Just as I would defend your right to freedom of speech, I will defend my own

> as well.

**>

> Mark Foster

**>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Refutation of Peter Khan
Date: Monday, June 25, 2001 10:14 AM

Greetings, Susan.

Many thanks for your comments.

I would just like to underline that since freedom of thought and expression is an essential Baha'i principle, the issue here is not that there are spies on Baha'i lists of whatever shade of opinion, but that Baha'is feel a need to have private lists, to conceal their opinions, except from those of likemindedness. I have consistently said that my posts to cyberspace may be shared with anyone interested. There are pagan webpages carrying some of my pagan material and Baha'i web pages carrying my freely expressed views on Baha'i topics. The sharing of personal opinions is fully in tune with Baha'i and other democratic principle. The problem in current Baha'i practise is the interference in the expression of personal views, including by Baha'i authorities, so that those treading a Baha'i path feel they cannot speak except in private and Baha'i authorities, as if they operated according to anti-democratic (hence anti-Baha'i) modes, seek to obtain information on views expressed in these amazing entities, these Baha'i private lists.

I do not consider the existence of private lists for Baha'is of conservative shades of opinion healthy either. All viewpoints out to be allowed freedom of thought and expression.

To the Future,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>I don't think you are eligible to join - Bahai spies are not welcome

**>

> Ah, but non-Baha'i spies like Nima and Jo who got Karen to spy for them on the > Baha'i-apologetics list are? Now that's fair an equal treatment! The fact is I > never asked anyone to forward me anything from Talisman or Zuhur. Anything I > have received came unsolicited. I expect the same thing is true of Mark Foster.

> However, Nima solicits people to spy on our lists. He admitted this following > after we found out about what Karen was doing:
>
> "Oh, btw, I have my spies on every one of your lists. HAH!
LOL"
>
>>AFAIC Foster was out to get me declared a Covenant Breaker -
>
> Oh, nonsense. You left the Faith years ago and presumably did not lie about the > circumstances. They would not now declare you CB as Mark well knows. Ditto with > Steve Scholl.
>
>
>
> "And we were gathered in one place, a generation lost in space, with no time
> left to start again . . ."
> Don McLean's American Pie
> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: To the members of the sans-Guardian "Universal House of Justice"

Date: Sunday, January 21, 2001 8:48 PM

Greetings, Herr Nobe!

Well, your post resolves any perplexity. Yes, indeed, you may deem yourself a fundamentalist, including to the extent of saying you're not interested in having any discussion, as you already know what Baha'u'llah
said (presumably in the ten per cent of the Writings translated into English) and are not interested in the opinions of others. What amazing New-speak you display in calling the expression of additional opinions (Do you include the provision of additional material in translation?) as censorship. Your view alone is valid and the imposition of this is not, in newspeak, censorship. Ah, but, gods be praised, I speak a different language, and calling the spade a spade means insisting people only say what you see literally in a fraction of the text is demanding censorship.

Frankly, I consider this suppression of freedom of thought and expression a waste of time and you'd do best to teach everyone, by your example, rather than by newspeak, that Baha'i is a tolerant, embracing religion whose founder sought to encourage the recognition that humans are a quite diverse lot, especially in how the divinely created minds of the entire species have such a spectrum of valid perceptions and understandings. Perhaps someday we'll observe Baha'i authorities keenly living such a life as an example to a humanity that, truth be told, in many ways has leaped ahead of said authorities in applying the basic principles of the Baha'i religion, which include, by the way, freedom of thought and expression.

To Tolerance Within Baha'i,
Michael

ernobe (ernobe@my-deja.com) writes:

- > I don't know whether or not I fit in to your bahá'í fundamentalist
- > category, but my object in writing this is not to engage you in any
- > dialogue, but simply to point out to you and those who may be reading
- > this an issue that seems to be at the heart of all your problems with
- > the Bahá'í Faith. You seem to argue that one of the principal causes
- > of the irritation you feel when dealing with Bahá'ís is the censorship,
- > reviewing, and "harrassment" you experience at the hands of Bahá'í
- > authorities. You state that if we were to make an objective inquiry
- > into the coercive and abusive methods of the Bahá'í Faith we would be - > able to free it from the "fetters of orthodoxy" of its own making, and
- > give it a much wider hearing to the interested public. This is more or
- > less what your position is. Now you might agree with me that the "tip
- > of the ice-berg" that has alerted you to these issues and brought on
- > your present state of open confrontation with the Bahá'í authorities is

> (was) censorship. At the same time you acknowledge that the arrival at > the truth of issues thru consultation is the modus operandi of all > Bahá'í activity, because the Bahá'ís themselves have suffered the > consequences of censorship and have learned the lesson well (that those > who engage in it unrightfully deprive themselves of arriving at the > truth). Therefore by means of consultation everything that appears to > have been wrongly censored is brought to light for discussion and > research, so that action may be taken to clarify and bring to light the > truth of any issue that affects the development and growth of the > Faith. For this purpose Bahá'ís have specially elected bodies whose > job is precisely to engage in this sort of counsel. All the > objectionable behaviour of Bahá'ís that you mention is considered by > them not only considering the objectionable conduct itself, but what > its context is in the progress of the Faith, in other words, what the > specific issues, words, and statements made up each of the questionable > instances of misconduct, and whether the solution to these problems in > any way served to clarify the position of the Faith in relation to > those who might be totally unacquainted with it and might be > predisposed to learn more of it if the proper information would have > been presented. All academic endeavours of Bahá'ís should also be > undertaken with this same principle in mind, remembering that many, if > not all of the thorny issues addressed by academics receive in the > Words of Bahá'u'lláh Himself ample explanation, giving us an > understanding of the religious texts that far transcends those which > the academics already agree on and look to for guidance. It is the > censorship of the Writings of Bahá'ulláh by academics which must be > stopped, and not the censorship of academics by Bahá'ís. Academics are > censored by Bahá'ís because the academics censor the Writings of > Bahá'u'lláh. Bahá'ís believe that controversies and discussion over

- > issues which Bahá'u'lláh has already addressed and resolved is a waste
- > of time, which could be spent teaching the interested public, and
- > useless, because those who would argue that they are serving the - > interests of the Faith by challenging the Writings of its Founder
- > deserve not to be considered as qualifying for membership in the Bahá'í
- > community.
- >
- > --
- > ernobes' forum:
- > <https://forum.asiaco.com/ernobe/>
- >
- >
- > Sent via Deja.com
- > <https://www.deja.com/>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Susan Maneck and Mark Foster

Date: Thursday, June 28, 2001 8:06 AM

Greetings, Mark.

There is no Baha'i de facto sectarianism, except that caused by the conservatives led by the UHJ failing to live the life of the freedom of thought and expression, independent investigation of truth, etc. It is one of the more noteworthy aspects of the current fundamentalist domination of the religion that the liberals faced with pressures to resign from the narrowed formerly universalist and broad minded Faith and even kicked out have not obliged the fundamentalist leadership and become a sect. Those attempting to redefine the Faith as a sect are the current members of the UHJ and these actions are grounds for their removal from office.

To Baha'i,
Michael

"Mark A. Foster, Ph.D. " (owner@sociologist.com) writes:

- > ...
- > Private correspondence on Zuhur19 was not private anymore the moment it was sent > to me, and I determined that de facto sectarianism (i.e., as a fait accomplis) > warranted that people have knowledge of the situation.

>
> Mark Foster
>
>

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Refutation of Peter Khan

Date: Tuesday, July 10, 2001 12:27 PM

Greetings, Susan.

When I first became a Baha'i, I accepted that Deity had revealed a universal, world-embracing, harmonious, global fellowship which would bring together the peoples of the world severed due to political,
religious and other prejudices and Deity, by means of essential spiritual principles, such as the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and expression, the harmony of reason and faith, the equality of women and men, etc., would elevate the human species above the antagonisms, pettiness, fundamentalism, etc. which had brought us to the brink of extinction. When those in power in the Baha'i Faith decreed that this understanding of things was incompatible with membership within Baha'i,
I accepted that my ancient ancestors were correct in their approach to spiritual matters.

Thrice Three Blessings,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

> To my comment:
>
>> In removing Michael and Alison from the roles what >>>the House was basically saying is that neither of them had a sufficient >>>grasp >>>or acceptance of the provisions of the Covenant to be considered fully >>>responsible for their failure to abide by it.
>

> Warren writes:
>
>>That sounds a lot like the act of the Catholic Church Marriage tribunals to >>declare marriages annuled. The idea is that a marriage really did not take >>place
>
> Well, I'm not sure they are commenting on the quality of their faith when they > first became Baha'is.
>
> warmest, Susan

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Why does everyone have to be so Goddamn mean?

Date: Friday, June 29, 2001 8:22 AM

Hi, Susan.

This is ad hominem. You are, in my view, the most articulate, persuasive defender of the conservative viewpoint on the Internet. You dance rings around the others, and that includes the infallible nine. I recommend you ignore all this irrelevant ad hominem stuff and concentrate on issues that have validity. The rest is a waste of time. It's like getting the star quarterback on the opposing team to compete in a who can eat the most waffles in the shortest amount of time contest, simply distracting.

You are welcome, in my view, to file this and use it whenever you wish as a reply to ad hominems, or simply ignore them.

I may disagree with your points many times. I may even wonder whether you yourself really believe what you're saying. "It's good practise," I believe it was Cicero once said, "To argue the weaker the weaker case."

Anyway, here's a toast to you, the best conservative quarterback, and don't worry about proving how many waffles you've eaten.
Anyone can tell when you carry the ball you know what you're doing.

Thrive,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>You only have 1 major article and no full-length monograph, and the Indian >>publication hardly qualifies.
>
> Excuse me, Nima. I have more than seven articles and a book.
>
> "And we were gathered in one place, a generation lost in space, with no time > left to start again . . ."
> Don McLean's American Pie
> <https://bahaistudies.net/susanmaneck/>
>

**--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Karen's Statement on RD and BA

Date: Friday, July 06, 2001 9:14 AM

Greetings, Susan.

The reason I so strongly supported this forum is that it is unmoderated. That means no one's posts can be censored. That means, whatever your understanding may be on the intent of the primary proposer of the site, that nothing and no one is preventing Baha'is from utilizing this available site and carry on a full range of discussions, consultations, the sharing of information, etc. to their hearts' content.

What is surprising, except perhaps to those suspecting Baha'i authorities have made people fearful of expressing their opinions on the Internet in unmoderated fora, is that this is a place so relatively under-utilized by Baha'is. I find it quite telling that at times I've requested a few of the items that should all be posted here as a matter of course, example Ridvan letters from the Universal House of Justice. Were all well with Baha'i this would be an additional medium for the sharing of news and views in every beneficial sense.

To the Future,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

**>

> This newsgroup hardly reflects the reality of the Baha'i community. .It was > basically started by Fred as a forum for bashing the Baha'i Faith.
>
> warmest, Susan

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: No Room for "Dialogue"

Date: Thursday, July 12, 2001 7:55 AM

Greetings, Dave.

Thanks for your statement. Could you kindly clarify it?

You mean in your opinion the fundamental Baha'i principal is that what the UHJ orders takes precedence over what Baha'u'llah wrote, right? You mean that really the Baha'i Faith is not about what Baha'u'llah wrote; it is not about the harmony of humanity through living the life of the independent investigation of truth, the freedom of thought and acceptance, the welcoming within Baha'i of the rainbow of human understandings, the blending of the rational and faith sources of knowledge, the equality of women and men, etc., right? It is, in your opinion, about not thinking, not investigating reality, not speaking one's thoughts freely, not accepting within Baha'i those whose understandings of what Baha'u'llah wrote differ from yours, not accepting reason, not allowing women to be equal, not overcoming past divisive behaviour due to fundamentalism and sectarianism, not tossing cult leadership in the trash can of history, right? Your opinion of Baha'i is that it is a cult of people mindlessly accepting the opposite of what Baha'u'llah wrote, right?

Well, that is your opinion, but I think the Baha'i Faith is about what Baha'u'llah wrote.

To Baha'u'llah,
Michael

Dave Fiorito (bighappymonkey@yahoo.com) writes:

> Michael,
>

> The Baha'i Faith is not about our opinions of what is or is not a > spiritual truth. The Baha'i Faith is about what Baha'u'llah wrote and > he wrote that we are to obey the decisions of the UHJ.
>
> Cheers,
>
> Dave

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: A Bahai in *Perfectly* Good Standing

Date: Thursday, July 12, 2001 7:35 AM

Greetings, Dave.

And, just precisely how does this differ from back-biting?
Where is the written documentation that Fred has been disenrolled?
Why would you or anyone else backbite, according to my understanding of the word, on this issue, and why has there not been any public documentation of this?
Secret membership lists, secret expulsions, verbal conversations such as you and Susan are recounting sound to me exactly like the kind of thing
Baha'u'llah condemned in the most emphatic language.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Dave Fiorito (bighappymonkey@yahoo.com) writes:

>
> Are you refering to me? If so I make no "allegation". I contacted > Membership Services at National and asked them if Fredrick Glaysher > was a member of the Baha'i Faith. I gave them your Baha'i ID number > from the card on your site. They responded by telling me that you > were removed from the membership rolls in February of 1999.
>
> Just the facts.
>
> Cheers,
>
> Dave

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: No Room for "Dialogue"

Date: Thursday, July 12, 2001 8:20 AM

Herr Dave.

You hold a Nazi opinion of the Revelation of Baha'u'llah. You say that nothing Baha'u'llah wrote is to be considered, only obedience to the current individuals who are calling themselves the Universal House of Justice. Sir, if there were to be a gentleman in Washington who went around wearing a crown, who ignored what was written in the US Constitution and by the Founding Fathers, who were to proclaim those believing in the principles of the US Constitution and refusing to keep such a belief a silent thought deep in their hearts, but articulately upheld these principles in public to be ineligible for US citizenship, sir, such a gentleman could call himself the President of the United States, but, sir, his actions would put the lie to this claim. Sir, it is the same case with those individuals who are saying they are the Universal House of Justice. They no more resemble what Baha'u'llah called the Universal House of Justice than would, gods ever preserve America from, the above hypothetical gentleman embody the ideals of the Constitutional concept of president.

Baha'u'llah never asked anyone to thoughtlessly obey fundamentalist sectarians, oppressors of all for which He endured decades of privation and imprisonment. Baha'u'llah called for there to be those guiding His universal community as if they were the Source of All Good, those promoting the fellowship of the believers through diffusing the divine fragrances of independent investigation of truth, freedom of thought and expression, acceptance that not your one understanding alone is valid, but humans are created holding capacity for a rainbow of valid individual perceptions, the agreement of true faith and reason, the equality of women and men, etc. When such an Institution exists and is beneficially demonstrating that Baha'is harmoniously, universally are being shown a way to the light of happiness, understanding, peace, this Institution is to be obeyed, reasonably. The Nazi principle of obeying cult leaders has nothing to do with Baha'u'llah.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Dave Fiorito (bighappymonkey@yahoo.com) writes:

>
> No. Not if you are a Baha'i. Baha'u'llah's instructions are clear on > this one. The UHJ is to be obeyed. If we want clarification or we > wish to appeal we do so directly to them. Beyond that we must obey if > we are to stay within the bounds of Baha'u'llah's laws. I challenge > anyone to show me - in Baha'u'llah's Writings - where it says anything > to the contrary.
>
> Cheers,
>
> Dave

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: No Room for "Dialogue"

Date: Thursday, July 12, 2001 8:35 AM

Hello, Dave.

It is the UHJ and those thoughtlessly accepting the opposite of everything Baha'u'llah wrote about the essential principles of Baha'i and of spirituality who are ignoring Baha'u'llah and have turned people against what Baha'u'llah sought to provide humanity. He had no intent to vomit up yet another fundamentalist sect, replete with cult leaders and politburos.

What is wanted is for those holding positions of responsibility to start behaving as Baha'is, to follow Baha'i principles, to welcome all Baha'is within Baha'i, to accept the right of the free expression of all individual understandings within Baha'i, to be world-embracing, global-minded, truly the Trustees of the Merciful and the Source of All Good. What is wanted for anyone clothing herself or himself in the robe of Baha'i to refuse to tolerate the imposition of fundamentalism with its divisive designation of people such as Alison as unbelievers, with its opposition to all Baha'u'llah and His Son endured decades of sorrow to overcome. What is wanted is for you and all your kind to be Baha'is and understand the one hundred and eighty degree difference between Baha'i and cult. Do not permit cult leaders to trample on Baha'u'llah's legacy and they cannot trample on it.

Let the leaders of Baha'i be Baha'is; let the ordinary believers be Baha'is.

To Baha'i,
Michael

Dave Fiorito (bighappymonkey@yahoo.com) writes:

>
> Ok. So they listen - now what? Turn people against the AO that > Baha'u'llah ordained? Get them to leave the Baha'i Faith? Convert > them to a version of the Faith that ignores everything Baha'u'llah > said about LSAs and the UHJ?
>
> What is the purpose of running over the same old ground? Are you > trying to shame the AO into reversing itself? Are you trying to > convince the world the Baha'u'llah was wrong?
>
> I just don't get what it is you actually want?
>
>
> Cheers,
>
> Dave

--
"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)
From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Epistle to Liberal Baha'is

Date: Monday, July 16, 2001 9:45 AM

Greetings, Pat.

Actually, read my letter again, as perhaps ought anyone being advised to contact the UHJ with concerns. I mentioned that I'd been advised it was not a good idea to contact them, I indeed mentioned that my father faught against those whose policies seem to be similar to those of the UHJ. How do you distinguish freedom of speech as permitted in a Baha'i context from what has been the policy of the UHJ? How do you distinguish the workings of Goebbels from the censoring of the Service of Women Paper, etc., etc.?

The very significant point is the response of the UHJ. In Canada we are free to express our opinion of government policy, of the fallibility of our leaders, things that in Hitler's Germany and Stalin's Russia were not allowed. Now how did the UHJ respond to my questioning. Read my letter again carefully. I didn't say "You bunch of fascists", I asked how current Baha'i censorship, etc. was to be distinguished from Goebbel's. Tell me, how does censorship within Baha'i vary from censorship in unappetizing regimes? And, just how did the UHJ demonstrate the distinguishing features of the Baha'i as compared to the Nazi and Communist systems when they reacted to freedom of expression, in my letter, and by many others on the InterNet? Encouraging people to resign membership because they are saying what they think, having people visited by Counsellors and Auxiliary Board Members, threatening people with being shunned, calling New Zealanders unspiritual and writing the most shameful letters the UHJ has ever received when they appeal the expulsion without notice of someone whose offense was to believe Baha'u'llah meant what he said when he said that freedom of thought and expression is a Baha'i principle, etc, etc.

If someone called Uncle Joe a tin potted dictator with delusions of grandeur and the reponse of Uncle Joe was to enforce that person's deprivation of citizenship has he not confirmed the accusation? If someone calls a liberal democratic leader a clone of Herr Hitler and continues to speak and write as a free citizen, has this reaction by the liberal-democrat not demonstrated the quality of the leader?

So, even had
I said, "You guys are clones of Hitler," my comment would have been of no import. It was the reaction a la fascisme that demonstrated the nature of the operation being run by the current lot in Haifa.

To A Better Future,
michael

Pat Kohli (kohliCUT_THE_CAPS@ameritel.net) writes:

> Allahu Abha!

>

> Michael McKenny wrote:

>

>> And some sit on a mountain and call those swimming unbelievers.

>

> Some sit on their seats and call others the fascist reason their fathers > risked their necks. There is a lot of name calling to be done, eh?

>

> Blessings!

> - Pat

> kohli@ameritel.net

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: No Room for "Dialogue"

Date: Tuesday, July 17, 2001 9:27 AM

Hi, Rick

Ad hominem again. Why don't you tell us what the facts really are?

As to the ad hominem point you've made here, let me get this straight,

are you really suggesting that concerns about freedom of thought and expression, about the living the Baha'i life of following the essential

principles of the Founder of the Faith and the Perfect

Exemplar may not be accessed by listening to those who have been valiant enough to insist on living this life and following these principles even at the cost of encountering the wrath of religious fundamentalists and authoritarian leadership? By this reasoning, since Baha'u'llah was valiant enough to insist on living the same life and follow the same principles, despite arousing the same fundamentalist and authoritarian wrath, you hold that he's likely wrong, too, right? Well, you're entitled to your opinion,

just so long as you don't demand every other Baha'i share it.
To a Decent Future,
Michael

"Rick Schaut" (RSSchaut@home.NOSPAMcom) writes:

>
> It's pretty good evidence that even three years after the "Modest Proposal" > events, the individuals involved still weren't understanding many of the > concerns that the institutions had over some of the stuff they were > publishing. If you're relying on the impressions of those individuals as > the primary source for what the institutions were concerned about, then > you've probably got it wrong.
>
>
> Regards,
> Rick Schaut
>
>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: No Room for "Dialogue"

Date: Friday, July 20, 2001 8:36 AM

Hi, Karen.

Fascinating. I spent so much time thinking the press here was biased in favour of the conservative viewpoint, that I was amazed to hear right wing folks complaining we've a liberal dominated press.
However, Rick is, either deliberately or not, seemingly not getting it. In my experience, it is very rare to see him or many other anti-liberals here and elsewhere in

Baha'i cyberspace do anything except talk about personality, who said something. I see very little concrete discussion of the point, issue, subject. It almost always becomes an issue of who, not what. In my opinion, this is because if the discussion is on what, they've got nothing to say. Their premise is ad hominem, because of who said it, therefore it's right. This is invalid. Something is not right (except perhaps right wing :) ) simply because the NSA or UHJ said so. And it is not wrong, simply because Juan, Nima, etc. said so. Issues are independent of personality. Allowing freedom of thought and expression is not simply right because Baha'u'llah said so, but human experience, including Baha'i experience has demonstrated the evil of oppressing freedom of thought and expression, etc. thrive, m.

"Karen Bacquet" (karenbacquet@hotmail.com) writes:

>> >
>> >P.S. Where's Michael to point out that Karen's remark was an ad hominem?
>> >
>> >
>>
>> Well, I didn't read it that way. I have seen many conservatives > complaining >> about the bias in the press. I have no reason to think that *you* are >> one of these conservatives, as I have no clue what your political >> beliefs are - we don't talk politics much around here.
>>
>> I think Karen is making a general point, and you are just taking it >> too personally - I don't think she is saying that you are one of >> these people.
>>
>> I guess I can see how the confusion could arise, what with the >> conversation about various styles of journalism we were just having.
>>
>> But, I think it's clear, since she is talking about a nationwide media >> phenomena here, that Karen is referring to political conservatives >> talking about the national media - not Baha'i conservatives talking >> about the Baha'i media.>>

>

>

> Yes, and I'm married to a political conservative, so I'm pretty familiar > with how they think, and with the complaint that the press has a "liberal > bias".

>

> Love, Karen

>>

>> Paul

>>

>>

>>

>>

>>

>>

>

>

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Just another ridiculous revealed religion...

Date: Monday, February 19, 2001 1:50 PM

And With You, Pat.

Uhm, golly gee, by the ravens on Cu Chulainn's shoulders, don't you think there's a wee bit of discrepancy between the attitude the Prince of Peace and his son conveyed as the mature attitude of the New Day and the perception that those posting views other than fundamentalist ones are attacking the Baha'i Faith?

I mean, by the great ancient Goddesses of Battle, even this pagan can read various views, including that yes, really, Buddhists of a traditional Theravada persuasion believe there is no creator god, and they have scriptures to support their belief, that there's vindication of this as not some aberrant eccentricity of Bruce's, but a traditional Buddhist view on Buddhist FAQs, as I posted to Baha'i cyberspace several years back, without perceiving such views as attacks. And, we in ancient times were quite a bellicose lot, though, goddesses and gods be praised,

in all our fighting we found other reasons to display martial prowess than views about spirituality. Ireland was not known for its religious intolerance before fundamentalist monotheism arrived from outside.

So, if Bruce or anyone else, in threads others initiate or in threads
they start themselves speak their minds and support tolerance, broadmindedness, universality in the sense of inclusive unity of diverse views, methinks it doesn't need any special ogam divination by Brigid's favour to realize those perceiving such a sharing of personal views as "Attacks" on the Baha'i Faith have quite an extensive interpretation of the word "Attack" and methinks quite a limiting one of the Baha'i Faith.

Here's a cup (of tea, if you like :) ) to praising all those great warriors of the past, and to the bright vision of the New Day, where one may express personal views without anyone feeling there are war chariots
thundering at the door, or even that the speaker is hacking away at the sacred tree of Baha. In my opinion, perceiving others as enemies attacking
the Baha'i Faith, rather than individuals with varied opinions, is much more destructive of the Baha'i Faith than Theravada denial of a creator
god or any other beliefs, views, perceptions anyone can post to either threads they jump into or ones the flow of which they start themselves.

Health and Prosperity To You, Too,
Michael

Pat Kohli (kohli@ameritel.net) writes:

> May the gods be with you,
>
> If Bruce were simply responding to Baha's disparaging Buddhism, I'd expect to see > his comments to be largely in the course of threads started by others. If Bruce > were primarily attacking the BF, I'd expect to see more messages in threads that he > started.
>
> Does this seem to you to be reasonable metrics?
>
> Health and prosperity!
> - Pat

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>
Subject: Re: Women on the House
Date: Thursday, February 22, 2001 11:55 AM

Greetings, Susan.

Sigh.

But, they've no trouble with the word "elucidation" rather than the word "interpretation." They not only are interpreting they are imposing their interpretation and striving, contrary to Baha'i scripture, to interfere with the freedom of individuals to express a variety of personal opinions and perceptions, calling the expression of such opinions the assertion of authoritative interpretations and those expressing such perceptions devoid or lacking in true understanding.

How can one insist on true understanding to the extent of booting people out for saying another opinion, without interpreting?

The point often overlooked by fundamentalist Baha'is is that a literal interpretation, whether you call it an elucidation or some other word, is an interpretation and this applies to the writings of anyone, including Shoghi Effendi. If they do the fundamentalist twist and divorce the text of Shoghi Effendi from the context of when, why and for whom he was writing, demanding, contrary to Baha'i scripture, that everyone must take his words as universally and eternally (well, for the next thousand or thousands of years) applicable, as "interpreted" literally, they are not only interpreting, they are interpreting authoritatively. They are using power, authority to impose their interpretation as the only one permitted expression within Baha'i.

To A Better Future,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>But wait a minute, are you saying that the Universal House of >>Justice has no power of authoritative interpretation?
>

> Dear Ian,
>
> Yes, that is exactly what I'm saying and what the House of Justice says about > itself.
>
> warmest, Susan

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: UPDATE on Deborah Buchhorn v NSA/LSA

Date: Thursday, August 23, 2001 8:39 AM

Top o' the Mornin' to You, Nightshadow.

Dyou really figure it's more oppressive to be attacked in this NG

than to have you're name removed without notice from the membership rolls of the Baha'i community?

To a Better Future,
M.

NightShadow (seals_jay@hotmail.com) writes:

> There was someone named "BIGS - Bahai In *Perfectly* Good Standing"

> <patrick_henry@liberty.com> who once said...:

>

>>Non-bahais new to this arena may want at least to glance
at

>>the more than decade-long record of dishonesty of such >>fundamentalists painstakingly compiled on my bahai website.

>

> You know, come to think of it, I don't recall any members of the NSA

> or their representatives coming in here and attacking you on a > personal level or calling you names.

>

> How unfortunate for you that they don't. If they did, then you'd

> REALLY have a reason to bitch, wouldn't you?

>

> It must feel really good to attack something that doesn't fight back,

> eh?

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar
Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Just another ridiculous revealed religion...

Date: Friday, February 23, 2001 9:47 AM

Hi, Susan.

Wow. Equating one opposed to totalitarian imposition of a single party line with one opposed to the equality of the races. Well done.

My limited mathematics couldn't visualize that equation.

All generalizations cry out for the exceptions that render the equation all  $X = y$  invalid. However, most  $x = y$  is not invalidated by such exceptions and although it's often tempting to think so, the finding of such exceptions does not render the equation no  $x = y$  valid. So, you may well find some people here who are exceptions to the statement Canadians speak English or French or to Canadians were born in the 20th Century, but these exceptions don't mean a knowledge of either of those languages will not help you talk to most of us, nor that all of the folks up here were born in centuries other than the 20th.

I'm in favour of freedom of thought and expression. If you feel like demonstrating Baha'u'llah was gung ho for the suppression of thought and expression go to it, on the condition those who have a higher opinion of him also get their say. And, praise be to the liberal democracies of the West and cyberspace, here we all can speak our minds, and the validity and desirability of our equations may be seen by all interested.

Thrive,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>>if I'm reading the post >>correctly, seems to be dealing with keeping quiet in order to have unity, >>even if one believes one has superior knowledge, how it can be perceived >>that not only the recipient of this Nineteenth Century document (if s/he >>really is a candidate for the category of those thinking they have superior >>knowledge and not keeping quiet for the sake of unity) but a Twenty First >>Century individual named in the post could consider this an ad hominem -- >>in a Baha'i context.

>

> Dear Michael,

>

> Scholarship would certainly suffer greatly if one could not post or discuss > translations of primary texts material because it might contain material which > could cause people to take a critical view of someone's activity. Should > academics avoid discussion of the elimination of prejudice in Baha'u'llah's > writings because the list might have a racist who would consider this ad > hominen?

>

> warmest, Susan

--

"My name's McKenny, Mike McKenny, Warrant Officer, Solar Guard."

(Tom Corbett #1 STAND BY FOR MARS p2)

From: "Michael McKenny" <bn872@FreeNet.Carleton.CA>

Subject: Re: Just another ridiculous revealed religion...

Date: Monday, February 19, 2001 6:57 AM

Diethe dhuit, Susan.

No, actually.

Bruce has simply responded to fundamentalist Baha'is insisting that Buddhists haven't got a clue about Buddhism, that Buddhists have distorted and got wrong what Buddha said, and that it's the literal reading of the words of Abdu'l Baha that should take precedence over the scriptures of Buddhism for an understanding of Buddhism.

Anyone who has been reading these cyberspace fora ought to recall the facts of this. Anyone who has newly ventured in, need merely look at the archives.

Perhaps you can share with us the material from H-Bahai that shows the intolerance of those towards traditional, as opposed to fundamentalist, Baha'i positions. The archives of cyberspace should clearly show that Michael McKenny consistently upheld the right of anyone to share an opinion, and opposed only the demand that a single view be imposed as the exclusive Baha'i dogma. Exclusivity, dogmatism and the veils of intolerance adorning these being the only things he doesn't tolerate.

Slan Agat,
Michael

Susan Maneck (smaneck@aol.com) writes:

>> Actually, no. You've had a traditional (Theravada) Buddhist posting

>>here. The distinction is that fundamentalists are generally exclusivists

>>intolerant of other opinions

>

> Yes, that is what I was revering to. A certain Buddhist who has shown himself > to be exclusivistic and intolerant of the other's opinions.

>

>>Bruce, has not demanded that his >>opinion be imposed on all Buddhists,

>

> No, he mostly wants to impose them on us. So much so, that he has devoted > considerable energy over the last six years to achieve that end.

>

